And there is also in this a gross error of fact. Foreign nations have dealt with those States since the organization of the Federal Government as sovereign States; and in other cases have admitted, by their conduct, that in certain matters, which always belong to Government in its highest relations with such nations, they could not treat with the common Government of these States; nor with any other than the separate States to which such matters related. Of the first an instance is found in the application made to the Government of South Carolina to relax or modify its regulations concerning coloured seamen in British vessels. The Government of the United States declared it had nothing to do with it; and the correspondence, therefore, was conducted with the authorities of the State.

Another illustration is in the case of debts due by the several States to foreign Powers or the subjects of foreign Powers. This was the subject which called for the letter of Mr. Webster, already referred to. If these States had no relations with foreign Powers, except through the common Government; if their existence, as to foreign Powers, was merged in the common Government which they had created; then upon that Government would devolve the duties of Government in relation to so important a matter as the liability of those subject to its authority to make good their engagements with the subjects of another Power. Those duties neglected would be cause of war. Several of the States which composed the United States, contracted large loans; difficulties occurred in the payment of them. Was the common Government liable for the payment of those loans? No. Could it enforce upon the States contracting them payment or satisfaction to the creditor? No. "The security for these State loans (said Mr. Webster,) is the pledged faith of the State as a political community. It rests on the same basis as other contracts with established Governments—the same basis, for example, as loans made to the United States, under the authority of Congress, that is to say, the good faith of the Government making the loan, and its ability to fulfil its engagements."

* The first part of this "Reply" appeared in THE INDEX of May 28th.

Can that then be called the only Government which Foreign nations recognise as representing these States, which thus is without power to enforce the performance of the obligations into which the States enter? The inability of the Mexican Government to make provision for the payment of debts due to the subjects of foreign Powers, and afford adequate protection to such subjects, are the causes assigned by France, Spain, and Great Britain for the invasion of that country. That invasion, although accompanied with the declaration of Great Britain and Spain of no intention or wish to interfere with the domestic Government of the country, is also connected with the purpose of the three Governments to require the organization of a stable Government, which will afford a guarantee to the subjects of these Powers of the payment of the sums due to them; and the protection also to subjects of those those Powers residing in Mexico, of their persons and property. It is because such is held to be the proper duty of Government that its obligation is enforced, even to the extent of so interfering in its internal concerns, as to secure a stable Government. If then the Government of the United States has no obligation in these respects, it is a Government so inadequate to some of the highest purposes of Government, that in certain contingencies foreign Powers might interfere. And yet such is the Government which, according to the argument of "Historicus," has absorbed the freedom, sovereignty and independence of the several States; and is the only exponent and representative which foreign Powers will recognise. But as in the case of debts, so in regard to the protection which foreign nations have the right to expect shall be afforded to the persons and property of their subjects, the States in their separate and sovereign capacity through their laws and their own internal Government afford all the guarantees that are required. And the foreign nation which refuses to receive this as sufficient, does not thereby transfer the obligation to the General Government, which can exercise no power unless expressly delegated; but refuses protection which is adequate, because it is not administered by that department of Government which it may prefer. Such a pretension would be absurd.

But if such is the conclusion to which the argument of "Historicus" leads us, it is not necessary to add anything to this evidence of its incompleteness. And it might be left where it is, were it not, that instead of confining ourselves to the defensive and testing the argument of "Historicus" upon the ground he has chosen, we may say a few words in relation to the position which the Confederate States truly occupy.

Nations like individuals acknowledge the obligations of moral rules. States, says an accurate writer, are reciprocally recognised as moral persons; and are therefore governed in their mutual relations, partly by divine and partly by positive law. The primary source, according to the same writer, of International Jurisprudence is Divine Law. The duty of States is, to a certain extent, the duty of individuals. It may be neglected; insane passion or insatiable ambition may for a time seem to crush beneath the car of conquest the right of the weak and the duty of the strong. But retribution is surely destined to punish those who have thus abused their power. The deep humiliation which the massacre of St. Bartholomew visited upon France, at a very early period after its occurrence, scarcely required the vast sacrifice of later days, to attest the stamp of reprobation from a power superior to man. The revolting tyranny of Philip II. seems to have been allowed to culminate, only that its punishment might be more signal. The wanton exercise of power, the reckless dismemberment of Poland, in violation of every principle of Public Law, in 'cruel disregard of every consideration of justice and of right caused one whose sensibilities were not often awakened, to regard it, "as the prelude, partly the cause, and perhaps the excuse of the convulsions in Europe," when peace fled from every nation, and hatred and strife shook to their centre the best established Governments. But here is no need of argument or illustration. That a great God directs the conduct of men in their individual relations, all admit; that the same Power directs men in their aggregated capacities, when they become united in communities, all will in like manner admit; unless prepared for the conclusion, that responsibility for human conduct may be evaded by the voluntary combination of individuals.

One of the rights which thus belong to communities is that of seeking under any form of Government best suited to secure it the welfare and happiness which God who created them has set apart for them in this world. It is nowhere better expressed than in the declaration by Great Britain, already referred to in the case of the Italian States. This was the principle of the American Revolution. It was the principle which France at that day recognised. It is the principle, which to the honour of that land, it must be said, she has ever recognised. It was not the principle which Great Britain then admitted. But as we have seen, it was at a subsequent period adopted by Great Britain; and at a period already referred to, when the Italian States struck for their independence, was solemnly declared in language equally dignified and strong.

With these lights before them, the States which now compose the Confederate States when forced by the dangers which threatened their safety under the Government of the United States to provide new safeguards and a Government for those which had been broken down, and that which had been corrupted, had no reason to doubt, that with the development of their ability to maintain their separate existence, they would be admitted to an intercourse with the family of nations. They could not be reproached with limited territorial possessions, inadequate population, insufficient resources, imperfect civilization, or inability to contribute to the wants of mankind. The change in Government was yet to them no experiment.

It was, in fact, no change. It was restoring that Government which they had originally established. Presenting themselves thus to the nations of the world, admitting for the sake of the argument, that at the period of their separation from Great Britain they had not been acknowledged as separate and independent States, what difficulty could have been anticipated in their recognition? Two years have rolled over, and during those years, according to the admission of those who refuse or delay to recognise their Government, they have exhibited an endurance superior to that displayed in recent times by any people. Reasons now are sought for, and in the recent letter of "Historicus," we have them set forth. The first of these has now been examined.

We have seen, that if the Government is not stable or permanent, the same objection will apply to the United States. But we have, moreover, seen that the two tests which have been applied to the Government of Mexico, would be equally fatal if applied to the Government of the United States. If the Government of Mexico is not stable or permanent, because of the defects complained of by Great Britain, France, and Spain, in neither of these particulars can the Government of the United States, if called on to interfere, be more potential. But in such cases the States can and do give the protection desired. The Government of the United States and of the Confederate States are both limited in power, and no power in relation to these matters having been delegated to either, it is only in the sovereign and independent condition of each State that foreign nations have those guarantees which they are entitled to ask.

But the contest now waged between the United States and the Confederate States must determine other questions than such as exclusively affect the Confederate States. We have presented for the consideration of the nations of the world, not only the decision of their conduct in regard to the Confederate States, but their decision in regard to the United States, and that upon a question happily of the most rare occurrence. The question is, how far the Government of the United States, if it had the power, could destroy the States which now compose the Confederate States. That such is the end now proposed is no longer a question. The Proclamation of the President of the United States, by which he decrees, so far as his power can accomplish it, the emancipation of the slaves now held in bondage, and that the utter destruction of the social and political condition of the Confederate States is one which in its magnitude overshadows every similar question of which the records of our race contain any mention. Had Great Britain a right, under the rule of International Law applicable in such cases, to interfere against the obstruction of a channel leading to the port of Charleston, but no right to speak when by an act of infuriated legislation the most shocking exhibition of ruthless power on the one hand, and of unspeakable wretchedness and sufferings on the other, were not consummated because the will to do evil was not matched with power to accomplish it? And is it not against the consummation of this curse that the Confederate States are now contending? If the contest began with a struggle for political rights, involving political equality, has it not been made to assume that phase in which political and social existence are the mighty stakes for which the game is played? Can the fact be questioned, can the truth be challenged? And, when under such circumstances, a people possessing this large territory, numbering eight millions of human beings, with the world acknowledging its dependence upon them for much that contributes to the civilization, much more that contributes to the comfort of the human family, asks not for aid or interference, further than that they shall be recognised as fit to maintain a separate political existence—is it not passing strange that a nation acknowledging the highest moral responsibilities, referring its conduct to the benign and tolerant principles of the Divine Law, should find itself prohibited from the declaration of the truth, the adoption of that conduct which is in consistency with its public declarations and pledges, and bound to be the passive witness of acts of cruelty which are without other results than the suffering they produce; and if they could produce the results which are desired, would involve an amount of misery greater than has ever yet afflicted our race? Is such the rule of International Law? Is such the nature of the moral duty which a State or nation admits? Is such the conduct which is justified by a reference to the divine law?

2.—The next objection is that which relates to our boundaries. The territorial limits of the Confederate States are, it is said, not defined; and in some of the States, the United States still hold possession of cities or other important points. The objection here stated suggests the difficulty which, at this time, would probably attend the negotiation of the terms of peace with the United States; it has, however, nothing to do with the question of recognition. The question of boundaries in 1776, was important to Great Britain, because that Power had other possessions in North America besides those which had declared their independence. But while for these reasons to it, then, the question of boundary was important; to it, now, that question is of no more practical consequence, than then or now it is to France or Spain.

The recognition of the Confederate States is not an admission or a guarantee of the right to a certain specified and defined territory. It is the admission of the existence of an independent Government, the territorial possessions of which may be affected by the chances of war, or the other circumstances which tend to enlarge or contract territorial limits. France was not the less an independent Government while Great Britain, for so many years, held Calais as the proud trophy of Creecy. The limits of France have expanded or contracted with the successes or reverses which marked her career at the close of the last and in the commencement of the present century. Holland was not the less an independent political power because, with the recognition of an intervention in her contest with Belgium, her territorial limits were changed. No one has ever proposed that such an abstraction as "The South" was the Government which should be recognised. But no one, on the other hand, can well conceive why the possession of a portion of the soil of an independent State, in the progress of a war, should either destroy the effect of a recognition already made, or prevent it from being made. What each State claims as rightfully belonging to it, is precisely as ascertained. If it should lose a portion by the conquest of the enemy, that would affect the dimensions of the State; but it would not destroy its independent existence. Indeed, to require that, in the case of a new Government, it should drive from every portion of its territory the forces of the enemy with which it was contending before it could be recognised by foreign nations, would be to impose on a new Government a hard condition, with which the oldest Powers in Europe could not have complied, in the progress of the many wars in which they have been engaged.

3.—The last objection is that which suggests the difficulty arising from the fact that no recognition can take place until there is that solution of the question of slavery to which the Government of Great Britain is prepared to give its approbation. It is true that in the letter of "Historicus," this objection is made in connection with the question of intervention. But intervention is not that which the Confederate States have asked or would be willing to accept. Whatever might be said of mediation, arbitration or intervention are not desired by the Confederate States; and it needed not the letter of "Historicus" to demonstrate that either would be, to the last degree, impracticable. Nor is mediation sought. If, however, proposed, it is attended with much less difficulty than is involved in arbitration or intervention. All of these, however, whether mediation, arbitration, or intervention, in some degree, more or less, by sympathy or by action, by counsel or by aid, tend to mix up in this contest the nation or nations who propose either of these measures. Such a consequence, it may be safely said, is not desired by the Confederate States. Competent to the management of their own affairs—far more able than can be any others to devise the measures best calculated to develop their resources, accomplish the purposes, and fulfil the duties which devolve upon an independent political community; they—they ask nothing, seek nothing, expect nothing, but that recognition of their independent political condition, which they have established by the "spontaneous wish of the people" of the several States, and have successfully maintained without other aid than that which their own resources could command.

But we have already consumed more time than we proposed, and however interesting the subject may be, we must forbear. It may be—it probably is so—that other considerations than such as are derived from the rules of International Law, which prescribe the duties and regulate the conduct of nations, will govern the counsels of foreign nations in regard to the recognition of these Confederate States. Yet it will not be wholly without profit that these Confederate States will have the opportunity of practically comprehending the nature of the obligation which International Law induces. It has been claimed for this law that it has acquired "in great measure, and on many subjects, the certainty and precision of positive law." It will be pleasant, not only for the citizens of the Confederate States, but for every one throughout Christendom, who believes that all free Governments are founded on the authority of the people, "and are instituted for their peace, safety, and happiness," to receive the assurance that this "certainty and precision" are certainly to be found in a case where every generous sentiment would invoke them; when a people, without usurpation of power, or invasion of territory, assert no other claim than in their own land, by their own Government, and under their own laws, to enjoy peace, secure safety and develop happiness.

JURIDICUS.

SUPPLY OF BIBLES FOR THE SOUTH.—We are permitted to copy the following extract from a recent letter to the Rev. D. Hoge, delegated by the Virginia Bible Society, to obtain a supply of Scriptures for the Confederate army. The letter is from a brother clergyman residing in Virginia:—

Your Bible Mission meets with great favour. The "Lynchburg Virginian" did, indeed, fire a few feeble squibs at it, which gave occasion for defences and fresh presentations of its claims, and so perhaps did good. If it could be fairly held up to the whole country, and in the army, there would hardly be a limit to the contributions. Every one seems to regard it as eminently calculated to do good, both directly and in its incidental influences, and to rejoice that it is in your hands. And before we have heard of your arriving at the chief scene of your labours and hopes, God has caused your very going to bear fruit. The 1200 Bibles and Testaments from your lady friends in Nassau are already scattered, and doing their heavenly work. Mrs. George Brown, of Baltimore, has sent 1500. Staunch old Mr. Niven, of New York, no sooner heard of your mission than he began collections for it among our friends there. The New York Herald says, the American Bible Society has given 7,000, and we have heard rumours of 2,500 about to come—I know not from what source exactly. And most remarkable of all, we learn that the Federal Government no longer objects to the passage of Bibles from the North through its remorseless blockade. If this is, as we suppose, a fruit of your going, it is an illustrious one. No doubt it is meant to cover up the infamy of their refusal to let us have them hitherto, and to forestal your representations in Great Britain. Meantime, I feel about your pretended graciousness as Paul did about those, who from wicked motives preached the Gospel; if only the Bibles come, "I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice." God can make the meanness and craft of man as well as his wrath to praise Him.

Since the above was in type we have seen in a late number of the Charleston Courier, an extract from a private letter of Dr. Hoge's to a friend in Richmond, in which he gives so gratifying an account of the success of his mission, that we cannot forbear reproducing it:—

If the noble grant they made us ever gets to Virginia, our Bible Society there will have in its possession a much larger stock than it ever had in the palmiest days of its prosperity. Ten thousand Bibles, fifty thousand Testaments, and two hundred and fifty thousand Gospels and Psalms, is a magnificent donation.

Seven cases of this grant have been shipped from Liverpool in a vessel called the Spirit of the Wind. The remainder of the British and Foreign Bible Society grant, and the donation of the Religious Tract Society, will go to Nassau in about two weeks.

My next attempt will be for Sunday School Books—and I am to have an interview with the Committee of the Sunday School Union next Friday.

CONFEDERATE CONSULATE AT CORK.—The President of the Confederate States has appointed Robert L. Dowling, Esq., Commercial Agent for the Confederate States at Cork, Ireland.

ARRIVALS THROUGH THE BLOCKADE.—Among recent arrivals through the Blockade, the Charleston Courier of May 12 announces the names of Messrs. Peter Anton, W. Collic, Charles England, George Chambers, and J. O'Connor.

THE Charleston Courier says, that the siege of Suffolk, which was kept up only three or four weeks, enabled General Longstreet to gather up, besides large quantities of corn, over a million and a half pounds of bacon, which, at present prices, is worth upwards of two millions of dollars.

BIRTH.

At 11, Portland Street, Leamington, on the 16th inst, the wife of Mr. Eben Macmillan, Charleston, South Carolina, of a daughter.

Among the Contents of THE INDEX of June 11, are—
AN ADDRESS TO CHRISTIANS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD,
Signed by nearly One hundred Ministers of the Gospel, of all denominations of Protestant Christians in the Confederate States.

A Brief Notice of Some New Works.

Letter from Richmond.

Letter from New Orleans.

Letter from Paris.

Leaders on—

The Appeal to Christians.

The Siege of Vicksburg.

Mr. Roebuck's Notice of Motion,

Royalty at Eton College.

"STONEWALL" JACKSON.

It is Proposed to raise a Subscription in England for the Erection in the Confederate States of

A BRITISH MONUMENT

to this gallant man. It will not be necessary thus to perpetuate his memory; for wherever the English language is spoken, and true heroism appreciated, the name of "STONEWALL" JACKSON will ever be revered; but it will prove the deep interest which the Advertiser feels sure exists throughout Great Britain with the Confederate cause, and our sympathy with them in this their greatest loss.

Subscriptions will be received at the office of THE INDEX, 13, Bowyer-street, and acknowledged weekly in the columns of this journal. Money orders to be made payable to Mr. J. B. Hopkins.

MANCHESTER SOUTHERN CLUB.—Gentlemen desirous of Enrolling themselves as members of the above Club can obtain their cards on application at the office, 71A, Market-street, from nine to six daily, or by letter directed as above.—By order of the Committee, W. E. STUTTER, Hon. Sec.

JAMES J. BENNETT & WAKE,
Steam-Ship Insurance and General Commission Agents,
77, Cornhill, London,
and JAMES J. BENNETT,
Matamoras.

NEW LINE OF STEAM PACKETS

BETWEEN
LIVERPOOL, ST. THOMAS, LA GUAYRA, PTO. CABELLO, CURACAO, SANTA MARTHA, CARthagENA TO COLON, RETURNING FROM THAT PORT BY KINGSTON (JAMAICA), PORT-AU-PRINCE, CAPE HAITIEN TO LIVERPOOL.

The Liverpool, Western and Spanish-American Steam Packet Company

WILL commence running powerful A 1 Screw Steamboats from this port on the 20th June next, to be at Colon in time to take the Goods and Passengers brought to Panama by the Steamers, from the North and South Pacific, and to Colon, about the 21st July, continuing the same dates monthly. The Steamboats are:—

The CHRISTOPHOL COLON, 1,572 tons, W. Baker, Commander, to sail from Liverpool... 20th June
The SAINT THOMAS, 1,210 tons, W. Gilberry, Commander, to sail from Liverpool... 20th July
The BOLIVAR, 1,239 tons, W. W. Kiddier, to sail from Liverpool... 20th Aug.
The HUMBOLDT (building), 1,400 tons

Goods and Passengers will be taken, if required, at through rates from the Continent, via Liverpool, over the Panama Railway to Ports in the Pacific, and also back from those Ports by same route.
The CHRISTOPHOL COLON has very spacious and well-ventilated berths and saloon, which will afford every comfort to Passengers. The Rates for First and Second-class Passage will be moderate.
JAIRIE & TOMLINSON,
ALEXANDER DURANT & Co.
Liverpool, May 1, 1863.

WEST INDIES.—LIVERPOOL, WEST INDIAN, AND CENTRAL AMERICAN STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.
For SAINT THOMAS, PORT-AU-PRINCE (HAITI), KINGSTON (JAMAICA), SANTA MARTHA, CARthagENA, AND COLON OR ASPINWALL.

Taking Goods at through rates for Panama and Ports in the North and South Pacific (in connection with the Panama Railroad, the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company).

The following fine new A 1 full powered Steamers will sail from LIVERPOOL on the 21st of each month, receiving goods up to the 19th of each month.

DARIEN .. .. 1,172 tons.
VENEZUELAN .. .. 1,000 "
GRANADIAN .. .. 1,100 "
MEXICAN (now building), 1,100 "

In consequence of the VENEZUELAN not being quite completed, the first-class Screw-steamer SHAFESBURY, Captain VICKERMAN, will be despatched for the above Ports on the 21st May, taking goods until the 19th May.

Goods taken at through freights from the Continent.

For rates of freights or passage, having superior accommodation for passengers, apply to J. M. CURRIE, Paris and Havre; GLAPCKE and HENNING, Hamburg; LAFFITE and VANDERCRUYCKE, Bordeaux; W. D. ROBERTS and Co., Glasgow; or to LEECH, HARRISON, & FORWOOD.

Agents, Liverpool.

THE PATENT FILE MACHINE, AND FILE MANUFACTURING COMPANY, (LIMITED). Makers of every description of Steel and Files suitable for Engineers, Machinists, Agricultural Implement Makers, and for the general and export trade. Works,—Ashton Old-road, Manchester.

VALUES OF GOLD.—WATHERSTON AND BROGDEN, for the information of the public and their numerous patrons, beg to make the following announcement regarding the VALUE OF GOLD, feeling persuaded that the interests of the fair trader and public will be alike protected by the wide circulation of knowledge on the subject. Gold being divided into 24 parts or carats, it follows that gold of

Per oz.	Per oz.
24 carats fine is worth .. £4 4 11	13 carats .. £2 6 0
23 ditto .. 4 1 5	12 ditto .. 2 2 5 1/2
22 ditto (British standard) .. 3 17 1/2	11 ditto .. 1 18 11
21 carats .. 3 13 4	10 ditto .. 1 15 4 1/2
20 ditto .. 3 10 9 1/2	9 ditto .. 1 11 10
19 ditto .. 3 7 3	8 ditto .. 1 8 3 1/2
18 ditto .. 3 3 8 1/2	7 ditto .. 1 5 1 1/2
17 ditto .. 3 0 2	6 ditto .. 1 2 1 1/2
16 ditto .. 2 16 7 1/2	5 ditto .. 0 17 8
15 ditto .. 2 13 1	4 ditto .. 0 14 2
14 ditto .. 2 9 4 1/2	3 ditto .. 0 10 7 1/2
	2 ditto .. 0 7 1
	1 ditto .. 0 3 6 1/2

Manufacture, 16, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London, W.C.
N.B.—Assays made of Chains and Jewellery for 1s. each.

NOTICE.—This Establishment is closed at six o'clock in the evening, and on Saturdays at one o'clock.

AMERICAN WINES AND SPIRITS, &c.

W. R. S. MARKWELL,

WINE MERCHANT TO HER MAJESTY AND THE IMPERIAL COURTS,
35, 40, & 45, ALBEMARLE STREET,

AND

4, STAFFORD STREET, PICCADILLY, LONDON, W.

Monaghela, Bourbon, and Old Dominion Whiskies; Peach Brandy; Staughton, Sickles, and other Bitters; Fruit Spirits; Sparkling and dry Catawba; Californian Champagne; all kinds of Continental Wines, including the original importations from Hungary.

The Stock of Wines, Spirits, and Liqueurs are of the oldest, most extensive, and best selected in England.

TERMS, CASH!

PARIS EXHIBITION, 1855.*LA GRANDE MEDAILLE D'HONNEUR

WAS AWARDED TO

THOMAS DE LA RUE & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

PATENT PLAYING CARDS. PATENT METALLIC BOOKS; WITH HARD ELECTRO-GILT PENCILS WHICH NEVER THICKEN AT THE POINT. INDIA INLAND NOTE OR CHIT PAPERS, for Half Anna Postage Rate. WATER-LINED OVERLAND NOTE PAPERS, in great variety. MACHINE-FOLDED ENVELOPES. PATENT METAL SLATES. POCKET TOURISTS' CASES.—Size, 5 1/2 in. by 3 1/2 in. by 1 1/2 in. with every requisite for Correspondence.

ALLIANCE DESPATCH DESKS.—The most perfect Despatch Desk yet made.
DE LA RUE & CO.'S INDELIBLE DIARIES.—Published annually for exportation in August.

WALLETS, ALBUMS, SCRAP BOOKS, &c., &c.
The above can be obtained through any Stationer or Merchant.

ACCOUNT BOOKS, &c.,

Of all Rulings, ready in Stock, or made to any Pattern on the Premises.

LITHOGRAPHIC AND COPPER-PLATE.—Circulars printed on the Shortest Notice; all kinds of Copper-Plate Printing with economy and despatch.

CARD PLATES.—Engraved in various styles with despatch. 2s. each.

LETTER-PRESS.—Letter-Press work of every description: Circulars, Catalogues, Share-Plates, &c.

NOTE-PAPER.—Embossed die, Plain, and Colours, with Crest and Initials, and Printed Address, without charging for Dies or Plates.

All Articles being prepared on the Premises can be ensured with despatch and economy at Wholesale and Shipping Prices.

F. ARNOLD, MANUFACTURING STATIONER, ETC., 86, FLEET STREET, E.C. (CORNER OF ST. BRIDE'S AVENUE.)

VINS SUPERIEURS DE CHAMPAGNE.

DINET-PEUVREL ET FILS,

PROPRIETAIRES ET NEGOCIANTS,

A A VIZE, MARNE,

EXECUTE ORDERS FOR ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

Please send References with Order.

BEACH & ROOT,

Commission Merchants,
CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA
and
ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

BEACH, ROOT, & CO.,

APSLEY BUILDINGS, OLD HALL STREET, LIVERPOOL.

S. ISAAC, CAMPBELL, & Co.

CONTRACTORS & MERCHANTS.
71, Jermyn-street,
LONDON.

Sherbro: West Coast of Africa.

Represented by
W. B. HART,
Nassau, New Providence.

WIGGINS, TEAPE, & Co.,

WHOLESALE AND EXPORT STATIONERS,
10, ALDGATE, LONDON.

Special Papers suited to Foreign Markets.

ROWLAND & BROTHERS,

Commission Merchants,
NORFOLK, VIRGINIA.

JOHN FRASER & CO.,

CHARLESTON, South Carolina.
FRASER, TRENHOLM, & CO.,
Liverpool, Commission Merchants.

SEARING AND CO.,

Commission Merchants,
MOBILE AND NEW ORLEANS, C.S.A.

Represented by
R. G. BEESLEY, Cotton Broker,
No. 2, Byron's-court, Royal-exchange,
Manchester.

J. E. HERTZ,

(Of the late Firm of MORDECAI and Co.),
Commission Merchant,
CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA.

References to
M. C. MORDECAI, Esq.
Charleston, South Carolina.
Messrs. COHEN and HERTZ,
Savannah, Georgia.

H. O. BREWER & CO.,

MOBILE, ALABAMA,
General Commission and Shipping Merchants.

LAMB, BALL, & CO.,

Ship and General Commission Agents,
ST. THOMAS,
WEST INDIES.

J. J. HALL,
J. D. TAMB.

T. BEYNON & CO.,

Ship Brokers, Merchants, and Commission Agents,
NEWPORT, MON.

HENRY ADDERLEY & CO.,

Shipping and Commission Merchants,
NASSAU, N.P.,
BAHAMAS.

WEBER BROTHERS,

Commission Merchants,
SAVANNAH, GEORGIA, C.S.A.

C. W. WHITE,

Ship and General Commission Agent,
ST. THOMAS, WEST INDIES.

REID AND STEWART,

Commission Merchants,
SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

Represented by
ANDREW STEWART, 1, Rumbold-place,
Liverpool.

HARPER AND CAUGHEY,

Commission Merchants,
SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.
Represented by
J. and A. CAUGHEY, Tempest Chambers,
Tempest Hcy,
Liverpool.

SAMUEL SMITH,

COTTON BROKER,
11, Manchester Buildings,
LIVERPOOL.

FRANCIS PRESTON,

ENGINEER AND CONTRACTOR TO HER
MAJESTY'S WAR DEPARTMENT,
35, Loveday Street,
BIRMINGHAM.

And Agents' Bridge Works,
MANCHESTER.
Established 1816.

J. H. ASHBRIDGE & CO.,

Shipping and Commission Merchants,
NEW ORLEANS.
Office—55, Brown's-buildings, Liverpool.
Agents Liverpool and New Orleans Mail Steam Navigation Company.

This Day is Published, in One Vol., 8vo., pp. 438, price 12s.,

RAYONS ET REFLETS.

Par le Chevalier DE CHATELAIN.

Rolandi, 20, Berners-street, W.

Just Ready, in Two Vols., post 8vo., price 21s. cloth.

WAR PICTURES from the SOUTH. By Colonel B. ESTVAN, of the Confederate Army. Illustrated with Eight Portraits of the most distinguished Generals and Plans of Battles.

London: Routledge, Warren, and Routledge,

Farringdon-trecet.

18mo., cl. th, extra gilt edges, price 1s.,

BEN RHYDDING, THE ASCLE-

PION OF ENGLAND: its Beauties, its

Ways, and its Water Cure. By the Rev. R. W.

Thomson. With Map of the Railway Routes to

Ben Rhydding. Third Edition.

T. NELSON and SONS, London and Edinburgh.

To be had, free by post, 13 stamps, of SHUTTLE-

WORTH, Bookseller, Ilkley.

A. G. MILWAINE, AND CO.,

Commission Merchants, Tobacco, Cotton,

Grain, and other produce, PETERSBURG,

VIRGINIA.

MCDOWELL, WITHERS, AND

CO., MOBILE ALABAMA, C.S.A., Commission Merchants.

FRANCIS FORD, MANCHESTER,

Manufacturer of Three and Six Cord Spool

Thread, Cotton Balls, Knitting and Embroidering

Cottons, &c. Imported by F. RIMAILHO and

NEYREY, New Orleans, and GEORGE CHAM-

BERS and CO., Nassau, N.P.

R. D. RUSDEN, MANCHESTER,

ENGLAND, American Drills of all kinds,

Denims, Stripes, Shirtings, and all sorts of Manchester Goods.

ANDREW LOW AND CO.,

Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH

GEORGIA.

HAMILTON AND GRAHAM,

Importers, Wholesale Dealers in Dry

Goods, &c., PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA.

H. LEVY AND SON,

Commission Merchants, MOBILE.

GARLAND GOODE, MOBILE,

Cotton Factor and Commission Merchant.

BOYKIN AND McRAE, Cotton

Factors and Commission Merchants,

MOBILE, ALABAMA, C.S.A.

J. W. ANDERSON AND CO.,

Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH,

GEORGIA.

JAMES CHAPMAN,

Commission Merchant, CHARLESTON.

N. A. HARDEE AND CO.,

Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH,

GEORGIA.

R. N. GOUDINE AND CO.,

Commission Merchants, Charleston.

DUNLOP, MONCURE, & CO.,

General Commission Merchants,

RICHMOND.

WARWICK AND BARKSDALE,

GALLEGO FLOUR MILLS.

This immense establishment of capacity to manufacture 1000 barrels of Flour per day, purely for

South American Market. RICHMOND.

MILLER AND BATRE, Exchange

Brokers, MOBILE, ALABAMA, C.S.A.

R. AND D. G. MILLS, Cotton

Factors and Commission Merchants,

GALVESTON, TEXAS, C.S.A.

SHIRTS.—International Exhibition.

Class 27 C. No. 4872. Prize Medal and honourable mentions 1851 and 1862. Shirts, Collars, Flannels, and every description of underclothing manufactured on the premises.

J. ERLE AND CO.,

43, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

The only Shirtmakers admitted as Exhibitors at the International Exhibition of 1862.

TWO PRIZE MEDALS awarded

"For General Excellence" in DRESSING

CASES, BAGS, DESPATCH BOXES, &c. Gentle-

men's Travelling Bags, Useful Size, 18s. 6d.; Full

Size, 18s. 6d.; Large Size, 21s. Courier Bags, with

Shoulder Strap, from 10s. 6d. Morocco Ladies'

Bags, 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 14s. 6d., 18s. 6d., and 21s.

Tourists' Writing Cases, 8s. 6d., 10s. 6d. to 21s.

Finest Cutlery in Razors, Scissors, Needles, &c.

JENNER and KNEWSTUB, Manufacturers to the Royal Family, 33, St. James's-street, and 65, Jermyn-street.

THE INDEX, VOL. II.*The Second Half-Yearly Volume

OF

THE INDEX,

Completed by the No.

THE INDEX

A WEEKLY JOURNAL OF POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND NEWS.

VOL. III—No. 61.]

LONDON—THURSDAY EVENING, JUNE 25, 1863.

[PRICE 6D.]

CONTENTS.

CASE OF THE ALEXANDRA.

THE SIEGE OF PORT HUDSON; OUR NEW ORLEANS LETTER.

THE ALABAMA AND THE GEORGIA.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE FROM BANIA.

LETTER FROM PARIS.

LETTER FROM TURIN; FEDERAL RECRUITING IN ITALY.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR ON THE RECOGNITION LEADERS.

A BRITISH MONUMENT TO JACKSON.

RECOGNITION BEFORE PARLIAMENT.

VICKSBURG AND PORT HUDSON.

THE VALUE OF THE SOUTHERN TRADE.

MR. MASON A FRIEND OF ENGLAND.

EXTRACTS FROM SOUTHERN PAPERS.

NOTES ON EVENTS OF THE WEEK.

AMERICA.

THERE is no news from Vicksburg. The Federals say the siege is progressing, and if they mean that every day brings it nearer to the crisis, the stereotyped statement is true; but if they mean that Grant is any nearer capturing the city, it is a pity they do not indicate the grounds for the assertion. The correspondents of the New York papers are very candid as to the strength of the fortifications. The Herald correspondent, after detailing the services of the 22nd Iowa Volunteers, which regiment, he says, planted a flag on a Confederate rampart and were all killed and wounded, except sixteen, who were taken prisoners, adds, "It was a stupid blunder, or worse, to storm the works at all. * * * Twenty-five hundred killed and wounded is a fearful loss." We happen to know, from Southern sources, that twenty-five hundred is only a part of the loss that resulted from the assault. The same correspondent remarks that the bombardment is of no avail, since the Confederates "manage in the darkness to repair the damage done to the works in the day by our artillery. No matter how much the embrasures may be battered, in the morning they are all right." It is now said that the garrison is to be starved out, and that it is already reduced "to half rations of meal and meat." The starving out is likely to prove a tedious operation, for Southern accounts say that the place is provisioned for at least three months.

Although there is no news from Vicksburg there are plenty of rumours,—one got up for European consumption, reads as follows:—"Murfreeshoro", June 9. —A lady from Shelbyville, arrived to-day, says a report of the surrender of Vicksburg and the garrison of 12,000 men was prevalent in the rebel camps. A later arrival confirms this rumour. A person states that the rebel papers had published the particulars of the capitulation." The same mail, however, brought by telegraph later news which most unequivocally disproved the lady's report; but one London paper would not miss the opportunity of a sensational placard, and announced in big letters "The Rumoured Surrender of Vicksburg." We do not complain of the false reports. They amuse the North; they help the little boys to sell a few extra copies of our contemporary; they do not deceive any one in Europe, and they certainly do not silence the Confederate guns.

But where is General Johnstone? General Grant has sent out a messenger to find his whereabouts, but in vain. Some say that the Confederate commander has 5,000, others 8,000, and others 18,000 men. One account gives him 30,000 men. An enthusiastic correspondent of the New York press says that Grant does not care for any less than 100,000 Confederates being in his rear. Since he cannot take Vicksburg unmolested except by a regular siege, we cannot help thinking that he would find a Confederate army of 20,000 men, either on his rear or flank, rather awkward to deal with. There is still a demand for reinforcements for Grant, to enable him to cope with the Confederate army that threatens his rear. But where are the reinforcements to come from? The attack on Port Hudson has rendered it impossible for Banks to immediately reinforce Grant. Writing at this distance from the scene of action, having for the latest intelligence to deal with the notoriously unreliable Federal reports, and bearing in mind that military movements are not published in Confederate papers, and that the Confederate Generals only reveal their plans by their execution, we are unable to give any opinion upon the details of the situation; but this we think is evident, that the protraction of the siege of Vicksburg is a gain to the Confederates and a loss to their enemy. Despite the confident tone assumed by the Washington Government, we are convinced that they would be quite as much surprised as they would be delighted to hear of the fall of Vicksburg.

Without giving heed to the latest rumour about the movements of General Kirby Smith, which was that he had defeated General Banks and was pursuing him, we may be sure that the position of the Federals before Port Hudson is no better, and perhaps even worse, than the position of Grant before Vicksburg. Since the 27th of May, Banks has not renewed the assault, and the particulars of that engagement show that he has good reason for not so doing. The disaster was, as we anticipated from the first report, very serious to the Federals. The loss in killed and wounded, as we stated last week, is admitted by the Federals to be 3,000, and we believe it was much heavier, if we may judge from the casualties among the officers. But 3,000 is enough to check the operations of an army estimated not to exceed 30,000 men. It seems that Banks credited the persistent reports of the evacuation of Port Hudson, and expected to meet with little or no opposition. He was, at all events, totally unprepared for such a stern resistance, or he would not have commanded the assault, but have consented to carry on a "regular siege" without sacrificing his troops. We may expect by an early mail some decisive news about Banks, that is, whether he has or has not, like the rest of the Federal Generals, resorted to the spade, after decimating his army by an unsuccessful attack.

Northern accounts confirm the statement of our New Orleans correspondent which we published last week, that only 200 negroes out of 900 came out of a fight into which they were sent by the Federals. It is needless to expatiate upon the horrible inhumanity of putting negroes in the front; but we doubt not the description given of their conduct in the fight will delight the New Englanders. The unfortunate creatures were all at once possessed with the instincts of the savage. Not regarding the deadly weapons of civilized warfare, they resorted to biting, as if their teeth could avail against ball and bayonet. There is sufficient evidence to show that these unfortunate blacks, being first plied with strong drink, were wantonly sacrificed. They were driven, with the bayonet at their back, into places where no white man followed them, and it is a significant fact that no mention is made of any white officers being in command.

Admiral Porter has written a despatch upon the destruction "of the rebel fleet and navy yard at Yazoo City." The description of the "navy" so burned is grandiloquent:—"Three powerful rams were burned, viz., the Mobile, a screw vessel, ready for plating; the Republic, being fitted for a ram, with railroad iron plating; and a vessel on the stocks—a monster, 310 feet long and 75 feet beam. This vessel was to have been covered with four and a half inch iron plating, and was to have had six engines, four side wheels, and propellers. She would have given us much trouble." Lieut.-Commander Walker, who favoured his chief with this glowing account of the fleet, is a curious genius. "If," says Admiral Porter, "he could have obtained pilots, he would have succeeded in getting possession of all the rebel rams instead of having burned them." We fancy even a skilful pilot would have found it rather difficult to have moved the unfinished "monster," and that she really would "have given them much trouble." And when one comes to think of it, it is funny that as Walker could get to Yazoo City, he should not have been able to take the rams away. We suspect that, like Pope and Halleck's 10,000 prisoners, Walker and Porter's rams only existed in a warm imagination.

There is an item of news in connection with the proceedings on the Mississippi, which is told in a few words, and which has probably not excited much attention. Yet it is important, as illustrating the impossibility of the North holding the South as a conquered country, without first exterminating the people. We are told, "The Confederates have reoccupied the Bayou Teche country." The invader can only keep possession of the land that is covered by the fire of his guns. The South is a wide country, and the Northern armies can go here and there, laying waste the fields, and destroying the defenceless towns, but that is all. It is true that the South can no more subjugate the North, than the North can the South; but in regard to desolation, the Confederates may, if they choose, follow the example of their enemy. The North, too, is a wide country, and the Southern armies might lay waste fields and burn defenceless towns. If they did so, it would be fair retaliation, and it might have a beneficial effect upon the Northern mind.

Last week we published some telegraphic news per Hibernian, dated New York, May 6th, which arrived at the moment we were going to press. It was concise and important. It announced that Fredericksburg had been evacuated by General Lee and occupied by General Hooker, and that General Lee had gone it was not known whither. The news was from entirely Northern sources, and, it is almost superfluous to add, was entirely false. The reason assigned for the mistake is peculiar; viz., that Hooker sent across a regiment to reconnoitre, that the regiment ascertained Longstreet was there in force, and concluded that General Lee maintained his position at Fredericksburg; or, to put the case in a few words—the Federals ascertained General Lee had not evacuated Fredericksburg, ergo they reported he had evacuated that place.

On the 9th instant, three brigades of Federal cavalry with 2,000 infantry, under the command of General Pleasanton, crossed the Rappahannock at Beverley Ford and at Kelly's Ford. Before a junction could be effected the Confederate cavalry—General Stuart's—drove back the Federal cavalry that had crossed at Beverley's Ford under Buford, with heavy loss. After this the Federals, made a charge, and the Confederates, it is said, were driven back to the main body. A military critic will see that it was the business of the Confederate cavalry to join the main body without much driving from the enemy. Buford renewed his attack, was repulsed, and had "to cut his way out with difficulty." The Confederates again fell back, the Federals effected a junction, but they had had enough of fighting. They had been too severely punished to march for the third time into the Confederate trap. At four o'clock in the afternoon, General Pleasanton recrossed the river. "No definite estimate of the Federal loss has been received, but the fighting was severe, and hard to hand;" that is to say, the Federal loss was heavier than it is convenient for the Federal authorities to admit.

A small force of Confederate cavalry has advanced within three miles of Portersville, Maryland, driven a company of Michigan cavalry into the town, burnt the Federal camp, and then recrossed the Potomac.

There are rumours of other movements in Virginia, and much anxiety is felt in the North as to the supposed intention of General Lee to cross the Potomac. The Governor of Pennsylvania has called upon the citizens of the ages from 18 to 60 years to organize for the defence of the State; and he has telegraphed to Washington to have all recruiting for the Federal army stopped, that the citizens may be available for home defence. As the Northern States find it necessary to defend their homes the aggressive power of the North will be diminished.

The aspect of affairs in the United States is by no means encouraging to the Federal Government. Mr. Vallandigham has been unanimously nominated by the Democratic State Convention of Ohio for the Governorship—a reproof, not to say an insult, to the Federal Government, which has just sent him into banishment. In Indiana the enrolment is being forcibly resisted. The Provost Marshal and his assistant have been shot, and a military force is found necessary to maintain order. A Democratic meeting has been held at Brooklyn, at which resolutions were passed denouncing interference with liberty of speech. The Editors of the New York press have passed resolutions declaring their right to criticise the acts of the Administration and its subordinates, and denying the right of the military to suppress papers published far from the seat of war. Yet if free speech and free comments are allowed, the Lincoln despotism will be in danger of an overthrow. In Illinois there is a dispute between the Democrats and the Republicans. The Governor of Illinois has prorogued the State Legislature till the 18th inst. Sixty-five Republicans left the Assembly, thereby preventing a quorum; but the Democrats refused to recognise the prorogation, and entered a protest against the Governor for unconstitutional usurpation, and the revolutionary breaking up of the Legislature. Even in New York there is rioting. The strike of the stevedores and longshore men is becoming more formidable, and the men refusing to join are threatened with violence. The Government vessels are loaded by Government officials, under a guard of soldiers.

There is now some truth in saying there is a civil war in America. Besides the foreign war with the Confederate States, the Federal Government has to keep its subjects in order by aid of the military.

It is announced President Davis has dismissed the British Consul at Richmond for disregarding the legal authority of the Confederate Government in assuming to act as Consul for other cities than Richmond and other States than Virginia.

Judge Marvin, of the District Court of the United States, has given judgment in the cases of the Dolphin and Pearl. The first case was decided in favour of the captors; the latter was held over for the claimant to produce further evidence. With regard to the Dolphin, the Court held that if a vessel sailed from a neutral port with the intention of only touching at a neutral, and then proceeding to a blockaded port, the vessel could be lawfully seized at any time during her voyage. Having declared, with a candour that contrasts favourably with the evasive statements of Lord Russell, that "there can be no such thing as articles contraband to war in a strictly neutral trade," Judge Marvin said, "If it was the intention of the owner that the vessel should simply touch at Nassau, and should proceed thence to Charleston, or some other port of the enemy, then the voyage was not a voyage prosecuted by a neutral from one neutral port to another, but to a port of the enemy, begun and carried on in violation of the belligerent rights of the United States to blockade the enemy's ports, and to prevent the introduction of munitions of war. The act of sailing for a blockaded port, with a knowledge of the existence of the blockade, and with an intent to enter, is itself an attempt to break it, which subjects the vessel and cargo to capture in any part of the voyage." But how are we to ascertain the intention? Mere surmises will not do. It is not enough that the cargo consists of contraband to war. If it were found that the cargo was to be landed at a neutral port, but that the vessel was to proceed to a blockaded port, that would not save ship or cargo. If the ship's papers are in order for a neutral port, she is engaged on a lawful voyage and cannot be lawfully seized. We concede the right of the Federals to confiscate vessels attempting to run the blockade, and if the blockade was efficient, then there would be no need of seizing vessels at a venture. Judge Marvin assumes facts based upon assumed intentions, whereas the law expressly stipulates that facts alone prove the intention. So long as a vessel is sailing from a neutral port to a neutral port, she is acting lawfully—it is only when she leaves a neutral port to sail to a blockaded port, that her voyage is unlawful. The construction of Judge Marvin would put an end to our trade with all neutral ports from which vessels can conveniently proceed to Southern ports; and this is a construction which it is not expedient for British shippers to sanction.

The Nassau Guardian states that "the Federal steamer Rhode Island chased and fired at the steamers Margaret and Jessie within 250 yards of the shore, off James Point. Several shots from the Rhode Island reached the shore, alarming the inhabitants. The Margaret and Jessie escaped."

The New York Herald gives us a proof of the activity of Federal recruiting in Ireland. On the 9th June, it says,—“Five thousand one hundred and fifty emigrants arrived in New York city last week, and forty-nine thousand six hundred and eighty-two have reached this port since January 1. Only twenty thousand six hundred and eighty-eight arrived during the same period last year. This gain of thirty thousand is an army in itself.” The Herald remarks “that Irishmen, who are well cared for in the United States, will never desire to emigrate to the old country again, except, perhaps, with arms in their hands, and the hope of Irish independence in their hearts.” According to this journal our treatment of Ireland is bad indeed. In an article on Poland it observes:—“We can readily conceive that Russia should be loth to give way to the Poles. She might easily retort upon England by advising her to abandon the government of India, and, for that matter, of Ireland. Earl Russell must be aware that the yoke of her Britannic Majesty weighs quite as heavily upon the above-named countries as does that of the Czar upon Poland.” It will not be the fault of the United States if Ireland remains loyal and prosperous.

It is stated that General Butler will be brought out for the Governorship of Massachusetts by the war Democrats; and that if he consents to be a candidate the Republicans will probably endorse him. General Butler will be a fitting representative of Massachusetts.

Who's Griffith? Let us hasten to inform the benighted world. Those of our readers who have visited minor theatres and witnessed exciting melodramas, will be familiar with the usual scene of a gallant sailor rushing on the stage and rescuing a fair maiden from a score of pirates. The sailor (who always has black curls, silk stockings, and dancing pumps) places his hands over the virgin's neck, and with a pistol in each hand keeps at bay the twenty pirates armed to the teeth, and so escapes with his future wife. But Griffith—the Federal Sergeant Griffith—beats all the heroes of romance. The correspondent of the New York Herald says that on the 22nd of May Griffith and his company assaulted the Vicksburg fortifications. “After tremendous exertions the sergeant and thirteen men actually drove off the defenders of the small fortress, climbed up and stood upon the earthwork. But they stayed there only a moment. Not waiting to see, but expecting that a large body of their comrades were close upon their heels, they clambered down the embankment and drove every rebel out of it at the point of the bayonet, and actually found themselves, fourteen men in all, masters of the field. They held the place some hours, but none of their men came to their assistance. Presently the rebels made the discovery that their works were pierced, and a small detachment was sent to kill the audacious Yankee penetrators.” How marvellous, that for some hours they should be unaided and unmolested! But now comes the pith of this miraculous history:—“But our friends from Iowa had rested slightly, and were not to be captured so easily. They disputed the entrance of the rebels, and soon thinned their ranks considerably. But valour could do nothing against such superior numbers. Yet the ranks of the Iowa boys were full. But presently a more effective volley than usual either killed or wounded every man in the little band, with the exception of the sergeant, and he was knocked down and badly stunned by a spent ball, whose force had been partially stopped by first striking one of his companions. For some moment Griffith remained motionless; but just as the rebels were entering the works, either to kill or capture those of the Federals who might survive, he recovered himself. Down came the rebels. Their muskets were all empty. Griffith had the advantage of them there, for his was undischarged. He immediately drew his implement to his shoulder and ordered a halt. Forced to obey, the Confederates halted. Griffith then told them that he had them, and, unless they surrendered themselves prisoners of war, he should kill them one by one with his musket and revolver. The rebels wavered. They hardly knew what to do. Griffith did know what to do—he knew very well that his life hung in the balance, and unless he could frighten his foes he was a ‘gone Iowa.’ Finally, the Confederates actually surrendered to this single and unaided man—and he positively marched them over the wall he and his friends had scaled, and delivered them safely, prisoners of war, at the head-quarters of his division.” Was it not remarkable that the stunned man should retain his musket? Was it not remarkable that the Confederate detachment should not have a shot left amongst them? Was it not remarkable that thirteen men should have surrendered to one man, and quietly followed him out of their own works, scaled the wall and proceeded to the Federal head-quarters? The Federals have long been in search of a hero, and they have one now in Griffith. We commend this little bit of history to the Daily News. It is quite as veracious as the negro roasting, and not so nasty.

Uriah Heap never was half so ‘umble as is Mr. Moncreu D. Conway in his letter of apologies and disclaimers, which follows, after a pause of nearly a week, the publication of his correspondence with Mr. Mason. He appeals to our sympathies by the ingenuous plea of “inexperience in diplomatic and political affairs,” and the frank avowal that the form of his proposition was “objectionable,” that he “inferred hastily and improperly,” and speaks regretfully of his “own blundering way,” but hopes that his offence “will be condoned by the country he meant to serve.” This is, indeed, the style we should expect of a man who parades himself as a renegade, and hires himself to bear false witness against his own country and the very parents who bare him. It is a credit to the South that such characters, even if by a freak of nature born there, seek a more congenial clime north of the famous Line. But why this self-immolation in the present instance? Why, Mr. Conway would deserve the eternal thanks of Messrs. Lincoln and Seward if he could foist upon the English people the ridiculous fiction that the North is fighting for negro emancipation or any principle whatever. So far, then, he has done nothing more than what had been frequently attempted before by abler men. The admirers of Beecher, Cheever, and Tyng must have been seriously alarmed at the transatlantic consequences of a premature disclosure of their plans, to punish so severely the impertinent officiousness of the representative of Wendall Phillips.

The price of gold in New York on the 13th of June was 43 per cent. premium.

LATEST NEWS.

(Per the Edinburgh.)

NEW YORK, June 13, Morning.

Official despatches state that the Federal General Keyes, with a large force, left Yorktown some days since. Federal gunboats have been sent up the James River as far as the Chickahominy.

President Lincoln, in reply to a Missouri committee of Germans, stated that Generals Fremont, Sigel, and Butler were not systematically kept out of command, but had by their own action placed themselves in their present position. He said that he favoured gradual emancipation. His being President might be a misfortune; but having been elected, he meant to be President, and perform his duty if he died for it.

ENGLAND.

There is again, according to the returns of the Poor Law Board, a diminution of about 1800 in the pauperism of Lancashire. A month or two since the weekly reduction was much greater than this; four months hence it is probable that the small decrease now observable may have been changed for a rapid increase, as those, who in the spring and summer have sought work elsewhere, return to their homes, and to dependence on alms, voluntary or parochial. Such at least is the opinion of those who are well qualified to judge. The Government has taken the matter in hand, at last, with at least a show of being in earnest; and their measure was read a second time on Thursday last, after learning from Mr. Villiers with no little difficulty, that the Government proposed to take power to lend a million and a half to local authorities in Lancashire for improvements and public works, on which the unemployed able-bodied operatives are to find employment, and to confer on the local authorities power to borrow where at present they have it not, it was a positive relief to hear the sonorous voice of Mr. Ferrand, who, though he is apt to be a bore by speaking very long, very little to the point, and with absurd and extravagant vehemence, is certainly an orator, and on a tour of plat form agitation might be fitly matched against John Bright. Mr. Cobden, in reply, made a brief but very sensible and telling speech. He pointed out that the high wages usually earned by the Lancashire operatives made it undesirable that they should emigrate so long as there remained any prospect that they would soon again find employment at home; and that their previous habits and training altogether unfitted them for colonial life. He expressed great doubts whether the sufferers would, in any large number of cases, choose to emigrate, however desirous they might be that others should go, and make room for them at home. And finally he stated, with very good reason, that any scheme for extensive emigration required long time for preparation, in order to prevent the emigrants from falling into terrible distress. We have repeatedly explained the circumstances which unfit the factory folk for the rough life and rougher work of a colony; and need only now add to what we have said before, that the best colonists among them would be the mechanics, of whom two or three are attached to every factory; that even these, accustomed to have the best of tools always at hand and their work marked out for them, would hardly be handy enough at first for a new settlement; and that their wives and daughters would be utterly bewildered when required to make their way without any of the comforts and conveniences which, at home, were always ready to their hand. Highly-skilled labourers are, out of their own special department, peculiarly "shiftless," simply because the high price of their own special skill has confined them to one very limited occupation. Farm labourers, blacksmiths, people who have been used to turn their hands to anything, are the sort of men wanted for the colonies; factory operatives would fare almost as ill in Australia as they now do at home.

A case has lately come before a coroner's jury, which might suggest to some Southern writer, provoked by the ready sale of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and the sanctimonious Pharisaism of the Anti-Slavery meetings, the idea of a novel, or a series of novels, on "Female Slavery in London." A girl, employed by a fashionable London milliner or dressmaker, has died from overwork, confinement, and foul air; and the inquest brought to light the fact that she was only the most unfortunate—or shall we say the most fortunate?—of her fellow-slaves in the same shop. We do not mean to say that the girls were treated with intentional barbarity. They were not beaten or starved; they were simply worked to death, and their death accelerated by being crowded into a space circumscribed by the enormous rental demanded in a fashionable situation. Had they been slaves they would have fared far better; their mistress would have had an interest in them as persons belonging to her, and, moreover, would have felt and understood that, in a mere pecuniary point of view, it would not pay to overwork them. The remedy, of course, is not slavery, but such a reduction of the demand for employment as may enable young women to refuse work in close rooms and for unlimited hours. But this little incident is sufficient to show that there are evils incident to the system of free labour quite as gross as any that are charged on slavery, and may serve to remind our readers of the obvious fact that, so far as his bodily condition is concerned, the slave is far better off than the free labourer, who, from whatever reason, is too weak to take care of himself. For the slave has always a master who is necessarily interested in him, and is able to protect him; the cheap tailor's drudge or the dressmaker's workwoman is precluded by the difficulty of finding work from self-protection, and finds no protection from an employer who has no interest in a labourer who can at any moment be replaced without extra expense.

On Friday night the House of Lords was occupied with a Brazilian debate. Lord Malmesbury, in an effective speech (which surprised some who know Lord Malmesbury's defects, which are patent enough, and are ignorant of the quiet good sense which induced Lord Derby twice to place him in the Foreign-office), criticised the policy of the Government, and condemned their peremptory and dictatorial dealing with the only State in America that had escaped the contagion of democracy. The most noteworthy point in Lord Russell's reply was the assertion that he had not done towards Brazil more than he would have done, under similar provocation, towards a great Power. Therefore, he it known to all whom it may concern, that if an English ship should be wrecked and plundered on the Asiatic or American coast of the Russian Empire, and if it shall please any English consul, on the verge of brain disease, to imagine that the magistrates of the district have been lax in taking up the matter, Lord Russell will call the Government of the Czar to account, and demand the punishment of the magistrate, even if there be no sort of evidence against him, and an indemnity for the loss of the vessel. Also, that if in any American port, the officers of a British ship being ashore in mufti, should be drunk and disorderly, and assault the police, and for so doing should be incarcerated for four-and-twenty hours, Lord Russell will demand the dismissal of every person concerned in their arrest. Also, that if these demands be not immediately complied with, he will proceed to seize ships of the offending Power in the national waters. We hope that Mr. Seward will make a note of this.

On Monday night, the threatened debate on Poland was got rid of by a curious and not very honourable trick. Lord Palmerston, agreeably to promise, moved the postponement of the orders of the day. Hereupon, three Liberal members, of the Ministerial section, appealed to Mr. Hennessy not to enter into the Polish question; and, as he remained silent, they divided the House against the postponement of the orders, and obtained a majority. Then arose a more than ordinary confusion and clamour, for this was clearly a violation by the Liberal party of their leader's promise; and if promises of that kind, made by a party chief, are not to be respected by his followers, it is not easy to see how the business of the House is to be carried on. Mr. Horsman, Lord R. Cecil, and Mr. Disraeli, with several other members, complained of the bad faith of the Government, and Lord Palmerston did not clear himself satisfactorily. Every one knew that he could have prevented the defeat of his motion, had he chosen to do so. But Mr. Hennessy, with great tact, acquiesced in the evident wish of the House;—the more readily, as Lord Palmerston had stated the nature of the negotiations pending with Russia, and of the recommendations which had been addressed by the English Government to that of St. Petersburg. It seems that Lord Russell has required the Czar to grant a general amnesty; a national representation; a Polish civil service; the official use of the Polish tongue; religious toleration—which Poland abhors; and a regular system of military recruitment. Also, his lordship recommends a cessation of hostilities. We cannot but think that, as negotiations are not yet broken off, Lord Palmerston has been guilty both of imprudence and of discourtesy in making public such demands as these.

EUROPE.

A Paris correspondent of the Independance Belge writes that Mr. Slidell has had an interview with the Emperor, who received him most graciously, and expressed himself most favourably to the Southern cause. We have reason to believe that our Belgian contemporary is not misinformed.

The French Ministry has undergone a very important modification. Count Walewski has resigned the Ministry of State, the administrative functions of which are divided amongst other departments, and M. Billault has been appointed to the office. M. Baroche is transferred from the Presidency of the Council of State, to the Ministry of Justice; M. Rouher assumes the Presidency of the Council of State; his place at the Ministry of Agriculture is taken by M. Behic; M. Duruy goes to the Ministry of Education; and, most important change of all, M. Boudet, hitherto chief of a section in the Council of State, is appointed Minister of the Tuileries. An article in the Moniteur explains the reasons which have led to the election of M. Billault. Hitherto, ministers without portfolios, of whom M. Billault was one, have defended the policy of the Government in the Chambers. "The Emperor, by the decree of to-day, substitutes a minister intrusted with the mission of representing the relations of the Government with the great bodies of State, with the object of more solidly organizing the representation of the Governmental idea before the Chambers, without departing from the spirit of the constitution. The Minister of State, who is freed from administrative functions, and the minister, President of the Council of State, with the assistance of the members of this Council, are henceforth deputed to explain and defend questions placed before the Senate and Corps Legislatif." M. Billault will, therefore, occupy a position analogous—so far as there can be an analogy between the position of an English and French Minister—to that of the Duke of Wellington and of Lord John Russell when they respectively lead the House of Lords and Commons without holding office. M. Walewski has no doubt resigned merely to facilitate this arrangement, and not from any change in the Imperial policy. The resignation of M. Persigny is a much more important matter. He will probably be transferred to some other office; the Emperor will not meet with so devoted a supporter, but his retirement from the Ministry of the Interior must be taken as a sign that a more liberal policy is about to be pursued in domestic matters.

The Three Powers came to an understanding upon the Polish question, or, more correctly, to an agreement to differ, much sooner than could have been anticipated; and notes were despatched from Paris, London, and Vienna, to the representatives of those courts at St. Petersburg, on the 17th. Our readers will find in our parliamentary notes Lord Palmerston's version of the substance of the allied proposition; and we need only observe here that, so far as that proposition is a joint one, it is that which has been attributed to the initiative of Austria, and that the points upon which a difference exists between the Powers relate, first, to the character of the representation to be accorded the Poles, and secondly, to the question of a suspension of hostilities. We shall probably have the reply of Russia in a few days; it will most likely be a positive refusal of the armistice, and the declaration of a readiness to enter into negotiations on the basis of the other points—an answer which will hardly satisfy the Powers, although, unless they will go to war, they must put up with it. The Poles certainly will not be content with a scheme which rejects altogether their claim to independence, and moreover, takes account only of Congress Poland.

They are making the most desperate efforts to stimulate European public opinion in their favour. Stories of Russian atrocities have been circulated wholesale. General Mouravieff was declared by a telegram from Cracow to have ordered that all ladies dressed in mourning should be knouted; and a French telegraphic agency has published a document, which it affirms to be the instructions of General Mouravieff, directing him, inter alia, to represent to the peasants that the proprietors are their enemies and oppressors; to proceed with the greatest severity against the Catholic clergy, which is the instigator of the present rebellion; to have the chiefs who fall into his hands shot immediately; to take measures, if circumstances require, against families which have members in the insurgent ranks; to oppose certain demonstrations of the women, and to adopt, "même contre elles," severe measures. The story of the knouting has been authoritatively denied, and the authenticity of these instructions is disproved by the least examination. The Russian Government may have given Mouravieff instructions quite as rigid as these, but it would not have formulated them in writing, and certainly no copy of such a document would find its way to a telegraphic agency. Besides, the language of the despatch protests against its genuineness. If the Russian Chancery had to set out such instructions, it would not write the "même contre elles."

We deem it the more needful to point out these exaggerations, because General Mouravieff has undoubtedly been acting with very great severity, not to say cruelty, at Wilna. He has had several priests and proprietors shot, and expresses himself determined to serve the rest in the same way. In a letter to the Catholic Bishop of Wilna, he complains bitterly of the conduct of the clergy, with respect to which the Bishop had given him some satisfactory assurances. He declares that they are very active in exciting the population, that they read from the pulpit revolutionary proclamations, receive the oaths of persons joining the insurgent bands, and take up arms themselves; he enjoins the Bishop to direct the clergy in the proper way, and asks for copies of the decisions the Bishop may take; drawing the Bishop's attention to a particular article of the instructions he has given to local authorities, to the effect that all members of the clergy, and especially the priests of parishes, as well in towns as villages, who may lend their assistance to the insurrection by words or actions, who may excite their flocks to rebellion, are to be immediately arrested and brought before a court-martial; and adding menacingly enough, that "the law which punishes traitors is not less severe for those who, having the means of preventing crime, make themselves its accomplices by their inaction."

A letter from St. Petersburg, not written with any partiality for the Poles, tells a story of Mouravieff's energy, in which this very Bishop figures. The Bishop had delayed, under different pretexts, sending in a list of his clergy, which the General had urgently demanded, and the latter, tired of the delay, sent one of his aides-de-camp to the bishop, with the message that if the note required was not ready within twenty-four hours, Monsieur would be hung by way of example. In two hours, it is added, the note was sent. The Russians on their part complain, and no doubt with good reasons, that the insurgents are guilty of great atrocities. Still, the balance of cruelty must be chargeable against the Russians, because they must be held answerable for the fearful crimes committed by the peasants. It is now placed beyond all question, that whilst in the kingdom of Poland the peasants do not take an active part on either side, although they rather assist the Government by information, in the old provinces of Poland they are entirely on the side of the Government, and have responded to its appeal with a savage alacrity. Throughout the greater part of Lithuania, and the whole of Ruthenia, the efforts of the insurgents have resulted in a complete failure. All the stories about risings en masse, accepted so credulously by the English press, were, as showed at the time that they must be, utterly false. A few daring students or proprietors raised the standard of insurrection, to fall in a short time into the hands of the infuriated peasants, and pay in the terrible death of themselves and their families the penalty of their rash undertaking. If the insurrection lasts a few months longer, Prince Gortschakoff's menace will be fulfilled: "Poland will be a heap of ashes and corpses." Its nobility, its intelligence and valour will be exterminated, and Russia will have no difficulty in governing the country. The peasants will constitute the nation, and then she can manage easily enough.

There has not been much fighting, or to speak more correctly, but little intelligence of fighting has been received—this week. The insurgents seem to be exhausted. The struggle is too unequal. Were the nation united the Russians would long since have been driven from Poland. The population, however, is with Russia. It is only the chivalry and intelligence of the nation—a very small minority—which seeks to throw off her yoke.

The National Government, although it did not, as represented, leave a receipt in the Treasury for the sums stolen, acknowledges the theft. In a proclamation it declares it to be its task to weaken the enemy as much as possible; proclaims that the funds of the country ought to serve only the country and its liberation; announces that, therefore, the functionaries of the commission of finances, Stanislaus Janowski and Stanislaus Hebda, have transferred to the care of the National Government a sum of 24,000,000 Polish florins; declares that the functionaries in question have deserved well of their country, and have been confided with a special mission abroad—a very euphemistic way of announcing their flight.

The Journal des Debats states that the number of the Opposition in the new Chamber will be 34. In this number it counts MM. Havin and Jules Favre, each elected in two districts twice, but the number will probably prove correct, as there is little doubt that Opposition candidates will be returned for the seats which these candidates decline. They make their choice within ten days from the verification of their elections, and the new elections must take place within six months.

The Moniteur announces that General Forey has ordered that all merchandise imported into Mexican ports occupied by the French army, and destined for countries in which it exercises authority shall pay only half the import duty fixed by the present tariff. The reduction does not apply to the additional duties.

Bordeaux has been the scene of a riot which at one time threatened to have serious consequences. The Railway Company has laid down a line from the station to the quays for the transport of merchandise. The carmen considered that it would interfere with their business, and the first time the waggons ran on the line, seized them, took the horses out, and when the sergens de ville and gendarmerie interfered, broke up the sides of the waggons and attacked the authorities with the planks. The military were called out, and after several persons had been wounded, the riot was suppressed and several of the ringleaders arrested. The prefect, M. Pietri, subsequently issued a proclamation pointing out to the men that the railway would not lessen their business, and warning them that any further disturbance would be suppressed with the utmost severity.

The speech in which the Archduke Charles Louis opened the session of the Austrian Reichsrath, is a jubilation over the happy working of free institutions. "Thanks to these liberal institutions," says the Archduke, "we see, through the entire domain of intellectual and material life, a greater activity develop itself, whilst the resources of the empire begin to expand, and its prestige and strength consolidate themselves more and more. The financial situation shows a most satisfactory progress; the public credit and the condition of the currency are ameliorated. A glance at the activity of the provincial diets, whose sessions have just closed, shows, in a form full of life, the thought which lies in our fundamental laws, that of preserving in the necessary unity of the whole, the freest and most independent movement of its parts. Transylvania will soon take its part in the common deliberations." The Reichsrath is invited to pursue the great work. The speech enumerates a series of laws, which will be submitted to its consideration for reforms in the law, and its administration reforms all directed to the extension and consolidation of liberty.

The Presidents of both Houses, in commencing the proceedings, expressed the same gratification at the results achieved and the same determination to press forward in the path of liberty. The Austrian Upper House, which is filled with a real aristocracy, men of high family and great wealth, has spoken of liberty, and, whilst the Prussian Upper House employs itself in attempts to overthrow the constitution, labours to develop and strengthen it. The draft of the address to the throne in both Houses alludes to the Polish question, and the views of the Austrian Government on that most important question will, therefore, we may presume, receive, in the course of its discussion, a full and authoritative exposition.

A long-continued drought has occasioned great distress in some parts of Hungary. Neither grain for men nor fodder for beasts can be obtained.

At the sitting of the Federal Diet on the 18th the Committee on the Affairs of Holstein presented its report, recommending that Denmark should be required to withdraw the ordinance of the 30th of March. The proposal will be put to the vote on the 7th of July.

Earl Russell is said to have communicated to the Danish Government copies of identical notes he has addressed to Austria and Prussia, drawing the serious attention of those Powers to the danger to which Germany would expose herself by a military occupation of Holstein. Another version of the notes is that his lordship has declared that England will raise no objection to any measures of the Confederation with respect to Holstein, but that any extension of these measures to Schleswig might give the conflict a European character. M. Drouyn de Lhuys has also expressed the opinions of the French Government on the subject. He has repudiated, we are told, the idea that France had inspired or approved the ordinance of the 30th of March, but he equally warns Germany against taking any measures with regard to Schleswig.

The discussion in the Italian Chamber of Deputies, originated by the interpellation—to which we alluded last week—with respect to Rome and Poland, developed into a general discussion of the Ministerial policy, terminating in the adoption of a resolution of entire confidence, by 202 to 52 votes. A speech of Signor Rattazzi gave this character to the debate. Breaking the silence he had maintained since his retirement from office, Rattazzi criticised with considerable severity the policy of the Government in the Roman and Polish questions. He complained that the voice of Italy was listened to nowhere; reproached the Ministry with having put aside the Roman question, and having followed timidly France and England; allowing those Powers to concert with Austria without insisting upon the right of Italy to be a party to the arrangements. Signor Minghetti had not much difficulty in disposing of these accusations. He showed that no good could be effected, at present, by appeals to France about Rome; "the mission of the Ministry is to consolidate Italy in organising it." Not content with defending himself, he attacked the policy of Rattazzi, declared that if he had been in power, he would have accepted the principle of the Emperor's letter of May, 1862, and stigmatised the circular of General Durande as a grave error. There can be no doubt about the latter point. Durande's note was a blunder, indeed; but how Minghetti could have accepted the Imperial letter if he retains his conviction repeated in his speech, that the temporal power is entirely to be done away with, and Rome is to be the capital of Italy, we cannot conceive. The Emperor proposed "a combination which should leave the Pope master at home, and remove the barriers which separate his States from the rest of Italy." The Italian Government should engage itself to recognise the States of the Church, and the boundary agreed, and the Government of the Holy See returning to its ancient traditions, should consecrate the privileges of the municipalities and provinces in such a way that they should administer, so to speak, themselves,—perhaps the best solution possible, but assuredly not the one which the Italians ask, or Minghetti will dare to propose to them. Rattazzi's reproaches against the Polish policy of the Cabinet refuted themselves. The policy he urged would have been puerile. The discussion was a warm one, and in the course of it Minghetti declared a statement of Rattazzi's to be perfectly false. Rattazzi demanded the withdrawal of the expression, and the demand being rejected, challenged the President of the Council, who promptly accepted the invitation, and, having the choice of weapons, chose the sword, with which he inflicted a slight wound upon his adversary. A duel between a Premier and the leader of the Opposition is now-a-days a very unusual event.

A short time since Lord Palmerston quoted in the House of Commons, in confirmation of his assertion that there was a committee sitting at Rome which hired ruffians whom it despatched into the Neapolitan territory to commit depredations of all sorts, a sermon, preached as he alleged by a Father Curci before the King of Naples, in which these very proceedings were strongly condemned. Father Curci denies, in the most emphatic manner, that in the sermon in question he made the slightest allusion, direct or indirect, to brigandage, and declares that Lord Palmerston uttered a tissue of pure falsehoods. It appears that the statement of Lord Palmerston was taken from a Turin paper, and the Turin press is unfortunately very careless about the truth of anything it publishes, so long as it tells against the Pope and the Bourbons.

The King of Prussia is at Carlsbad. His physicians, it is said, have given orders that for the first few days of his stay he is to do no business—perfect repose of mind being necessary to the beneficial action of the waters; but Herr von Bismark will soon join his Majesty. It is not expected that any further measures of repression will at present be resorted to; the journals are silenced, and the people, confident that the illegal system cannot last long, are bearing it with philosophic patience.

We announced last week, upon the faith of a telegram, that the Portuguese Chambers had been closed on the 12th. The telegram, as is very common with telegrams, said, "the thing that was not." The Chambers were only closed on the 20th.

The Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands has published a proclamation, announcing the union of the islands to Greece. There are some little formalities, however, to be accomplished before the transfer can take place. The islands themselves must give a formal ratification of the proposal, and the Powers parties to the treaties must give their formal consent. Some months must elapse before the union is effected.

BRAZIL.

A DECREE has been published dissolving the Chamber of Deputies, convoking a new one for the 1st of January, 1864, and fixing the 9th of August for the meeting of the Primary Assemblies to nominate electors. The immense extent of the empire renders this long interval absolutely necessary. Some of the provinces in the interior do not receive news from Rio Janeiro under six weeks or two months.

Much excitement still prevails on the subject of the difficulties with England. Bahia and some other ports have been visited by the Confederate cruisers Alabama, Florida, and Georgia, whose officers seem to have won golden opinions wherever they went.

The Independence Belge announces that the King of the Belgians, who is much better, has given his decision relative to the difficulty as to the treatment of the officers of the Forte, submitted to his arbitration by the Governments of Great Britain and Brazil. It is added that the judgment is believed to be favourable to Brazil.

THE EAST.

THE Foreign-office has received this telegram from the British Chargé d'Affaires in Persia, dated the 11th of June:—"Intelligence received this day of the capture of Herat by Dost Mahomed Khan." On the other hand, the Austrian Gazette of Monday announces the death of the Dost before Herat.

The Japanese Government has been granted fifteen days to reply to the English ultimatum, the terms of which as stated by Mr. Layard in the House of Commons on Monday week are, an ample and formal apology for the outrages upon British subjects, the payment of some very large sums of money—£135,000 in all—as compensation to the victims or their families, and the execution of the culprits. It is not believed that the Japanese will comply with these demands, and we may expect to hear of a great and useless slaughter.

PARLIAMENTARY NOTES.

THURSDAY, JUNE 18.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

A short conversation took place concerning the purchase of the Exhibition Building, which was censured by the Duke of Rutland, and defended by Earl Granville and Lord Derby.

THURSDAY, JUNE 18.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. Villiers, in moving that the Public Works (Manufacturing Districts) Bill should be read a second time, observed that the measure was the result of an inquiry which had been conducted on behalf of the Government with a view to ascertain whether it was possible to find a resource for the employment of the unfortunate operatives who had been so long suffering distress in the towns and populous districts of Lancashire and Cheshire. Although there was reason to be grateful that adequate means had been provided for the maintenance of such a large body of men by the public benevolence, yet it was impossible not to be alive to the serious consequences of their continuing for so long a time to derive their subsistence from charitable sources. Various measures had been suggested to provide for the existing state of things, such as the dispersion of the people throughout the country, emigration to one or more of the colonies, and the finding of employment nearer home. It was the last of these that the bill proposed to adopt, by means of advances from the loan commissioners to municipal and other local authorities for the execution of works and improvements in their respective districts; and he believed that the bill would as nearly as possible meet the requirements of the case. It was not intended as a panacea for all the evils which had arisen out of the failure in the supply of cotton. It did not strike at the root of the calamity which had befallen this country. It was essentially a precautionary measure, designed in some degree to mitigate the distress and sufferings of the people, and he believed that it might be turned to beneficial account if the local authorities thought fit to avail themselves of its enactments.—Mr. Ferrand thought that the Bill made very inadequate provision for the numbers of the unemployed, and that the factory hands were hardly fit for the kind of work offered. He urged that Government should assist emigration. After one or two other gentlemen had spoken, Mr. Cobden said that the great difficulty in dealing with this case arose from the cotton population having been in the receipt of high wages, from which they could not be brought down suddenly to the rate of earnings with which the labourers in agricultural districts were content. It would neither be safe to their health nor conducive of peace in their districts to reduce them to that level. With regard to emigration, there was not the same demand in new countries for factory operatives as for agricultural labourers. The former could not plough, reap, mow, or thresh; and the question was, supposing they were sent to the colonies, if the House was prepared to provide for their maintenance when they had landed there; for hitherto all wholesale systems of emigration had acted most cruelly as a rule. The fact was that no specific remedy could be applied to the evil; but he hoped that by means of this Bill, coupled with emigration of an enforced character, and the individual efforts of landowners and capitalists, that evil might be met and considerably abated. Some Lancashire members expressed their hearty approval of the Bill, which was then read a second time. Some other business having been discussed and disposed of, the House adjourned.

FRIDAY, JUNE 19.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

Lord Stratford de Redcliffe called attention to the state of things in Poland, and the frightful atrocities committed on both sides. He said that he did not entertain much hope that diplomacy could do any good in a conflict of this kind. He asked for information with regard to the result of recent negotiations.—Earl Russell said that notes, nearly identical, had been sent to St. Petersburg by England, France, and Austria, but that no answer had been received. After a few remarks from Lord Brougham, the subject dropped.

Lord Malmesbury directed the attention of the House to our quarrel with Brazil, and demanded that the Foreign Secretary should prove that his claims on that Power were just, and that in enforcing them he had done right to resort to reprisals. The Brazilian people, he understood, were unanimous in supporting their Government in resisting those demands, and their indignation was so great that they were using every effort to obtain reparation for the manner in which they had been treated. This being the popular feeling in Brazil, he believed the rupture was more serious than was generally supposed; and he charged the noble earl with not having made due allowance for the state of Brazil; with having permitted himself to be unduly influenced by the representations of his subordinates; used arbitrary and imperious language in his communications with the Brazilian Government, and adopted illegal and impolitic reprisals. The noble earl then reviewed at considerable length the whole of the facts of the case, and complained strongly of the proceedings of Mr. Christie and Mr. Vereker, who had most hastily jumped at the worst construction of the facts, and resorted to threats that were insulting to an independent Government. He maintained there was no proof of the murder of the crew of the Prince of Wales, but quite the contrary, and that the Government of the Emperor had done all that could be expected of them to institute an inquiry, and to punish those who might be guilty. Under these circumstances, it was doubtful whether the British Government was justified in demanding compensation, much less in proceeding to reprisals to enforce it. The noble earl then alluded to the case of the officers of the Forte, and remarked that the accounts of their squabbles with the Brazilian sentry did not agree; but it was admitted that they were in plain clothes; and it was a most extraordinary thing to ask King Leopold of Belgium to decide that this was an insult to our navy. If the affair had occurred in London the course pursued by the English authorities would have been precisely the same, and it was most unjust and ungenerous to have demanded the dismissal and ruin of the Brazilian officer, who had shown every attention to the officers of the Forte. On this point he found great fault with Mr. Christie, who had concealed from the Brazilian Minister the proposal of the noble earl to refer the disputes to arbitration. He believed that if the noble earl had communicated with M. de Moreira, the Brazilian Minister in London, whom he had never consulted, the question would have been settled without difficulty. In concluding the noble earl moved for further papers.—Earl Russell said that the principle by which her Majesty's Government had been actuated was, that it was the duty of one state to protect the subjects of another living within its jurisdiction. He readily admitted the commercial importance of Brazil; but that was not sufficient to debar the British Government from acting as it had always done, and asking reparation for a wrong; and since the year 1831 there had been no less than 21 cases in which France, 22 in which Great Britain, and 23 in which the United States had resorted to force, in order to obtain such reparation. With regard to the wreck of the Prince of Wales, he commended the conduct of Mr. Vereker, who repaired to the spot, and, discovering suspicious signs that the crew had been murdered, asked for an inquest, which was refused by the commercial judge. After some delay, however, an inquest was held upon four bodies; but there were six others which were not accounted for, and that upon the most frivolous pretexts. Some of the plunder of the ship was found in the house of the chief official himself, and if the wrecking had been the work of the wild inhabitants of the coast the officials must have been their accomplices. This was what her Majesty's Government complained of, more especially as the Brazilian Government would not take any steps either to institute an inquiry or protect the cargo of the wrecked vessel. If her Majesty's Government had done otherwise it would have neglected a clear and an imperative duty. He denied that the tone or language of his despatches was imperious or at all liable to that charge. Until after a tedious delay of more than twelve months his representations were trifled with; and he contended that Mr. Christie had acted in strict conformity with his instructions, for he was not empowered to propose an arbitration, but only to accept it if offered by the Brazilian Government, which, however, was not done. After having made representations so ineffectually for so long a time, he was at a loss to see how he could be charged with having acted arbitrarily or with precipitation. He declined to go into the case of the Forte, but observed that it was not until after reprisals that the Brazilian Government would consent to refer it to the arbitration of the King of the Belgians. When this had been done, surely it was highly unbecoming in the noble earl to try to damage the British case; and he (Earl Russell) was quite content to leave it to the consideration of that able and impartial Sovereign. He denied that he had acted with any undue desire to vindicate the civis Romanus claims of British subjects, although he might refer with pride to the declaration of Oliver Cromwell, that he would make the name of Englishman respected throughout the world. Neither had he dared to do that with respect to Brazil that he would not do in the case of a stronger power. In conclusion the noble earl said there was no objection to produce the papers, and added the expression of an earnest hope that amicable relations would soon be restored with Brazil.—Lord Chelmsford treated the question from the legal point of view, and argued that the proceedings of her Majesty's Government in enforcing reprisals were altogether unjustifiable.

The subject then dropped, and their lordships soon afterwards adjourned.

FRIDAY, JUNE 19.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The House was occupied till a late hour with an omnium gatherum of subjects, none of which deserve from us a particular notice, except that, in regard to Greenwich Hospital, Mr. Stansfeld, formerly Radical and purist, now ministerialist and placeman, came forward to defend one of the largest and most shameless of standing jobs. For decency's sake, however, he promised a measure on the subject. Another purist and Radical of the Yankee type, Mr. Barnes, of Leeds, appeared to resist the prosecution by the Attorney-General of some liberal partisans, who had been reported by a committee to have committed gross acts of bribery and intimidation at a late election in Ireland; but the House put Mr. Barnes down by a large majority.

MONDAY, JUNE 22.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

Lord Brougham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he had any objection to lay on the table certain papers relating to the treatment of liberated slaves in Brazil. The conduct of Brazil, as regarded the abolition of slavery, contrasted favourably with that of Spain, who had hitherto done nothing, except to receive compensation.—Lord Russell had no objection to lay the papers before Parliament. After some further discussion the House adjourned at ten minutes to eight.

MONDAY, JUNE 22.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

In answer to Mr. Coningham, the Marquis of Hartington announced that Colonel Crawley would be brought to trial before a court-martial sitting in England.

Mr. Ferrand asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he had received from the magistrates or police of Leeds a report stating that agents of the Federal Government of America were recruiting in that town, and that the men were sent to the American consul at Liverpool; if so, whether he would place it and his reply upon the table of the House.—Sir George Grey said a report had been received upon the subject, and it was now under the consideration of the law officers of the Crown. Under such circumstances it would be quite improper to produce it.—Lord Palmerston moved the postponement of the orders of the day till after Mr. Hennessy's motion on the affairs of Poland.—Mr. Beaumont, Mr. Kinglake, and Lord Enfield earnestly deprecated a discussion in the present position of affairs, and appealed to Mr. Hennessy to withdraw his motion. That gentleman remaining silent, the Speaker put the question of postponement. A loud shout of "no" from the liberal benches induced him to decide that the noes had it. Mr. Hennessy replied "The ayes have it." A division was directed, and resulted as follows.—Ayes 110, noes 165. Hereupon an angry and noisy debate ensued; Mr. Horsman, Lord R. Cecil, Mr. Coningham, Lord R. Montague, and some other gentlemen charging the Government and the liberal party with a breach of faith; as Mr. Hennessy's motion had been previously withdrawn only on Lord Palmerston's pledge to give him this night.—Mr. Coningham took the occasion to lug in Colonel Crawley, neck and crop. [If the hon. member will not hold his tongue on that subject, he will defeat the ends of justice by making the murderer of Lilley positively popular.]—Mr. Beaumont and Mr. Peacocke vindicated the course that had been taken.—Lord Palmerston confessed himself to have been taken entirely by surprise. Government had no wish whatever to avoid discussion; but, of course, it must be obvious that they could not answer for the House. All they could do was to give those facilities which, in the conduct of the business of the House they might be able to afford. He did not think that any injury would have arisen to the public service from the discussion, though the carrying of any of the addresses of which notice had been given would undoubtedly be highly injurious, and, if proposed, he should feel it his duty to resist them, considering that they were calculated to render negotiation utterly fruitless. As the motion was not to come on, there would be no impropriety in his stating the substance of the recommendations which, in concert with France and Austria, her Majesty's Ministers had submitted to the consideration of the Russian Government. They were as follows:—First, a general and complete amnesty; secondly, a national representation upon the principle of the representation established by Alexander I., in execution of the treaty of Vienna; thirdly, that Poles alone should be appointed to public offices, and that such a Polish administration should be appointed as would command the confidence of the people; fourthly, that full liberty of conscience should be given, and due protection accorded to the religion of the people; fifthly, that the Polish language should be used in all public transactions; and sixthly, that a regular system of recruiting should be established, so as to prevent the recurrence of such proceedings as had led to the revolution. The Government had also strongly urged that there should be a cessation of hostilities; their opinion being that unless the conflicts between the insurgents and the Russian troops were put an end to negotiations could not rest on any stable or satisfactory foundation.—Mr. Disraeli had not been of opinion that this was a convenient opportunity for discussing the question of Poland, but the noble viscount deeming that it was he had not demurred to the arrangement with Mr. Hennessy. What had happened that night, however, added considerably to the difficulty of conducting the business of the House. He refrained from then offering any opinion on the probable results of the recommendations of the Government; but it was clear that if they were accepted and were practicable they would only bring about a state of affairs similar to that which existed before, and which must be regarded as of a very provisional character. One of two solutions only was possible—namely, the unity of the Russian Empire or the independence of Poland. But the proposals of the Government appeared to be nothing more than mere diplomatic interference, and he could not see that the policy shadowed forth was at all distinguished by that prescience, sagacity, or firmness which was calculated to lead to a satisfactory result. Even if accepted by Russia, they would only raise a phantom of Polish independence, which in due course must lead to conjunctures and circumstances similar to those with which we had to contend at present. In short, no solution of the state of affairs seemed to be indicated by the policy of the Government.—Mr. Hennessy said nothing was further from his intention than to do anything disagreeable to a majority of the House; and after some conversation, the discussion was postponed till after the receipt of an answer from Russia.

The orders of the day were then proceeded with, and the House adjourned at half-past eleven.

TUESDAY, JUNE 23.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

Short conversations took place on the case of Mr. Bishop, on the annexation to Greece of the Ionian Islands, and on the Brazilian difficulty. Some railway business was also discussed, and the House adjourned at half-past seven.

TUESDAY, JUNE 23.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. Maguire moved for a Royal Commission to inquire into the condition of the working classes in Ireland, and to suggest amendments in the relations between landlord and tenant. This led to a long debate, and the motion was negatived by 128 to 49.

Sir F. Kelly moved for a select committee to consider the effect of the malt duties upon the cultivation and price of barley, and upon the manufacture and price of malt and malt liquors; also upon the application of malt to the feeding of cattle and sheep.—Colonel Barttelot seconded the motion, which was also supported by Mr. Cobbett.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer admitted the justice of instituting an inquiry upon the principle of freedom of trade; having regard, however, to the question, whether the laws affecting the manufacture of malt might be altered without injury to the public revenue, he assented to the appointment of a committee. After a few words from Mr. Bentinck, Mr. Dodson, and Mr. Packer, the motion, with the addition of words expressive of the view taken by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, was then agreed to.

On the motion of Mr. Tite, a select committee was appointed to inquire into the improvement of the approaches to the new palace at Westminster.

The other business on the paper was subsequently disposed of, and the House adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 24.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. Bouvier withdrew his bill to admit Dissenters to College fellowships in Oxford and Cambridge.

A discussion followed on the constitution of the Board of Admiralty, which was defended by Mr. Stansfeld, ex-Reformer. Some further business was disposed of, and the House adjourned.

COTTON AND DRY GOODS MARKET.

LIVERPOOL, Wednesday, June 24.

Our last report left the market very quiet in tone, and during the past week the business done has been very limited, and the general tendency towards lower prices.

On Thursday, Friday, and Saturday the daily sales were 4,000 bales, buyers, in some instances, gaining a slight concession in price.

The American news received per Asia, though generally read as favourable to the market, produced no effect. The uncertainty regarding the result of the struggle going on in Mississippi, and the signs of discontent still existing in the West served to check speculation.

On Monday, with a very slow market, a decline of  $\frac{3}{4}$  d. per pound was in some cases yielded to to effect sales, the business reaching 5,000 bales.

On Tuesday the feeling in Manchester was a little more confident at the close on receipt of the Jura's news, and slightly encouraging telegrams from the East, and to-day our market would have shown more signs of life, had it not been for revived mediation rumours.

The Emperor of the French is reported again to have addressed a note to our Government, asking them to join him in recommending a cessation of hostilities in America. And though it is considered extremely improbable that our Government will take such action after the course they have hitherto pursued, yet it has served to check business, and, with sales of only 5,000 bales, we close very flat, with some irregularity in prices.

We quote Middling Orleans, 22d.; Fair Egyptian, 20 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; Fair Sawginned Dhawar, 18 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., and Fair Dholerahs and Oomrawatiee, 17 $\frac{3}{4}$ d.

MANCHESTER, Tuesday, June 23.

Our market during the past week has been very languid and where holders desired to sell, or those spinners and manufacturers who had finished their contracts were wishful to enter into further engagements, they had to submit to lower prices than were ruling the week before.

The indefinite character of the intelligence from Vicksburg has a depressing effect on the market, owing to an idea that a large quantity of cotton will be available in case Vicksburg should fall, many parties seeming to forget, that if such an event should occur, what cotton could be destroyed by the Confederates, would be, rather than it should fall into the hands of the Federals, and that a very small quantity, if any, would reach us.

There is another feeling prevalent here, to the effect that the Emperor of the French may now, after his recent successes in Mexico, offer his services as mediator between North and South, such a proceeding on his part being certain to produce a feeling of uneasiness amongst holders, and affect the price of everything very materially.

To-day, Tuesday, a very quiet market, the Jura bringing nothing more definite from the seat of war. Telegrams were received in town to-day from Calcutta, dated 29th and 30th May, and 5th June, the two former reporting dull markets and lower prices, the latter better business and improving prices, which reports when put into circulation appeared conflicting, until their date was attached to each report.

There was a tendency to improvement later in the afternoon.

PARTIAL LIST OF KILLED AND WOUNDED IN THE LATE BATTLES IN VIRGINIA.

Casualties in two regiments in the "Stonewall Brigade," the 2nd and 5th.

SECOND VIRGINIA REGIMENT.

Company A—Lieut. Geo. A. S. Davis commanding. Killed: Sergeant T. D. Rawlins. Wounded: Privates L. S. Byrd, A. J. Darrell, J. W. Jones, Samuel C. Noland, F. M. Nichols, J. B. Spotts.

Company B—Lieut. H. F. Barnhardt commanding. Wounded: Privates Jacob Magaha, J. M. Holtzman, Jacob Vorhees, H. C. Miller, W. R. Conley.

Company C—Captain Wm. W. Randolph commanding. Killed: Private C. H. Richards. Wounded: Lieut. E. C. Randolph, Sergeant John M. Jolliffe, Private M. L. Chumm.

Company D—Captain E. L. Hoffman commanding. Killed: Private Richard Mechum. Wounded: Sergeant R. M. Doll, Corporal John L. Fisher; Privates A. L. Kearfoot, John W. Keef, L. K. Komex, Wm. Compton.

Company E—Lieut. J. J. Haines commanding. Wounded: Lieut. J. T. Hull, Colour-Sergeant J. N. Bayne, Corporal Jas. Flery, Privates B. F. Armentrout, Jas. W. Dugan, John Pryor, B. Weatherholt, Wm. Tuckweller, Wm. Perego, J. N. Merchant, Henry Ludwig.

Company F—Captain James B. Burgess commanding. Wounded: Privates John Foley, Geo. H. Goodwin, Wm. Hildard, John Addison.

Company G—Lieut. W. C. Sheerer commanding. Killed: Sergeant B. S. White. Wounded: Corporal J. D. Keel, Privates Asquith, Solomon Fry, J. S. Bennick, Corporal Geo. F. Eichelberger.

Company H—Captain J. J. Jenkins commanding. Killed: Private John W. Crisfield. Wounded: John A. Link.

Company I—Captain James H. O. Bannon commanding. Wounded: Lieut. A. S. Allen, Lieut. J. R. Nunn, Sergeant S. Bonham, mortally; Privates Wm. Cleveland, Julien Mervallis, John W. Grubbs, T. K. Glover, Jas. Brown, E. T. Myers, Geo. W. Joy, Rhoddy Connor.

Company K—Captain C. H. Stewart commanding. Killed: Corporal Willis Skinner; Privates Samuel Cooley, Samuel Phillips. Wounded: Lieut. R. J. Bartow, A. A. General to General Paxton, Sergeant E. R. Harrell; Privates Amos Coffelt, — Miller, mortally, Jas. H. Bull.

FIFTH VIRGINIA REGIMENT.

Company A—Wounded: Sergeant Syder, Corporal J. Daws, Privates H. Long, C. Poggio, J. Falkner, F. Parker.

Company C—Killed: Lieut. James A. Bell, Sergeants R. M. Brown, Bailey J. Jones; Privates J. H. Burket, Richard Tisenbury. Wounded: Privates James J. Ayres, David C. Adams, N. M. Burket, T. M. Bell, Jacob W. Fridley, Henry L. Hamrich, James W. Huff, M. R. Hanger, Joshua Hild, O. M. Lambart, Andrew J. Maley, Samuel H. Propps, Martin L. Shiplett, William H. Tutwiler. Missing: Corporal Robert A. Bryan.

Company D—Wounded: Lieut. S. M. Carson, Sergeants J. B. McCutchen, T. M. Smiley, Corporal C. C. Cockran, Privates J. T. Beard, S. B. Aile, I. Runkle, M. M. Smith, G. Lott, R. Wiserman, Jas. McManany, H. L. Wiserman, J. N. Whitlock, Joseph M. Black.

Company H—Wounded: Lieut. G. H. Killian, Corporal Jas. Kennedy; Privates John Porterfield, W. H. Tavey, M. Murry, W. Phillips, R. Bazel, G. Rife, Jacob Heets.

Company E—Killed: Private R. J. Blakely. Wounded: Corporal J. W. B. Trotter, Privates W. G. Abney, J. H. Bradley, R. J. Campbell, T. J. Campbell, J. W. Cash, J. H. Davis, W. N. Harris, John H. Howard, J. Owens, A. B. Rucush, P. M. D. Hatfield.

Company F—Killed: Private F. Carrol. Wounded: Lieut. C. H. Calhoun, died since; Sergeant W. H. Wayland, Corporal G. A. Bailey; Privates J. A. Atkins, W. D. Bailey, J. W. Hodges, E. Johns, A. Raundabush, J. H. Rodgers, J. Spidler, J. W. Stover, J. Swink, A. G. L. Vanleer. Missing: Sergeant W. F. Bailey, Privates D. M. Bailey, R. Carroll.

Company G—Killed: Lieut. W. H. Green. Wounded: Lieut. L. B. Doyle, Sergeants W. L. Thompson, W. H. H. May; Privates W. H. Beach, C. Dunsho, J. B. Gibson, W. S. Hampton, J. Landis, J. McCauley, J. McComb, J. Weaver, J. A. Trainer.

Company I—Killed: Colour-Sergeant J. W. Stibzer. Wounded: Privates A. Wilkerson, Joseph Shumake, James Shumake, H. Wise, T. Adams, W. Wiele.

Company L—Killed: W. Martin. Wounded: Lieut. J. N. Ryan, Corporal A. C. Fry; Privates C. W. Cooper, John Thompson, W. Barnes, J. M. Raines, J. Day.

Company H—Wounded: Sergeant G. W. Gordon, Corporal J. Heiner; Privates — Batt, J. Carpenter, W. Latham, — Limerick, — Lucas, — Coffman, — Fuller, — Shierly, — Lotts.

Company K—Wounded: Privates — Swartz, — Riffe, J. S. Swartzle, G. Swartzle.

R. K. Fisher, Acting Adjutant.

Casualties in the 42nd Virginia Regiment, Colonel Robert M. Mayo Commanding, at the Battle of Chancellorsville, May 2nd and 3rd.

Company A—Captain C. J. Green commanding. Wounded: Captain C. J. Green, Corporal J. P. Bryant, Privates G. Trusloe, Robert Brown.

Company B—Lieut. Lawrence Taliaferro commanding. Wounded: Sergeant A. B. Cleaves, Privates J. M. Miller, L. Murphy.

Company C—Captain Edmund L. Wharton commanding. Killed: Private John L. Lyell. Wounded: Lieut. J. P. Jenkins, Sergeant G. W. Murren, Corporal J. F. White; Privates William Carter, mortally, G. White, R. A. Peed, C. White, W. C. Muse.

Company D—Captain J. V. Garland commanding. Wounded: Sergeant H. R. George, Privates William Davis, William Webb.

Company F—Captain Wm. Brown commanding. Wounded: Captain William Brown; Privates C. C. Clark, D. M. Mitchell.

Company G—Captain C. L. Woolfolk commanding. Killed: Sergeant B. I. Chiles. Wounded: Privates R. R. Carter, J. W. White, H. Wright, W. Wright. Missing: D. A. Withers.

Company H—Captain Thomas R. Dew commanding.

Wounded: Corporal J. N. Page, Privates W. T. Hart, G. Henshaw, H. Mills.

Company I—Captain S. S. Brooke commanding. Killed: Lieut. R. C. Embrey. Wounded: Colour-Sergeant C. W. Schooler, Corporal T. H. Heffin, Privates L. Payne, W. West, N. Bell, J. Knoxville. Missing: Private C. Jones.

Company K—Captain J. P. Ware commanding. Wounded: Lieut. T. C. Chandler, Corporals W. M. Burruss, T. H. Jones, Privates W. F. Bendall, C. Carneal, J. W. Cox, L. Madison, G. W. Mills, J. Satterwhite, T. C. Swann, J. H. Terrell, S. Thomas. Missing: F. M. Burruss, J. B. Carneal.

Samuel D. Davies, Adjutant.

Casualties in Thomas' Brigade:

FOURTEENTH GEORGIA REGIMENT.

Lieutenant-Colonel J. M. Fielder, leg amputated. Company A—Killed: Sergeant T. A. Chambliss, Private T. W. Williams. Wounded: Sergeant W. Banks, Privates T. S. Curtis, E. M. Curtis, B. Edge, Thomas Davis, H. S. Jones, T. J. Mitchell, G. W. Huckaby, and J. M. Trash.

Company B—Killed: Private Daniel Kennington. Wounded: 1st Lieut. H. A. Solomon, Sergeants H. Goodman, W. Dykes, Privates W. Myers, C. Dennard, James Dykes, James Leslie, Wm. Smallwood.

Company C—Wounded: Captain L. A. Lane, 1st Lieut. W. J. Preston, 2nd Lieut. J. O. Lane, Sergeant F. M. Tyler, Privates H. Dix, N. H. Chafin, J. W. Crawford, T. J. Duke.

Company D—Killed: Privates R. B. Simpson, J. B. Fields. Wounded: Sergeant J. V. Baker, Corporal G. W. Anderson, Privates H. B. Dempsey, W. Page, W. J. Page, W. J. Fincher, W. A. Duke, Wm. Wilson, M. E. Boyer.

Company E—Wounded: Sergeant W. E. Boyd, and Corporal Bennet.

Company F—Killed: Captain R. P. Harman. Wounded: Sergeant J. M. Sumner, Corporal J. W. Walker, Privates J. J. Parker, W. Brantley, N. Flanders, C. Hightower, J. J. Sumner.

Company G—Wounded: Captain T. T. Mounger, mortally, Privates W. L. Land, H. C. Quiet, G. W. Hall, R. B. Massie.

Company H—Wounded: Sergeant R. T. Hill, Corporals F. A. Linder, W. J. Hall, Privates J. J. Dominey, J. Hutchinson, D. J. Bush, T. J. Warren.

Company I—Killed: Private J. T. D. Thaxton. Wounded: Sergeants J. W. Barber, J. H. Andrews, J. P. Ballard, Privates S. C. Clark, H. Holifield, H. Thaxton, J. Wigner.

Company K—Killed: Sergeant N. J. Dobbs. Wounded: Corporal T. M. King, Privates W. H. Jamison, L. G. Costlow, J. J. Ferguson.

THIRTY-FIFTH GEORGIA REGIMENT.

Field and Staff—Wounded: Colonel B. H. Holt.

Company A—Killed: Corporal J. Baggat, Privates S. N. Derring, J. Bentley. Wounded: Captain J. Duke, Corporal J. Houston.

Company B—Killed: Private A. S. Bays. Wounded: Corporal C. K. McCalla, Privates H. T. Spinks, J. Hudson, W. T. Aycock.

Company C—Wounded: Private Alfred Daniel.

Company D—Wounded: Lieut. B. W. Morton, Corporal M. A. Buttrell, Privates A. M. Wingo, G. W. Redding, F. Edwards, W. B. Hopson. Missing: W. W. Tucker.

Company E—Wounded: Private B. F. Jackson.

Company F—Wounded: Private S. F. Rawlins. Missing: Private W. B. Harbin.

Company G—Wounded: Corporal Martin Dial, Privates Thos. M. Beam, Wm. E. Allen, A. J. Aiken, E. T. Moon, J. N. Bachelor. Missing: A. J. Moon.

Company H—Killed: Private Absolom Martin. Wounded: Private Daniel J. Hayes. Missing: M. J. Tuggle.

Company I—Killed: M. J. Milican. Wounded: Lieut. W. M. McCallum.

Company K—Wounded: Sergeant H. J. Hayes, Private J. J. Pearce.

FORTY-FIFTH GEORGIA REGIMENT.

Company A—Killed: Captain W. H. Shaw, Private John Pate. Wounded: Corporal L. Walls, Privates John Roberts, R. Patter, Noah Sanderlin.

Company B—Wounded: Privates R. W. Griffith, D. Middleton, J. Ingram.

Company C—Killed: Private Heathcock. Wounded: Sergeant Joe Smith, Privates H. Smith, R. J. Murphey, E. Reardon, C. Wade, J. H. King.

Company D—Wounded: Privates D. A. Bennet, W. Fowler, J. M. Coulter.

Company E—Wounded: Privates B. Watson, J. Morris.

Company F—Wounded: Privates J. Giles, R. Jackson, A. J. Brooks.

Company G—Wounded: Privates W. G. Daniel, O. Lundy, J. Raines.

Company H—Wounded: Lieut. A. L. Brown, Privates W. Dent, W. J. Cheshire, Corporal John Pool. Missing: Charles Pollard.

Company I—Killed: Private J. Maddox. Wounded: Privates J. McGough, J. Kelly, J. Bancroft, C. S. Maddox, J. Mayo, Sergeant J. S. Kimball.

Company K—Wounded: Sergeant R. H. Knight, Private J. Lewis.

FORTY-NINTH GEORGIA REGIMENT.

M. Newman, Adjutant, wounded; J. Roberts, Sergeant-Major, wounded.

Company A—Wounded: Privates J. T. Stephens, D. Avery, H. Dixon, W. A. Thigpen, G. M. Cook, J. T. Floyd, A. H. Shephard, Sergeant L. E. Veal, Privates J. E. Gilds, A. H. Kinyery.

Company B—No casualties.

Company C—Wounded: Sergeant A. M. Watkins, Privates J. A. Cole, W. A. Durden.

Company D—Killed: Sergeant W. T. Moore. Wounded: Corporal W. W. Hendricks.

Company E—Killed: Corporal J. V. Hollenbrook.

Company F—Wounded: Privates A. R. Tanner, J. J. Dominey, Corporal A. P. Walker.

Company G—Killed: H. Carl. Wounded: Captain H. B. Shanley, Private W. Salter, Sergeant W. H. Ashley.

Company H—Wounded: 1st Lieut. W. G. Bell, Private Joseph Bell. Missing: Sergeants J. W. Bailey, L. B. Price, Corporal R. Founds, Sergeant A. F. Wiggins.

Company I—Wounded: Privates R. P. Dunn, W. Brantley, or D. Brantley, Thos. Garrett, Charles Calwell.

Company K—Killed: James Taylor. Missing: Private J. G. Hancock.

Casualties in Woodard's Brigade, McLane's Division, in the engagements near Chancellorsville, Virginia,

BRIGADE FIELD AND STAFF.

Lieutenant J. Morris, A. A. and I. G., wounded in side, seriously.

EIGHTEENTH GEORGIA REGIMENT.

Company A—Capt. J. L. Lemmon commanding. Wounded: Privates John Garrison, in hand severely; John L. Tanner, in knee slightly.

Company B—Lieut. F. S. Threadwell commanding. Killed: Private Wm. M. Moat. Wounded: J. A. Miller, in arm seriously; A. M. Archer, back seriously; W. H. Triamble, arm severely; B. Bartlett, chest slightly; J. M. Mann, chest slightly; E. Humphreys, head severely.

Company C—Capt. W. G. Callahan commanding. Killed: Private W. G. Harris. Wounded: 1st Lieut. J. F. Espy, face slightly; 3rd Lt. J. P. Morgan, face severely; Privates W. T. Wilhite, leg slightly; J. M. Wilhite, severely, A. B. Strickland, leg severely; B. B. Morgan, leg severely; J. G. Weir, arm slightly; H. S. White, leg slightly; W. L. Barrow, leg slightly; W. S. Shockley, leg slightly.

Company D—Sergeant G. C. Hurley commanding. Killed: Private Miles Musgrove. Wounded: Corporals W. R. Faircloth, hand severely; W. J. Pierce, face slightly; A. J. Taylor, hand slightly; Privates John McRay, arm amputated; M. C. Merrett, hand slightly; S. G. Musgrove, side slightly; N. M. Hammon, leg slightly.

Company E—Lieut. M. J. Crawford commanding. Killed: Private W. C. Ballew. Wounded: 1st Lieut. M. J. Crawford, thigh severely; Sergeant J. S. Guyton, hand slightly; Corporal J. A. Nave, arm slightly; Private C. Childers, thigh slightly; J. W. Caldwell, arm severely; H. C. Cooke, head slightly; T. C. Dover, leg slightly; Samuel Edleman, shoulder severely; Wm. Hawk, arm slightly; E. R. King, arm severely; F. M. Kelly, thigh severely; A. J. Lowry, leg slightly; S. Shipman, arm and leg severely.

Company F—Captain J. C. Roper commanding. Wounded: Sergeant J. W. McBride, shoulder slightly; Corporal Wm. Bradford, leg slightly; Private Wm. Wingo, leg amputated; A. P. Henderson, arm severely; Geo. Key, head and shoulder slightly.

Company G—Lieut. P. Lyon commanding. Wounded: Privates A. J. Allen, slightly; A. J. Barnes, slightly; J. C. Odum, leg slightly; N. Thompson, hip slightly; A. D. Harding, face slightly.

Company H—Lieut. John Grant commanding. Killed: Sergeant A. Williams; Privates J. A. Chastain, W. E. Vining, G. W. Hammett. Wounded: Lieut. John Grant, shoulder, slightly; Sergeant W. H. Windsor, mortally, since dead; Privates W. H. Edleman, mortally, since dead; S. L. Vaughan, hip, severely; James Strain, breast, severely; J. N. Waters, arm, severely; E. L. Suggs, finger, W. H. Mann, hand, slightly; W. T. Bradshaw, slightly; J. C. Stanford, back, slightly; A. J. Nally, arm, slightly; R. K. Paul, thigh, slightly; Joseph Jenkins, slightly; Joseph Beecham, face, slightly.

Company I—Lieut. P. E. Gilbert commanding. Killed: Privates M. Roberts, M. S. King, Jasper Halcomb. Wounded: Privates Daniel Rowland, shoulder, severely; T. R. Bullington, shoulder, severely; W. J. Carrol, arm, severely; Corporal J. Y. Woodward, thigh, severely; Privates J. M. Ivey, leg, severely; N. S. Davies, leg, severely; G. F. Herring, eye, severely; Lieut. J. S. Barton, leg, slightly; Private John G. Gilbert, arm, slightly; Corporal G. W. Floyd, slightly.

Company K—Lieut. J. M. Baker commanding. Killed: Privates H. M. Spikes, J. F. Davis, J. R. Halbrooks. Wounded: Lieut. J. M. Baker, in leg, severely; Corporals John Underwood, both thighs severely; J. B. Scott, leg, severely; J. W. Box, shoulder, severely; Privates J. W. Tucker, mortally, since dead; J. M. Garrison, in shoulder and thigh, severely; L. Langley, arm, severely; J. H. Penny, hand, slightly; J. V. Smith, hand, slightly; A. M. Hawkins, thigh, slightly.

Acting Field and Staff—Wounded: Captain J. A. Stewart (commanding regiment), in thigh, severely.

Total killed, 14. Wounded, 83.

TWENTY-FOURTH GEORGIA REGIMENT.

Field and Staff—Wounded: Adjutant D. E. Banks, in leg, severely.

Company A—Captain J. N. Chandler commanding. Killed: Private James Sosebee. Wounded: Sergeants L. T. Weld, in head, slightly; E. A. Rucker, hand, slightly; F. F. Cape, mortally; Corporal G. A. Keesee, thigh, slightly; Privates Elias Sosebee, arm, slightly; W. H. Meeke, shoulder, slightly; J. C. Meeks, arm, slightly; Floyd Gordon, in foot, severely; R. P. Chambers, shoulder, slightly; J. T. Chambers, knee, slightly; Manuel Watts, foot, slightly.

Company B—Captain P. E. Dorant commanding. Wounded: Privates P. P. Ballinger, in leg, severely; Hugh McLane, shoulder, severely; J. C. Dickerson, body, severely; M. L. Roberts, body, severely; L. B. Shifflett, thigh, G. R. Jordan, mouth, severely.

Company C—Captain F. C. Smith commanding. Killed: Privates N. Higgins, Sam Standridge. Wounded: Sergeant J. H. Conley, in thigh, severely; Privates G. H. Couley, hip, severely; John W. Brock, W. N. Smith, James W. Brock.

Company D—Lieut. J. P. Berrong commanding. Killed: 1st Lieut. J. L. Ownby; 1st Sergeant John W. Gilbert; Corporal W. J. Haden; Privates David Watkins, M. Truelove. Wounded: W. C. Readin, in hand, severely; P. Layel, arm, severely; Wm. Layel, thigh, severely; J. B. Gibson, head and arm, severely; John Kees, leg, severely; J. C. Self, arm, severely; Corporal H. H. Clampet, arm, slightly; Privates W. T. Hill, shoulder, slightly; R. G. Sale, in hand, slightly; N. M. Scoggs, abdomen, slightly; A. W. C. Hooper, leg, slightly; R. C. Nichols, hand, slightly; J. A. Frasier, missing.

Company E—Captain H. P. Cannon commanding. Killed: Private James Worley. Wounded: Lieut. D. E. Mosley, in hand, slightly; Sergeants I. Stonecypher, head, slightly; C. Nicholls, knee, severely; Privates Wilson Reed, thigh, severely; J. Duncan, hand, slightly; A. Jones, leg, slightly; T. M. Mosely, leg, slightly; J. Stonecypher, breast, slight.

Company F—Captain T. E. Winn commanding. Killed: Privates J. A. Williams. Wounded: W. D. Denton, mortally; Corporal J. W. Gouge, in ankle, severely; Privates P. C. Broadwell, shoulder, severely; N. Bailey, hip, severely; C. C. Cross, arm, severely; Z. N. Cross, arm, severely; H. Mattox, arm, severely; Andrew Puckett, arm, severely; J. R. Rainey, face, severely; Sergeant M. Deaton, head, slightly; Privates R. H. Duncan, arm, slightly; A. Maudlin, thigh, slightly; John Duke, breast, slightly; W. P. Glover, ankle, slightly; P. Hadaway, breast, slightly; S. F. Taylor, foot, slightly; J. F. Erwin, arm, slightly.

Company G—Capt. W. F. Parks commanding. Wounded: Sergeant W. P. Meadows, hip, slightly; Privates W. M. Keith, leg, slightly; J. E. Stephens, thigh, slightly; W. M. Gibbs, leg, slightly.

Company H.—Capt. N. J. Dorch commanding. Wounded: Lieut. W. M. Farmer, thigh, severely; Privates T. D. Kelly, side, severely; John Savage, hand and thigh, slightly; Sergeant J. W. Harrison, hand, slightly; Privates F. M. Carroll, thigh, slightly; J. G. Whitton, hand, slightly; Wilson Smith, hand, slightly; N. J. Hunter, hand, slightly; J. B. Whisenant, none and cheek, slightly; C. C. Collins, missing; G. H. Brock, mortally.

Company I.—Captain A. J. Pool commanding. None killed or wounded.

Company K.—Lieut. Lacy Steward commanding. Killed: Sergeant James Haddock. Wounded: Lieut. Lacy Steward, mortally, since dead; Corporal D. L. Evans, mortally, since dead; Privates Reuben Cleveland, head, slightly; G. W. Aller, leg, slightly; Bird Shirley, side, slightly; John Haddock, thigh, slightly; James Harbert, chest, severely; W. T. Mulkey, arm, slightly; E. L. Crow, face, slightly; T. K. Owens, hand, slightly.

Total—killed, 11; wounded, 84; missing, 2.

SIXTEENTH GEORGIA REGIMENT.

Field and Staff—Wounded: Colonel George Bryan, side, slightly; A. Adjutant C. L. Hutchings, hand, slightly.

Company A.—Captain H. C. Nash commanding. Killed: Privates G. S. Key, J. S. King, J. Mason, G. W. Bradley. Wounded: Corporal R. F. Aaron, hand, slightly; Privates H. Baxter, head, seriously; J. A. Burroughs, arm, amputated; S. S. Chandler, leg, seriously; W. L. Glenn, groin, seriously; E. J. Herring, chin, slightly; H. L. Herring, arm, slightly; W. H. Hunt, head, slightly; J. J. Key, arm, unknown; G. W. O'Kelly, leg, slightly; S. C. O'Kelley, face, slightly; J. R. Patterson, unknown; J. B. Simmons, arm, slightly; G. A. Sims, arm, seriously; M. J. Strickland, groin, seriously; R. J. Sorrells, back, seriously; H. R. Smith, shoulder, seriously; P. O. Williams, arm, seriously; S. Davis, hand, slightly.

Company B.—Captain J. M. Venable commanding. Killed: Privates J. E. Lytle, E. O. Collins. Wounded: Lieutenant H. J. David, hip, seriously; Sergeant D. W. Penticost, shoulder, seriously; Privates W. Morris, thigh, seriously; J. S. King, shoulder, seriously; L. H. Adams, slightly; M. L. Adams, back, seriously; M. Wallis, breast, slightly; J. C. Strange, neck, seriously; J. M. Author, neck, seriously; J. V. S. Hayes, hip, seriously; A. H. Bolds, shoulder, slightly; R. S. Harville, leg, slightly; William Tait, hand, slightly; W. T. Skyles, leg, seriously, amputated; J. R. Cosby, hip, slightly; W. D. Spence, foot, slightly; T. Morris, leg, slightly; C. L. Davis, knee, slightly.

Company C.—Lieut. H. G. McMullen commanding. Killed: W. B. Brown. Wounded: Sergeant William Richardson, in leg, slightly; Privates J. M. Neese, arm and breast, seriously; Corporal J. T. Holland, arm and leg, slightly; Privates H. J. Sanders, arm, severely; W. M. Adams, bowels, slightly; John Ouzis, face, severely; W. E. Ray, leg, slightly; J. T. Skelton, leg, slightly; P. Pritchett, hand, slightly.

Taken prisoners May 3.—J. C. Bailey, A. M. Bailey, S. Bobo, B. T. Sanders, J. W. Williams, and J. P. McDonald.

Company D.—Lt. J. A. McCurdy commanding. Wounded: Sergeant S. B. Thompson, in head, seriously; Corporal J. W. Cleghorn, wrist, unknown; Privates R. M. Carruth, thigh, seriously; J. A. Stephens, thigh, seriously, since died; J. V. Gordon, thigh, seriously; R. W. Bird, arm, seriously; J. G. McCurdy, arm, seriously; J. L. Martin, shoulder, seriously; B. F. Martin, hand, slightly; R. D. Nance, arm, slightly; J. W. Cartledge, breast, seriously; J. D. Williams, shoulder, seriously; W. Patton, shoulder, seriously.

Company E.—Lieut. H. A. Fuller commanding. Wounded: Privates, P. P. Blackburn, inside, slightly; W. R. Nix, arm, slightly; H. H. Perry, side, slightly; J. L. Whitworth, shoulder and breast, slightly.

Company F.—Captain J. H. D. McRae commanding. Killed: Corporal H. H. Camp; Privates R. M. Davis, J. A. Johnson, G. H. Stephens, wounded; Sergeants E. Patrick, in arm, seriously; J. M. Tucker, arm, seriously; Corporal A. C. Shelmor, thigh, seriously; A. S. C. Williams, thigh, seriously; Privates, F. O. Darby, head, slightly; J. W. McDuff, leg, slightly; J. Hogan, leg, slightly; W. M. Fort, leg, slightly.

Company G.—Lieut. T. L. Ross commanding. Wounded: Lieut. S. Hewitt, thigh, mortally; Sergeant C. S. Whitehead, thigh, severely; Corporal W. L. Gilmer, head, slightly; Privates, R. B. Archer, bowels, seriously; S. R. Canison, arm, seriously; O. B. Gilmer, head, seriously; C. Harville, hip, seriously; C. C. Moon, bowels, slightly; W. A. Morris, hand, slightly; S. N. Patten, neck, seriously; J. W. Trent, hand, seriously; G. W. Patten, head, slightly; J. W. Wood, bowels, mortally; J. B. Wood, shoulder, seriously.

Company H.—Captain A. B. Cain commanding. Killed: Privates, N. J. Daniel, E. N. Payne, D. T. Leopard. Wounded: T. W. Weathers, in bowels, mortally, since died; J. A. Mathews, bowels, mortally, since died; Corporal E. Daniel, groin, seriously; Privates, W. T. Womack, thigh, seriously; W. T. Massey, arm, seriously; W. F. Mathews, thigh, seriously; A. Wright, arm, seriously; Lieut. J. M. Liddell, face, slightly; Sergeant E. P. Sanders, hand, slightly; Privates, S. E. Massey, hand, slightly; W. C. Caffar, wrist, slightly; J. T. Beaty, arm, slightly; W. M. Hunnicut, side, slightly; D. H. Johnson, arm, slightly; R. B. Plaster, head, slightly; J. M. Rutledge, head, slightly; R. D. Bolton, neck, slightly; D. S. Rutledge, in side, slightly; T. F. Todd, in side, slightly.

Company I.—Lieut. N. A. Moss commanding. Killed: Privates W. B. Wright, J. A. Singleton, N. H. Hamilton. Wounded: Privates L. A. Glosson, in bowels, seriously, since died; O. Cole, knee, serious, since died; E. A. Thornhill, arm, amputated; S. W. Bagley, arm, amputated; Lieut. E. B. Thomas, arm and side, seriously; Privates, J. M. Bagley, head, seriously; W. Bradford, arm, seriously; B. R. Cash, hip, seriously; E. W. Strickland, head, seriously; P. V. Singleton, arm, slightly; W. J. Porter, hand, slightly; B. J. Harris, shoulder, slightly; E. Hannah, head, slightly.

Company K.—Captain R. A. Landslill commanding. Killed: Sergeant N. C. Benton, private C. Palmer. Wounded: G. W. Arrington, in head, mortally; H. M. Johnson, neck, mortally; W. Ballard, head, slightly; Sergeant A. Davidson, Corporal J. H. Evans, foot, slightly; Sergeants J. L. Smith, arm, slightly; W. N. Zachary, thigh, slightly; Lieut. N. G. Tool, breast; Private W. Bryant, head and shoulder, slightly.

Total killed, 19; wounded, 130; prisoners, 6.

COBB'S GEORGIA LEGION.

Lieut.-Colonel L. J. Glenn, wounded in arm, severely.

Company A.—Lieut. C. H. Sanders commanding. Killed: Privates, S. B. Ellington, W. A. Kersey. Wounded: Lieut. J. C. Floyd, slight, in leg; Privates, L. Callihan, slight, in side; J. L. Kelly, severely, in head; C. J. Kilgoe, severely, in thigh; B. W. Phillips, slight, in side; A. L. Persall, severely, in hand; E. Switzer, severely, in arm; E. Willingham, slight, in foot; W. Whitley, severely, in head.

Company B.—Captain McDaniel commanding. Killed:

L. R. S. Fletcher, Corporal R. C. Duke. Privates, J. C. Dep church, D. G. Bolen, Jos. Eason, J. J. Gable, J. W. Morris, J. G. McDaniel, J. N. Miles. Wounded: Captain W. W. McDaniel, severe, in hip; Sergeant T. I. Ayres, not known; Corporal W. Shellnah, severe, in thigh; Privates S. I. Brown, severe, in knee; A. I. Bennannon, slight, in shoulder; F. D. Beck, slight, in leg; J. W. Carpenter, not known; H. D. Daniel, slightly, in arm; William Eason, in leg and shoulder; James Edwards, in hand; D. S. Jones, severe, in bowels; J. McBurnett, mortally; F. M. Morris, seriously, in mouth; J. W. Morris, slightly, in thigh; T. W. Robertson, slightly, in knee; J. M. Roberts, slightly, in ankle; W. B. Stephenson, not known; J. M. Spruwell, severe, in breast; H. J. Thomas, in foot; N. B. Williams, severe, in foot.

Company C.—Lieut. A. G. Grier commanding. Killed: Corporal W. A. Ragsdale; Privates Sam McCord, T. J. Robertson. Wounded: Lieut. A. G. Grier, severely in leg (amputated); Sergeant Wm. Bolin, severely in leg (amputated); Privates J. C. Brockman, severely in head; J. A. Flemming, severely in arm, amputated; J. R. R. S. Guess, mortally; J. Goddard, flesh wound in arm; L. A. Harris, severely in head; J. G. Hix, slight in hip; A. J. House, in thigh, amputated; R. Jason, slight in arm; W. S. McShaffly, mortally; G. W. Pierce, severe in hand; W. H. Phillips, slight in hip; D. L. Plaster, severe in hand; G. W. Parks, slight in thigh; J. P. Pope, severe in neck; A. W. Payden, severe in neck; H. T. Reagin, severe in both arms; G. L. Roberson, slight in foot; J. S. Smith, severe in both legs; A. Sils, severe in hip; H. Wade, severe in leg, amputated; T. J. Young, severe in hand.

Company D.—Lieut. J. F. Wilson commanding. Killed: Corporal W. T. Delay; Private E. I. Aikin. Wounded: Lieuts. W. A. Gilliland, arm amputated; R. I. Wilson, severe in head; Privates J. P. Reidling, since dead; T. J. Leadbetter, mortally; J. W. Benton, severe in face; W. S. Martin, slight in side; W. G. Strapler, slight; Jno. Parke, slight.

Company E.—Lieut. R. M. Whitehead commanding. Killed: Private J. J. Savage. Wounded: Lieut. Whitehead, slightly in leg; Sergeant C. M. Modisett, slightly; Privates G. W. Deas, severely; P. L. Hall, L. B. Jenkins, Isaac Johnstone, Jno. Madry, slightly; Jno. Modisett, severe; L. F. Modisett, slight; Jos. McCallaw, severe; Marcus O'phante, mortal; S. Skinner, severe; Jno. P. Smith, O. E. Usher, W. J. Hill, slightly; E. M. Wimberley, severe.

Company F.—Captain G. W. Moore, commanding. Killed: Privates E. J. Bearden, Robert Coker, B. W. Hammock. Wounded: Sergeants W. J. Hembree, severe in both thighs; Bennett White, M. L. Edge, severe in arm; Corporal J. F. Corkrell, severe in thigh; Privates W. M. Brock, severe in leg; J. M. Brown, slight in ankle; Thos. W. Crews, severe in spine; L. W. Chasteen, not known; A. S. Cartwright, slight in arm; Isaac Dangler, severe in hip; Robert F. Dale, not known; Wade Goolsby, in foot; S. D. Harper, severe in hand; A. W. Hinesby, severe in foot; S. M. Hesterly, E. L. Hesterly, H. J. Hardin, G. W. Hembre, not known; W. W. Hanson, severe in head; B. F. Kinney, severe in arm; J. W. Lewis, slight in head; J. A. Pate, A. Reynolds, hand; J. W. G. Stripling, H. M. Stripling, W. J. Winkles, arms; John Day, arm and side, severe; Jacob G. Garet, mouth, severe.

Company G.—Lieut. C. W. Baldwin commanding. Killed: Private E. A. Harris. Wounded: Lieuts. G. F. Pearce, slight in arm and side; S. A. Burney, severe in head; Sergeants A. J. Bonner, slight in thigh; C. J. Long, slight in hand; Corporal W. E. Dunnevant, very slightly; Privates Wm. Barnes, slight in side; Wm. Awtry, severe in breast; J. M. Cannon, severe in hand; J. S. Clarke, severe in shoulder; E. D. Hadaway, severe in leg; J. W. Jackson, severe in foot; C. R. Lewis, slight in arm; J. H. Johnston, mortally, since died; C. J. Minton, slight in finger; W. G. Parker, severe in leg (amputated); W. C. Ruarks, slight in hand; W. N. Robertson, slight in leg; W. S. Spinks, severe in head and leg; B. Walton, dangerously in thigh; Wm. Watkins, slight in eye; M. C. Zachery, slight in hand.

Total—Killed, 21; wounded, 126.

PHILLIP'S LEGION.

Company A.—Lieut. D. B. Sandford commanding. Wounded: Private J. T. Atkins, foot amputated.

Company B.—Lieut. J. J. Byers commanding. Wounded: Lieut. J. J. Byers, slightly in knee; Privates R. H. Baker, both thighs, seriously; F. M. Turner, finger shot off; Thomas Shoemaker, two ribs broken; B. F. Hawkins, in finger, slight; D. A. Chapman, concussion.

Company C.—Captain Jno. S. Norris commanding. Killed: Private P. W. Fuller. Wounded: Corporal J. B. F. G. Redd, slight in arm; Privates J. N. Ritch, severely in leg; J. H. Bellah, slightly in face; W. Berner, G. O. Magarity, slightly in leg.

Company E.—Captain W. H. Barber commanding. Wounded: Sergeant W. J. T. Hutchinson, slightly in thigh; Private James B. Walker, slightly in head.

Company L.—Captain James M. Johnson commanding. Killed: Corporal W. C. Reeder. Wounded: Privates Jno. A. Massey, slightly in hand; Thomas Harper, seriously in thigh.

Company M.—Captain Samuel T. Harris commanding. Wounded: Private D. S. Blackwell, slightly in hand.

Company O.—Lieut. J. L. Bowie commanding. Wounded: Sergeant J. M. Smith, in side.

Total: Killed, 2. Wounded, 20.

BATTALION OF SHARP SHOOTERS.

Killed: Lieut.-Colonel A. H. Patton commanding.

Company A.—Capt. M. F. Crumley commanding. Wounded: Privates W. N. Phelps, slight in hand; S. J. Richardson, do. in hand; L. M. Mann, do. in thighs; Eli Jenkins, do. in arm.

Company B.—Captain Anderson commanding. Killed: Lieut. P. W. Fuller; Private L. S. Youngblood. Wounded: Lieut. J. W. Barrett, severely in arm; Privates J. King, do. in side; N. Rich, do. knee; H. J. Finchet, do. hands; F. Shoemaker, do. side; A. J. Shaler, slight in heel; T. Griffin, do. hand; A. S. Aikin, severely in foot.

Company C.—Captain Wm. E. Simmons commanding. Killed: Private W. C. Flannagan. Wounded: W. D. Brags, severely in shoulder; W. B. Owen, slight in breast; J. L. Watson, do. arm; R. J. Potterfield, do. hand and shoulder; W. E. Tice, do. hand; G. W. Davis, severely in foot; W. A. Martin, slight in shoulder; D. Morris, slight in hand.

Company D.—Captain F. E. Ross commanding. Killed, Captain F. E. Ross. Wounded: Privates, J. B. Middlebrooks, slight in hand; S. N. Beck, do. arm and breast; J. C. Beauchamp, do. hand; J. A. Chewing, do. hand; N. Henderson, do. hand; F. M. Odum, do. shoulder; Jasper Hayes, do. hand; J. Stearns, do. foot; R. D. Brown, do. leg.

Company E.—Captain Garnett McMillan commanding. Wounded: Lieut. E. H. Candler, severely in hand; Privates, B. F. West, do. side; H. H. Singleton, slight in hand; W. B.

Kimbro, do. leg and thigh; J. N. Lorerey, do. in neck; Henry Whitfield, do. temple; W. B. Cleveland, do. breast.

Company F.—Capt. J. P. Martin, commanding. Wounded: Capt. J. P. Martin, severely in neck; Lieut. J. G. Nichols, arm amputated; Privates, F. Park, severely in thigh; J. C. Self, do. arm; L. M. Wall, do. arm; J. B. T. Wall, slight in foot; J. R. Wood, severely in arm; Aslo Binson, slight in head; N. L. Wall.

Total, killed 5; wounded 44.

Head-quarters Brigade,

Near Bank's Ford, Virginia,

May 10th, 1863.

Editors Southern Confederacy:—

The above is a correct report of the casualties in Brigadier-General Wofford's brigade, during the seven days' engagements near Chancellorsville and Fredericksburg. The battalion of sharp shooters was organized from the different regiments of the brigade only a day or two before the fighting commenced. The most of the loss was sustained while charging the enemy in his trenches near Chancellorsville, between the mine and turnpike roads.

A. F. WOOLLEY,

A. A. G.

GENERAL STONEWALL JACKSON AS PROFESSOR.

(From the Richmond Sentinel.)

We have learned some very curious circumstances connected with General T. J. Jackson's appointment to a Professor's Chair in the Virginia Military Institute.

The appointment was made in 1851. When the vacancy occurred which Jackson was destined to fill, General Smith, the superintendent, was instructed by the Board of Visitors to seek by private inquiries, some one suitable for the position. Among those to whom he first applied was General D. H. Hill, then a Professor in Washington College, we believe. Hill warmly recommended T. J. Jackson, then serving in the army in Florida. Hill at that time had no family connection with Jackson; but he knew him well, and with a penetration and sagacity that did him much credit, declared that he was not only a competent, faithful, reliable man, but had a great deal of "outcome" in him.

Repairing subsequently to West Point, General Smith addressed his inquiries to the faculty there. They recommended as eligible for the position, McClellan, Rosecranz, Foster, Peck, and Gustavus W. Smith; the first four now noted Federal Generals, and the last an officer of high rank in our own service, until his late resignation. Upon General Smith's stating that Jackson had been recommended, they said of him that he was an indefatigable man, and would do well; but he had come to the academy badly prepared. Inquiries at New York and Fortress Monroe further developed the fact that the persons recommended at West Point were considered better book-men than Jackson, but all bore testimony to Jackson's great personal worth and energy, and his sterling qualities.

When the Board of Visitors met, General Smith reported the name of Jackson to the Board, together with a statement of the recommendations and encomiums already referred to.

It happened that there was on the Board a member who appeared there on that occasion for the first time and the last. He at once advocated Jackson's appointment, though evidently taken by surprise at the suggestion of his name. He spoke in very high terms of Jackson, whose townsman he said he was, and told of the great pleasure which his appointment would give to the people of North-west Virginia. The man who thus eulogized Jackson was J. S. Carlile. He was the only one of the Board who knew Jackson, and he warmly advocated him before that jury of strangers.

Influenced by what they had thus heard, the Board, without the usual delays, at once ordered the appointment to be tendered to Jackson. The state of his health at the time aided in causing him to accept it.

Of all the gifted men with whom General Jackson was thus brought into comparison, and to whom he was adjudged by all, save Hill and his Virginia friends, to be inferior, which one of them has he not immeasurably outstripped, in the exhibition of high capacity and Christian virtue, a virtue sublimer than Roman ever knew? They were ranked before him, but the inspiration within him, and which needed only occasion to develop it, swiftly asserted its authority, and poured mockery on the judgment of short-sighted men attracted by the brightness of outside tinsel. Jackson will live in the admiration of the world and the affections of a great republic, long after those whose prospects for fame and distinction seemed fairer, shall have been even forgotten.

DESOLATION ON THE MISSISSIPPI.—A correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer writes from Young's Point:—"The whole country from Milliken's Bend to Hard Pine, opposite Grand Gulf, a distance of sixty miles, is one 'abomination of desolation.' It has been an earthly paradise; lordly palaces filled with pictures, statues, and articles of vertu, beautiful gardens, teeming with floral beauties, are now all laid waste. In those magnificent halls where Southern beauty and chivalry were wont to revel, soldiers cook their despised 'sow belly' with fires built out of rosewood chairs and curiously carved furniture, sleep on cotton beds worth $50 each, and in the morning abandon all to the horde of fifty hungry negroes, who follow the army and gather its refuse, like troops of unclean birds which smell the carcass from afar. Among these rich nabobs none excelled the Honourable John Perkins. His dwelling is magnificent even in its ruins, and his gardens are still fragrant with acres of roses. When General Butler entered New Orleans, he chartered the Magnolia, one of the largest boats on the river, put his most valuable slaves, pictures, plate, cattle, &c., on board, and set fire to the rest. For seven miles his lands blazed with 5,000 bales of burning cotton and granaries of corn. His house, with furniture which cost $200,000 in Paris, and the houses of his overseers, were all fired, while he stood on the bank and watched the mighty conflagration. In the morning he embarked a ruined man. I had never dreamed of such Arabian magnificence as I find in the ruins of the houses of these rich planters. In one garden I found no less than 700 different varieties of roses. This is, I believe, the largest collection in America. There are no more than three in Europe that equal it."

VALUABLE TROPHIES.—The number of muskets gathered from the battle-fields near Fredericksburg, and already brought to Richmond, amounts to nearly 20,000, and the knapsacks, cartridge boxes, &c., are so numerous as almost to exceed belief. It is understood that the whole number of muskets collected is 35,000, which may be considered one of the substantial fruits of our victory.

TO OUR FRIENDS AND SUBSCRIBERS.

Our friends in the United Kingdom and on the Continent are earnestly requested to forward to us, at their earliest convenience, such information relative to the military movements and condition of affairs in America as they may receive through private letters, either from the United States, or from the Confederate States. They may rely upon the most scrupulous precautions being observed; that no names or facts leading to identification will, under any circumstances, be revealed. No communications, however, will be noticed unless authenticated by a responsible name. Southern newspapers, of any date, will be useful and acceptable presents.

For the convenience of our distant subscribers, all the receipts for subscriptions signed by any of the official representatives, or commissioned officers of the Confederate States, will be recognized at this office.

Our subscribers in the South will have their paper supplied through HENRY HORTZ, Esq., the Confederate States' Commercial Agent at London, who has kindly tendered us his services in this respect during the continuance of the blockade.

Subscription, 26s. per annum—post paid, 30s., payable in advance.

All communications on business to be addressed, and Post-Office Orders made payable to, J. B. HOPKINS, 13, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, London E.C.

Agency at Paris: Messrs. PFRIFFER and MÜLLER, 52, Rue du Château d'Eau, Paris.

Agency at Liverpool: WM. KNOX, Secretary Southern Club, 55, Brown's-buildings.

THE INDEX.

THURSDAY, JUNE 25, 1863.

BRITISH JACKSON MONUMENTAL FUND.

We cheerfully comply with the request of several correspondents to lend our assistance to the collection of a fund, by British subscription, for the purpose of erecting a monument to Lieut.-General Thomas J. Jackson, C.S.A. According to the desire of the originators of the movement, Mr. J. B. Hopkins, of this office, will receive subscriptions to this fund, and hold the same at the disposal of any association that may be organized here or in Liverpool to carry the object into execution.

Mr. J. B. Hopkins acknowledges receipt for the British Jackson Monument Fund:—

Amount from last Week .. ..	£24 4 6
Earl Donoughmore .. ..	5 0 0
E. H. Bennett, Esq., per W. G. Young, Esq. .. ..	1 1 0
G. Button, Esq., per the same .. ..	0 5 0

A British Monument to Jackson.

It is understood that the distinguished gentlemen who head the movement for expressing in a suitable form the admiration in this country for the memory of Stonewall Jackson, have nearly completed their plans. A statue in marble, of heroic size, seven feet in height, by the celebrated English sculptor Foley, is to be presented to the native State of Jackson, Virginia, to be placed in the capitol or State-house at Richmond. The statue will rest on a pedestal of granite designed by the same artist, and on one side it is proposed to inscribe that this is a testimony of England's admiration for a truly noble character; on the other side General Lee's order of the day, informing the army of its sad loss:—

With deep grief the Commanding-General announces to the army the death of Lieutenant-General Jackson, who expired on the 9th at 3.15. p.m. The daring, skill, and energy of this great and good soldier, by a decree of an all-wise Providence, are now lost to us. But while we mourn his death we feel that his spirit lives, and will inspire the whole army with his indomitable courage and unshaken confidence in God as our hope and strength.

Let his name be a watchword for his corps, who have followed him to victory on so many fields. Let officers and soldiers imitate his invincible determination to do everything in the defence of our beloved country.

R. E. LEE.

It is estimated that the statue, without pedestal, will cost £1,000; the pedestal and incidental expenses about £500 more; in all, £1,500. This sum is to be raised by subscriptions. A formal prospectus will, we believe, shortly be issued; but, in the meanwhile, we are able to state that the Committee which have this matter in hand, consists, at present, of the following names, to which we learn others will probably be added:—

Sir James Fergusson, M.P.,	Lord Campbell,
A. Beresford Hope, Esq.,	W. S. Lindsay, Esq., M.P.
Sir Edward Kerrison, M.P.,	G. E. Seymour, Esq.
W. H. Gregory, Esq., M.P.,	J. Spence, Esq.,
Sir Coutts Lindsay, Bart.,	G. Peacock, Esq., M.P.
Treasurer.—A. Beresford Hope, Esq.,
1, Connaught Place, W.
Secretary.—W. H. Gregory, Esq., M.P.,
19, Grosvenor-street West, S.W.

Subscriptions will be received by the members of the Committee, or at Coutts's Bank, paid to the credit of A. Beresford Hope, Esq., for the Stonewall Jackson Statue Fund.

At this very moment the soldiers of the Confederate armies are saving up their scanty pay toward the erection of a monument worthy of their leader, and the columns of the Southern papers are filled with touching letters from officers and men in the various corps. The news that simultaneously some of the first gentlemen in England have united in this tribute of respect, cannot but produce a strong and wholesome impression on the other side of the Atlantic. Indeed, in the whole course of this memorable war, nothing has so much tended to a mutually cordial appreciation between two kindred nations as the death of Jackson. The qualities of that brave and pious man and dashing soldier—typical in more respects than has been generally believed of the Southern character—were precisely those which Englishmen the world over are most ready and accustomed to admire and honour. On the other hand, the feelings of irritation and disappointment which the conduct of this Government had aroused among the people of the Confederate States are not only allayed, but will be forgotten; while the memory of the young nation must always cherish the recollection of the spontaneous and heartfelt tribute paid to its lamented hero. Probably the death of no foreigner ever before so deeply moved, or could have moved, the British heart. Had Cavour died before the kingdom of Italy was born, or Garibaldi in the midst of his Neapolitan expedition, England would have wept for them, but not more sincerely than she does for the Christian soldier who fell in the Wilderness of the Rappahannock. It is because she recognises in the image of the dead those traits which she proudly claims as belonging to her blood and lineage, which have upheld an empire over hundreds of millions of Asiatics, and which mark the Anglo-Norman race as the master race of the world. Politicians may err, and the exigencies of statecraft may often be misunderstood, but the national instincts are seldom wrong. The emotion produced by the death of Stonewall Jackson was confined to no particular class of the community. It was as universal as it was genuine. It was not even owing to the predilection for the Confederate cause, which under various forms is the prevailing opinion in this country; for those few whose sympathies are still retained on the side of the aggressors by a misconception of the nature of the quarrel, did not withhold their testimony to his virtues. The lordly and the lowly alike felt that the world was one good and brave man the poorer; and while the leading presses sought eagerly for the meagrest materials of biographical essays, cheap attempts at satisfying the same public want had already found their way and a ready sale among the masses. Such a manifestation of feeling is something more than mere hero-worship, and should atone with the countrymen of Jackson for many sins of omission and commission on the part of those who guide the political affairs of this Empire.

Recognition before Parliament.

AN important diplomatic event has come to the aid of the motion which Mr. Roebuck has announced his intention to make on the 30th of this month. We reproduce elsewhere the statement of the Times' Paris correspondent, that the Emperor is about to make, or probably has ere this made, a formal request to this Government to join him in recognising the independence of the Confederate States. The announcement does not rest upon this authority alone, but is abundantly confirmed by unimpeachable evidence. It must, therefore, be accepted as a fact, and one which brings the question of recognition before Parliament in a light in which it never stood before.

Many and various have been the pretexts on which the Government has heretofore procrastinated that action which duty to its own people and justice to others alike prompted. But the most plausible and effective of them all was the assumption, rather implied than actually announced, that in such action England would stand alone, and would have to meet, single-handed, consequences which the mad fury and reckless self-conceit of the Northern American population rendered it impossible to calculate beforehand. This plea for inaction, never well founded, is now taken away. It is not isolated England, but the whole of Western Europe which is prepared to act. The Powers which next to Great Britain have, from geographical position or mercantile relations, the most direct interest in American affairs, are France, Spain, and Holland. What the non-maritime countries of Europe think or do in a Transatlantic question, is comparatively of little moment, but it is well known that even of those countries a majority are ready to follow, if not to lead, in the movement which is to pacify the New World—France and Spain certainly, and there is good reason to believe some of the smaller maritime Powers also, now await impatiently the signal of England to proceed. In the face of the civilized world, therefore, the responsibility, not of action, but of delay, is cast upon her. It is a grave and solemn responsibility. It is not now a question of waiting upon time and events. The Government of this country must act either by refusing or accepting the invitation of France, and of the two the action of refusal is by far the boldest and most momentous; for it is easier to assign reasons why England should not act alone in recognising the South, than why she should act alone among the Powers most interested in not recognising. If Mr. Roebuck's motion should be brought to a division, each member will have to record his assent to or dissent from the deliberate judgment, not only of the vast majority of his own countrymen, but of those foreign nations with whom Great Britain would most naturally act in concert in a question of this kind. It is true that the Ministry, by professing to treat the division as one of "want of confidence," may change the issue, and cause the result to depend upon party or personal considerations, but in doing so they would assume a responsibility compared to which the recognition of the South at the outbreak of the war might be considered trifling.

It cannot be alleged that the moment is unpropitious for a step urged by so many considerations of policy and humanity. The whole power of the invader has been exerted this spring upon three great efforts—the reduction of Charleston, the advance upon Richmond, and the opening of the Mississippi. The two first have signally failed; the last, as everything indicates, is on the eve of equally complete failure. The season for active operations is almost at an end. The armies of the United States are so reduced by defeat and disease, that it will require 300,000 men to bring them back to the numerical strength which was deemed indispensable to success, when success appeared more promising. The Conscription, which can now alone fill these wasted ranks, is already—though little more than a tentative beginning has been made—resisted by armed violence. In every part of the dominions of the aggressive Power, the severest measures are necessary to maintain its own authority. A party, too powerful in numbers to be summarily dealt with from Washington, has boldly raised the standard of peace and announced its uncompromising opposition to the further prosecution of a war as unjust as it is hopeless. It is an insult to the political intelligence of England to say that under these circumstances Mr. Lincoln's Administration can do ought else than to listen respectfully, and submit as gracefully as may be to the verdict of those Powers, which to America represent all of Europe that Americans care for, or have points of contact with. More probable is the supposition that the Northern President and his advisers, making a virtue of necessity, will gladly avail themselves of the opportunity for retreating from a position no longer tenable, and which yet they cannot voluntarily abandon. The peace movement presents all the characteristics of being popular and general, not peculiar to any one class or locality, for the men who head it are men who have long been accustomed to lead the masses; and their tactics indicate that they rely greatly upon demonstrations of numerical strength. The feeling upon which such a movement must rest would inevitably first crop out in this great metropolis, and the movement itself come to a head there. But it must not be forgotten that such a movement is virtually of the character of a revolution, since it is directed against the authorities actually in power, and it has the inherent weakness of this character. The possession of the machinery of Government often enables a minority, nay even a few individuals, to resist successfully the assaults of mere numbers. Now, in addition to the possession of that machinery, the Washington Government derives incalculable support from the inaction of Europe, which is a success of its diplomacy that almost counterbalances its failures in the field. So long as Europe can be persuaded to remain listless, Mr. Lincoln's efforts to restore the Union cannot be said to have utterly failed. It is only when the verdict has gone forth from this side of the Atlantic that the question of peace or war comes directly before the people of the North, and that the weakness of the Washington Government and the strength of its Democratic opponents can fully be tested.

We will not here re-enter into the discussion of the justice or the expediency of recognition. The argument is exhausted without having ever been fairly answered, and all who can be convinced, have been so long since. The time, also, has passed when all objections could be suspended by the plea of "masterly inactivity." England's principal ally in the affairs of the West as of the East—the second greatest, and, thanks to its Sovereign, at present the leading Power of the world—calls on her for a decision, and that decision is action, as we have said before, whether it be affirmative or negative—the bolder and more responsible action if it is the latter. Is the British Government, then, prepared, in defiance of the solicitations of its allies, of public opinion at home, and of the mass of facts in evidence, to declare that the Confederate States of America have not yet made good their title to independence, that the restoration of the American Union is still a possible and a probable contingency, and that the war which has desolated and drenched in blood nearly a whole continent, has not yet lasted long enough? To such declaration the refusal of the French invitation would plainly be equivalent; but the reasons which could induce England at this time to make it would appear to mankind the most inscrutably mysterious that ever influenced the counsels of a great nation.

Vicksburg and Port Hudson.

Of what are the armies of the North composed? In the shock of battle, in the march, in the bivouac, they certainly show no superiority over the soldiers of other nations. We know, as a fact, that the Federal army has given way to more disgraceful panics, is more difficult to keep in hand, more loosely disciplined, and worse officered than that of any other modern power; that its organization is of the roughest; its hospitals, ambulances, and commissariat quite insufficient to its wants. For all this, it is constantly performing tremendous marches over an almost impassable country, fighting now in the depth of winter, now in the heat of a tropical summer, encamped on moist plains reeking with malarious exhalations; and its losses are, if we can rely upon Northern estimates, utterly insignificant. Take the latest illustration—General Grant's forces before Vicksburg. That army landed at Burlingame some 70,000 strong. It fought a desperate battle nearly every other day until it reached Vicksburg, the battle lasting, on one occasion, from sunrise to sunset. It marched through one hundred miles of the enemy's country. It left sick and wounded and stragglers at the mercy of a guerilla cavalry. It assaulted the defences of Vicksburg four or five times, losing, in one attack that lasted only thirty minutes, 2500 men; and yet the Northern papers tell us the estimates of Grant's losses, since he crossed the Mississippi to the latest date, is 7000 men. It might be proved from Northern sources that a greater number than this has been struck down in the actual field of battle; that the casualties at Thompson's Hills, Jackson, and Baker's Creek far exceeded this estimate, independently of the losses before Vicksburg. But what of the marching? What of the encampment in the alluvial plains around Vicksburg? of the panic in the trenches? of the hundreds whom fever and exhaustion have consigned to their last resting-place along the sedge banks of the Mississippi, or to whom the sharp crack of the Mississippi rifle has borne the instantaneous message of death. Seven thousand men! Seven times seven thousand men would hardly sum up the long roll of killed and wounded soldiers in the Federal army since it crossed the Mississippi; and the death-lists must rise daily at a frightful rate, so long as that army remains before Vicksburg. General Grant's last bulletin is, that "the siege is progressing satisfactorily." The progress amounts to this, that Grant's army still holds its entrenched position before Vicksburg, but that from the 8th of May to the 8th of June, he had not gained an inch of ground; that the seven miles of defences which close the gates of Vicksburg to the invader had nowhere been pierced. The cordon of fire was still maintained, and Grant could only sit still and witness the fruits of his earliest successes withdrawn slowly from his eager grasp. The shouts of triumph which welcomed the fall of the Sebastopol of the Mississippi have been changed to the murmurs of despair. The sultry, stifling heat of the Lower Mississippi will fight for the South, and beneath its blasts the Northern hordes must slowly melt away, until Johnstone, with his avenging army, will march down upon the beleaguered foe, and proclaim the second siege of Vicksburg a failure. It is more a question of endurance now than anything. If the garrison of Vicksburg is amply provisioned and adequately supplied with ammunition, Grant cannot force it to surrender. He is not likely to renew the assault. He must proceed by tedious siege operations. Every day his difficulty of transport will increase, and the area of his supplies will be restricted. Every day adds to the efficiency and strength of Johnstone's army. Grant may still hold out, in the vain hope of starving out the garrison. But there seems at present far more probability of an early abandonment of the siege. He has now no prospect of relief from the army of Louisiana. General Banks has sufficient work to do before Port Hudson, if indeed he has not already been driven from its works. The Confederate forces are gradually re-occupying the ground temporarily lost to them by Banks's advance. In Western Louisiana the Federals hold only so much of the river bank as the fire of their gun-boats can cover. The whole of the Lake Providence district is once more in the power of the Confederates. Report places an army of 10,000 men at Milliken's Bend, only twenty miles above Vicksburg. Between that fortress and Port Hudson guerillas swarm, and hover over the flanks and the rear of General Grant's army. Altogether the issue seems to us here to be whether Grant and Banks will succeed in withdrawing their forces in safety, and not whether Port Hudson and Vicksburg will fall, and the Mississippi become a Federal river. We do not attach much importance to the rumours of Banks's second defeat. He has not tried two assaults; the report of his wound is, in all probability, to be traced to General Sherman's death. We can hardly believe that General Kirby Smith is in force enough to have relieved Port Hudson and driven the Federals to their gun-boats. But all these rumours speak hopefully for Southern prospects. They are pitched in a different note to that which heralded Grant's and Banks's first triumphs; they prove that the people has come to share the confidence of its chiefs, in the strength of its position on the Mississippi; they are, we believe, the prognostics of sure disaster to the Federal armies. But it is impossible, in surveying the enormous area over which the contest in the South-West is being waged, and in reviewing the means by which the North carries on the war—the submerging of districts larger than the largest English counties teeming with luxuriant produce; the burning and sacking of towns; the plundering of farms, plantations, and villages; the forcible impressment and arming of slaves against their own masters—without feelings of horror and indignation at the crime of the men who are perpetuating this ruthless war of conquest, and of deep and active sympathy for those who, against any odds, and such sacrifices as have never fallen to the lot of a modern people, still endure and fight to the end. Failing in their whole material, the Federal generals are now raising and drilling negro regiments. These are placed, like Urian, in the front of the battle, and there they perish miserably in a war not their own, and which can only result in a worse bondage than any they have yet experienced. Of all the atrocities committed in the name of Liberty—for which Mr. Lincoln's administration is responsible—this cruel and cowardly destruction of the negro is surely the one that cries loudest to Heaven for vengeance upon its authors.

In the pressure of the conflict on the Mississippi the interest of the war in other quarters is comparatively faint. But it is not likely that the summer months will pass away without another great conflict in Virginia or Maryland. General Lee is said to be concentrating his forces for the offensive; and at Washington President Lincoln, with that true care for his own safety which he has evinced ever since the war broke out, is actively engaged in providing for his own defence. General Hooker has once more given the Confederates a 'sensation' in the shape of a cavalry reconnaissance across the Rappahannock. A more senseless movement has not been made during the war. Three brigades of cavalry, two regiments of infantry, and two batteries of artillery were moved upon Brandy Station, near Culpepper, ostensibly with the view of breaking up a Confederate cavalry force reported to be gathering in that district. They came upon the Confederate pickets, and drove them back,—came upon the main body, and were forced back in return. There was a great deal of manoeuvring, and here and there a hand-to-hand encounter. Finally, General Pleasanton, on hearing that Confederate infantry were advancing, withdrew his troops to the safe side of the Rappahannock. What they did, and what they tried to do we must leave to time to show. Certainly the idea was a novel one. As there was some fighting, it may please the Northern mob; but at present it looks very much like a disaster—a disaster wantonly and uselessly incurred, in an operation which could not by any possibility lead to any result commensurate with the risk. The latest reports from the North speak of a general advance on the part of the Federal army. But we can hardly credit it. Possibly the threat of a forward movement may be made in order to check General Lee. But we can hardly believe President Lincoln mad enough to intrust another army to Hooker. If a battle has taken place, few people outside Washington and New York can have any doubt about its result. For our part, we are inclined to believe that Western Maryland and Pennsylvania will be made to feel something of the war, and that at this very moment, Washington is in far more imminent danger than Richmond.

The Value of the Southern Trade.

THE Liverpool Post, in commenting on an article in our impression of June 4th, "What the North is fighting for," is shocked to find that our estimate of the value of the Southern trade "is implicitly believed by many of our mercantile friends, who, above all men in the country, ought to have known better;" and it forthwith rushes into a most amusing calculation to show that the trade of the most productive agricultural country in the world is a mere nothing, "not worth wrangling for." The Post admits the fact that the annual direct exportation of the South is over one-third of the total exports of the whole Union, while its direct imports are less than one-tenth of the whole; but it ignores the irresistible inference, and refers to this striking fact only to prove what needed no proof, that the South's share of the imports could not possibly amount to £80,000,000, as it alleges we had asserted. Now, what we did say, and the whole context of our article precluded the possibility of the sum in question being misunderstood as applying to imports, was,—“The monopoly which the North loses, gives to Europe a customer who is able to pay annually for upwards of £80,000,000 of goods.” It is not worth our while to enter into a controversy with our Liverpool contemporary, but, as the subject is far from being exhausted and has a special interest just now, we avail ourselves of the opportunity for reverting to it again.

The value of the Southern trade, as we remarked on the former occasion, can be but imperfectly gathered from the statistics of the foreign trade of the late Union, however eloquently those statistics speak in favour of the South. The North was almost as pre-eminently manufacturing as its tributary was agricultural, and, therefore, it both consumed a very large share of the raw materials produced of the latter, and supplied a larger share of the manufactured goods consumed by it. As these transactions between North and South leave no record in the official revenue books, we must resort to the fortunately most accurate information afforded by the Census. This, arranged according to States by Mr. Kettell, whose valuable little work we have before quoted, gave for the South—that is, all the slave-holding States—the following results in 1850:

	Dollars.
Slaughtered animals . . . . .	54,398,015
Grains . . . . .	307,328,112
Other (including Tobacco) . . . . .	46,303,950
Cotton . . . . .	101,834,616
Sugar . . . . .	16,599,310
Naval Stores . . . . .	2,107,100
	$528,571,103

The item for naval stores, not being included in the Census returns, is derived from the statistics of exportation, and is, therefore, considerably under-estimated. The Southern States, chiefly North Carolina, though all share in it more or less, have supplied the whole United States with their entire consumption of naval stores, that is, pitch and rosins, as well as a large portion of the timber used in ship-building. The lowest estimate of these productions of the Southern forests heretofore furnished to the North cannot fall short of $25,000,000, according to the best data we have. It must further be observed that Mr. Kettell's figures are those of the census of 1850; the more recent census has not yet been published in its detailed completion, but we know that the increase in the value of agricultural productions during the intervening ten years has been over 80 per cent. for all sections of the Union alike. We have then, as the aggregate value of the products of the fields and forests of the South in 1860, the year of the dissolution, the enormous sum in round numbers of $90,000,000, or say, not far short of £200,000,000. Now if we consider that so valuable was labour in the South, and so exclusively devoted to agricultural pursuits, that almost the simplest and crudest manufactures were neglected, if not wholly ignored; that the South sent its hides North in exchange for leather, its wheat (peculiarly valuable as an article of export on account of its property of withstanding tropical climates) in exchange for Northern-grown and Northern-ground flour; that it did not consume even its own tobacco until, by Northern hands, it had been made into cigars and chewing plugs—or its sugar, until it had passed through the Northern refineries; that the markets of the great Northern cities were habitually supplied with the earlier growth of the Southern gardens and orchards, and even with a large proportion of the beef that fed their populations; that in the smallest as well as the largest of the articles of necessity, of comfort, or of luxury that civilized man requires, this interchange went on; that even newspapers, intended solely for Southern circulation, as well as books, were printed at the North—when these facts are considered it will be found that, due allowance being made for home consumption, four hundred millions of dollars, or £50,000,000, is an exceedingly moderate estimate of the purchases which, at the time of separation, the South was in the habit of making and able to pay for annually. That the South will still continue to be a customer of the North to a certain extent, after separation, is a natural consequence of the proximity of the two countries, and of the ingenuity and enterprise of one of them, as well as its intimate acquaintance with the other's markets. Against these advantages of the North must be weighed the deadly animosity which has sprung from the war, and which, with a people like the Southerners, must, for many years, retard and impede the renewal of social and commercial relations with the North. There are few articles in which Europe, and more particularly England, cannot successfully compete with the Northern manufacturers, and it would speak ill for British enterprise if it failed to secure at least one-half of the trade which the North has heretofore monopolized. Even that one-half, as we have seen, would amount to the handsome sum of £40,000,000, in goods to be supplied. It should not be forgotten that the incidental profits of a direct trade with the South are not represented in that figure. Not only would the exports from and the imports into an independent South be vastly increased, but the very large per-centage which the handling of these exports and imports under the old system left to the Northern capitalists, shippers, and brokers, would be saved and divided between the South and its European purveyors.

It is not true, as the Liverpool Post alleges in aid of its faulty arithmetic, that the manufacturing establishments to which the war has given rise in the Confederate States will obtain, from the financial necessities of the Government, that protection which will enable them to compete with, and in a measure exclude foreign manufactures. These establishments must disappear with the cause which produced them, unless, indeed, the war were protracted to the utter ruin of the agricultural interest. The South had to supply its own necessities, besides employing the amount of labour rendered worthless by the non-exportation of its usual staples. So soon as an outlet is procured for the latter, and the former can be otherwise supplied, that labour will return to the occupation for which it is best fitted, and which is known by experience to be productive of the greatest profits. The South could not, if it would, become a manufacturing country, even in the sense of permanently supplying its own wants—first, because the climate forbids it, and secondly, because the character of its labour forbids it. It cannot change the one, and it is not likely suddenly to change the other. Foreign immigration on a large scale might give it the labour available for manufactures, but that cannot be, so long as it retains the institution of slavery. As for the financial requirements of the Government, it is clear that these are best subserved by a revenue tariff levied on the largest possible quantity of imports. Protective tariffs are known not to be productive in themselves, and their adoption would force the treasury in stress of means to depend upon direct taxation, the most reluctantly submitted to of all species of taxation, and the most expensive in collection. These insinuations of the Post are on a par with the recklessness of facts and figures which it displays in another assertion, one that we had supposed no journal valuing the good opinion of its readers would now admit into its columns, viz.,—“It is well known that the Confederacy does not produce food enough to meet the demands of its own people.” As the war has induced a pretty general study of the American Census Tables, it would be a work of supererogation to disprove this ridiculous mistake for the thousandth and one time.

DOES THE UNIFORM PROTECT THE SLAVE?

We invite special attention to the subjoined, from the New York World of the 9th of June, which treats on an important and frequently misunderstood question in a manner at once clear, precise, and conclusive. The article is evidently the production of a thorough lawyer and a man of sense. For the information of the English reader, it may be well to observe that the armies of the United States are governed by certain supplementary rules and regulations, invented by Dr. Lieber, a German professor, at the request of Mr. Stanton, and, contrary to a plain clause of the Constitution, never approved or even submitted to Congress. One of these rules is that “the uniform protects the soldier of whatever class, colour, condition, or former political relations.”

The very grave question whether the uniform protects the soldier is not to be disposed of by an “of course.” There are certain cases in which it not only does not protect the soldier, but in which no sane man would contend that it should. General Scott hanged fifty men in a batch, fighting in the Mexican uniform, because they had deserted from his army. There is, then, one exception to the rule. If a British invading army had landed in South Carolina, and had uniformed and disciplined the slaves, does any man imagine that this Government would have considered the act within the limits of Christian warfare, or would have listened to the assertion of a right on the part of England to dictate our course as regarded them?

Slaves must be regarded either as property or persons. As property, they are as sacred as other property; as persons, they are non-combatants. There is no middle-ground. But our authorities conscript them. Grant that the right to do so is perfect; what are the rights of the other belligerent? It must be remembered that the United States and “the so-called Confederate States” are belligerents, and that the laws of war govern their present relations. It is treason here, punishable with death, for a man to give aid or comfort to the enemy. Can it be less treason for a man there to give aid and comfort to their enemies? Can we maintain our position before the civilized world on this question? If Napoleon had employed Russian serfs as his soldiers, could he have claimed immunity for them, from the laws of Russia, if they had been taken prisoners? We suspect not. The public mind had better examine this subject carefully, and reflect wisely before coming to a conclusion, for the freeing of slaves, and enrolling them as our soldiers, must inevitably, at a very early date, bring about a character of warfare unknown since the Wars of the Roses. The Confederate States could just as easily give up the claim of right to independence as the right of punishing alleged subjects for treason. The men who lead there, and the men who are led, unite cordially on this point. A scene of blood will soon be opened, and Europe will interfere forcibly, in the name of humanity. The side in fault will be constrained. Let us be sure to be right on this point, and, in order to be right, let us discuss it. The policy seems to have been adopted without examination, and by the military chiefs, in separate departments, and is to be examined under two aspects—our right, and the right of the other belligerent. It may be that we have no right to free the slave, or, if we have that right, no other. If we have a right to make a soldier of him, what are the rights of the enemy as against that soldier? We have a right to make a soldier of a deserter; the enemy has the counter right to hang him. Is this theory applicable to enlisted slaves? We own to a hope that the laws of civilized war prohibit the employment of the slaves of the other belligerent as our soldiers, for we can conceive of no one measure so likely to prolong the war, to make the alienation permanent and the hate bitter, and, we regret to add, none which would so fully justify continued struggle, complete alienation, and life-long hate.

THE EMPEROR NAPOLEON AND RECOGNITION.

I am enabled to repeat still more positively the contradiction given in my letter of Saturday to the rumour which attributed a change in the Emperor Napoleon's views on American affairs. That rumour, whether originating in Paris or in London, was completely unfounded. At the Cabinet Council held on Thursday last, at which the Emperor presided, it was resolved that a despatch should be addressed the same day to the French Ambassador in London, instructing him to renew the proposals on the part of the Emperor to the English Government for a joint (diplomatic) action in America. This despatch was written, and it is probable that by this, or before this, Baron Gros will have carried out the instructions it contained.

Mr. Lindsay and Mr. Roebuck came over to Paris on Monday morning. They proceeded forthwith to Fontainebleau. Mr. Lindsay asked for an audience for himself and Mr. Roebuck. It was instantly granted, and both gentlemen were received by his Majesty most graciously. The conversation lasted for some time, and the Emperor declared in the most formal manner that he entertained the same views as before with respect to the civil war in America; that he was desirous again to interpose his good offices, and equally desirous that England should join him; that he believed the joint intervention of France and England would be attended with good results, and that, in again proposing to England to act with him, he was moved by no unfriendly feeling towards the North—quite the contrary. His only motive was to put a stop to the horrible carnage in America, the more so as it was productive of no results; and the more to be deplored as there was no chance of restoring the Union.

A statement made many months ago to the effect that the Emperor had proposed to England to join him in mediation between the belligerents was contradicted, and, if I am not mistaken, in Parliament. I may now mention that the Emperor, in his conversation with the two gentlemen yesterday, completely corroborated that statement. He declared that he did propose mediation at the time specified; and, perhaps, I am not going too far in saying that Mr. Lindsay and Mr. Roebuck have his authority for declaring in Parliament that what was then stated respecting the offer of mediation was perfectly correct, and that he felt much regret it was not acted upon. Such is, I have reason to believe, the substance of the conversation that took place yesterday at Fontainebleau.

In the event of the present overtures of the English Government being attended with no practical result, I should not be surprised if the Imperial Government addressed itself to Spain. Spain, as everybody knows, is, or rather was, in the receipt of a large revenue from the island of Cuba—almost the last that remains of her magnificent possessions beyond the Atlantic—and, until this unhappy war broke out, the trade between Cuba and the United States was most flourishing. The “Stars and Stripes” outnumbered the flags of any two other nations of the globe in the Cuban waters, and exceeded that of Spain herself. North and South Carolina, New Orleans, and New York, in particular, sent in abundance of their products, natural and artificial, to the Cubans. Their very ferryboats, and their carts, were American, and the men that worked them generally American. All this is gone. A short time after hostilities broke out hardly a dozen craft were seen where they were previously counted by hundreds. Spain has felt this state of things severely, and would gladly see it at an end. She has been repeatedly urged to do something—that something being to declare her recognition of the Southern Confederacy. This she has not ventured to do. She was alone, and she did not care to bring down upon her the vengeance of the North. But as her necessities are great, and the position of her rich colony most critical, I would not affirm that she will turn a deaf ear to solicitations coming from France, particularly when France purposes to act with her.—Times' Paris Correspondent, June 24.

THE SIEGE OF PORT HUDSON.

(From our own Correspondent.)

NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA, June 2.

My last letter brought Banks's attack on Port Hudson to Friday morning. It was not till Thursday that the commanding general of the Federal forces found that he could not carry the position by assault, and that this far he had been badly beaten. He withdrew his forces temporarily. A steamer from this city went up with a few more soldiers, labourers, shovels, sand-bags, and siege guns, and during the latter part of last week Banks prepared his line of offences to carry Port Hudson by investment or siege. Weitzel, on the evening of Wednesday, carried the upper Confederate battery, turning the six guns against the enemy, and pushing forward a defence for his own men near the parapet, or ditch rather of the works at that end of the town, building a protection for his own force with logs and earth, and then stationing sharpshooters to pick off any of the Confederate troops who might attempt to load the guns which commanded his attempted approaches.

This done, he began to sink a shaft, intending to undermine the Confederate works, blow up their defences, and create a breach wide enough for the entire Federal army to attack by column and march into Port Hudson. We have not heard the explosion in the city. But, meanwhile, Banks has erected offensive and defensive earth and sand-bag works within a mile of the rear defences of Port Hudson, and has extended his line from Weitzel's division on the right to the Springfield landing (Stone's, now Sherman's division) below—a distance, say of three or four miles. There has been some desultory shelling on both sides since Thursday last, but no attack—no battle. Every day boats have come down to the city, bringing loads of wounded men, who cannot be provided for at Baton Rouge. The hospitals are all full, but not nearly so full as they will be before Port Hudson falls. Banks will do his best to carry the position. He says he will do it if it takes every man in the department; and while one cannot, perhaps, but admire his determination, he must think of the rashness which exposes so much to gain what, after all, will be worth but little.

For the fall of Port Hudson, and Vicksburg also, does not necessarily "open the Mississippi," nor close the war. If it opens the Mississippi it does not keep it open. But we can afford to wait a few days and see if Banks, with 20,000 and more men, with powerful batteries, good generals, and all that is necessary to carry on a successful campaign, can drive out or "bag" Frank Gardner's handful (comparatively) of men in Port Hudson. When the worst comes to the worst, it is more than likely the Confederates will cut their way out.

The weather is not over and above favourable for fighting. June is the warmest month of the year in this latitude, and the Northern and unacclimated army will suffer terribly soon. What they do must be done quickly.

I wrote you that the Confederate authorities at Richmond had abandoned Louisiana to its fate. The reason is obvious. Louisiana has furnished, literally poured out all the men and money she can to aid the Confederacy. She does not raise a bushel of wheat, make a side of bacon, nor even raise a pound of tobacco for the Confederate army. She produces only cotton and sugar. Nor can the Confederacy spare a single man from Virginia or Mississippi. Yet the present affair at Port Hudson might have been much better managed on both sides. When General Dick Taylor, commanding say 5,000 Confederates in the Teche country, first heard of Banks's intended advance, he sent a despatch to General Frank Gardner, commanding at Port Hudson, which called for the following action:—"Move at once upon Baton Rouge—harass Augur as much as you can—do not drive him out, but keep him there; make Banks reinforce him—at all events, prevent Banks from withdrawing the Baton Rouge forces, to take part in the proposed Teche movement—if Banks moves against me with his whole force, I am lost." Was it not the best move for Gardner? And yet Banks was allowed to quietly withdraw the whole Baton Rouge force; it joined with the advance into the Attakapas country, and was opposed only by four or five thousand, these seldom presenting more than 2,000 men in any single attack. Next to a powerful reinforcement from the Richmond army, a diversion by Gardner upon Baton Rouge would have been a success for Taylor.

Banks blundered, not from ignorance or willingness, but from necessity, in not having a force large enough to hold as well as to take the Attakapas country—the boasted extension of the Federal line. Never was there a greater force. He walked through the country from Franklin on the Teche to Alexandria on Red River, collecting much cotton, much beef, many horses, mules, and negroes, giving the people in return the "oath of allegiance;" but he was obliged to take every one of his men to make the movement against Port Hudson, and to utterly abandon the country so recently conquered and "restored to the Union." Consequently, General Kirby Smith's head-quarters are to-day at Franklin. His men can be seen anywhere almost in the vicinity of Berwick's Bay. Dick Taylor's small force has also come back. They are "letting alone" the planters who took the oath of allegiance upon compulsion, but are summarily hanging every man who gave any information to Banks, or who acted as guides during his advance. Beyond the collected property in beef, horse and mule flesh, negroes and cotton, and the advantage of the approach to Port Hudson old Red River, Banks actually gained nothing in the Opelousas and Attakapas region. Certainly the immediate advantages to him were very great; but it is ridiculous to say that he has "restored" so much territory, or has extended the Federal lines a single foot. It must all be done over again, if he wishes to add this part of Louisiana to the portion already conquered by Butler and himself.

The territory actually held by the Federal forces is very small. Louisiana is an enormous State. The mass of the people even in the city are not loyal to the Government of the United States. The robbed, plundered, and abused planters certainly are not. Yet upon the ground of Banks's supposed and assumed successes, certain men, mostly from the North, have actually asked Governor Shepley (Brigadier-general acting as military governor of the small portion of the State in Federal possession) to call a convention, to frame a new State constitution, and to allow those who are willing to take the oath of allegiance to vote for United States' congress men, a Federal governor, State officers, and members of the Assembly. It is possible that these officers, with the fat salaries connected, may have induced this call. Military Governor Shepley has politely but properly declined to call the convention, so much desired by the prospective office-holders, in a letter which is enclosed. Yet these men talk about "our" State as if they actually owned it—just as the "official" organ, which has existed not quite five months, and whose Northern editors (both drawing pay as officers in a fictitious negro regiment) first saw New Orleans exactly eleven days before last Christmas, talk about "our" city, "our" citizens, "our" intelligent negro population. Well, with them their title to such claims is certainly limited by a connexion of hours rather than months.

There was a schooner load of "registered enemies"—almost the last—sent over the Lake to join the Louisiana regiments now organizing in Mobile for the Confederate army.

President Davis is reported to be in Mobile.

I cut the following from the Mobile Register of May 28:—

T. J. Cridland, Esq.—This gentleman has reached this city, bringing with him the very highest credentials of private and personal worth and character. He has been a resident of Virginia for eighteen years, and by long sojourn and association has come to regard himself more at home in the South than in the English land of his birth.

We learn from him that he bears no commission as a British Consul, and of course, without a commission there can be no foundation for a Federal exequatur. He came simply to take care of the British Consular offices and archives. In his capacity of gentleman we certainly welcome him, and commend him to the civilities and hospitalities of our citizens. In his capacity as representative of Earl Russell or Lord Lyons, we still protest that he has no claim to recognition by the Confederate authorities.

The city is very dull and very warm, but healthy for the season. Large numbers of persons are going North and to Europe for the summer.

THE CONFEDERATE STEAMERS ALABAMA AND GEORGIA.

(From a Special Correspondent.)

BARIA, May 20, 1863.

A few days since great excitement was occasioned in our little port by the arrival of the famous Alabama, which is still on her career of uninterrupted success. She came in for the purpose of discharging her prisoners, of which she had on board eighty-four, a number inconveniently large for a ship of her dimensions. Since being commissioned she has captured no less than 47 vessels, paroled 750 prisoners, and destroyed property to the enormous amount of three million one hundred thousand dollars. She has an admirably-disciplined crew, and is efficiently armed, while both officers and men express the most unbounded confidence in their intrepid commander, and their readiness to meet any vessel in the Yankee service of their size and metal.

A day or two after the arrival of the Alabama we were startled by the appearance in the harbour of another Confederate cruiser, the Georgia, Captain Maury, of whose very existence we were previously unaware. She has only been one month in commission, but already she has added another to the long list of captures effected by the infant Confederate navy, and from the appearance of her crew and the formidable character of her armament, she bids fair to rival the achievements of her famous predecessors, the Sumter, the Alabama, and the Florida. The name of the vessel captured was the Dictator (not a bad name for a first capture), a large ship bound from the United States to China. Her prisoners were also landed here. As every particular respecting the new cruiser will doubtless be of interest to your readers, I give you the following list of her officers as far as I have become acquainted with them:—Commander, Wm. L. Maury; First Lieut., R. T. Chapman; Second Lieut., W. E. Evans; Third Lieut., — Smith; Surgeon, Wooden, of Maryland; Paymaster, Curtis; Midshipmen, Walker and Morgan,—the latter a brother of Judge Morgan of New Orleans.

The officers of both vessels expressed themselves very much gratified with the kind reception they met with from the inhabitants generally, but particularly from the Englishmen connected with the railway now being constructed, who are staying here. The latter invited them to a railroad excursion into the interior, which you may be sure was heartily enjoyed by men who for months had been cruising in deep blue water. A few nights afterwards, we gave a ball in honour of our distinguished visitors, to which all the beauty and fashion—as the newspapers have it—of the place were invited, and which proved a very decided success. We toasted and cheered the "Pirates" most heartily, and, I hope, made them feel that, though far away from home, they were among friends, who thoroughly sympathized with their noble cause and the bravery with which it was supported. Before leaving here, our ladies determined on visiting the terrible Alabama, and accordingly sent word of their intention to board her on a certain day. They found both officers and crew on the alert, and were received with a broadside of champagne corks, to which, of course, they surrendered at discretion. It must have been a novel and refreshing sight to men so long accustomed to see the decks crowded with Yankee prisoners, to find them occupied by the ladies of Bahia in rustling silks and gay attire, and in place of the heavy tramp of the sailor and the sentry, to listen to the gentle footsteps of the fair ones. I trust both officers and men of the Alabama and Georgia will carry away as pleasant recollections of our little town as they will undoubtedly leave behind them of their visit. They have the good wishes and sympathy of every one here.

We have just heard that the Florida is at Pernambuco. If she should come here the Confederates will have quite a powerful fleet, and will be able to bid defiance to the Yankee naval forces in these waters, but I fear this is too much good fortune to expect.

PARIS TOPICS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, June 23.

Numerous and various rumours are circulating about the diplomatic action which, it is definitively asserted, the Emperor has decided upon in regard to the affairs of America. I will not repeat to you the many stories that are afloat, but this much, I think, may be relied upon as authentic: that Mr. Slidell had an interview with the Emperor at Fontainebleau, on Thursday; that he was most cordially received, and that his Majesty assured Mr. Slidell that the conclusions he had long since arrived at, remained unchanged; that he was ready and even anxious to end the war by any diplomatic measures in which England could be induced to concur; that he was not yet prepared, at least, until another effort should have been made to gain this concurrence, to act without it. In conclusion, the Emperor is asserted to have said to Mr. Slidell that he was at that moment meditating another formal request to the English Government to join him in mediation or recognition, and that this step would be debated in the next Cabinet Council. It is now stated that the question was before the Council on Saturday, and decided in favour of addressing a formal invitation to the English Government in the sense indicated by the Emperor to Mr. Slidell. Since Messrs. Roebuck and Lindsay have arrived, and on Monday had an audience at Fontainebleau. The purport of the Emperor's language is reported to have been substantially the same as that held to the Confederates' Representative.

There are some other interesting details of these two interviews, which, however, I am not at liberty to report, but which will probably soon receive full publicity. It is thought here that recognition is now nearer than it has been at any time since it was first demanded. But so many apparently well-founded hopes have been disappointed, that I do not allow myself to be too sanguine as yet.

While most of the Paris papers have given the news of the last days with comments pointing out their favourable character to the cause of the South, the Siecle, which is especially retained by the North—judging, at least, by the undisguised partisanship of its articles—takes advantage of the meeting lately held at Manchester to reproduce the libels which some of the reverend speakers on that occasion did not scruple to publish. Whether the English libellers spoke in better faith than the Siecle writers I do not know, but of the bad faith of this paper I have proof which admits of no question. I mentioned last week its attack on the “pirates of the South,” whom, not content with calling bad names, it charges by insinuation with the destruction of French vessels, when they can effect it without witnesses. This means, of course, the plunder and wrecking of the ships, but the murder also of the crews, for if these were spared, the crime could not be concealed. A letter was written to the editor by a Southern gentleman of position, informing him that these vessels were not pirates, but regularly commissioned ships of war, and this letter has neither been inserted nor noticed. If the attack had been made in good faith, the rectification would not have been refused. The French law obliges a newspaper which attacks an individual to open its columns to his justification; but when a gallant service is thus defamed, it would seem that all satisfaction can be refused. Yet the Siecle is not unaccustomed to eat humble pie. In yesterday's number it was obliged to publish, in leaded type, a very harshly-worded contradiction of one of its election scandals. It had already inserted a half rectification, saying that the injustice of which it accused the authorities in a small town, Condé-sur-Noireau, had not taken effect—thanks to the refusal of the committee of beneficence to carry out the suggestions made to it. The Mayor thus writes:—“This second plaint, as false as the first, will not lead the numerous readers of the Siecle into error, for I count upon your inserting in your next number my most energetic denial of allegations drawn from the worst sources, and all pure inventions.” They have now got hold of the story of the Leopard, the vessel which went whaling off the slave coast of Africa, and which, failing to catch the sea-serpent, was caught by an English man-of-war, to which the captain refused to show his papers. Of course, this is represented as a shocking piece of English naval tyranny. Frenchmen read and believe such stories.

Poland is still the great question of interest, and the tone of the Bourse during the last few days shows that the monied interest begins to look with some anxiety on the possible failure of the diplomatic negotiations. Nothing certain is known of the terms of the note which was sent last Thursday, but it is believed to be more nearly expressed in the same terms as that of Austria, than of England. From the language of many of the papers one might suppose that war was imminent, but this is not the opinion of the France of last night. Its director spent Sunday at Fontainebleau; some sort of importance attaches therefore to an article, not signed by him, headed “The War Party.” “We have a war-at-any-price party which, if it had the power, would thrust the Empire into all the risks of every foreign struggle. Its coryphæi are the Siecle and the Opinion Nationale. In their eyes the civilizing mission of France consists essentially in bidding defiance to the other Powers, in speaking only with drawn sword in hand, and setting up for the universal redresser of all wrongs. This is rashness, not policy. When we said that it was impossible for France to undertake alone the settlement, whatever it be, of the affairs of Poland, we called in question neither the Power nor the generous sympathies of our country, nor the influence its intervention would exercise. But whether it be settled by negotiation or by war, the character of the Polish question cannot change. It is not a French interest, nor an English interest, but a European one. Poland, in its present condition of oppression, is not a cause of anxiety and trouble for France, but for all Europe, whose equilibrium and peace are threatened. Its pacification must be due not to one Power, but to all the Powers united in a sentiment of justice and humanity. This agreement the French Government has at last brought about, and it is this moment that the war party chooses to counsel a policy of isolation for France, the very moment that her union with England and Austria is secured, and that the simultaneous proposals of the three Cabinets are presented at St. Petersburg. Be the issue peace or war, the cause of Poland must be that of the great Powers; and it must not lose its character of a general interest by the isolated action of one of them. This cause, defended by all Europe, offers no serious dangers; defended by France alone, it might lead to the most fatal complications, as well as to broken alliances, and might assume proportions which cannot now be foreseen. Assuredly we are strong enough to fight and to conquer, but it is desirable that other States equally interested with us in the triumph of Right and Liberty should join us in their defence. It is desirable that they should be aroused from that attitude of platonic sympathy which characterised them in Italy and Mexico, and which secures them, at the cost of France, all the benefits of a victory without the cost of a crown or a man. When we see the journals of the militant Democracy, in accordance with the English newspapers and the correspondences from Austria, urging us to go to war alone with Russia, appealing to our generous sympathies and our national pride, it is time to reflect gravely on the position, and to ask ourselves what can be the interest that these warlike advisers have in thus urging us on.

The France has also an article on the reported Ministerial changes to which I referred last week. The changes contemplated, it says, are changes not of measures, not of policy, but of persons, destined to appease the emotions produced by the late elections.

M. Drouyn de Lhuys, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, has written an answer to the circular of the Porte, regarding the Suez Canal. It is, of course, strongly in favour of the scheme, which France shows no inclination to abandon. The Débats of this morning publishes the letter by which Don Juan of Bourbon recognises the Queen of Spain. He has played his cards so badly in the last years, that his tardy submission, when he has not an adherent left, looks like the last throw of a desperate gamester, rather than the act of renunciation of a pretender. Having rendered him utterly contemptible, the Queen will probably assign him a pension to be enjoyed abroad, for so unstable a politician would hardly be a safe guest in Madrid.

FEDERAL RECRUITING IN ITALY.

(To the Editor of THE INDEX.)

TURIN, June 22.

Sir,—There are rumours in circulation that Federal agents are at present scouring Italy in search of chair à canon; and it is even asserted that personal applications having been made for a voluntary exodus to the land of freedom by some Italians to the United States' Minister himself, he could not resist the temptation of accomplishing so meritorious a work, namely, of furnishing these new Don Quixotes with the means of quitting this step-mother of theirs—this ungrateful Italy—in order to repair under the protecting wings of the American bald bird. In fact, where find, on the whole face of the earth, a more tranquil and secure abode than the United States at this very moment, when every citizen lies crushed under the heel of a military dragon? I am acquainted with the fact of an Italian, who having appealed to the generosity of Mr. Marsh for the noble purpose of going to America to improve his condition, he did not appeal in vain, but got one thousand francs for his travelling expenses, and is now on his way to New York. Of course, not a word was uttered of the war during the sentimental transaction, nor any compact was entered into by parties for any pound of flesh. The American recruiting agents are too cunning to blunder so grossly, and an American Minister has too much good sense left to get himself entangled, Crampton-like, into thorny briars. Why, is there not plenty of waste land on the banks of the Potomac which might be given up to European arms for improvement? Are there not marshes and swamps around Vicksburg and Port Hudson which need being drained or filled up for sanitary purposes? To be sure there are; and that is the very thing many of our aristocratic faiseurs wish to do. In fact, who can ever doubt of the adaptiveness of hundreds of our city loafers to ditching and tilling the soil—they who have done nothing all their life but gambling, smoking, drinking, and making love? So it is clear they are the right stuff most wanted at this critical epoch in America, and there they are willing or induced to go, in order to dedicate all their moral and physical energies to the tilling of that virgin land. I will conclude this brief notice of Federal recruiting in Italy by the translation of an article which appeared on the same subject in one of the leading papers of this city, and call your attention to the warning given to our young men:—

Federal agents from Washington are said to be among us, hunting after volunteers. We read lately in the London Times that Americans of a suspicious character were busy at work in the most populous centres of the European Continent, and in England, to induce that exuberant element of idle people which largely abounds in almost every capital, to repair to America, where there is so much need of hands (braccia), to till the soil, and for all sorts of employment; and that there were daily arrivals at New York of one thousand emigrants, on an average, from the different ports of England, most of them Irishmen.

With this piece of news staring us in the face, we are at a loss to conceive how the English Government can permit this violation of international rights, and be so faithless to their neutrality. England ought never to forget that at the time of the Crimean war Her Britannic Majesty's Minister was expelled from Washington by the Yankee Government for that very offence. It is evident that the American officials are recruiting among us, and it is an undeniable fact that two-thirds of these emigrants, at least, must become soldiers as soon as they land at New York, inasmuch as having no means of getting immediate food by following their respective vocations, and allured by a high bounty, no other alternative remains to them but shouldering a musket or starving.

It is whispered here that a Northern personage, residing among us, has already been furnishing some Italians with the pecuniary means of proceeding to America. We wish to believe that our laws have not yet been violated to such an extent, and we profit of the circumstance to say to our young men—“Keep aloof from this cruel war, as it has no humanitarian object; let not yourselves be enticed to become the instruments of destruction in behalf of a party who have nothing at heart but their own interest and selfish policy; consider that this same party, who now invite you to fight their battles, used to call the Italians cowards for being unable to expel the Austrians without foreign aid, and said they were only fit for using their treacherous stilettes;” and, finally, keep in mind that, by offering your arm to that party you prolong their internecine butchery and retard the enfranchisement of the valorous Southern people, who never did you harm, and who are now struggling for that same independence which it cost you so much blood and sufferings to attain.”

ITALUS.

RECOGNITION: THE COMING DEBATE.

(To the Editor of THE INDEX.)

SIR,—Never was news from America awaited with more anxiety than now. Not only does it seem likely that the next mail will bring us tidings at least as momentous as any which have reached us since, baffled, beaten, and bleeding, the army of General McClellan was driven back through the wooded swamps of the Chickahominy to the shelter of its gun-boats on the James River, and inform us of the determination of a great crisis in the war; it is probable also that on these tidings may depend the action of England. I have more than once heard it said, within the last few days, that if before the 30th news shall reach us that the siege of Vicksburg has been raised, Mr. Roebuck's motion will be carried; and that, on the other hand, if the Confederates should, before that time, sustain a serious reverse, the success of any proposal for the recognition of their Government must be indefinitely postponed. Not, however, to delude with a false confidence readers who have at heart the interests of the South and the true interests of England, I must express my belief that the result of that motion is not merely dependent upon the American news or upon American considerations. If it were to be determined upon the merits of the question, I should feel certain of the result. But I have no sort of assurance that it will be so determined. On the one hand, I know that the sympathies of the House of Commons are strongly with the countrymen of Davis and Stonewall Jackson; that the insolence of Wilkes and Seward, the brutalities of Blenker and Butler, have made the cause of the North to stink in the nostrils of the English people, and above all of the high-bred and chivalrous gentlemen of England. On the other, I know that their very chivalry and generosity lead many of them to shrink from any step which would or might have the semblance of a violation of law in obedience to sympathy; of an unfair advantage taken of the perils and weakness of the bitterest enemies of England; and we know, too, that the Government is deeply pledged against the recognition of the South, and that, whatever the private sentiments of individual Ministers, it would be extremely difficult for the Ministry, as a whole, to assent to Mr. Roebuck's motion. Now some warm well-wishers of the South sit on the Ministerial benches; still more among them are anxious not to oust Lord Palmerston from office; and if the Government should choose to put the issue as one of “want of confidence,” I cannot be sure that the personal popularity of the Prime Minister will not outweigh the merits of the Southern cause. If, therefore, the motion should fail, I shall not impute it to the members who may be wanting to their convictions that they have any leaning towards the North, any doubt as to the merits of the case, or any notion of truckling to Northern menace and bluster; I shall hold not that they loved justice less, but that they loved Palmerston more.

The question is two-fold; it is a question at once of international law and of English policy. The advocates of recognition have to show first, that there exists the right to recognise the Government of the Southern Confederacy, and that the claim of that Confederacy to recognition involves no injustice to the North, or United States; and secondly, that recognition is in accordance both with the immediate and the ultimate interests of England. And we cannot say that either proposition seems to us difficult to prove.

Most, if not all, of the older authorities on international law openly or tacitly proclaim the right of recognition, by declaring the right of foreign Powers to take such part as they may think fit in a civil, or quasi-civil war. No one dreams that Elizabeth violated any principle of international law, by her negotiations with the rebel States of the Netherlands. The question is, therefore, one of precedent; one resting solely on the usage of modern times. No case in point is cited that goes back more than fifty years. And the assertion of the Federal partisans, of whom "Historicus" is certainly the ablest and best informed, is, that the recognition of a country in the precise condition in which the Confederate States are is unprecedented. And this we grant, in the same sense in which we assert that the refusal of recognition to a country so situated is also without precedent. Really, these reasoners argue as if the birth of a nation were a matter of such every day occurrence, that circumstances must be expected to repeat themselves; that not only circumstances, but the identical combination of circumstances, are likely to recur, as in the Reports of legal tribunals; and that in the multitude of such events we might always expect to find some preceding case exactly similar in all essentials to the one in hand. This is unreasonable. All that can be expected of us is to show that, all things considered, the case of the South is as strong or stronger than that of any accepted claimant. And this, I think, is not a difficult task.

* An allusion is made here, I suppose, to a correspondence from Italy, which appeared in the New York Tribune in 1853, full of those slanders.

First, let us take the cases of Greece and Belgium. It is admitted on all hands that the case of the Confederate States is much better than either of these. They can hold their own; which neither Greece nor Belgium could. They are more incapable of fusion with the North than Belgium of union with Holland; they have suffered as savage cruelties from the Northern invaders as Greece from the Turks; they have not been guilty, as the Greeks were, of innumerable treacherous and cowardly atrocities in return. But, it is said, the cases of Greece and Belgium are not in point. There we did not merely recognise an established Power; we also intervened to put a stop to a barbarous war. Well; and if now by recognition alone, without intervention, we can put a stop to a war equally barbarous with that between Greece and Turkey, and a far greater nuisance to ourselves than that between Holland and Belgium, will not those precedents bear us out? Is not that which is a precedent for the greater a precedent also for the less? Does not that "case in point" which justifies the whole of a series of measures in the same direction justify a part also? The instances of Greece and Belgium prove that we may recognise and intervene; do they not prove, then, that we may recognise where it is probable that recognition alone, without intervention, will suffice for our purpose?

Next let us take the case of the Spanish Colonies. They were recognised, it is said, but only after long years of war, and when there was no longer a Spanish army engaged in hostile operations on their soil. But in modern days wars are not, especially when the belligerents are strong, and close neighbours, long and slow, as in the days before the Crimean conflict; they are short, sharp, and decisive. In two years the South has done and suffered more than the Spanish Colonies in twenty. Her conquest by the North is admitted to be as utterly hopeless as the conquest of the colonies by Spain at the period of their recognition. And it is only as a proof of a still lingering probability of a reconquest, that the presence of a hostile army on the soil of a new-born nation can be pleaded in bar to its recognition. Otherwise, it is no more than the presence of an English army on Russian, or of a Russian army on Turkish soil—it is an invasion, and no more.

And if, in the almost undisputed possession of their territories, the South American colonies had the advantage over the Confederacy, they had not the title to recognition which she possesses in the stability and undisputed authority of her Government. They were a prey to factions and civil war; there is no faction in the Confederate States. They had scarcely anything that deserved to be called a Government; that of the Confederate States is as well organized, as complete in its independence, as active in its operation, as thoroughly acknowledged, and as potent in its own sphere as any government in Europe. And this advantage far outweighs that of territorial security: for what foreign Powers have to deal with, and what they are asked to recognise, is not the territory but the Government. We are not asked to define the boundaries of the Confederate States, or settle the position of Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, and Maryland, between the rival claimants for their allegiance. What is asked of us is simply to acknowledge the existence of a Power so describing itself, by sending an ambassador to Richmond and receiving an ambassador here. It has a great and paramount bearing on the question of recognition, therefore, whether we have to deal with a settled or a precarious and doubtful Government; it matters very little whether the frontiers of that Government's jurisdiction are or are not ascertained. In the essential point, therefore, the Confederate States have a far better case than the Spanish colonies. The non-essential question of territory matters little, when once the impossibility of complete re-conquest is admitted.

I will not now stop to consider the hasty recognition of Texas, or to discuss the complete estoppel of all complaint on the part of the Federal Government, furnished by its own offer to recognise Hungary. The right of recognition is sufficiently vindicated already: I pass to consider the reasons why that right should be recognised by England.

In the first place, it is generally allowed that this war, as waged by the North, is a scourge, an outrage, and a scandal to the civilized and Christian world. Its bloodshed, its barbarities, its wanton destruction of property, its deliberate murders—the fiendish ferocity of those who preach, stimulate, and direct it from Northern pulpits and platforms, make European observers shudder with disgust and horror. It is pre-eminently a scourge to England; it makes her commerce on the high seas unsafe; it has cut off the best market for her produce; it has intercepted the supply of her most valuable raw material; it has destroyed the most profitable industry; it has desolated the happiest and most prosperous of her counties; it has demoralised the élite of her working population. Recognition would stop the war. The North would not, as now, feel that honour required it to continue a contest in which Europe still allowed that it might probably be successful. Those who now shrink from proclaiming their own defeat would yield gladly to the decisive verdict which would save them from that humiliation. The Northern people generally would feel that, whatever might have been the case before, the Union was dead indeed when Europe at last pronounced its "Vale, vale, in æternum vale;" and would abandon their frantic efforts, after the manner of Queen Joanna, to recalc to life the noisome and mouldering corpse. That this would be so, is felt on all sides; else why is recognition so angrily deprecated by one party, and so warmly desired by the other? It is absurd to say that in their fury the Northern States will turn upon England. In the first place, England is not likely to have to act alone; and secondly, if she did, her fleet could in a few weeks bring the Atlantic States to sue for peace, and establish at once the independence of the South on Southern terms. Therefore there is no danger in recognition; and if there were, the argument of fear has never had much weight with England. More absurd still, some pretend to think that, so far from stopping the war, recognition would rekindle it; that we should only inflame the passions of the North, and embitter its people to pursue the war more fiercely than ever against those whom England had presumed to favour. "Inflame Jacobin! You might as well talk of setting fire to Hell!" Embitter the North! You might as well talk of debauching the Devil. Is it conceivable that blasphemous ferocity can go further than that with which the Abolitionist pulpits already resound? Is it possible that curses more horrible and threats more brutal than now are heard from every platform, and read in every newspaper, can be uttered by human tongue or pen? That those threats are not fulfilled to the letter, that that ferocity is not fully gratified, is due to no relenting, no sense of shame, but only to Northern impotence, and Northern fear of retaliation; neither of which checks will act less powerfully after Europe has recognised the South.

I might say much of eventualities more or less remote; of the dangers which would arise if the North should come out of this contest, having crippled the strength of the South and retained its own; of the vast importance to England of Southern cotton for her mills, and the Southern markets for her produce; of the need she may one day have of a Southern alliance for the security of her own American possessions. But I waive these considerations; because I think, and all Englishmen think, of nothing so much as of terminating immediately, if we may do so, this horrible warfare; first, for the sake of humanity; secondly, for the sake of Lancashire and her starving people; and thirdly, lest we ourselves should be dragged into it by the intolerable insolence of the North. I conclude, then, by expressing my firm conviction, not only that recognition will stop the war, but that it will not be stopped till recognition has been accorded. The North will not be the first to proclaim the hopelessness of her enterprise. She may be beaten at every point; each joint of the "anaconda" may be separately bruised, crushed, and torn; and still the war will go on, more savage, more destructive, and more purposeless than ever a war of predatory incursions, of mischief, of murder, of vengeance, when a war of conquest finally proves too expensive. And still the blockade will be maintained, and still Lancashire will be starving. Recognition alone will eventually end this state of things; but then, perhaps, recognition may have to be coupled with interference. Then, it may mean war; now, it means peace. And in the name of peace, I commend it to the Christian people of England.

AN ENGLISHMAN.

THE APPEAL TO CHRISTIANS.

(To the Editor of THE INDEX.)

SIR,—I thank you for spreading upon the pages of THE INDEX, the address of a number of Clergymen of the Confederate States of America, to their Christian friends and brethren throughout the world, regarding the present cruel, and useless, and unnatural war. I was absent from Richmond when it was signed; but, inasmuch as it bears the signatures of but a few of the clergy of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and I have reason to know that its facts and principles are endorsed by them all, and that such endorsement has occasioned many of them to be exiled from their homes, their churches to be closed, and their property to be destroyed by the Federal invader, I would be glad if in any way I could contribute to its circulation, or to direct attention to its statements.

And, although my own name can add no weight to such clear and plain statements on the part of men whose position and awful responsibilities afford no motives for misrepresentation, and many of whom are known as not only men of piety, but as having been very slow in receiving the stern facts they now declare, yet I would consider it a duty and a privilege to add it to the list of signatures.

Truly yours, &c.,

K. J. STEWART.

THE SEIZURE OF THE SHIP ALEXANDRA.

It will be in the recollection of our readers that in the month of April last, in consequence of information furnished by Mr. Adams to Earl Russell, and in pursuance of an order of the Home Secretary, a vessel known as the Alexandra, lying at the Toxteth Dock, Liverpool, was seized by a Custom House officer, named Morgan, under the provisions of the 7th section of the Act 59 George III., c. 69, commonly called "The Foreign Enlistment Act." The vessel had been built by Messrs. Miller and Sons, and had been launched from their building yard a month before the seizure. That Act of Parliament, passed in the year 1819, differs but very slightly from the Act of Congress passed in the previous year. It will not, however, be necessary to direct attention to any part of the Act other than the 7th section, by which it is in effect enacted, first, that any person in any way concerned in the equipment of a vessel for warlike purposes in the service or against any Foreign Power, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour and be liable to fine and imprisonment; second, that such ship shall be forfeited, may be seized by officers of Customs and Excise, and may be prosecuted and condemned in the same manner as vessels may be prosecuted and condemned under the Revenue laws or the laws of trade and navigation. The case itself, in the present instance took the form of an information filed by the Attorney-General on behalf of the Crown, and came on for hearing before the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer on the 22nd day of June. Twelve persons were made defendants in the action, but only five appeared to defend, namely, H. Sillim, Henry Berthoin Preston, Jacob Willink, David Wilson Thomas, and William Thompson. These gentlemen carry on business as engineers and iron-founders under the style of Fawcett, Preston, and Co., and claimed the vessel as their property. Eminent counsel appeared on either side; the Attorney-General, the Solicitor-General, the Queen's Advocate, and two other well-known barristers for the Crown, while the Defendants retained Sir Hugh Cairns, the Solicitor-General under Lord Derby's administration, two Queen's Counsel, and one junior barrister: The information contained 98 counts, differing only in verbal distinctions, the gist of the charge being that "the defendants did, on the 5th of April, equip the said vessel to employ her in the service of the Confederate States of America with intent to cruise and commit hostilities against the Republic of the United States of America." The defendants pleaded in effect that "the vessel was not forfeited for the causes alleged in the information." The case was opened by the Attorney-General, who, in the course of his speech, mentioned that besides the defendants, the firm of Miller and Sons, Captain Bullock, a Confederate officer, Captain Tessier, in the service of Frazer and Co., of Liverpool, and also Mr. Hamilton had more or less interfered in the building of the Alexandra.

Before proceeding to speak of the persons called as witnesses, and the nature of the evidence adduced, it will be well to refer to a series of questions, which the advisers of the Crown endeavoured to put, and which were objected to as inadmissible on the part of the defendants. Now it will be observed from what has been already said with regard to the 7th section of the statute that the action of the statute is twofold, in that it admits of an indictment against an individual, and also of a forfeiture of the subject-matter. The two principles involved may be and are clearly distinct, for to take an instance in the case of a breach of the Revenue Laws, the subject-matter is forfeited, but the offence is not indictable. On the other hand, it is obvious that there cannot be two trials for the same offence, one to try whether the ship is forfeited, and another to try whether the parties are guilty of a misdemeanour. Consequently, this difficulty arises, that the evidence which may be admissible, so far as the issue of the forfeiture of the ship is concerned, may be inadmissible as against the individuals who are subject to the indictment, and this very dilemma occurred at the commencement of the case. It was proposed to ask a witness whether Messrs. Miller had ever, in the presence of the witness, spoken of the vessel as the Alexandra. Now Messrs. Fawcett and Co. are the claimants of the vessel, and the defendants and Messrs. Miller presumably have nothing whatever to do with her. In fact, they were entire strangers. Therefore, their statements to a witness in conversation about another man's vessel could not possibly be admitted as proof of that other man's guilt, for as the Judge expressed it, "such evidence would only amount to the admission by one man of another man's guilt." But the matter was capable of being put in quite another light, for it was contended by the Attorney-General that no question whatever was raised in the case of the guilt or innocence of the defendants, but merely of the propriety of the seizure; assuming that to be so the evidence might be admissible as tending to show the destination of the vessel, and as such it was admitted; but the Judge evidently doubted whether the assumption was correct. The original question was therefore put, and also the question whether Miller ever told the witness for what purpose the vessel was intended. The questions were answered, and Sir Hugh Cairns exercised the privilege of tendering a bill of exceptions; that is, he took exception on the point to the ruling of the Judge, in order that the question of the admissibility of the evidence may be hereafter decided before a Court of Error. In the further course of the case it was proposed to ask a witness whether Mr. Tessier, in the presence of Miller, said anything about the Oreto, in order to establish the connection of the parties engaged about the Oreto with the Alexandria, but the question was not admitted. A question, however, as to a similar conversation about the Alexandria was admitted. The Court did not allow an expert to be asked the probable purpose of the ship, nor a witness to be asked in what character Mr. Hamilton held communication with him.

The first witness called on the part of the Crown was Mr. Morgan, who stated that he acted under the Collector of Customs, and seized the Alexandria in consequence of information received from her Majesty's Government; that he had seen the ship in course of building, and that the only name on her yards was W. C. Miller. The next witness, Joseph Acton, had been a watchman for fifteen months in the employment of Messrs. Miller; previous to that date he had been a policeman, and subsequently a cab-driver; he had seen the Alexandria in the course of construction, and had often observed Mr. Bullock and Mr. Hamilton in Messrs. Miller's yard. William Bains had been dismissed the service of Messrs. Miller about three months since for misbehaviour and absence through intoxication; he had assisted in building the Oreto and the gunboats Penguin and Steady, and said that the Alexandria was like those vessels but smaller; he had seen Captain Tessier and a Mr. Mann, of the firm of Fawcett and Co., in the yard of Messrs. Miller. Evidence was given by Joseph Carter, who had left the service of Fawcett and Co. from the insufficiency of his wages, to the effect that machinery was made in Fawcett's works for a propeller boat, known as Number 2209, with which boat he identified the Alexandria; guns and gun-carriages were being prepared at the time of the making of the machinery; the guns were three in number, one large and two smaller rifled. Mr. Hamilton attended the workshop at various times. Similar evidence was given by Benjamin Hodson, who also appeared to be a dismissed servant, and who spoke to the packing of guns and carriages, the parcels being sent to the Wapping Station on the North-Western Railway, and addressed to Captain Blakely, Camden, London; he also spoke of the manufacture of shot and shell which, in his presence, had been examined by Mr. Hamilton. Captain Englefield, of her Majesty's service, and J. Neil, a ship carpenter, gave evidence as to the character and architecture of the ship. From their statements it appeared that she was 127 feet long, with a tonnage of 250 builder's measurement; her frame was of British oak, her planking of teak, and her decks of pitch pine, she might be used as a yacht, and was convertible into a man-of-war; she had stowage for a crew of thirty-three men, but no further stowage; she could carry guns, but was without any of those appurtenances which would indicate that guns were to be placed on board. Mr. Green, a ship-builder, also said that the hatchways and fore-castle were such as would be seen in yachts and small vessels of war.

John de Costa, a shipping agent and steamboat owner, and likewise, as subsequently appeared, the keeper of a sailors' boarding-house, which he had the fortune to inherit from his mother, deposed that Miller had told him that "the Alexandria was a gunboat for the Southern Confederates, and that his firm was building the vessel conjointly with Fawcett and Co. for Messrs. Frazer, the agents for the Confederate States," and that Tessier and a Mr. Wellsman, of the firm of Frazer and Co., were continually inspecting the vessel. The remaining witnesses were George Temple Chapman and Charles Randolph Yonge. The former had no profession, and to supply the want he went to Messrs. Frazer, and professed himself to be a Secessionist interesting himself in Captain Bullock's affairs and those of the Confederate Government; but his ignorance about the vessel must be presumed from his total silence on the subject. The other witness, Charles R. Yonge, a deserter from the Alabama, gave a narrative of his doings on board that vessel in the capacity of paymaster, mentioned the names of her officers, and explained at length his transactions with Captain Bullock, previous to his embarkation on board that vessel, and those with Mr. Adams subsequently to his desertion; but he was as ignorant of all that related to the Alexandria as G. T. Chapman appeared to be.

We do not think that we can describe the character of this witness better than by quoting a passage from the speech of Sir Hugh Cairns, who thus spoke of this worthy:—"How was he," said the learned counsel, "to describe that specimen of humanity 'raised,' as he said he was, in the State of Georgia? A man who began his career by abandoning his wife and children in his native country; who wormed himself into the confidence of Captain Bullock, became his private secretary, and had access to his papers; who was accepted as the companion of those engaged in the Confederate cause, and persuaded them that he shared the feelings of patriotism which actuated them; who came over to England, where he assumed the same character, and being received by Messrs. Frazer, became possessed of every secret as to the proceedings of those engaged in the war on the part of the Southern States; who accepted a commission from his native country in her service, received her pay, and distributed her money; who then became a deserter, slipping overboard on leaving the ship of which he was an officer, in order that he might, by the lying pretence of marriage, effect the ruin and plunder the property of a young widow who had the misfortune to entertain him in her house; who succeeded by that pretext in possessing himself of her property, and then took her to Liverpool, where he turned her adrift penniless in the streets; who then hurried up to London to pour into the ear of Mr. Adams, the American Minister, his tale of treachery; who had betrayed every one of his familiar friends; who denied no crime, and blushed at no villainy. This man was put forward at the end of the climax of the case on the part of the Crown, but really he was not the witness of the Crown, but the witness of Mr. Adams, the Minister of the United States. To Mr. Adams, Charles Randolph Yonge told his tale, and it was he who listened to it, instead of driving from his door the miscreant who must have polluted the very air he breathed, and who handed him over to the Crown to be brought before a jury of Englishmen in order that they might hear the tale which the unmitigated villain told."

The Attorney-General replied on the part of the Crown.

His Lordship, in summing up, said,—This is an information on the part of the Crown for the seizure and confiscation of a vessel that was in course of preparation, but had not been completed. It is admitted that it was not armed, and the question is, whether the preparation of the vessel in its then condition was a violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act. The information is an exceedingly long one, but the main question you will have to decide is this—whether under the 7th section of the Act of Parliament, the vessel as then prepared at the time of seizure was liable to seizure. The case you have to decide is no doubt one not merely of great importance, but really it is a momentous question, and the importance of it it is impossible to exaggerate. It is one that produces varied sentiments—sentiments of the deepest regret that such a question should have ever arisen; and I cannot help expressing the deepest, utmost anguish which one feels that such a question should have arisen by the dissension among those who are connected with us by the dearest possible ties that can bind nation to nation—a common lineage, a common language, common laws, a common literature, and, above all, by a strong desire for constitutional freedom, I, for one, protest against the doctrine that no man is to be convicted of any crime if there is any possible solution of the circumstances by an imagination of his innocence; but there must be at all times a thorough sober persuasion and satisfaction with respect to the guilt of the party accused, and undoubtedly you must act upon proof and not upon suspicion. With these remarks, I go at once to the statute under which these proceedings are taken. The statute was passed in 1819, and upon it no question has ever arisen in our courts of justice; but there have been expostions of a similar statute which exists in the United States. I will now read to you the opinions of some American lawyers who have contributed so greatly to make law a science, and, indeed, I may say an agreeable one. (His lordship then read passages from Story and others.) These, gentlemen, are authorities which show that when two belligerents are carrying on war a neutral Power may supply without any breach of international law, and without a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act, munitions of war—gunpowder, every description of arms, everything, in fact, that can be used for the destruction of human beings. Why should ships be an exception? I am of opinion, in point of law, they are not. The Foreign Enlistment Act was an Act to prevent the enlistment or engagement of his Majesty's subjects to serve in foreign armies, and to prevent the fitting out and equipping in his Majesty's dominions vessels for warlike purposes without his Majesty's licence. The title of an Act is not at all times an exact indication or explanation of the Act, because it is generally attached after the Act is passed. But in adverting to the preamble of the Act, I find that provision is made against the equipping, fitting out, furnishing, and arming of vessels, because it may be prejudicial to peace in his Majesty's dominions. The question I shall put to you is whether you think that vessel was merely in course of building to be delivered in pursuance of a contract that was perfectly lawful, or whether there was any intention, in the port of Liverpool, or any other English port, that the vessel should be fitted out, equipped, furnished, and armed for purposes of aggression. Now, surely, if Birmingham, or any other town, may supply any quantity of munitions of war of various kinds for the destruction of life, why object to ships? Why should ships alone be in themselves contraband? I asked the Attorney-General if a man could not make a vessel intending to sell it to either of the belligerent Powers that required it, and which would give the largest price for it, would not that be lawful? To my surprise the learned Attorney-General declined to give an answer to the question, which I think a grave and pertinent one. But you, gentlemen, I think, are lawyers enough to know that a man may make a vessel and offer it for sale. If a man may build a vessel for the purpose of offering it for sale to either of the belligerent parties, may he not execute an order for it? That appears to me to be a matter of course. The statute is not made to provide means of protection for belligerent Powers, otherwise it would have said you shall not sell powder or guns, and you shall not sell arms, and if it had done so all Birmingham would have been in arms against it. The object of the statute was this—that we should not have our ports in this country made the ground of hostile movements between the vessels of two belligerent Powers, which might be fitted out, furnished and armed in those ports. The Alexandria was clearly nothing more than in the course of building. It appears that according to Webster's Dictionary, equipping is furnishing with arms, and furnishing is given in other dictionaries as the same thing as equipping. It appears to me that if true that the Alabama sailed away from Liverpool without any arms at all as a mere ship in ballast, and that her armament was put on board at Terceira, which is not in her Majesty's dominions, then the Foreign Enlistment Act was not violated at all. The most important evidence is that given by Captain Englefield, who gave a very moderate statement, and has been spoken of on both sides in the highest terms of approbation, and I think myself his evidence was very fair and candid.—After reading some of the evidence, his lordship said, If you think that the object was to furnish, fit out, equip, and arm that vessel at Liverpool, that is a different matter; but if you think the object really was to build a ship in obedience to an order in compliance with a contract, leaving those who bought it to make what use they thought fit of it, then it appears to me that the Foreign Enlistment Act has not been broken.

The jury immediately returned a verdict for the defendants.

The announcement of the verdict was received with a round of applause by the people who crowded the court.

The Attorney-General tendered a bill of exceptions to the direction of the learned judge to the jury.

A SIGN OF THE TIMES.—From one of the Harrisburg papers we learn that the soldiery in Harrisburg a few days ago burned down the negro quarter in that city and drove the negroes out of the place. This is a sign of the times. The soldiers detest the negroes. The black race are in danger of being exterminated, and so are the Abolition leaders. Beecher has already fled to Europe, directing the sale of his pictures, and Cheever, Phillips, Greeley and Garrison ought to follow him as fast as they can. Gerrit Smith is the only man of the party who foresaw in time the coming storm. It will not be necessary for him to seek safety in flight. He is all right on the record. But let the other Radical leaders look out.—The New York Herald

MR. MASON A FRIEND OF ENGLAND.

In a chatty little volume, with which in our next impression we hope to make our readers better acquainted, just published, under the title of "An Errand to the South," by the Rev. Mr. Malet, Vicar of Ardeley, under the auspices of Bentley, we find a very interesting letter from the Hon. J. E. Macfarland, the Secretary of the Confederate Commission in London, bodily reproduced by the author. The letter is in reply to certain inquiries respecting Mr. Mason's ancestry, and especially the charge so frequently brought against that gentleman, of emity to England in his public career, and his connection with the so-called Fugitive Slave Law. It corrects several prevalent misapprehensions, and mentions some facts—notably Mr. Mason's agency in the restoration of the exploring ship Resolute—which deserve to be more widely known than they have heretofore been. The letter was, perhaps, intended only for the author's information, but we are glad of its publication and of the opportunity of inserting it into our columns:—

February 26, 1863.

My dear Sir,—In regard to Mr. Mason's ancestry, and the circumstances attending their emigration to, and settlement in America—

His first ancestor, George Mason, Esq., of Staffordshire, England, was a member of Parliament for that county; and though opposed to the policy of the Stuarts, was warmly attached to the Crown, to whose falling fortunes he attached himself during the wars of the Protectorate, and as a colonel of cavalry in the army of Charles Stuart, fought under his banner at the battle of Worcester. After that defeat, he emigrated to America in 1651, landed at Norfolk, Virginia, and subsequently established a plantation on the banks of the Potomac River, where he was afterwards joined by his family; from this gentleman Mr. Mason derives his descent in a direct line; his family having always remained in Virginia.

In the case of one whose antecedents are so purely and traditionally English, these genealogical facts would alone seem a sufficient refutation of a calumny as unjust as it is unnatural. But if other evidence were wanting to disprove an assertion which has its origin only in a distempered or prejudiced imagination, I need but recall to your recollection one of those rare acts of international courtesy so pre-eminently graceful that they must ever endure as the typical landmarks of an elevated and enlightened statesmanship. I allude to the restitution of H. R. Mason's ship the "Resolute" to the British Government, under circumstances which are yet fresh in the recollection of all.

The "Resolute," as you are aware, while engaged in a voyage of exploration of the Arctic Seas, about the year 1856, became imbedded in the ice, and having been abandoned by her crew, remained thus ice-bound until, released by the periodical thaw, she floated off several hundred miles to the south, was discovered by a New England whaler, boarded, and brought into the harbour of New London, Connecticut. The usual claim for salvage having been filed by claimants in a Court of Admiralty, she was duly condemned under a decree of that Court, the British Government generously relinquishing its title to the salvors; upon which a Senator from Connecticut offered a resolution in the Senate of the United States to have an American register granted her. At this stage of the proceedings, Mr. Mason, then a Senator from Virginia, came forward with a counter-resolution that she should be purchased by the Government of the United States, and by that Government restored to the British navy. The resolution was unanimously adopted; and under an order of the Secretary of the Navy (embraced in the Act) the ship was thoroughly refitted, placed under the command of Commander Hartstene, United States' navy, with a full complement of naval officers and men, and by him restored to her original flag and ownership.

With this striking incident, which in its inception and execution reflects so much honour upon all connected with it, Mr. Mason's name stands permanently identified in the archives of the United States' Government—a fact, probably, not generally known to the people of this country.

In conclusion, I beg to advert to an error, through which a few aspiring negrofilists in Exeter Hall and elsewhere, taking advantage of the popular prejudice in this country against the institutions of the South, have denounced Mr. Mason as "the infamous author of the Fugitive Slave Law." It is thus sought to fix upon the honoured subject of this notice the popular odium here, against slavery as the originator of this act of Federal legislation, under a misconception or misrepresentation of the true circumstances attending its adoption.

A proper regard for truth and historic accuracy will excuse, I am sure, a brief reference to this most important and equitable measure.

The so-called Fugitive Slave Law was really enacted during the administration of Washington in 1793, and approved by him in pursuance of that provision of the Constitution of the United States which it recites, and which reads thus:—

"No person held to service or labour in one State under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall in consequence of any law or regulation therein be discharged from such service or labour, but shall be delivered up on the claim of the party to whom such service or labour may be due."—Art. iv, Sect. 2, Constitution of United States.

Such persons are placed upon identically the same footing as fugitives from justice escaping beyond the jurisdiction of one State into another, with whom they are associated in the same Article and Section. In both these cases, it is enjoined that the parties so escaping shall be delivered up to the State from whence they originally fled, and in the latter case having jurisdiction of the crime.

The provisions of this Act having been found insufficient to carry out its requirements, in consequence of the lawless interference of organized bands in the Northern States (encouraged in some instances, by State legislation) to prevent its execution, the Fugitive Slave Act of 1850, of which Mr. Mason was the author, entitled "An Act to amend, and supplementary to the Act entitled 'An Act respecting Fugitives from justice, and persons escaping from the service of their masters,' approved February the twelfth, One thousand seven hundred and ninety-three," was passed by Congress, and is, as you will see, emendatory; and was enacted with a view to the more perfect execution of the law upon which it was founded, and the terms of which it rehearses.

I trust you will excuse, my dear sir, the rather voluminous proportions of this communication, essential to the correction of misrepresentations.

Awaiting with much interest, and anticipating much pleasure from the perusal of your forthcoming work.

I am, my dear Sir, very truly yours,

J. E. MACFARLAND.

24, Upper Seymour Street, Portman Square.

THE DOVER, CALAIS, AND OSTEND MAILS are now being conveyed by the Belgian Government. Although the House of Commons refused to ratify the contract entered into by Lord Derby's Government, it appears that Mr. Churchward will not submit to the loss of his contract without a protest, and possibly an action for damages. On the arrival of the mail train from Calais on Saturday morning last, Captain Jenkins and Mr. Churchward's solicitor demanded the mails of the Post-office agent, telling the latter that the mail packet Vivid was ready to take the mails to Dover under the terms of his contract. The vice-consul replied that he had positive instructions from the Postmaster-General not to put the mails on board Mr. Churchward's boat, but to give them into the custody of the new contractors. Whereupon the mails were shipped on board the Samphire, and were brought to Dover by that vessel. Mr. Churchward's packet, the Vivid, also came to Dover, but without mails or passengers, the latter having followed the mails on board the Samphire. On Saturday evening Mr. Churchward himself attended at the Admiralty, and, on the arrival of the mails from London, informed Captain Truscott, the Admiralty and Post-office representative, that his vessels, the Vivid and Maid of Kent, were ready to take the mails to Calais and Ostend. Captain Truscott replied that his instructions were not to send the mails to Calais by Mr. Churchward's packet; and a gentleman who said he had charge of the Ostend mails formally refused to deliver the mails to Mr. Churchward. The Samphire then went to Calais with the mails and passengers for the new contractors, and the Princess Maud went to Ostend with the mails and passengers for the Belgian Government. Mr. Churchward's packet, the Vivid, also proceeded to Calais, and the Maid of Kent packet, on his account, went to Ostend. The Belgian Government have hired two English packets to carry out their new contract. At the end of six months they will have vessels of their own, and the English boats and crews will be paid off. Much dissatisfaction is expressed at the employment of foreigners for a service that has hitherto been well performed by Englishmen.

THE CASE OF EARL CARDIGAN v. COLONEL CALTHORPE, in which the former complained of the statement made by the latter in reference to his lordship's conduct at the famous Balaklava charge, was nearly resulting in a duel, which, if it had come off, would have been a nine days' sensation. General Brotherton, feeling himself aggrieved by the affidavit of Lord Lucan, the brother-in-law of Lord Cardigan, sent him a challenge. Duelling not being allowed at home Lord Lucan went to Paris, waited there some time, and returned to London just as the General proceeded to France. The Army and Navy Gazette says:—"It is understood that steps have been taken to prevent the accomplishment of the designs entertained by the generals to arrange their differences after a style which has now very much gone out of fashion."

ON Saturday last a bankruptcy case more than half a century old, was brought under the notice of one of the London Commissioners. The bankrupts were Messrs. Boldero, Boldero, Lushington, and Boldero, bankers, of Cornhill. They stopped payment in 1812, owing £473,000. The official assignee has just received a sum of £300, which he proposes to divide among creditors. It will be equal to a dividend of about one-seventh of a penny in the pound upon the total liabilities.

A CURIOUS CASE is before the French Tribunals. Madame de Civry, the daughter of an English lady, and claiming to be the natural child of the Duke of Brunswick, is suing him for an alimentary annuity of 35,000 fr. The plaintiff says that in 1825, Charles II., then the reigning Duke of Brunswick, being in London, ran away with a young lady of high position in society, named Lady Colville, and seduced her under promise of marriage. The young lady lived some months with him in Paris. The Duke then took her with him to the Duchy of Brunswick, and installed her in a chateau in the neighbourhood of the court. There, on July 5, 1826, she was confined of a daughter, who is the plaintiff in this action. The christening was solemnized with much pomp and ceremony. The register of birth states,—"In the year 1826, on July 5, at ten in the morning, Charlotte Colville, lady, aged 19 years, was delivered of a daughter, who was baptized on the 17th by the name of Elizabeth Wilhelmina. Sponsors:—1. Charles reigning Duke of Brunswick and Lunebourg; 2. His Highness William Prince of Brunswick, Duke of Als and Bornstadt, their said highnesses being represented by Major de Gressenwald, orderly officer of the reigning Duke, and the Vice-Ecuyer de Aynhausen." In 1827, Lady Colville returned to England with her daughter. The child grew up under the duke's protection. One of his chamberlains, Baron d'Andlau, was commissioned to attend to her. The revolution of 1830, which deprived the duke of the sovereignty of his states and drove him into exile, did not interrupt his parental care of Elizabeth Colville. At the age of seventeen she was placed in a school at Nancy, and there she abjured the Protestant religion in which she had been brought up. In consequence of this act the duke abandoned her. She was received by the family of De Civry, and in 1847 she married the Count de Civry in London, and the marriage was announced in the fashionable journals. The Civry family have become poor, and therefore Madame de Civry is obliged to remind the duke of his parental duties. In reply, the duke does not deny the paternity, but he says the plaintiff's mother was a Miss Munden, whom he met in the saloon of a theatre, and who used the name of Lady Colville as a nom de guerre. She readily consented to become his mistress, went abroad with him, and returning to England married a person named Shaw, and went to California. He had provided for Miss Colville's education, but he had not seen her since infancy. He had not quarrelled with her about the change in religion, but because she called on his agent in Paris dressed up in man's clothes. As for the "Count de Civry," the Duke avers he is no count, but a humble person of Nancy, named Collins; and the marriage was a mere speculation upon his wealth. As a defence to the action, the Duke contends the French law gives the plaintiff no claim on him; and further, that though now deposed, he is not liable in a French court for acts done at a time when he was a reigning Prince.

THE Court of Queen's Bench has for some days been engaged in the case of Dickson v. Viscount Combermere, the Earl of Wilton, and the Right Hon. General Peel. The origin of this dispute dates back to 1855, when the plaintiff, Colonel Dickson, was Lieutenant-Colonel of the 2nd Tower Hamlets Militia. There were disputes about the mess accounts. In 1857 a regimental board of inquiry was held by command of the Earl of Wilton, Colonel commanding, and this Board charged Colonel Dickson with improperly retaining in his hands funds belonging to the mess. In 1858 Earl Wilton was sued by one of the tradesmen for £500. He imagined that the suit was instigated by Dickson, and appealed to Viscount Combermere, who was the Lord Lieutenant of the Tower Hamlets. Dickson refused to retire at the suggestion of his lordship, and declined to resign at the request of General Peel, the Secretary of State for War, but demanded a court-martial. A board of inquiry was granted, at which the Earl of Wilton, who was one of the accusers, refused to be examined. The board reported adversely to the plaintiff. This was on September 13th. General Peel, having been out of town, did not receive the report until the 21st of September, but while out of town, on the 16th, hearing that the regiment was "called out" for the 17th, telegraphed that the Colonel was not to assume the command pending the report. This message miscarried, and was not conveyed to the Colonel until he had actually assumed the command, in pursuance of orders from the Adjutant. On the 22nd of September General Peel wrote to Lord Combermere that, after due consideration of the minutes of the proceedings (although he did not think the more serious charges sustained), he had to direct that Colonel Dickson be called upon to resign, or, in case of refusal, to be displaced from his command. The Colonel refused to resign, and protested against the decision as unjust and illegal; but it was ultimately carried out in December, 1858, General Peel at the same time stating that it was based on no ground which affected the Colonel's personal character, but solely on his want of sound judgment and unremitting attention "to the interior affairs of his regiment." In February, 1859, Colonel Dickson obtained a verdict with damages against Earl Wilton, for libel, the libel complained of being his letter of accusation to Viscount Combermere. After this the Colonel applied to be reinstated, but his application was refused. In 1860 the Colonel brought certain charges against the earl, the chief of which was that he had introduced a female of improper character at the parade of the regiment. The charges were referred to a Board of Inquiry, but a written arrangement was entered into between Mr. Ducombe and Mr. Edwin James, by which it was agreed—1. That Colonel Dickson should appear before the Court of Inquiry and state that his friend, Mr. Ducombe, has recommended him to withdraw the charges made against the Earl, being satisfied with the explanations which have been given, and that the Colonel should ask leave to withdraw the same. 2. Mr. Ducombe and Mr. Edwin James, on behalf of Lord Wilton, undertake to use their best efforts with the authorities of the War-office and the Horse Guards, to restore to Colonel Dickson the position he has lost, &c. 3. Colonel Dickson having incurred a large expense, arising out of the disputes and charges against him, Mr. E. James has agreed on Lord Wilton's behalf, to pay Colonel Dickson £600 upon this arrangement being carried out. "If any publication appears connected with the charges this arrangement is null and void." The £600 was paid to and received by Colonel Dickson, but he conceived that the Earl did not use his best endeavours to obtain his restoration to his military rank and position, and in 1861 he published his charges against the earl in the form of a pamphlet. Finally he has brought the present action, in which he charges the defendants of conspiring together to effect, by means of false and malicious charges, his removal from his command.

A MEETING of the Royal Geographical Society was held on Monday night, to welcome back Captains Speke and Grant, and to hear from them a brief account of their discovery of the Nile. The President, Sir Roderick Murchison, gave a short history of our knowledge with respect to the source of the Nile until the late discoveries. He had lately learnt that the Lake Victoria Nyanza, the chief feeder of the river, was closely marked in an Arabian map of Africa, over 1,000 years old, and that Ptolemy was the first geographer who described these sub-æquatorial lakes. Many travellers in all ages, had tried to ascend the Nile, but none of them reached beyond the third parallel of northern latitude, or within 400 or 500 miles of Lake Nyanza. Captain Speke commenced his paper, "The Nile and its Tributaries, Compared," by describing the Lake Nyanza, the principal head of the Nile. This lake is situated in lat. 3 deg. S., and from that point to its debouchure in the Mediterranean, in lat. 31 deg. N., the Nile traverses a distance of over 3,000 geographical miles, or nearly one-tenth of the circumference of the earth. When he discovered the Nyanza Lake in 1858, he found it to be a large sheet of sweet water, lying about 3,500 feet above the level of the sea, and he at once felt certain that it could only be the source of some vast river such as the Nile. On returning to Unyanyembe, five degrees south of the lake, in 1861, he hit upon a new route, which led to a new lake, the Luero-lo-Urigi, now fast drying up. It is to the west and north of Karagwe that the great lake receives its largest supply of terrestrial water, through the medium of the Kitangule river, which drains off the Luero-lo-Urigi and many minor lakes. These lakes are all mere puddles compared to the Nyanza; but the Kitangule is a noble river, sunk low in the earth, like a huge canal, and measuring 80 yards across. The Mountains of the Moon, from whence the lakes derive their water, are in the middle of the rainy zone, where he observed in 1862 that no less than 235 days out of the year were more or less wet days. Captain Grant then gave an account of various affluents that join the Nile, and said that Mr. Baker and party were engaged in investigating a bank of the river that Captain Speke had not explored. The Captain afterwards, at the request of Sir Roderick, gave a statement of the peoples of the countries through which he passed. The natives are constantly at war, have no religion, and do not believe in a soul. He thinks the race is Abyssinian, with a strong admixture of the Hindoo. After the addresses were concluded, the President gave Captains Speke and Grant two gold medals, that the King of Italy had had struck in honour of the occasion. Sir Roderick also informed the meeting that the Queen took the greatest possible interest in this marvellous achievement of human enterprise. Her Majesty had specially congratulated him on the subject during her visit to the International Exhibition building a few days since.

ON Saturday last, the body of the gallant T. S. Garnett, Colonel of the 48th Virginia Volunteers, who fell in the late battle at Chancellorsville, while heroically leading the 2nd Brigade of the Stonewall Division, was followed to the tomb in Hollywood by a large concourse of citizens, the Governor, and the Public Guard. After lying in state at the capital, the body was carried to the Methodist Church, in Broad-street, where the funeral sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Duncan, and from thence to the Cemetery. Colonel Garnett was well known and highly esteemed by the people of Richmond. He served in the Mexican war, and, since the present war began, has discharged all the duties that devolved upon him with exemplary fidelity and usefulness. He was a gallant officer and most estimable citizen, and has fallen in defence of his country, mourned by a large circle of friends and relatives. The sympathies of the country will attend his bereaved widow and children in this their heavy affliction. They are at present within the enemy's lines. Colonel Garnett was 38 years old.—Richmond Enquirer, May 11.

THE BRITISH CONSULATE AT MOBILE.—Mr. Cridland, so well and favourably known during his long association with the British Consulate to Virginia, is getting a great deal more of notoriety in the papers than is agreeable to him, we are sure. The Mobile papers, noticing the recall by his Government of Mr. Magee, British Consul for that city, mention that Mr. Cridland is to be taken from this city to succeed him in his official capacity there. Upon this statement they have some earnest complaints against the recognition of any more Consular Agents bearing the exequatur of the Lincoln Government. This paper having noticed these matters, it is proper to say, as we are assured, that Mr. Cridland goes to Mobile in no official capacity whatever.—Richmond Dispatch, May 25.

A NEW SOUTHERN WORK ON MILITARY SURGERY.—Messrs. West and Johnson, of Richmond, have just issued a new and valuable work on military surgery, by Dr. Edward Warren, the present Surgeon-General of the State of North Carolina, and lately a professor in the University of Maryland. As its title implies, it is an epitome, and contains within a small compass a vast deal of information on the important science of which it treats.

THE ARMY AND NAVY MESSENGER.—This is the title of a new journal, established in Petersburg under the auspices of the Evangelical Society of that city, and intended for gratuitous distribution among the soldiers. It is edited by the Rev. Philip Slaughter, one of the most eloquent and accomplished of the clergy of Virginia, and a gentleman whose connection with the army and devotion to the cause give him great facilities for prosecuting the undertaking with distinguished success. The soldiers will receive this excellent religious journal without cost. The wealthy and benevolent should rejoice in the opportunity to assist as we understand they are already assisting, with a munificent hand, this Christian and patriotic enterprise.

THE editor of the Atlanta Confederacy is sorely puzzled to ascertain his own whereabouts. His recollection is clear that he never was in Charleston in his life, and that he has not crossed the line of the Confederacy since the war began; yet, last week he was reported as a guest of the Charleston Hotel, simultaneously in a New York paper as having been arrested in that city on his way from Canada; whilst, about the same time, a Hilton Head Yankee correspondent, reports him as having been seized and snugly caged at Port Royal. Our friend's ghost seems to be stalking abroad in advance of his demise, to annoy the enemy and draw on the hospitality of landlords.—Charleston Mercury.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE JACKSON STATUE.

The Richmond Sentinel, of May 22, says:—

The contribution named in the following comes from part of a regiment composed of citizens who have not seen their homes for many months. They have been fighting their country's battles in a stranger State. But they have fought under Jackson. Joining him under General Ewell, they were with him in the glorious Valley campaign. They were with him when he fell like a thunderbolt on McClellan's right. They were with him at Cedar Run, at Manassas, at Harper's Ferry, at Sharpsburg, at Fredericksburg; and they were with him when, at Chancellorsville, the message came to him that the measure of his earthly achievements was full, and that his magnificent course was ended, his labours done. They now bring their offering—the offering of brave soldiers, who loved the hero whose lead they followed—as a tribute to his memory, and a token of their affectionate admiration. Coming from the pitance which forms the soldier's pay, it yet comes liberally, and, oh, how freely! Jackson deserves a monument built by heroes only:—

Camp 8th Louisiana Volunteers,

Near Hamilton's Crossing, May 20, 1863.

Sir,—By hands of Captain F. M. Harney, I send you the sum of $528. This is the subscription of the staff and eight companies of this regiment, to the fund for erecting a monument to that skilful soldier and good man, over whose fresh grave the tears of a mourning people are freely flowing—the great, the immortal, the lamented Jackson. Please hand this amount over to the proper person, and oblige,

ROBERT S. FERRY,

Acting Adjutant 8th Louisiana Volunteers.

Abingdon, Virginia, May 19, 1863.

Editor Richmond Sentinel.—I noticed in your paper some days since a proposition to erect a monument to the memory of Stonewall Jackson. No monument is necessary to preserve his memory in the hearts of Southern people, but it is meet that a nation should show her appreciation of the services of such a chieftain as Stonewall Jackson. I, therefore, enclose you $25, to be devoted to that object.

My own State (Kentucky) has shed some of her best blood in this war for our common independence. Cannot Kentuckians erect a monument to the memory of such men as Albert Sidney Johnson and Roger W. Hanson?

Yours,

HOMELESS KENTUCKIAN.

Among the Contents of THE INDEX of June 18, are—

The Repulse at Port Hudson.

Letter from New Orleans of May 20th.

Mr. Mason and the Agent of the Northern Abolitionists.

The Struggle in the Mississippi.

The Fall of Puebla.

Retaliation.

Mr. Coningham and the Slave Trade.

Telegraphic War News from Southern Papers.

A Reply to "His oricus," No. II,

(By Judge Magrath, of Charleston.)

List of Confederate Prisoners in Fort Lafayette.

MANCHESTER SOUTHERN CLUB.—Gentlemen desirous of Enrolling themselves as members of the above Club can obtain their cards on application at the office, 71A, Market-street, from nine to six daily, or by letter directed as above.—By order of the Committee, W. E. STUTTER, Hon. Sec.

JAMES J. BENNETT & WAKE,
Steam-Ship Insurance and General Commission Agents,
77, Cornhill, London,
and JAMES J. BENNETT,
Matamoros.

NEW LINE OF STEAM PACKETS
BETWEEN
LIVERPOOL, ST. THOMAS, LA GUAYRA,
PTO. CABELLO, CURACAO,
SANTA MARTHA, CARTHAGENA TO COLON,
RETURNING FROM THAT PORT BY
KINGSTON (JAMAICA), PORT-AU-PRINCE,
CAPE HAITIEN TO LIVERPOOL.

The Liverpool, Western and Spanish-American Steam Packet Company

WILL commence running powerful A 1 Screw Steamboats from this port on the 20th June next, to be at Colon in time to take the Goods and Passengers brought to Panama by the Steamers, from the North and South Pacific, and to Colon, about the 21st July, continuing the same dates monthly. The Steamboats are:—

The CHRISTOPAL COLON, 1,572 tons, W. Baker, Commander, to sail from Liverpool... 20th June
The SAINT THOMAS, 1,210 tons, W. Gilberry, Commander... 20th July
The BOLIVAR, 1,239 tons, W. W. Kiddler... 20th Aug.
The HUMBOLDT (building), 1,400 tons
Goods and Passengers will be taken, if required, at through rates from the Continent, via Liverpool, over the Panama Railway to Ports in the Pacific, and also back from those Ports by same route.

The CHRISTOPAL COLON has very spacious and well-ventilated berths and saloon, which will afford every comfort to Passengers. The Rates for First and Second-class Passage will be moderate.

MIRIE & TOMLINSON,
ALEXANDER DURANTY & Co.
Liverpool, May 1, 1863.

WEST INDIES. — LIVERPOOL,
WEST INDIAN, AND CENTRAL AMERICAN STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.

For SAINT THOMAS, PORT-AU-PRINCE (HAYTI), KINGSTON (JAMAICA), SANTA MARTHA, CARTHAGENA, AND COLON OR ASPINWALL.

Taking Goods at through rates for Panama and Ports in the North and South Pacific (in connection with the Panama Railroad, the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company).

The following fine new A 1 full powered Steamers will sail from LIVERPOOL on the 21st of each month, receiving goods up to the 19th of each month.

DARIEN .. .. 1,172 tons.
VENEZUELAN .. .. 1,000 "
GRANADIAN .. .. 1,100 "
MEXICAN (now building), 1,100 "

In consequence of the VENEZUELAN not being quite completed, the first-class Screw-steamer SHATTESBURY, Captain VICKERMAN, Will be despatched for the above Ports on the 21st May, taking goods until the 19th May.

Goods taken at through freights from the Continent.

For rates of freights or passage, having superior accommodation for passengers, apply to J. M. CURRIE, Paris and Havre; GLAFCKE and HENNING, Hamburg; LAFITE and VANDERCRUYE, Bordeaux; W. D. ROBERTS and Co., Glasgow; or to LEECH, HARRISON, & FORDWOOD, Agents, Liverpool.

THE PATENT FILE MACHINE,
AND FILE MANUFACTURING COMPANY, (LIMITED). Makers of every description of Steel and File suitable for Engineers, Machinists, Agricultural Implement Makers, and for the general and export trade. Works,—Ashton Old-road, Manchester.

VALUES OF GOLD. — WATHERSTON AND BROGDEN, for the information of the public and their numerous patrons beg to make the following announcement regarding the VALUE OF GOLD, feeling persuaded that the interests of the fair trader and public will be alike protected by the wide circulation of knowledge on the subject. Gold being divided into 24 parts or carats, it follows that gold of

Per oz.	Per oz.
21 carats fine is worth.....£4 4 11	13 carats .....£2 6 0
22 ditto .....£4 1 5	12 ditto .....£2 2 5 1/2
22 ditto (British standard) .....£3 17 10 1/2	11 ditto .....£1 18 11
21 carats .....£3 11 4	10 ditto .....£1 15 4 1/2
20 ditto .....£3 10 9 1/2	9 ditto .....£1 11 10
19 ditto .....£3 7 3	8 ditto .....£1 8 3 1/2
18 ditto .....£3 3 8 1/2	7 ditto .....£1 4 9
17 ditto .....£3 0 2	6 ditto .....£1 1 2 1/2
16 ditto .....£2 16 7 1/2	5 ditto .....£0 17 8
15 ditto .....£2 13 1	4 ditto .....£0 14 2
14 ditto .....£2 9 6 1/2	3 ditto .....£0 10 7 1/2
	2 ditto .....£0 7 1
	1 ditto .....£0 3 6 1/2

Manufacture, 16, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London, W.C.
N.B.—Assays made of Chains and Jewellery for 1s. each.

NOTICE. This Establishment is closed at six o'clock in the evening, and on Saturdays at one o'clock.

SHIRTS. — International Exhibition.
Class 27 C. No. 1872. Prize Medal and honourable mentions 1851 and 1862. Shirts, Collars, Flannels, and every description of underclothing manufactured on the premises.

J. BRIE and Co.,
13, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.
The only Shirtmakers admitted as Exhibitors at the International Exhibition of 1862.

TWO PRIZE MEDALS awarded
"For General Excellence" in DRESSING CASES, BAGS, DESPATCH BOXES, &c. Gentlemen's Travelling Bags, Useful Size, 11s. 6d.; Full Size, 15s. 6d.; Large Size, 21s. Corrier Bags, with Shoulder Strap, from 10s. 6d. Morocco Ladies' Bags, 12s. 6d., 15s. 6d., 18s. 6d., and 21s. Travel Writing Cases, 8s. 6d., 10s. 6d., and 21s. Travel Cases in Leather, Saddlebags, Needles, &c. GENTS' and KNEE TIE, Manufacturers to the Royal Family, 2, St. James's-street, and 60, Jernyn-street.

AMERICAN WINES AND SPIRITS, &c.

W. R. S. MARKWELL,

WINE MERCHANT TO HER MAJESTY AND THE IMPERIAL COURTS,
35, 40, & 45, ALBEMARLE STREET,

AND

4, STAFFORD STREET, PICCADILLY, LONDON, W.

Monagahela, Bourbon, and Old Dominion Whiskies; Peach Brandy; Staughton, Sickles, and other Bitters; Fruit Spirits; Sparkling and dry Catawba; Californian Champagne; all kinds of Continental Wines, including the original importations from Hungary.

The Stock of Wines, Spirits, and Liqueurs are of the oldest, most extensive, and best selected in England.

TERMS, CASH!

PARIS EXHIBITION, 1855.

LA GRANDE MEDAILLE D'HONNEUR

WAS AWARDED TO

THOMAS DE LA RUE & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

PATENT PLAYING CARDS. PATENT METALLIC BOOKS; WITH

HARD ELECTRO-GILT PENCILS WHICH NEVER THICKEN AT THE POINT.

INDIA INLAND NOTE OR CHIT PAPERS, for Half Anna Postage Rate.

WATER-LINED OVERLAND NOTE PAPERS, in great variety.

MACHINE-FOLDED ENVELOPES. PATENT METAL SLATES.

POCKET TOURISTS' CASES.—Size, 5 1/2 in. by 3 1/2 in. by 1 1/2 in. with every requisite for Correspondence.

ALLIANCE DESPATCH DESKS.—The most perfect Despatch Desk yet made.

DE LA RUE & CO.'S INDELIBLE DIARIES.—Published annually for exportation in August.

WALLETS, ALBUMS, SCRAP BOOKS, &c., &c.

The above can be obtained through any Stationer or Merchant.

ACCOUNT BOOKS, &c.,

Of all Rulings, ready in Stock, or made to any Pattern on the Premises.

LITHOGRAPHIC AND COPPER-PLATE.—Circulars printed on the Shortest Notice; all kinds of Copper-Plate Printing with economy and despatch.

CARD-PLATES.—Engraved in various styles with despatch. 2s. each.

LETTER-PRESS.—Letter-Press work of every description: Circulars, Catalogues, Share-Plates, &c.

NOTE-PAPER.—Embossed die, Plain, and Colours, with Crest and Initials, and Printed Address, without charging for Dies or Plates.

All Articles being prepared on the Premises can be ensured with despatch and economy at Wholesale and Shipping Prices.

F. ARNOLD, MANUFACTURING STATIONER, ETC., 86, FLEET STREET, E.C.
(CORNER OF ST. BRIDE'S AVENUE.)

VINS SUPERIEURS DE CHAMPAGNE.

DINET-PEUVREL ET FILS,

PROPRIETAIRES ET NEGOCIANTS.

A. A. VIZE, MARNE,

EXECUTE ORDERS FOR ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

Please send References with Order.

BEACH & ROOT,
Commission Merchants,
CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA
and
ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

BEACH, ROOT, & CO.,
APSPLEY BUILDINGS, OLD HALL STREET,
LIVERPOOL.

S. ISAAC, CAMPBELL, & Co.
CONTRACTORS & MERCHANTS.
71, Jernyn-street,
LONDON.

Sherbro: West Coast of Africa.
Represented by
W. B. HART,
Nassau, New Providence.

WIGGINS, TEAPE, & Co.,
WHOLESALE AND EXPORT STATIONERS,
10, ALDGATE, LONDON.

Special Papers suited to Foreign Markets.

ROWLAND & BROTHERS,
Commission Merchants,
NORFOLK,
VIRGINIA.

JOHN FRASER & CO.,
CHARLESTON, South Carolina.
FRASER, TRENHOLM, & Co.,
Liverpool,
Commission Merchants.

SEARING AND CO.,
Commission Merchants,
MOBILE AND NEW ORLEANS, C.S.A.
Represented by
R. G. BEESLEY, Cotton Broker,
No. 2, Byron's-court, Royal-exchange,
Manchester.

J. E. HERTZ,
(Of the late FIRM OF MORDECAI and CO.),
Commission Merchant,
CHARLESTON,
SOUTH CAROLINA.

Reference to
M. C. MORDECAI, Esq.,
Charleston, South Carolina.
Messrs. COHEN and HERTZ,
Savannah, Georgia.

H. O. BREWER & CO.,
MOBILE, ALABAMA,
General Commission and Shipping Merchants.

LAMB, BALL, & CO.,
Ship and General Commission Agents,
ST. THOMAS,
WEST INDIES.

T. BEYNON & CO.,
Ship Brokers, Merchants, and Commission Agents,
NEWPORT, MON.

HENRY ADDERLEY & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants,
NASSAU, N.P.,
BAHAMAS.

WEBER BROTHERS,
Commission Merchants,
SAVANNAH,
GEORGIA, C.S.A.

C. W. WHITE,
Ship and General Commission Agent,
ST. THOMAS, WEST INDIES.

REID AND STEWART,
Commission Merchants,
SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

Represented by
ANDREW STEWART, 1, Rumford-place,
Liverpool.

HARPER AND CAUGHEY,
Commission Merchants,
SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

Represented by
J. and A. CAUGHEY, Tempest Chambers,
Liverpool.

SAMUEL SMITH,
COTTON BROKER,
11, Manchester Buildings,
LIVERPOOL.

FRANCIS PRESTON,
ENGINEER AND CONTRACTOR TO HER
MAJESTY'S WAR DEPARTMENT,
35, Loveday Street,
BIRMINGHAM.
And Ancoats' Bridge Works,
MANCHESTER.
Established 1816.

J. H. ASHBRIDGE & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants,
NEW ORLEANS.
Office—55, Brown's-buildings, Liverpool.
Agents—Liverpool and New Orleans Mail Steam
Navigation Company.

Now ready, in 8vo., with many Illustrations and Maps, 18s.

LIEUT.-COL. FISHER'S THREE YEARS IN CHINA. Including Expeditions to various parts hitherto unexplored.
"At once a good historian and brisk anecdotalist, his pages are full of life and merriment."—Dublin Evening Mail.
Richard Bentley, Publisher in Ordinary to Her Majesty.

Now ready, in post 8vo., 8s. 6d.
RESIDENCE in the CONFEDERATE STATES, including a Visit to New Orleans, under the Administration of General Butler. By an ENGLISH MERCHANT.
"A most opportune peep into the Confederate States. The writer is a traveller without prejudice; he has done us all good service by his lively and graphic pictures of what he saw."—Sun.
Richard Bentley, New Burlington-street.

Now ready, in fcap 8vo., with an Illustration, 6s.
AN ERRAND to the SOUTH in the Summer of 1862. By the Rev. W. WYNTHAM MALET.
Richard Bentley, Publisher in Ordinary to Her Majesty.

Just Ready, in Two Vols., post 8vo., price 21s. cloth.
WAR PICTURES from the SOUTH. By Colonel B. ESTVAN, of the Confederate Army. Illustrated with Eight Portraits of the most distinguished Generals and Plans of Battles.
London: Routledge, Warne, and Routledge, Farringdon-street.

18mo., cloth, extra gilt edges, price 1s.
BEN RHYDDING, THE ASCLEPION OF ENGLAND; its Beauties, its Ways, and its Water Cure. By the Rev. R. W. THOMSON. With Map of the Railway Routes to Ben Rhydding. Third Edition.
T. NELSON and SONS, London and Edinburgh.
To be had, free by post for 13 stamps, of SNUTTLEWORTH, Bookseller, Ilkley.

STONEWALL JACKSON and other Celebrated Confederate Generals. Authentic PORTRAITS, painted from life by B. F. Reinhardt, Esq. ON VIEW at REVELL'S FINE ART GALLERY, 3, Leadenhall-street, Cornhill.—Admission by address card.

A. G. MILWAINE, AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, Tobacco, Cotton, Grain, and other produce, PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA.

MC DOWELL, WITHERS, AND CO.,
MOBILE ALABAMA, C.S.A., Commission Merchants.

FRANCIS FORD, MANCHESTER,
Manufacturer of Three and Six Cord Spool Thread, Cotton Balls, Knitting and Embroidering Cottons, &c. Imported by F. BIMAIIHO and NEYREY, New Orleans, and GEORGE CHAMBERS and CO., Nassau, N.P.

R. D. RUSDEN, MANCHESTER,
ENGLAND, American Drills of all kinds, Demies, Stripes, Shirtings, and all sorts of Manchester Goods.

ANDREW LOW AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

HAMILTON AND GRAHAM,
Importers, Wholesale Dealers in Dry Goods, &c., PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA.

H. LEVY AND SON,
Commission Merchants, MOBILE.

GARLAND GOODE, MOBILE,
Cotton Factor and Commission Merchant.

BOYKIN AND McRAE, Cotton Factors and Commission Merchants, MOBILE, ALABAMA, C.S.A.

J. W. ANDERSON AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

JAMES CHAPMAN,
Commission Merchant, CHARLESTON.

N. A. HARDEE AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

R. N. GOUDINE AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, Charleston.

DUNLOP, MONCURE, & CO.,
General Commission Merchants, RICHMOND.

WARWICK AND BARKSDALE,
GALLEGO FLOUR MILLS.
This immense establishment of capacity to manufacture 1000 barrels of Flour per day, purely for South American Market. RICHMOND.

MILLER AND BATRE, Exchange Brokers, MOBILE, ALABAMA, C.S.A.

R. AND D. G. MILLS, Cotton Factors and Commission Merchants, GALVESTON, TEXAS, C.S.A.

THE INDEX, VOL. II.

The Second Half-Yearly Volume OF THE INDEX,

Completed by the No. of April 23rd, neatly bound, with a carefully compiled Table of Contents, is now ready, price £1 1s.

Cases for binding can also be obtained at this office, price 2s. 6d.

A few reserved copies of Vol. I. can still be obtained, price £2 2s.

Subscriptions and Advertisements to be sent, and Post-office Orders made payable to J. B. HOPKINS, 13, BOUVIERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Printed for the Proprietors by HENRY FLORENCE MACKINTOSH, of 11, Crane-court, Fleet-street, in the Parish of St. Dunstan, in the City of London; and published by him at THE INDEX OFFICE, 13, BOUVIERIE STREET, Fleet-street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London.—Thursday, June 25th, 1863.

THE INDEX

A WEEKLY JOURNAL OF POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND NEWS.

VOL. III—No. 62.]

LONDON—THURSDAY EVENING, JULY 2, 1863.

[PRICE 6D.

CONTENTS.

LIST OF KILLED AND WOUNDED AT THE BATTLES OF CHANCELLORSVILLE.
THE ENGLISH PRESS ON RECOGNITION.
CORRESPONDENCE FROM CHARLESTON, NEW ORLEANS, NASSAU, AND PARIS.
THE DEBATE OF TUESDAY.
THE ADVANCE OF THE CONFEDERATES.
BRITISH SECURITY AND YANKEE IMPUNITY.
THE STRATEGY OF THE WAR.
THE MAGAZINES FOR JULY.
THE OFFICIAL ORDER FOR THE DISMISSAL OF THE BRITISH CONSUL AT RICHMOND.
AFFAIRS COMMERCIAL AND MONETARY.

NOTES ON EVENTS OF THE WEEK.

AMERICA.

On the 14th June New York was alarmed by a report that General Lee, with 100,000 infantry and some 30,000 cavalry, had made a movement for the invasion of the North, and that the advance under General Stuart had crossed the Potomac, and occupied Hagerstone in Maryland. President Lincoln immediately called for 100,000 men to repel the invasion. The latest advices from New York inform us that the Confederate force in Pennsylvania does not exceed 4,000 men, under Generals Jenkins and Rhodes. On the 16th the Confederates took possession of Harper's Ferry, but did not hold it long. The division under General Milroy at Winchester had to retreat with heavy loss. All the guns were abandoned. The position of General Lee's army is unknown to the Federals, who are still speculating on Washington being attacked. The movements in Virginia are discussed in our leader columns.

Though we have no news from Vicksburg, we have some rumours. Per Persia we were informed that General Johnston had cut his way through Grant's lines with 15,000 men, and had entered Vicksburg. By the America we have the more probable rumour that General Pemberton is being reinforced and supplied across the Mississippi from De Soto.

The last mail brings us intelligence of the continued resistance to the conscription in the North. In Ohio a collision has occurred between the military and 500 armed insurgents, and in Indiana another enrolment officer has been shot.

On the 10th June the Washington correspondent of the New York Times wrote,—“Men count by hours the coming of news of the capture of Vicksburg. Hooker is felt to be again master of the situation in Virginia. The remaining life of the rebellion is spanned by hands not used to the construction of air castles.” In less than a week Mr. Lincoln made a call for 120,000 militia to repel the northward advance of the Confederate forces. If ever the Federals assert that the Confederates are not quite used up, and that the South is likely to hold out for ninety days and one hour, we shall for the moment suppose that something dreadful is going to happen to the South.

In another column will be found the official documents in reference to the revocation of the exequatur of the British Consul at Richmond. The British Consul was allowed to exercise his functions under an exequatur obtained from the Government of the United States; for at the time it was granted Virginia recognised the Federal Government as its agent in such matters, and secession did not annul any of the contracts entered into by the Federal Government on behalf of the seceding

States. The powers formerly exercised by that Government are, so far as the Confederate States are concerned, transferred to the Confederate Government, and consequently when Mr. Moore attempted to exercise consular functions beyond the State to which he was accredited, when he did that which would have called for his dismissal if Virginia had still been in alliance with the United States, President Davis had the right to cancel his authority. This will explain why the Confederate Government could revoke an exequatur they did not grant, and why foreign consuls in the Confederacy were permitted to act under exequaturs granted by the United States' Government with propriety, and without in any way compromising the dignity of the Confederate Government. The telegraphic summary per America states that “The Confederate Secretary of State has written to Mr. Mason officially, that the President's decision to revoke the British Consul's exequatur was mainly influenced by the Consul denouncing unofficially the Confederate Government as indifferent to cases of great and atrocious cruelty. These remarks referred to the enlistment, by conscription, of two British subjects, who by their acts had acquired de facto citizenship. Protection and respect will be continued towards foreign consuls who possessed the Federal exequatur prior to the secession, as long as they do not seek to evade the legitimate authority of the Confederate Government. But Lord Lyons assumes the power to issue instructions and exercise authority over British Consuls residing in the Confederate States, thus ignoring the existence of the Confederate Government, and implying the continuance of relations between that Ministry and British Consuls residing in the Confederate States, which existed prior to secession. This is also the assertion of a right by Lord Lyons to exercise the authority of a Minister accredited to and officially received at Richmond. The President, therefore, forbids further direct communication between neutral consuls in the Confederate States and functionaries of neutral nations residing in the enemy's country. In future all communications between the British consuls and foreign countries, neutral or hostile, must be restricted to vessels arriving from or despatched to neutral ports.”

A statement has been published of the gross amount of sales of prize vessels and cargoes condemned by the Prize Court, and sold at Key West and New York since October 1862. The number of vessels is 41, and the amount realized by the sale of ships and cargoes is $457,466. It will be seen that the captures are not on the average of much value. Included in the list is a boat, which sold for $30.

It is not only English merchants who are doing business with the Confederate States via Matamoras and Nassau. The New York Tribune informs us that the exports from New York to Nassau in June, 1862, amounted to $8,000, and in March, 1863, to $188,000; and that the exports from New York to Matamoras in June, 1862, amounted to $16,000, and in March, 1863, to $612,000. In this trade the Yankees have a great advantage over their British rivals. Whilst to our merchants Nassau and Matamoras are by the decree of Mr. Lincoln and the permission of Lord Russell virtually blockaded ports, they are open ports to ships from New York.

Nassau has been bombarded as well as blockaded by the Federals. On the 30th of May the steamer Margaret and Jessie, from Charleston, was chased by the United States' steamer Rhode Island, until she arrived within 250 yards of the coast. The commander of the Rhode Island, seeing that his prey had escaped, commenced firing with shot, grape, and shell. The Margaret and Jessie was shot through her bows and boiler, and forced to take to the beach. One of the firemen was wounded. The missiles from the Rhode Island tore up the earth in various directions and seriously alarmed the inhabitants. The people of Nassau want to know if the British Government will protect them—British subjects—from a repetition of such a flagrant outrage.

The Boston Evening Transcript of June 19th publishes the resolutions passed by the American Protestant Association, which held its annual meeting in Philadelphia during the week ending June 13th. The meeting, we are told, “was the largest that has ever been known, there being representatives from every loyal State in the Union.” One of the resolutions passed by the “Right Worthy General Body” is thus worded:—“While we despise rebels, we hate traitors, and would a thousand times rather reason with a deluded Secessionist than bandy words with a villanous Secession sympathizer, who is the foulest whelp of sin; the man his spirit enters is undone; his soul is set on fire of hell; his heart's as black as death.”

Under date of June 3rd, Mr. Fernando Wood has written a letter in answer to an invitation to attend a State Convention to be held at Columbus, Ohio. He says: “Let us unite in one solid column for the succession of the Democratic party to power, and to drive from office the Goths and Vandals who now hold possession. * * We should fall back upon the time-honoured creed of the party which sustains the Sovereignty of the States—and that this Sovereignty does not recognise military coercion in the Central Government as against delinquent States.”

Mr. Lincoln has replied at great length to the resolutions passed at the meeting held at Albany, to protest against the arbitrary arrest of Mr. Vallandigham. He asserts that the South has been preparing for Secession for more than thirty years, and that he is more likely to be condemned for not sooner making arbitrary arrests. He says if he had been more prompt in his action, the leading Southern Generals would not have been able to assist the Confederates; forgetting that at the beginning of the war the North would not have tolerated his present assumption of despotic power. Mr. Lincoln very candidly admits the extent of the opposition to his rule in the North. He observes,—“Even in times of peace bands of house-thieves and robbers frequently grow too numerous and powerful for the ordinary courts of justice. But what comparison, in numbers, have such bands ever borne to the insurgent sympathizers even in many of the loyal States?” Mr. Lincoln is not the first sovereign who has ruled by the aid of the military, but, perhaps, he is the first to confess that the disaffection of his subjects is so wide spread as to make the ordinary administration of justice null and void. The only precedent he adduces for the suspension of the Habeas Corpus is the conduct of General Jackson during the war between the United States and England. It will thus be seen that Mr. Lincoln is rather in advance of Mr. Vallandigham. The latter gentleman looks upon the present struggle as a civil war, the former very properly regards it as a foreign war.

Under the title of “Our Rebellion in the West Indies,” the New York Herald, of June 16, publishes a voluminous correspondence from Jamaica and Nassau. The correspondent, writing from the last-named place, says,—“Of course I endeavoured to obtain some information in regard to the state of popular feeling towards the North and the South in the present struggle, and the result of my observation was that the people of New Providence are decidedly in favour of the South. * * This feeling is shared by the blacks as well as the whites. * * All this may seem very strange and very repugnant; but it is very true.” The Jamaica correspondent writes:—“On my arrival here my first inquiries were directed towards ascertaining the current of popular opinion relative to the rebellion. To my surprise, not to say disgust, I found it ran strongly in favour of the South. Since then I have conversed with men of all shades of complexion, and among them I have met very few indeed who have not expressed, in the strongest manner, their sympathies towards the South. All this greatly surprised me. As a matter of course I was prepared for a few of the white inhabitants being in favour of the rebellion; but the feeling on the part of coloured men took me quite aback." In an editorial on this subject, the Herald declares that the preparations of England to defend the West Indies "will not save them from a just retribution. When our internal strife is ended we shall pay attention to matters outside. We shall then have two great armies at our disposal, henceforward to be united; and these troops will be far happier to find employment in annexing the West Indies than to be fighting against each other in an unnatural, fratricidal war." Happily the North will not have the South to aid her in her crusade of revenge and territorial aggrandisement.

"Kings, donkeys, and post-boys never die, but happily for mankind mayors are not necessarily immortal." So writes the New York World in reference to the conduct of Mayor Opyke, at a meeting to welcome home two New York regiments. On that occasion a judge happened to suggest that peace was highly desirable, and instantly Mayor Opyke burst forth into a tirade of which the burden was war, and nothing but war, unto the bitter end. Mayor Opyke is a large Government contractor. He can, however, be pleasant and even humorous on what he deems fitting occasions. At a dinner given to General Meagher, he proposed as the toast of the evening,—"The health of our distinguished guest, General Meagher. May his life and faculties long be spared, that he may use his eloquent voice, and pen, and sword, in defence of civil liberty." An eloquent sword is a novelty, and Mr. Opyke is evidently under the impression that General Meagher may outlive his faculties. It was hardly polite to tell him so.

ENGLAND.

The time of Parliament and the attention of the country have this week been occupied almost entirely with foreign and chiefly with American questions. Mr. Bernal Osborne, with some assistance from the Irish members, contrived to waste many valuable hours on a discussion touching the existence, revenues, and privileges of the Established Church in Ireland; but the subject was felt to be a bore, and everybody was heartily glad when it was shelved by the adjournment of the House. One good result came of the debate, viz., that Mr. Osborne was convicted of such unusual ignorance and inaccuracy as must materially damage the effect of any future harangues he may deliver on this or any other question. But this hardly repaid the House of Commons for sitting till daylight, with an attendance of over 300 members to listen to a discussion which could not possibly have any practical termination. The Public Works Bill, intended to provide employment for a large part of the able-bodied unemployed population of the manufacturing districts, has been sent up to the Lords. The Ionian Islands, and New Zealand, have each furnished material for discussion in the Upper House: and a not uninteresting conversation took place between the Marquis of Clanricarde and Earl Russell upon the seizure of English ships by American cruisers. A more important discussion on the same subject took place in the House of Commons on Monday evening, when Mr. Peacocke complained indignantly of the seizure of British vessels on their way to neutral ports in violation of distinct rules of international law. The reply of the Solicitor-General was chiefly directed to excuse the conduct of the Federal Government by pointing out the very peculiar position of the port of Matamoras, and the facility with which a vessel lying there might actually unload and land her goods on the Texan coast. No member of the Government attempted to answer the very pertinent remark of Mr. Fitzgerald, that numberless illegal seizures have been made, with a view to prevent the prosecution of a lawful trade, and that this is in a great measure due to the conduct of the English Government, which has carefully avoided any distinct assertion of the rules of international law, and of its intention to enforce them.

On Tuesday evening the great Parliamentary event of the week occurred. The speech in which Mr. Roebuck advocated the recognition of the Confederate States was remarkable for truthfulness and courage, and his denunciations of the hypocrisy which pretends to see in Southern Slavery a reason for sympathising with and tacitly encouraging the North, were scathing and effective. The whole of his speech, save that part which referred to his interview with the Emperor of the French, was cordially received. He was attacked by Lord R.

Montagu, with a fierceness which seemed to indicate that that peculiarly silly young gentleman had taken to himself Mr. Roebuck's severe animadversions on the ignorance of those who interrupted him with various discordant noises. But we are afraid that such accurate self-appreciation as this would imply is beyond the capacity of a man so vain and so exceedingly empty-headed as Lord R. Montagu. Mr. Gladstone spoke well, of course, but in a tone and with a gentleness which unmistakably showed that his personal feelings were in favour of the motion. The speeches of Mr. Forster and Mr. Bright were equally characterised by hostility to Mr. Roebuck, and passionate devotion to the North; but while Mr. Bright railed in his usual style of vituperative eloquence, and provoked frequent bursts of laughter and expressions of disgust, Mr. Forster spoke with an air of dignity and candour which made a favourable impression on all who heard him. Lord R. Cecil was too frequently disconcerted by the vexatious interruptions to which he was subject, to speak as well as usual. Two things were made abundantly plain by the demeanour of the House: first, that the passions of the Northern party are wrought up to a pitch which is the proof and presage of approaching disaster; and secondly, that, whatever may be the vote, the sympathy of a vast majority of the House goes with the motion.

The Brigade of Guards in which the Prince of Wales is a colonel had the honour of entertaining him and the Princess at a magnificent ball in the picture galleries of the Exhibition building, which had been splendidly and most expensively decorated for the occasion. The fête was one of the most tasteful and successful on record; and the courtesy and affability of His Royal Highness have endeared him still further to his brother officers.

A great Conservative banquet was held the same evening—Friday—the inviters being the Conservative Registration Society, and the chief guest Mr. Disraeli, who reviewed in an interesting speech the past history and present position of the party. It seems to have been considered that, as a matter of etiquette, the chiefs of the party in the Upper House ought not to appear; and accordingly neither Lord Derby nor the Earl of Malmesbury were present. The festival is one among many indications that the Opposition is gathering strength and courage for a new conflict.

Sir Joshua Jebb, the chief director of convict prisons in England, and the author and upholder of the present unpopular system of prison-discipline, was taken suddenly ill on the top of an omnibus, was taken down at Charing Cross, and almost immediately expired. His successor has not yet been appointed.

EUROPE.

The Emperor of the French has given another signal illustration of his remarkable sagacity, and his constant solicitude for the welfare of his people. He has addressed a letter to M. Rouher, the new President of the Council of State, in which he points out the grave inconveniences which result from the system of centralization at present obtaining in France—a system which, as De Tocqueville has shown, is no creation of 1789, but the perpetuation and development of one existing under the ancient régime—and the urgent necessity of reforming it. "Formerly," the Emperor observes, "the incessant control of the administration was not, perhaps, without reason, but at present, it is no longer anything but an hindrance. Now, indeed, is it to be comprehended that a communal business of secondary importance, and giving rise besides to no objection, requires an examination of at least two years, thanks to the compulsory intervention of eleven different authorities?" "The more I think of this state of things," adds the Emperor, "the more I am convinced of the necessity of a reform;" and he charges the Council of State to undertake the work, the difficulty of which he fully recognises, whilst he suggests the plan of action. The Emperor has often shown how far he is in advance of his people, and how worthy he is to be their leader, but never more than in this effort to relieve France of that curse of bureaucracy and centralization which has always made her political liberties a mockery and a delusion. If he could only effect this reform he would have a title to the undying gratitude of France, and of all nations which desire the development of real liberty.

The Ministerial modifications have been followed by several changes in the lower ranks of the official hierarchy, the details of which have no interest out of France. We may note, however, that M. Rouland, the late Minister of Public Instruction, has been provided for by the Vice-Presidency of the Senate. The Morning Herald, which has often proved itself well informed of the Emperor's intentions, announces that M. Walewski will resume the Ambassadorship to the Court of London, and that M. de Persigny will replace the Duke de Montebello at St. Petersburg.

The Emperor has given another proof of his trust in the great principles of political economy. A new decree proclaims entire freedom in the baking trade of Paris from September next. Hitherto the number of bakers and the price of bread have been determined by the prefect of the Seine, and the price has often been kept down by large subsidies from the municipal exchequer. In future any person may establish himself as a baker, the public and the bakers are to settle the price between them, the prefect interfering no further than to take precautions that the bread is of good quality and that the purchaser obtains his fair weight.

The recent Ministerial changes have given general satisfaction. They are regarded as another pledge of the Emperor's determination to "crown the edifice with liberty."

The notes of the three Powers have arrived at St. Petersburg, but no answer has yet been given to them. Indeed, if the Russian Government deems them worthy of any consideration at all it cannot yet have determined upon its reply; and it is likely that some days, if not weeks, will elapse before that reply reaches the Allied Powers. The Memorial Diplomatique, which proved itself well informed as to the character of the allied propositions, declares that Russia will accept the preliminary bases of the notes of the allies, but it is quite evident that the allied Governments themselves do not entertain this confidence, and if Russia accepts the proposition the Poles will not. The Morning Post, which is vehemently preaching war, and thus throwing into a state of intense excitement continental quidnuncs, who attach immense importance to its declarations because they believe that it speaks for Lord Palmerston—says that the National Government of Warsaw has announced that the insurgents will continue the struggle except upon three conditions: 1. That the armistice should extend to the kingdom of Poland as it existed before the partition of 1772. 2. That a plenipotentiary of the National Government should be admitted to the conference, to defend the interests of Poland. 3. That a National Diet composed of delegates from all the Polish provinces, as well as the kingdom of Poland, should assemble under the guarantee, not only of Europe, but of the national army which occupies all the frontiers. If the Poles insist upon these conditions, and we have no doubt that they will do so, even although they do not entertain the slightest hope of success, all chance of arrangement is at an end. The Post admits it, and insists that England and France should go to war for Poland, or, at least, blockade the Russian fleet in the Baltic, whilst Austria allows the exportation of arms in Galicia, measures which it, oddly enough, says would not be war but, thanks to which, it contends, the Poles could conquer their independence. The prospect would be dark indeed if our contemporary in these suggestions represented the ideas of the Government, but the language of Earl Russell in the House of Lords and elsewhere precludes the supposition.

Meanwhile the insurrection is only sustained by the hope of intervention. All the reliable intelligence from Congress Poland and Lithuania describes the insurrection as at its last gasp. The immense forces of the Russians have naturally triumphed over an insurrection which from the first has had to encounter the hostility of nine-tenths of the population.

We suggested last week that the instructions to General Mouravieff, supplied by a French telegraphic agency and greedily accepted by the English and French newspapers as genuine, must be fabricated. A despatch from Prince Gortschakoff to the Russian diplomatic agents shows that the suggestion was correct. These pretended instructions were an invention of the Polish National Government or its agents abroad, designed to intensify the feeling of Western Europe against the Russian Government. It is clear, however, that whatever may have been Mouravieff's instructions, he is acting with great severity. The stories of the Poles are grossly exaggerated, but there is a large foundation of truth at the bottom.

The French papers publish a protest of M. Felinski, the Archbishop of Warsaw, against the execution of Father Koninski, which he designates as a violation of ordinary justice and of canonical laws. The Archbishop goes farther, and "to guard against future dangers," lays the province under an interdict in which an archbishop or a bishop should be arrested, and a proportionate extent of territory under the same interdict, according to the rank of any priest arrested, exiled, outraged, or killed. No wonder if this document be genuine that the Archbishop was sent off at once to St. Petersburg.

Mademoiselle Poustowitloff, the aide-de-camp of Langiewicz, has disappeared from Prague, and the Austrian authorities cannot find out what has become of her. Let us hope that the young lady's abrupt departure will not put a stop to the action she has brought against a German editor for describing her as the mistress of her General. Langiewicz whose escape had been reported, is safe in Josephstadt.

Both Houses of the Austrian Reichsrath have been discussing the address to the Crown. The Tscheque (Bohemian) members of the Lower House have resigned their seats, on the ground that their consciences would not allow them to take part in the proceedings of the Assembly. The fact is, that the Tscheques have the Panslavist craze and dream of a great Slavonic nation, which should include Russia, Poland, Bohemia, and several more provinces of Austria, and they are disgusted with the Poles for preferring their Polish nationality to the great Panslavist empire. The speakers in the Lower House expressed themselves strongly in favour of justice to Poland, but as strongly against any impairment of the dignity of the Austrian empire. Austria will gladly see Russian-Poland enjoying the same liberties as Galicia, but she will never give up Galicia to an independent Poland.

The Hereditary Prince Frederick Ferdinand of Denmark, uncle to the present king, and heir to the throne died suddenly on Monday evening, in the 71st year of his age. The Prince, who was married to a daughter of Frederick VI., of Denmark, died childless; and Prince Christian, the father of the Princess of Wales, and the King of Greece, becomes hereditary Prince and heir to the throne.

The members of the Landsting—the Upper House of the Rigsdag or Parliament for Denmark proper, are elected for eight years—one-half of the House being elected every four years. The election has just taken place, and has resulted in the triumph of the Democratic party—a party which warmly supports the recent policy of the Government with respect to Holstein and Schleswig.

BRAZIL.

THE award of the King of the Belgians on the case of the Forte has been published. It is decidedly favourable to Brazil. King Leopold says:—"That it is not shown that the origin of the conflict was the act of the Brazilian agents, that the officers at the time of their arrest did not wear the uniform of their rank, and that in a port frequented by so many foreigners they could not expect to be believed upon their mere word when they declared that they belonged to the British navy; that once arrested, they ought to have submitted to the existing laws and regulations, and had no right to require any treatment different to that which would have been applied in similar circumstances to other persons; that as soon as their social position was established measures were at once taken to secure them special consideration, and that their unconditional liberation was then ordered; that the functionary who ordered their release was prompted by a desire to spare them the disagreeable consequences which, in conformity with the law, must necessarily have been entailed upon them from further proceedings." And he concludes thus:—"We are of opinion that in the mode in which the laws of Brazil have been applied towards the English officers, there was neither premeditation of offence nor offence to the British navy."

PARLIAMENTARY NOTES.

THURSDAY, JUNE 27.—HOUSE OF LORDS.
No business of public interest was discussed.

THURSDAY, JUNE 25.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.
A conversation took place concerning the promised court-martial on Colonel Crawley, and the recall of witnesses from India—a proceeding condemned by Mr. Bentinck as unprecedented, unjust, and involving a censure on the officers of the Indian army.—Lord Hartington and Sir G. Grey defended the course taken by the Government.—Sir J. Fergusson argued that an inconvenient precedent would be set, if public opinion should hereafter insist on offences committed in India being tried by court-martial in England.
In answer to Mr. Bright, Mr. Layard said that the award of King Leopold in the case of the Forte had been received, and would be laid on the table.
In answer to Mr. H. Vivian, the Marquis of Hartington said, that when the Enfield rifle was adopted for the Government pattern, it was the best small arm then in existence, and it was still a useful and serviceable weapon. Experience of the small-bore Whitworth rifle had, however, determined the War Office to give it a trial, and they had ordered it to be supplied to the Rifle Brigade and the 60th Rifles, in all eight battalions. Two thousand breech-loading rifles had also been ordered for distribution among the troops in all parts of the world, not for actual service, but for trial under every possible variety of condition and circumstance.

The House then went into Committee of Supply, and several votes were passed.

In Committee on Public Works in Manufacturing Districts the Chancellor of the Exchequer moved a resolution to the effect that the commissioners of the Treasury be authorised to issue out of the Consolidated Fund an amount not exceeding £1,200,000 upon security of local rates, for facilitating the execution of public works in certain manufacturing districts. The right hon. gentleman observed that it would not be necessary to ask any further powers than those which were already in existence for the purpose of raising the money. The public balances were in such a state as to have enabled the Treasury to pay off more than £2,000,000 of Exchequer Bonds and Bills, and still leave an adequate margin for the ordinary expenditure of the country. They had the power of re-issuing if necessary a million of Exchequer Bonds and a million of Exchequer Bills within the financial year. Thus there was no difficulty in providing the £1,200,000 mentioned in the resolution; and so far as he could judge it was possible that he should not be obliged to issue a very large portion, if any, of those bonds and bills. The vote was agreed to, and the other orders having been disposed of, the House adjourned.

FRIDAY, JUNE 26TH.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

Lord Brougham asked Earl Russell if he would communicate to the Spanish Government the report of Commodore Wilnot in reference to the slave trade. The noble and learned lord expressed his sorrow to perceive that that Government had not yet abolished the slave trade, notwithstanding that they had received £500,000 compensation for doing so, nevertheless 23,000 slaves were imported annually into Cuba. Earl Russell said he had no objection to forward the report referred to. The Spanish Government, however, were doing something to suppress the slave trade, although he admitted they were not as active as they might be.

In reply to the Marquis of Clanricarde, Earl Russell said,—I should say that a report which appears to be authentic of the judgment in the case of the Dolphin was received yesterday evening at the Foreign Office. I think it right that all these cases should be watched. I find the doctrine there relied on is one laid down by Lord Stowell, and Sir Wm Grant; but whether it was rightly decided, considering the circumstances of the case is another question, upon which I offer no opinion. With regard to the question, whether any communication has been made to the Government of this country by the Government of the Emperor of the French, suggesting the recognition of the Southern States of America, I beg to say that no such communication has been received. With regard to the general subject of recognition, I do not think that the circumstances have much altered since my noble friend, Lord Stratheden, brought it forward on his motion in this House. I still incline to the opinion I then stated.

The House shortly afterwards adjourned.

FRIDAY, JUNE 26.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The House met at twelve o'clock. The report of the Committee on Public Works in the Manufacturing Districts being brought up, Mr. Bentinck expressed great dissatisfaction with the recent conduct of the manufacturers, some of whom have taken advantage of the present season of idleness and cheapness of machinery, to enlarge their mills.—He was answered by Mr. Turner, member for Manchester.—Mr. Ferrand followed in abuse of the manufacturers, urging that emigration was the fit remedy for the distresses of the operatives.—Colonel Patten and Mr. Villiers defended the manufacturers.—The Speaker then left the chair, and the bill passed through committee.—The sitting was then suspended till six o'clock; after which time the House was occupied with a discussion on the case of Jesse McLachlan, deprived by the Home Secretary, after being convicted of murder, and a dissertation of portentous length upon the Irish Church, by Bernal Osborne. The former led to no result, and the latter was followed by an adjournment of the debate.—The House adjourned at twenty minutes past one.

MONDAY, JUNE 29.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

A short discussion took place on New Zealand, a petition being presented by Lord Lyttelton in which the distresses consequent upon the native war were strongly set forth. The Duke of Newcastle said that the war had been brought about by the policy of the Colonial Government, and that in spite of it the colony was growing in wealth and prosperity. Lord Grey expressed his fear that the Colonial Constitution was incurably defective. The subject dropped, and the House soon afterwards adjourned.

MONDAY, JUNE 29.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Some time was occupied with a discussion on the Public Works (Lancashire) Bill, and Mr. Bentinck and Mr. Ferrand again took occasion to ventilate their peculiar views in hostility to the manufacturers and in favour of emigration. The amendments made in Committee were finally agreed to.

On report of supply, Mr. Peacocke called attention to the stoppage of our trade with neutral ports by United States' cruisers, and to the decisions of the American prize courts; and invited the Government to furnish the House with its definition of what was a lawful traffic. According to international law no neutral vessel sailing under a neutral flag, and going from one neutral port to another, was liable to capture, whatever her cargo might be; but several cases had occurred in which English vessels had been seized by United States' cruisers on their voyage from English to other neutral ports. The hon. member urged upon the Government the necessity of employing greater vigilance for the protection of our commerce on the high seas.—The Solicitor-General said that Matamoras being a frontier town separated by a river from Texas, it was clear that vessels bound thither, whatever their papers might set forth, had opportunities of landing contraband on Texan territory. The doctrine of the law was clear, that if the cargo was destined to be landed on the neutral, or Mexican side, there could be no ground for the confiscation of the vessel, and that doctrine had been admitted by the prize courts, amongst other cases, in that of the Will of the Wisp. The practice of the American prize courts was identical with that of this country, from which in fact it had been borrowed in the time of Lord Stowell; and thus far her Majesty's Government had no reason to complain of the decisions of those tribunals.—Lord R. Cecil complained that, in the American prize courts, the captor was both plaintiff and judge; and said that, although we ought of course to listen to their decisions, it was nevertheless the bounden duty of the Government to watch them with special care. Not only had they inflicted injustice upon individuals, but they had made tremendous strides in the assumption of a right to capture peaceful traders. They had actually asserted that, if a vessel left England to go to a neutral port, and there was proof that it was intended at that port to sell the vessel, remove the cargo, pay off the master and crew, and subsequently use the vessel to run the blockade, a cruiser might seize and sell her.—Mr. Cobden condemned the system of blockade in toto, but observed that, although it had in this instance inflicted upon England greater injury, in an economical sense, than that which the two belligerents had done to each other, it should be remembered that it was no more than our own principle applied with some severity to ourselves. It was notorious that there was a great contraband trade going on with Nassau, and under those circumstances we had no alternative but to accept that which was an inevitable inconvenience.—Mr. Fitzgerald regretted these continual discussions on the decisions of the American prize courts, because English ministers of state and English law Officers of the Crown were presented to the house in the novel position of defending every step taken by the American Government, and doing everything they could, so far as their speeches in Parliament were concerned; to injure the case and ignore the rights of British merchants. The complaint was that fair and legitimate trade had been repressed by repeated seizures, for which there was no justification, and he contended that the trade between Matamoras and Nassau was perfectly legitimate. He blamed her Majesty's Government for having allowed Mr. Seward to lay down doctrines that were contrary to international law, without remonstrance or explanation, or declaring that they were new doctrines and England would not submit to them. The fact was that the great object of the United States Government was to put down the vast trade which had sprung up between the British port of Nassau and the Mexican port of Matamoras. He condemned that course of policy, which throughout had exposed British subjects both to loss of property and to acts of injustice such as the crew of the Peterhoff had been subjected to.

The remainder of the evening was chiefly spent in a resumed discussion on the Irish Church, which was finally got rid of by the adjournment of the house at twelve minutes to three.

TUESDAY, JUNE 30.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

Earl Russell stated in reply to the Earl of Shaftesbury, that an order had been issued by General Mouravieff imposing a fine upon ladies wearing mourning in Poland, but there was no truth in the assertion that those who were unable to pay the penalty were to be subjected to the punishment of the knout.

In answer to Lord Stratheden, Earl Russell said that the French ambassador had that evening called upon him, and informed him that there was no truth in the rumour that the French Government intended to make any communication to Her Majesty's Government in reference to mediation between the Northern and Southern States of America.

The Earl of Derby called attention to the probable session of the Ionian Islands, on the impolicy of which proceeding he commented in strong terms.—It was defended by Earl Russell and the Duke of Newcastle, and condemned by Lord Stratford de Redcliffe.—The subject soon after dropped, and the House adjourned.

TUESDAY, JUNE 30.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The morning sitting was occupied with a discussion on the Irish Fisheries Bill.

On the resumption of business in the evening, Mr. Layard stated, in reply to Mr. Horsfall, that the ship Gibraltar, bound for Nassau from Liverpool, was in fact no other than the notorious Sumter. Having arrived at Liverpool, it was reported to the Government that she was shipping guns of heavy calibre. Mr. Adams, the United States' minister, had also called attention to the fact after the Government were aware of it, and a clearance was refused by the Custom-house officers, but not at Mr. Adams's instigation. It subsequently appeared that the guns were not suited for the armament of the vessel itself, and under these circumstances the law officers of the Crown had expressed an opinion that the clearance papers should be issued.—Mr. W. E. Foster inquired whether any communication had been received by the Foreign Office from the French Government relating to the recognition of the Southern Confederacy.—Mr. Layard said that since last autumn no communication whatever, either with regard to recognition or armistice, or anything of the kind, had up to this moment been made to Her Majesty's Government by the French Government.—Mr. Roebuck moved that an humble address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that she would be graciously pleased to enter into negotiations with the great powers of Europe for the purpose of obtaining their co-operation in the recognition of the independence of the Confederate States of North America. He maintained that precedents established our right to recognize the Confederate States, and that it was our interest so to do. At the present moment there is exhibited a phenomenon never seen in the history of mankind. Ten millions of civilized men, producing three of the great necessary commodities of Europe—cotton, sugar, and tobacco—are thrown upon the world for customers. They have cut their connexion with the North. They have said to England, "We are producing all you want in the shape of cotton, producing nearly all you want in the shape of sugar and tobacco. Thousands,—nay, nearly a million, of your people are suffering from the want of these very commodities which we can supply. We offer ourselves to you as customers." Are we not prepared to accept that offer? What is it that prevents our recognizing these States? I look at the Treasury bench, and sorry am I to observe the absence of the noble lord who is really the Government. (Cheers from both sides of the House.) I ask those hon. and right hon. gentlemen what is it that is in the minds of those who want us to refrain from accepting this great boon to England, and doing this great justice to America? We are met by the assertion, "Oh, England cannot acknowledge a State in which slavery exists. Indeed, I ask, is that really the case—and is any man so weak as to believe it? (A laugh, and "Hear, hear.") Have we not acknowledged Brazil? Are we not in constant communication with Russia? And is there not slavery in both those countries? (Cheers.) Moreover, does anybody believe that the black slave would be at all improved in his condition by being placed in the same position as the free black in the North? (Hear, hear.) I ask whether the North, hating slavery, if you will, does not hate the slave still more? (A few "Noes," drowned in cheers.) I pity the ignorance of the gentleman who says "No." (Laughter.) The blacks are not permitted to take an equal status in the North. They are not permitted to enter the same carriage, to pray to God in the same part of the church, or to sit down at the same table with the whites. They are like the hunted dog whom everybody may kick. (Hear, hear.) But in the South the feeling is very different. (Hear, hear.) There black children and white children are brought up together. ("No.") I say it without fear of contradiction from any one whose contradiction is worthy of notice. (A laugh, and "Hear.") In the South there is not that hatred, that contempt of the black man which exists in the North. (Hear, hear.) There is a kindly feeling in the minds of the Southern planters towards those whom England fixed there in a condition of servitude. England forced slavery upon the Southern States of America. (Hear, hear.) It was not their doing. They prayed and entreated England not to establish slavery in their dominions, but we did it because it suited our interests, and the gentlemen who now talk philanthropy then talked the other way. (Laughter, and a cry of "They were not living then.") No but their ancestors were, and we have the same class now-a-days, with the same sort of cant and hypocrisy. (Cheers and laughter.) Every man who has studied the question will distinctly understand the difference between the feeling of the Northern gentleman and that of the Southern planter towards the black. (Hear, hear.) There is a sort of horror, a sort of shivering in the Northerner when he comes across a black. (Hear, hear.) He feels as if he were contaminated by the very fact of a black man being on an equality with him. (Hear, hear.) That is not the case in the South. I am not now speaking in favour of slavery. (Cheers.) Slavery to me is as distasteful as it is to the member for Birmingham; but I have learnt to bear with other men's infirmities (a laugh), and I don't think every man a rogue or a fool who differs from me in opinion. (Cheers and laughter.) But though I hate slavery, I can't help seeing the great distinction between the black in the North and his condition in the South. I believe that if to-morrow you could make all the blacks in the South like free negroes in the North, you would do them a great injury. (Cheers.) The cry in the North in favour of the black is a hypocritical cry (cheers), and to-morrow the North would join with the South and fasten slavery on the necks of the blacks if the South would only re-enter the Union. (Cheers.) But the South never will come into the Union, and—what is more—I hope it never may. (Hear, hear.) I will tell you why I say so. America, while she was one, ran a race of prosperity unparalleled in the world. In eighty years not America, but Europe, made the Republic such a Power that if she had continued as she was a few years ago she would have been the great bully of the world. (Cheers.) I say, then, that the Southern States have vindicated their right to recognition. They hold out to us advantages such as the world has never seen before. I hold, besides, that it would be of the greatest importance that the reconstruction of the Union should not take place. Then comes the question,—has the time arrived for recognition? I want hon. gentlemen to tell me why the time has not arrived. At the present moment a large portion of our population are suffering in consequence of the cotton famine. That is one reason why the time has come for the recognition of the South. Next I say the time has come because the Southern States have vindicated their right to be recognised. Moreover, they offer to us a boon such as the world has never known, but they are driven to be a manufacturing people. They are making their own guns, and if you keep them much longer in their present condition they will produce their own cotton and woollen goods. Thus interests will grow up which they will be obliged to protect, and we shall have the protective system introduced into the Southern States of America. (Hear, hear.) That is a matter deserving of attention—a matter which any statesman, if I could see one (a laugh), would take into his consideration. (Hear, hear.) Such is the state of things at the present moment. The South offers to us perfect free trade; but if we allow this contest to go on, if we cover, as we have done hitherto, before the North, the Southerners will soon become a manufacturing population, and the boon will be withdrawn from us. (Hear, hear.) But, if they ought to be recognised, and if the time has come, is the mode I propose a right one? The mode I propose is that this House should pray the Queen to enter into communication with the great Powers of Europe with a view to the recognition of the South. Now, the great Powers of Europe really mean France. (A laugh.) No other Power, with the exception of Russia, has a fleet that we need think about, and we know that Russia is not at present in a position to do anything. France is the only Power we have to consider, and France and England acknowledging the South there would be an end of the war. (Hear, hear.) Here I am obliged to enter into a sort of personal history. I hope the House will excuse me for doing so. (Hear, hear.) What I am going to say is that I know certain things about the state of the mind of the great French ruler which I am authorized to lay before this House. The Emperor of the French said, and he gave me authority to repeat it here, "I gave instructions to my Ambassador to say that my feeling was not, indeed, exactly the same as it was, because it was stronger than ever in favour of recognizing the South. I told him also to lay before the British Government my understanding and my wishes on this question, and to ask them still again whether they would be willing to join me in that recognition." (Hear, hear.) Now, sir, there is no mistake about this matter. I pledge my veracity that the Emperor of the French told me that. (Hear, hear.) He told me that the thing had been sent to Baron Gros. (Hear, hear.) And to tell me that the British Government does not know that that has occurred must mean some evasion, some diplomatic evasion. It can't be the truth, (Hear, hear.) And if there be contradiction, as the judges say, between the witnesses, I pledge my veracity for what I state. I don't believe the world will doubt my word (cheers), and I pledge my word that that is the truth as far as I am concerned. And—what is more—I laid before His Majesty two courses of conduct. I said, "Your Majesty may make a formal application to England." He stopped me and said, "No, I can't do that, and I will tell you why. Some months ago I did make a formal application to England. England sent my despatch to America. (Hear, hear.) That despatch, getting into Mr. Seward's hands, was shown to my Ambassador at Washington. It came back to me; and I feel that I was ill-treated by such conduct. (Loud cheers from the Opposition.) I won't (he added), I can't subject myself again to the danger of similar treatment. (Hear, hear.) But I will do everything short of it. I give you full liberty to state to the English House of Commons my wish, and to say to them that I have determined in all things,—and I will quote his words—"I have determined in all things to act with England; and more than all things I have determined to act with her as regards America." (Hear, hear.) Well, sir, with this before us, can the Government be ignorant of this fact? I do not believe it. With this before them, are they not prepared to act in concert with France? Are they afraid of war? War with whom? With the Northern States of America? Why, in ten days, sir, we would sweep from the sea every ship. ("Oh.") Yes, there are people so imbued with Northern feeling as to be indignant at that assertion. (Hear, hear.) But the truth is known. Why, the Warrior would destroy their whole fleet. ("Hear," and a laugh.) Their armies are melting away; their invasion is rolled back; Washington is in danger; and the only fear which we ought to have is lest the independence of the South should be established without us. (Hear, hear.) There is another observation which I have to make, and which I wish again to present to the minds of such hon. gentlemen opposite as are capable of understanding it. (Laughter.) It is this: A large portion of our manufacturing population have been for some months living upon charity. Now, there is very soon acquired a habit of idleness, and I have learnt from Lancashire that at the present time an unwillingness to labour is creeping upon the people, and if we carry them through the coming winter in idleness, we don't know what may be the consequence to our manufacturing population. And now I will briefly review what I have said. At the present moment there is offered to us a great advantage. If we take time by the forelock that advantage will be given to us, and we shall be a much greater people, and London will be the Imperial city of the world. But if we abstain from availing ourselves of this opportunity, it will go away at once to France. The cry about slavery is hypocrisy and cant. We shall do no harm to the black man if we adopt my resolution. And I pray the House in all calmness to consider this question, and, as they are men of honour, justice, and benevolence, to grant me the motion which I now make. (Loud cheers.)—Lord R. Montagu moved an amendment, approving the policy of the Government, in a long and vehement speech to empty benches.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer said that, considering how mixed must be our feelings towards either party, we should be inexcusable in allowing them in any way to warp our judgment. He did not think that British interests ought to be brought into this question; nor that the disruption of the Union was necessary to British interests. Indeed, if we put forward those interests as a paramount consideration, and founded an argument upon them for recognition of the South, every step we might take would assume the character of hostility to the United States. The objection, however, which he took to both motion and amendment, was that they dictated the course of policy which the Executive Government should pursue upon a question relating to which the Government alone could be fully informed. The policy which had been adopted by the Government was the only policy that answered to the convictions and desires of the country; and he hoped the House would not entertain either motion or amendment, but leave ministers to act in this matter in the spirit by which they had throughout been actuated. It was not easy to separate between recognition and intervention; but even it were, what chance would there be of maintaining a perfect neutrality when the proposal of recognition was associated with an undisguised hostility to one of the parties concerned? He did not think that recognition would relieve the men of Lancashire, or bring in one additional bale of cotton, unless we followed it up by ulterior measures. Neither did he believe that the restoration of the American Union was attainable; and in this country public opinion was almost unanimous on that subject. It was a fatal error, too, to suppose that the emancipation of the negro was an object that could be legitimately accomplished by means of coercion and bloodshed. Was the recognition, then, to be with or without intervention? In his judgment it would assume the form of an interference in the affairs of the American nation, and would raise a strong patriotic reaction amongst the citizens of the North, and even impart to the cause of the North that defensive energy which had hitherto been the secret of the strength of the South, and the want of which had been the cause of Northern inferiority. He felt that it was time the war should end; but he had more faith in the gentle action of public opinion as it was gradually matured in Europe, than he had in diplomatic acts which might appear to assume an undue interference with American affairs, and especially if those acts emanated from quarters that were open to suspicion.—Mr. W. E. Forster supported the amendment, contending that premature recognition would be a breach of neutrality, and that if not followed by war it would be a pompous nothing. He denied that the war in America was a war of tariffs. All the Secession States were slave states, and the line was strictly marked between them; but the North-Western States were just as strongly in favour of free trade as the South, yet they were all arrayed on the side of the Union. He regarded the policy propounded by Mr. Roebuck's motion as calculated to involve this country in a war which would be unpopular because waged against our kinsmen in behalf of slavery. In such a contest we should see the great Anglo-Saxon race torn to pieces by a triple civil war. Every despot, civil and religious, throughout the world, would rejoice at the sight; but he could not imagine there was an Englishman so utterly degenerate as to look with satisfaction at such a result.—Lord R. Cecil, although not often able to agree with the hon. member for Birmingham, was able entirely to concur with him when he described the hon. member for Bradford (Mr. Forster) as a fanatic on the question of slavery. He confessed he had never been able to understand the reasoning of the anti-slavery party in this country. The hon. member who had just sat down did not profess to hope that the North could conquer the South, although the hon. member for Birmingham did hope to exterminate slavery by that means. The speech of the Chancellor of the Exchequer was most remarkable, because it was the first exposition of the policy of the Government; but the question which pressed upon him was why, after conceding every one of the positions maintained by the hon. and learned member for Sheffield, the right hon. gentleman had not assented to the motion. The suffering of their own people was their title to interfere, and France and England had but to pronounce the word to contribute enormously to the re-establishment of peace. He did not know whether it occurred to the House, but it struck him as most remarkable, that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had made no reference to the statements of his honourable and learned friend as to the policy of the Emperor of the French. The Government might rest assured that the matter would not be passed over. (Hear.) The House should have an answer to the statement of the hon. and learned Gentleman. (Conservative cheers.) They knew that the Emperor of the French, whatever else he might be, was a prudent and sagacious sovereign, and he would not have adopted this strange and extraordinary course of communicating directly with the House of Commons—(cheers and counter cheers)—if he had not been driven to it by the treatment he had received from the Foreign Office. (Conservative cheers, with cries of "Oh, oh," from the Liberal benches.) He believed the public would not be satisfied unless the statement to which he had referred received a full and ample explanation, or until the Government gave an adequate reason why they did not act upon the frank and open offer of the Emperor of the French, and justified themselves before the country for following a policy which had led to so much misery. (Hear, hear.)—Mr. Bright made a fierce onslaught on Messrs. Roebuck and Lindsay as "Envoys very Extraordinary of the Emperor of the French," on whom he bestowed a share of his abuse. Coming at last to the question, Mr. Bright said:—"The point he was going to argue was that the war now going on was more likely to abolish slavery than anything else in the world. The supply of cotton must at all times be uncertain under the slave system. The House thought so some years ago, because they ordered a commission upon the subject, and but for a very silly minister they would have sent a commission to India. Would it not be conceded that it would be better that the cotton cultivation should be by free than by slave labour? The slave States were not half cultivated. There was not more than 10,000 square miles of cotton planted, and they only sent cotton over at a rate of 100,000 bales increase per annum, whereas the manufacturers wanted double that quantity. The reason was that where there were slaves no other labourers went. None of the emigrants who landed at the Northern ports ever went South. The difficulty now with a Southern planter was to buy his labour, for he had, not to hire his "hands" only, but to buy them, and to buy 200 negroes would cost £20,000. That was but one item, so that but few men could enter into the trade. He believed that in less than ten years after freedom had been declared the production of cotton would be doubled. Upon the political part of the question, he did not mean to say that the South might not conquer the North, and join that large party in the North, which some persons called the peace party, but which was in reality no peace party at all, and so form one large united kingdom. He hoped it would not be so; and as he believed in the moral government of the world, he did not believe it would be so. But should that happen, America, with her mighty navy and almost unlimited power, might offer to drive England out of Canada, France out of Mexico, and out of the islands of the West Indies all those who might be interested in them. They would thus have a State built up of war and slavery, instead of that other State founded upon an instructed people, upon general freedom, and upon morality in the Government. (Loud and continued laughter.) He had not heard that night anything about President Lincoln's proclamation, but we were not in a position to deny its legality. As we only recognised in America one nation, one President, and one law, that proclamation was a legal document, and the slaves of the South by it were [now virtually] free. For upwards of two years the North had contended for its existence and human freedom, and it was the first country that had come forth as the defender of freedom and equality. Yet the hon. and learned member for Sheffield wished to throw the hostility of Europe into the scale against them. The effect of a war would be to ruin our commerce, and at its termination that great and free people, the most instructed—(oh, oh.)—in the world, and the most wealthy, would have left in their hearts wounds that probably centuries would not heal, and the posterity of some of those who heard him might look back upon, with amazement and lamentation, at the course that had been taken by the honourable member for Sheffield and those who supported him. He hoped the House would not assist his countrymen to lift their hands or voices in aid of the most stupendous act of guilt which history has recorded in the annals of any race. (Cheers, and Oh, oh.)—Mr. P. Wyndham moved the adjournment of the debate, which, after a short speech from Sir G. Grey, confirming the statement made by Mr. Layard earlier in the evening, was agreed to.

PARTIAL LIST OF KILLED AND WOUNDED IN THE LATE BATTLES IN VIRGINIA.

LIST OF CASUALTIES IN HAYS' LOUISIANA BRIGADE.

TENTH REGIMENT.—Colonel S A Stafford, commanding.
Field and Staff.—Missing: Colonel Stafford and Major H L N Williams, Sergeant Major P J Key.
Killed: N G Reed, Capt Cummings, W G Swilley, J H Callahan, J Martin, J Hutchins, John Crittenden, T J Hawthorne, J Foster, A D Fisher, Bradshaw Wilson, John Gregory, John Pryne, John Shelly, E F Rogers, J Montgomery, Grove Cook, Wm B McDowell, L A Cook, W S Ward, Peter Humphreys.—Wounded: S U Butler, W M O'Leary, L Wittoutsky, W Hodnett, John Doyal, E F Williams, H E Handerson, J R George, W Edens, J A Calbert, J E Stuart, J H Cox, R H Koonce, W T Softin, W H Reybourn, A B Walls, J W Rabb, W A Stroud, Jas Robertson, D C Applewhite, D B Beeson, H V Sentall, J G Saudlin, D C Westor, J Goodwin Ross, J W Bradford, J O Howell, F F Chennymouth, A J Greenwood, H O May, W C Rogers, W S Sutherland, C E Thomas, F Wiley, T Ficker, John Shilling, G W Fickling, E B Bell, R M Malone, J A Holman, M E Bloom, J E Sykes, S A Taylor, J H Burk, Wm Magee, J E Morris, O B Seales, J A Cooper, J H Spring, J G Cochran, Wm Jenkins, W P Smith.—Missing: G L Gallashan, F S Irby, L E Gilbert, John Wittington, C R Hayworth, T Rundle, S Campbell, S Lynch, S Willis, E C Briery, T B Finkington, E Reeves, J Thompson, Gid Allen, P H Dougherty, Milton Dougherty, F P Lyon, Thomas M Marks, J M Woodward, J B Baker, Geo Winham, J C Jones, James Cushing, Andrew Clark, James Hoy, Thomas Kelly, Jerry Marra, Wm Trailer, John M Adams, Thomas Donahoe, B F Glover, E Davis, H Nixon, John McKay, A J Fancher, C B McDowell, G W Bates, M M Low, A C Harrel.

SIXTY-FIRST VIRGINIA REGIMENT.
Field and Staff.—Wounded: Major Wm H Stewart.
Killed: G W Bright, Lemuel Jennings, Eli Davis, Francis Duke.—Wounded: Lieut Geo T Hodges, M W Williams, Daniel T Sivils, Andrew G Morgan, Geo W Waller, J C Brown, J P W Mercer, J C Byrum, Jno Warren, James Paul, William Kepper, L Woodward, V O Cassell, A D B Godwin, Jos Barrett, Jno White, T L Collins, R A Sneed, Kinchen Cobb, J Phillips, J W Branch, J T Hodges, W H Nider, C W Murdoch, Chas Evans, Joseph T Herbert, Silva Gonales, Thos Stazler, D W Dillon.—Missing: James H Miller, J Beazley, Thos Harrison.

CRENSHAW BATTERY.
Killed: H W Holland.—Wounded: T H Burroughs, J J Wheeler, J R Jackson, J O Goolsby, W W Profit.
THE HOWITZERS.
Killed: Tho W Barksdale, Nathaniel Selden.—Wounded: Geo P Richardson, John B Royall.
NORFOLK L. A. BUES.
Killed: Wm C Land.—Wounded: J H Walters, Melville C Keeling, Joseph C Floyd.—M'Gowan.

FIRST LOUISIANA REGIMENT.
Killed: Lieut Kernan.—Wounded: J Neilligan, A N Cummings, Gill.

FIFTY-FIFTH VIRGINIA REGIMENT.—A. P. HILL'S DIVISION.
Killed: Col P Mallory, Major Saunders, Capts Street and Davis.—Wounded: W S Christian, Capts Fauntleroy, Broomebregger, Fleet, and Reynolds, Lieuts Street, Downing, Roano, Dull, Foote, and Warning, Privates Allen C Redwood, Geo W Nicholson, Wm Smith, J W Montague.

FIFTY-EIGHTH VIRGINIA REGIMENT.
Killed: John W Hall, and George H Handley.—Wounded: W A Dowdy, William A Stannett Junior, Jonathan Fielder, J N Pres, J W Scott, B K Milam, John Gardner, J J Johnson, Charles O Padgett, David A Karr, G W Pooley, Robert H Turpin, Samuel McGuire, Jas A Hopkins, S T Delong, C H Henderson, P G Tol, J J Clements, Robert Ruly, John Leuw, H W Wingfield, S S Polcher, W S Koutou, James B Lynch, McHenry Peters, James C Ellis, J E Fitzpatrick, R A Bradley, G G Saunders, W H Spradlin, W A Thomas, A E Slaughter.

FORTY-NINTH VIRGINIA INFANTRY.
Killed: William H Boteler, and H Manks.—Wounded: S Montjoy, Y S Lynn, John Waters, Weston Fletcher, F H Bolen, D G Gore, N M Garrett, H J Brown, George W Henry, R M Denton, John D Wood, E W Early, and John Henson.

This is certainly a most striking agreement of opinions. The Times, though it persists in throwing its ability and vast influence on the side of delay, confines itself to the untenable argument that recognition would be useless, but does not deny the title of the Confederate States to admission into the commonwealth of nations. The only members of the British press who deny this title, and who wage an open warfare against the invaded and the weaker, are the avowed organs of a party utterly un-English in its character, and, in its Americanizing tendencies, a party which supplies by vehemence of invective and falsification of facts, what it lacks in logic and reason. These organs are, fortunately, as weak in influence as they are few in number, and the South may congratulate itself upon their hostility as the most convincing testimony of the justice of its cause and of the true English sympathy for it.

ADDRESS OF THE SOUTHERN CLERGY.

(To the Editor of THE INDEX.)

Sir,—Being absent from Richmond when the Address of the Southern Clergy to the Christian World was issued, I had no opportunity of signing it until now. Please append my name, and oblige,

Yours very respectfully,

Moses D. Hoge,
Pastor of 2nd Presbyterian Church,
Richmond, Virginia.

3, Clarence Terrace, Regent's Park,
July 1, 1863.

THE BRITISH CONSUL AT RICHMOND.

Letters Patent, revoking Exequatur of George Moore, Esq., Her Britannic Majesty's Consul at Richmond.

Jefferson Davis,
President of the Confederate States of America.

To all whom it may concern.

Whereas George Moore, Esq., Her Britannic Majesty's Consul for the port of Richmond and State of Virginia (duly recognised as such by the Exequatur issued by a former Government, which was at the time of the issue the duly authorized agent for that purpose of the State of Virginia) did recently assume to act as a consul for a place other than the city of Richmond, and a State other than the State of Virginia, and was thereupon, on the 20th day of February last, 1863, requested by the Secretary of State to submit to the Department of State his Consular Commission, as well as any other authority he may have received to act in behalf of the Government of her Britannic Majesty before further correspondence could be held with him as her Majesty's Consul at the port of Richmond; and whereas the said George Moore has lately, without acceding to said request, entered into correspondence as her Majesty's Consul with the Secretary of War of these Confederate States, thereby disregarding the legitimate authority of this Government.

These, therefore, are to declare that I do no longer recognise the said George Moore as Her Britannic Majesty's Consul in any part of these Confederate States, nor permit him to exercise or enjoy any of the functions, powers, or privileges allowed to the Consuls of Great Britain. And I do wholly revoke and annul any exequatur heretofore given to the said George Moore by the Government which was formerly authorised to grant such exequatur as agent of the State of Virginia, and do declare the said exequatur to be absolutely null and void from this day forward.

In testimony whereof I have caused these letters to be made patent, and the seal of the Confederate States of America to be herewith affixed.

Given under my hand this fifth day of June, in the L. s.: year of our Lord One thousand eight hundred and sixty-three.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

By the President.
(Signed) J. P. BENJAMIN, Secretary of State.

Confederate States of America, Department of State,
Richmond, June 5, 1863.

Sir,—The President of the Confederate States has been informed that in consequence of your assuming to act in behalf of the Government of her Britannic Majesty in matters occurring in the State of Mississippi you were requested to submit to this Department your Consular commission, as well as any other authority held by you to act in behalf of her Majesty's Government, before further correspondence could be held with you as British Consul for the port of Richmond. He has further been informed that you have not acceded to this request, and that, in disregard of the legitimate authority of this Government, you have again lately corresponded, as her Majesty's Consul for this port with the Secretary of War of the Confederate States. The President considers it as inconsistent with the respect which it is his office to enforce towards this Government that you should any longer be permitted to exercise the functions or enjoy the privileges of a Consul in these Confederate States. He has consequently thought proper, by the letters patent, of which I enclose you a copy, to revoke the exequatur heretofore granted to you, and to make public these letters patent.

I have the honour to be,

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. P. BENJAMIN, Secretary of State.

George Moore, Esq., her Britannic Majesty's Consul, Richmond, Virginia.

A BRITISH CONSUL'S EXEQUATUR REVOKED.

(From the Richmond Despatch of June 6.)

The reader will find in the Despatch of this morning the proclamation of President Davis, revoking the exequatur of George Moore, Esq., H.B.M.'s Consul for this city. This revocation is only special and personal. Mr. Moore, it appears from the "letters patent," issued by the President, has assumed to act in behalf of the British Government in matters occurring out of Richmond and Virginia (in the State of Mississippi), and his authority for so acting he was requested to furnish to the State Department. This he failed to do before entering into another correspondence with that Department.

Therefore the President considers it inconsistent with the respect due to the Government that he should be allowed to exercise the functions and enjoy the privileges of a Consul in the Confederate States.

Mr. Moore is a gentleman whose official and personal intercourse here has been marked heretofore for his propriety and courtesy, and also by a very discreet and intelligent performance of his duties. Present here with the Exequatur of Abraham Lincoln, representing a Government whose singular policy towards us may well embarrass its agents, he has had no very easy or pleasant time of it. Whether or no his conduct towards the Government is the unavoidable result of his official relations, of course, we know not; but an intentional breach of official respect would certainly be inconsistent with his usual deportment.

When we first heard of the "letters patent," we had hoped that they were general, and revoked the exequaturs of consuls generally. It is certainly time that our own Government was recognised. We have waited long and patiently to the cold rejection of our own diplomatic agents abroad, and it would seem to be fair that we should at least by this time decline to recognise officially the agents of those Governments residing in our own country. This is our feeling. It may not be wise, but it would certainly be fair. The Government, however, knows much that is not known by the public touching our foreign relations, and the whole matter may be safely intrusted to its hands.

THE Divorce Court was lately engaged in investigating a case, of which the report everywhere inspired indignation and disgust. The wife of Captain Massey applied for a divorce on the ground of cruelty, &c., and it appeared that her husband had been in the habit of beating her in a most brutal manner, and otherwise shamefully illusing her. The second had also received a sum of money from his victim, and the only pleasant feature in the trial, was the discovery that a part of the money was in the hands of the army agents, and Sir Cresswell Cresswell ordered it to be impounded. This week another infamous proceeding of Captain Massey has been made public. In 1861 he went with his regiment to Toronto. Soon after his arrival, it became known that he had left a wife in England, and brought out with him a mistress. Upon this, he was cut by society. He complained to his brother officers, and they, it is alleged, refused to visit where the Captain was not received, and his offence was therefore condoned. At length it was supposed he was tired of his toy, as he sent his mistress to Europe; but this was only done to enable him to accomplish a fresh villainy. He became acquainted with a heiress, and a ward in Chancery—a Miss McTavish—and seduced her. At the beginning of June this unfortunate and infatuated lady attended a party at the residence of a member of the Canadian Parliament, was missed, and the next day it was decided that she had eloped with Captain Massey. The fugitives were pursued and overtaken, but Miss McTavish refused to return with her friends. Ultimately the second was arrested and lodged in gaol. When being handcuffed, he had the impudence to talk about his honour, and the proceeding being disgraceful to an English officer. Many years ago an officer was being examined in a court of law, and upon the counsel asking him if he was a soldier, replied haughtily, "No, sir, I am an officer." The witty advocate replied by addressing him as "Mr. Officer and no soldier." The joke was much relished by the public, because in the good old times when there were no military training colleges, and when ignorance was no bar to the service, it was notorious that many officers knew no more of military affairs than they had learnt from their tailors—viz., how to wear a sword without getting it between their legs. We trust the day will never come when a like significance will be attached to "Mr. Officer and no gentleman." In every profession there will be black sheep, and they must be got rid of as soon as found out. We should be glad to learn that the brother officers of Massey did not support him as alleged in the flagrant violation of the decencies of society.

AFTER a trial which lasted eight days, the case of Dickson versus Earl Wilton, Viscount Combermere, and General Peel, Secretary for War under Lord Derby's Government, was brought to a close on Saturday; and no one can be surprised that the jury found a verdict for the defendants. The idea of charging Viscount Combermere and General Peel with conspiring to injure an officer of the militia was ridiculous. Whether Colonel Dickson was justly or unjustly removed from his command is merely a collateral issue. If the defendants acted according to the best of their knowledge and conscientious belief, they are under any circumstances guiltless of malice and conspiracy. In our notice of this case in our last number we referred to some charges brought by Colonel Dickson against Earl Wilton. We think the colonel made a mistake in pursuing such a course of retaliation. Grant that Earl Wilton had been guilty of all the offences alleged against him, it was hardly consistent with the dignity of an officer to turn informer, and, certainly, in an English court of law blackening the character of an opponent will not be considered self-justification. Colonel Dickson will have to pay a heavy bill of costs, but that is a small penalty for preferring insulting charges against the venerable Viscount Combermere and General Peel upon the most frivolous pretences.

On the 31st of last January the Daily Telegraph sharply criticised a publication called "Zadkiel's Almanack," which, amongst other twaddle, had impudently predicted the death of the late Prince Consort, and that of dozens of other eminent personages; and some prominence was given to the affair by an advertisement of the City of London publicly referring to the Almanack. The Daily Telegraph asked—"Who is Zadkiel?" commander of the Royal Navy—R. J. Morrison; and further, and Sir E. Belcher? answered the question in a letter, signed "Ann Humbug," in which he said that Zadkiel was a retired "the author of 'Zadkiel' is the celebrated crystal globe seer, who gulled many of our nobility about the year 1822. Making use of a boy under 14, or a girl under 12, he pretended by their looking into the crystal globe, to hold converse with the spirits of the Apostles—even our Saviour, with all the angels of light as well as darkness, and to tell what was going on in any part of the world. Drawings were made of the objects seen in these visions. One noble lady gave one of the boys 45 to give her intelligence respecting her boy, who was in the Mediterranean. That boy 'peached'—let the cat out of the bag. Of course, the information was false. He took money, if he be really the same, for these profane acts and made a good thing of it." Upon this Lieutenant Morrison brought an action for libel against Sir E. Belcher, and the case was heard on Monday last. The defendant pleaded not guilty, and that the alleged libels were true in substance and fact. The plaintiff said he bought the curious crystal ball in 1849; and his son and others had seen visions in it. It was asserted that the Apostles, Eve, Titania, and a host of persons had been seen in the ball, and that they all had scrolls of song from their mouths. Mr. Morrison said Eve, Titania, and St. Luke spoke English, and that their languages used were Turkish, French, Latin, and Hebrew. Several ladies of note, the Earl Wilton, a Bishop, and Sir E. B. Lytton were examined. They all stated that no money was charged for looking in the ball. An elderly lady said she had seen her mother who had been dead fifty years; and a man in armour, whom Mr. Morrison told her was the presiding spirit of the crystal, and a lady in a pink dress was leaning on the shoulder of the man in armour. Upon Mr. Belcher's Ballantine producing the ball and asking her to look into it, she answered indignantly "It is too solemn a thing, sir." The Lord Chief Justice in summing up remarked that the "Almanack" was filled with rubbish to enable the publisher to charge 6d. for an "Almanack" of which all that was useful was only worth a penny. The jury gave a verdict of 20s. damages for the plaintiff, and the judge refused to certify for costs.

THE LATE GENERAL VAN DORN—A CARD FROM HIS STAFF.

MOBILE, May 15.

We, the undersigned, members of the late General Van Dorn's staff, having seen with pain and regret the various rumours afloat in the public press, in relation to the circumstances attending that officer's death, deem it our duty to make a plain statement of the facts in the case.

General Van Dorn was shot in his own room, at Spring Hill, Tennessee, by Dr. Peters, a citizen of the neighbourhood. He was shot in the back of the head, while engaged in writing at his table, and entirely unconscious of any meditated hostility on the part of Dr. Peters, who had been left in the room with him apparently in friendly conversation, scarcely fifteen minutes previously, by Major Kimmel. Neither General Van Dorn nor ourselves were suspicious in the slightest degree of enmity in the mind of Dr. Peters, or we should certainly not have left them alone together, nor would General Van Dorn have been shot, as we found him five minutes later sitting in his chair, with his back towards his enemy.

There had been friendly visits between them up to the very date of the unfortunate occurrence.

General Van Dorn had never seen the daughter of his murderer but once, while his acquaintance with Mrs. Peters was such as to convince us his staff officers, who had every opportunity of knowing, that there was no improper intimacy between them; and for our own part we are led to believe that there were other and darker motives, from the fact that Dr. Peters had taken the oath of allegiance to the United States Government, while in Nashville, about two weeks previously—as we are informed by refugees from that city—that he had remarked in Columbia a short time before, "that he had lost his land and negroes in Arkansas, but he thought he would shortly do something which would get them back;" and finally, that having beforehand torn down fences and prepared relays of horses, he made his escape across the country direct to the enemy's lines.

Such is the simple history of the affair, and we trust that in bare justice to the memory of a gallant soldier, the papers that have given publicity to the false rumours above alluded to—rumours alike injurious to the living and to the dead—will give place in their columns to this vindication of his name.

M. M. KIMMEL, Major and A.A.G.
W. C. SCHAMBERG, A.A.G.
CLEMENT SELLIVAN, Aide-de-Camp.
R. SHOFMAKER, Aide-de-Camp.

GENERAL JACKSON'S REMAINS.—The body of Lieutenant-General Jackson was taken to Staunton yesterday on a special train. From Staunton it will be conveyed to Lexington for sepulture. Governor Letcher will attend the body to its last resting-place. The pall-bearers in the procession on Tuesday were—Major-General Ewell, Brigadier-General Wiader, Brigadier-General Coise, Brigadier-General Kemper, Major-General Elzey, Commander Forrest, Brigadier-General Garnett, Brigadier-General Stuart. The new flag which draped the remains of General Jackson, while lying in state in this city, was presented by his Excellency the President to the widow of the illustrious general.—Richmond Sentinel.

PARIS, June 29, 7 A.M.—I am not, perhaps, much in error in supposing that the question put by the Marquis of Clanricarde to Lord Russell in the House of Lords on Friday evening last had some reference to the statements in my letter of Tuesday on the renewal of propositions for a joint mediation in America. Lord Clanricarde, however, spoke of the proposal of the Emperor of the French to the British Government "to recognize the existing Government of the Confederate States." The word "recognize," or "recognition," does not occur in my letter, and may not be formally expressed in Baron Gros's Note, though, of course, the overtures have recognition for their ultimate object. What I spoke of was a proposal for mediation or diplomatic intervention. Lord Russell, strictly speaking, might deny there was a proposal for recognition. I should be surprised, however, if he denied that proposals for mediation had been made. It is certain that the Emperor held the conversation I alluded to in my letter with Mr. Lindsay and Mr. Roebuck as I related it; and the Memorial Diplomatique of yesterday—a paper which I know to be in direct communication with the French Foreign office—corroborates my statement in every word. It corroborates it and adds something of its own.—The Emperor promised that M. Drouyn de Lhuys should immediately address to Baron Gros the necessary instructions for bringing about a concert between France and England on the expediency of joint diplomatic action with a view to put a stop to the war of the United States. In fact, we hear from London that Baron Gros handed on Wednesday last to Earl Russell formal proposals on the part of France. And further—"We are assured that on this day (Sunday) the answer of the English Cabinet is expected to be received in Paris."—Times' Correspondent.

The New York Herald says, that at the time of the fall of Fort Sumter, Mr. Horace Greeley "had a secession flag hung up in his editorial sanctum." It needed no such evidence, that until the commencement of the war the right of secession was not disputed by any party in the North.

The infamous Turchin who was court-martialled and dismissed the Federal Service for permitting the atrocious outrage upon a girl's school at Athens, Georgia, appears to have been reinstated by President Lincoln, as he now holds the office of Brigadier-General in Rosecrans's army.

Two Charleston papers announce the death, after a long and severe illness, of Dr. Edward North, a prominent physician of that city.

PRINCE CAMILLE POLIGNAC has been appointed a Brigadier-General in the Confederate army.

TO OUR FRIENDS AND SUBSCRIBERS.

Our friends in the United Kingdom and on the Continent are earnestly requested to forward to us, at their earliest convenience, such information relative to the military movements and condition of affairs in America as they may receive through private letters, either from the United States, or from the Confederate States. They may rely upon the most scrupulous precautions being observed; that no names or facts leading to identification will, under any circumstances, be revealed. No communications, however, will be noticed unless authenticated by a responsible name. Southern newspapers, of any date, will be useful and acceptable presents.

For the convenience of our distant subscribers, all the receipts for subscriptions signed by any of the official representatives, or commissioned officers of the Confederate States, will be recognized at this office.

Our subscribers in the South will have their paper supplied through HENRY HOTZE, Esq., the Confederate States' Commercial Agent at London, who has kindly tendered us his services in this respect during the continuance of the blockade.

Subscription, 26s. per annum—post paid, 30s., payable in advance. All communications on business to be addressed, and Post-Office Orders made payable to, J. B. HOPKINS, 13, Boulevard-street, Fleet-street, London E.C.

Agency at Paris: Messrs. PFEIFFER and MULLER, 52, Rue du Château d'Eau, Paris.

Agency at Liverpool: WM. KNOX, Secretary Southern Club, 55 Brown's-buildings.

THE INDEX.

THURSDAY, JULY 2, 1863.

BRITISH JACKSON MONUMENTAL FUND.

By a reference to our advertising columns, it will be seen that an influential Committee has been formed for carrying out the proposal of a British Monument to Lieut.-General Thomas J. Jackson, C.S.A. The amount we have collected is paid over to the account of that Committee, by whom further Subscriptions will be received. Acknowledgments will, in future, be made only if directed by the Committee.

Mr. J. B. Hopkins acknowledges receipt for the British Jackson Monument Fund:—

Amount from last Week .. ..	£30	10	6
Thomas Beynon, Esq. .. ..	1	1	0

The Debate on Tuesday.

WHATEVER may be the final result of the debate, adjourned from last Tuesday to this evening, the friends of Southern independence have, so far, no cause to regret its occurrence. Mr. Roebuck's motion for "An address to the Queen, praying Her Majesty to enter into negotiations with the great Powers of Europe, for the purpose of obtaining their co-operation for the recognition of the Confederate States," might have been introduced in a tone more conciliatory, and the argument by which it was supported might have been strengthened in some essential particulars. But it is, perhaps, scarcely possible for a man of strong convictions on this subject even if he possessed a sweeter temper than Mr. Roebuck has credit for, to speak in honeyed terms of the course which the British Government have seen fit to pursue; and the argument so far as it rests can certainly not be said to have been answered by any of the speakers who opposed the motion. Lord R. Montagu's oratorical mantle, though cast off and cast-off rags from "Historicus" and Mr. Walter Gibson, did not conceal the wearer's want of ideas or information, and we might follow the example of the daily press in passing altogether sub silentio the amendment and speech of this noble Lord, who, professing himself a friend to the South, retails at second hand the sophistries of its enemies, but for a quotation which he innocently adduced against the motion, when, in fact, it is the strongest possible evidence in its favour. He cited Sir James Mackintosh to prove what we have often asserted in these columns, that recognition "implies no guarantee, no alliance, no aid, no approbation of the successful revolt, no intimation of an opinion concerning the justice or injustice of the means by which it has been accomplished." Mr. C. Clifford spoke good sense, and showed more acquaintance with his subject than his predecessor, whom he justly took to task for comparing the States of the Southern Confederation—equals in a former league of sovereignties, who have never by word or act forfeited their independent existence—to revolted sepoys or Irish rioters; but the natural inference from all that Mr. Clifford said appeared to us to be in favour of the motion rather than the amendment he rose to second.

We do not propose to comment upon the speeches seriatim, though we may mention, en passant, that even Mr. Bright, the most unscrupulous as well as the most vehement champion of the Washington despotism, did not venture to insult the intelligence of the House by predicting reconstruction of the Union through the conquest of the South. Virtually, he not only surrendered that hope, but confessed that reconstruction by the reverse process—the conquest of the North by the South—was more within the range of probability. The great speech of the evening, and that with which alone for the present we need concern ourselves, was delivered by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Placed by the absence of the Premier under the necessity of defending a policy, or rather want of policy, to which it is believed he has never given more than a reluctant assent, if assent at all, he acquitted himself of his duty as Minister with an ability which friend and foe must equally admire, and yet did himself justice and honour as a man. To say that his speech was eloquent is a mere truism, nor can it be denied that it was fair to both sides, and eminently conciliatory; but it did not refute the argument for recognition. It could convince nobody of the duty of England to continue passive in so great an emergency; it will not convince posterity; and we feel assured that it did not convince the clear-headed statesman himself. If, as Mr. Gladstone stated, the motion was objectionable from the tone of acerbity and of partisanship with which he alleged the mover had invested it, how easy would it have been for Mr. Gladstone, above all other men, to put it in such a manner and couch it in such words as to relieve it of any possible suspicion of hostility to the United States! The more so since he, in that very speech, has so clearly and definitively drawn the line of demarcation between recognition of a de facto Government, a neutral act, and intervention in a foreign quarrel, a hostile act; and since he, in the same connection, has lent the weight of his authority to the exposure of that perversion of historical facts concerning the cause of the war with France during the first American revolution, upon which most of the sophistries of "Historicus" rest, and which was quoted and endorsed by Earl Russell in his place in Parliament only a few months ago. Mr. Gladstone said nothing against the argument—indeed it was not before him—that the recognition of neutrals must necessarily precede that of the State to which recognition implies the surrender of a contested dominion; that no Government, however weak or contemptible, has ever been the first to acquiesce in the overthrow of its own authority, whether rightfully or wrongly claimed, and we have no right to expect of the United States that they will set the example. Mr. Gladstone asserts that neither England nor France can speak with that authority which belongs to freedom from all suspicion of partiality in the matter of this American war, because both have so important an interest on the American continent; the former on account of her colonial possessions, and for other reasons; the latter on account of her implication with Mexico. But so have Russia and Spain proprietary interests in America; and every civilized Government is more or less affected by a war which convulses a continent and deranges the commerce of the world. If no Government is competent to act, which has an interest in the success of its action, then no Government is competent, and the greater and the more disastrous any quarrel is, the less can it hope to be adjusted by the good offices of neutrals. We hold, on the contrary, that the very interests which neutral nations have in such matters, measure their right both to speak and to act, and that these interests are the instruments which Providence has appointed to regulate justice in the great commonwealth of sovereign States. No man has ever more emphatically and solemnly than did Mr. Gladstone last night, denounced this war as unjustifiable, because waged for an unattainable object. He has branded with strong terms of reprobation the barbarous and cruel manner in which it is conducted by one of the belligerents; and he has deprecated most earnestly that so-called scheme of emancipation which would arm the slave against his master and his master's wife and children. But if this is so, and

Mr. Gladstone truly said that he spoke the minds of nine out of ten, nay of ninety-nine out of a hundred Englishmen of every class—then, as Lord R. Cecil well observed, the attempt of the North upon the South is a gigantic crime, connivance with which is complicity in its guilt. And upon this head we would fain enlarge, for it is the true basis upon which the advocates of recognition should found their claims. The South has rights as well as the North. In its dealings with the United States Europe never made, or could have made, a distinction between the States south of the Potomac and Ohio, and those north of these rivers. When the former of those States had notified foreign Governments that they had changed the agency for the administration of certain specified and common concerns from Washington to Montgomery or Richmond, and when they had proved that this new agency was indeed a stable and permanent Government, able to defend itself abroad and maintain itself at home, the foreign Governments had no right to refuse to recognise the change, and in so refusing they virtually assume to pass judgment against one of the two belligerents. In recognising the Minister of the Washington Government as the diplomatic representative of States with which his country has waged an unsuccessful war for over two years, they not only recognise what is manifestly and self-evidently absurd; they not only insult the Government which is thus ignored; but they also recognise and thereby sanction the assumption of an authority on the part of the one set of States over the others, which rests upon no clause of the former Federal compact between them, and which was never even claimed while that compact remained in force. In other words, by refusing recognition to the Confederate Government, except on the pretext of instability, foreign nations declare that the States north of two rivers are the lawful sovereigns over the States south of these rivers, and that the latter are merely rebellious subjects. The only question which neutrals have to consider is whether the separation is or is not final. When an adviser of the Crown asserts so emphatically, as Mr. Gladstone has done, that separation is final and, therefore, that the Confederate Government presents all reasonable guarantees for permanence, he confesses in the same breath that rights are withheld from that Government to which, by the usage and courtesy of nations, it is fairly entitled. Rights withheld are rights violated, and it is with this violation of rights, and with being the cause of their violation by others, that the South charges the British Ministry.

There is one mystery connected with the debate on Tuesday, upon which we cannot venture to speculate, and which may possibly be elucidated this evening. It had been reported in the public journals, and the report had reached us from several independent sources, and from unimpeachable authority, that the Emperor of the French had signified to the English Government his adherence to the opinions previously expressed, and his willingness to give effect to those opinions by any course of action, not excepting recognition, in which that Government should be willing to co-operate. This Mr. Roebuck stated in Parliament as from the Emperor's own lips, and with the Emperor's own authority for stating it in or out of Parliament. On the other hand, it was three times denied in the two Houses the same evening by Ministers, that any communication from the French Government had been received; and to make the denial still stronger, Earl Russell stated in the Lords that he had but just then been assured by a visit from the French Ambassador that no instructions to make such a communication had been given by the French Government. There is, therefore, a question of veracity pending, and if it should turn out that the Ministerial denial was based upon a quibble over words, the mere technical definition of a diplomatic phrase, the public will scarcely hold them guiltless of a gross trifling with its patience and with truth. But, in whatever manner the mystery may be solved, the other statement of Mr. Roebuck, which is not denied, that the Emperor's former communications with the British Cabinet had been improperly imparted to the Washington Government, is calculated to produce a strong impression on the public mind. It is certainly startling that a foreign sovereign, and he an ally, should have to decline, for a reason like this, formal negotiations with the Foreign-office on so grave a subject of international policy. The British people will be likely to think that this act of Earl Russell's is carrying subserviency to the American Government a little too far.

The Confederate Advance.

THREE weeks ago it was announced from New York that General Lee's army had disappeared from the Rappahannock, and all sorts of rumours were afloat as to its probable destination. A balloon ascent quieted the alarms of Washington. Reassured, the public began to talk of a new advance of Hooker's army, and a cavalry reconnaissance in force lent authority to the rumours that another forlorn hope would be adventured. After weeks of doubt and uncertainty the mystery is cleared up. General Lee's army, with the exception of a small force left fronting the Rappahannock, has marched northward, and General Hooker, with a sort of blind instinct of danger, has marched northward too. It is almost amusing to witness the utter bewilderment of "General Joe Hooker" in the presence of his skilful opponent. He has had evident misgivings for weeks past, he has been conscious of great schemes being in progress which he could not penetrate, and about which balloons and cavalry reconnaissances failed to enlighten him. At last the truth has dawned upon him. Lee has been amusing him in front, while he has been secretly planning a raid into the Northern States, and a flank march upon his line of communication with Washington, which imperils alike the Capital and the whole of the Federal army. And on the very day on which the New York Herald announced with all possible importance, that a great battle was progressing north of the Rappahannock, the advance of Lee's army burst, like a torrent, upon Milroy's division at Winchester, and dispersed it, literally a scattered and demoralized rabble, without guns, officers, or organization. Then the order for retreat is given, and sullenly that great host which, all through the winter months has been drilling at Falmouth, which has converted miles of country into a vast entrenchment, covered acres of hill and plain with its canvas, and founded a city of sutlers at Acquia Creek, faces about for Washington. In hot haste, for the safety of the Capital, in President Lincoln's opinion, depends upon their coming up—this great army presses on from Falmouth to Acquia, thence to Dumfries, then across the Occoquan to Fairfax; then it draws bridle and breath for the first time; and there General Hooker looks about him to see what has become of Lee. Meantime the work of destruction has been going on briskly at Acquia. Stores are burnt or thrown into the water, transports and heavy trains full of stores are hurried off to Alexandria. South of the Occoquan River there is nothing left to tell of the foot of the Northern invader, save long lines of deserted intrenchments, tattered canvas, charred ruins, and plundered homesteads. But the 6th army corps, which is the last to move, is severely handled at Fredericksburg. The Confederates press upon its rear and pick up its stragglers. There is even a rumour at Washington that a flank movement of General Lee has entirely cut off this corps, and so ends the fifth advance of the army of the Potomac upon Richmond.

And where is Lee all this time? The highest compliment that could be paid to his strategy, is, that no one knows. There are rumours in plenty. At Harrisburg they expect him. At Baltimore they barricade the streets with bales of tobacco. Along the banks of the Susquehanna the scared population is at work with the spade; and from Washington courier after courier speeds southward to Hooker, to impress upon him the urgent peril of the capital. At last something like order is evolved. Pennsylvania and Maryland are left to the efforts of their own citizens. Hooker is called to defend the sacred person of the President; and the Government which has deluded its subjects and even European statesmen by its repeated promises of crushing rebellion and taking Richmond within ninety days, in an agony of trepidation, makes spirit-stirring appeals to Northern patriots to rise and protect their own hearths from the miseries they have systematically inflicted on the unoffending population of the South. But no news can be obtained of Lee. When the earliest panic has subsided, it is found that the strength of the force which has swept the Shenandoah Valley, crossed the Potomac, traversed Maryland, and burst into Pennsylvania, has been greatly exaggerated. Consisting principally of cavalry and horse artillery, it is evidently not intended to march upon Baltimore or Washington, but it is in a country of vast resources. At Chambersburg and Greencastle there are stores which will refit a Confederate corps d'armée. Compared with the devastated tract of country south of the Potomac, which has so long been the battle-field of the two armies, the county of Franklin, Pennsylvania, is a land flowing with milk and honey. Then the harvest is coming on in the Shenandoah valley, and its crops will be devoted to the Southern uses. The change must be pleasant to those jaded and half-famished cavaliers, who have crossed the frontier, apart from the obvious moral influence which the invasion of the Federal States by a Confederate army must exercise upon the Northern mind. But although the prize is great and the opportunity is tempting, it is not likely that Lee contemplates any serious blow against Washington. The fortifications of the Capital are too strong to be taken except at a sacrifice of men which the South can ill afford. Baltimore, again, is peopled by men entirely Southern in their sympathies. Federal batteries command the city, and the appearance of Confederate troops would only result in untold misery to thousands of families attached to the Confederate cause. Philadelphia is a more tempting prize. But to reach Philadelphia the Susquehanna must be crossed, and the banks of the river are so easily defensible by entrenchments manned by militia regiments; the road to Philadelphia would so clearly expose the invading army to a flank attack from Hooker, that it is not likely to be attempted by a man of General Lee's acknowledged prudence. There remains Pittsburg, the great foundry of the North, whence issue the armadas that swarm the Mississippi, and the guns that man the defences of Washington. Lee would lead his troops through a wonderfully fertile tract of country. The invading army would find there horses, clothes, and provisions. Pittsburg itself might easily be fortified and held against a very superior force, and the Confederates once there, the Northern union would be split in two. Communications between the Eastern and Western States would be impeded, and a footing would be gained for negotiations with the North-west. But here, again, so long as Hooker's army remains undestroyed the attempt would be attended with risks almost unjustifiable in the case of the Confederate general; and we are inclined to look elsewhere for the immediate results of General Lee's advance.

The object of this move we take to be, partly a foraging incursion, partly a serious onslaught on Hooker's army. The advance into Pennsylvania has all the character of a gigantic raid. The invading force is composed principally of cavalry, a couple of regiments of infantry—probably a portion of that "foot cavalry" which Jackson trained to such perfection—and a detachment of horse artillery. As it moves on, it collects provisions and stores, and sends them rapidly to the rear. Great trains of supplies hurried in endless stream across the Potomac into Virginia, attest, at least, one object of the foray. Moreover, an important advantage is gained to the South by the fact that the Federal Administration is unable, with all its vaunted power, to protect its own frontier, and that the panic at Washington and all the great cities of the North deprives Hooker of all hope of reinforcements. The Army of the Potomac is smaller by 40,000 or 50,000 men than when it fought the battle of Chancellorsville. Even then it failed to make head against a Confederate force of less than half its strength. But General Lee has been greatly strengthened. Longstreet's corps has closed up; the roads are fit for rapid movements, and we expect a crushing blow at Hooker's army. The last accounts from the North indicate some such project. Lee's army is reported as moving towards the Federal position in three heavy columns: the left, under Longstreet, by way of Leesburg, threatens the line of retreat upon Washington; the centre, under Ewell, through Thoroughfare Gap, upon Manassas; the right following Hooker's retreat through Occoquan. Everything seems to point to a great action for the defence of Washington and the safety of Hooker's army, not very far from the old battle-yard of Bull Run. The Confederate army is strong in artillery and cavalry, flushed with victory, confident in its sure supremacy proved in a hundred fights, and devoted to its leader. Hooker's forces are demoralized by defeat, and distrustful of their commander. We can hardly doubt what the issue will be in the event of a battle taking place. And this time we have every reason to hope that if victory inclines to the Confederate arms, it will be decisive of the contest in Virginia for months to come. For the present the campaign has opened auspiciously enough for the Confederate arms. The Shenandoah is cleared. Half a dozen important Northern towns are in the possession of Confederate troops. Washington, Philadelphia, and New York are in a fever panic. Hooker has only extricated his army by forced marches, which have cost him hundreds of men, and an enormous amount of stores. These are the first-fruits of General Lee's advance. Another week we confidently expect will bring us news of still more important events and greater triumphs to the Confederate glory.

British Security and Yankee Impunity.

No protests seem to warn, and no promises to bind the Federal Government. We had hoped that it had learned at last that English feeling will not allow the Ministers of England, no matter how complaisant, no matter how servile may be their own attitude towards the North, to regard with indifference the violation of territorial sovereignty of this country. We had hoped that Mr. Seward would at last take care that his solemn promise to respect in future the maritime jurisdiction of Great Britain, and to abstain from hostile operations within gunshot of her shores, would be observed by the cruisers bearing the Federal flag. But we were mistaken; and a most signal outrage, committed within a mile of the shore of a British possession, has taught us that the Government of the United States either thinks that any insult may with safety be offered to Great Britain, or is unable to command the obedience of its own officers. In either case it is true that Lord Russell should awake to a sense of his duties and responsibilities, and should inform the Federal Government that if instant and ample satisfaction be not accorded, Great Britain will take the law into her own hands, and proceed to capture the ship commanded by the offender, to try him, and to inflict upon him punishment according to her laws for a crime committed within her jurisdiction.

On the 29th May, the British vessel Margaret and Jessie, from Charleston for Nassau, with a load of cotton, was chased by a Federal man-of-war. So long as the vessels were on the high seas, the chase was perfectly legitimate; and if the fugitive had been taken she would have been justly condemned for a breach of blockade. But the enemy continued to chase and fire upon her after she had come within 250 yards of a British shore, and when the gun-boat was herself within a mile of that shore. This water was as much within British jurisdiction as is the county of Rutland; and in carrying on hostilities there, the American captain committed precisely the same offence as if he had driven the crew of the vessel ashore, followed, attacked, and fought with them on British ground. His missiles went ashore, and terrified the peaceable inhabitants; it is said that three men—the fireman of the Margaret and Jessie, and two fishermen—were hurt by them. If these men should die, the American captain will be guilty of murder; and it is the duty of Lord Russell to demand his surrender, and have him tried and hanged for the assassination of British subjects within the territorial sovereignty of Great Britain. If no death follows, still in attempting to capture the vessel within British waters the American has been guilty of a crime for which the British Government is bound to exact a signal reparation; and in firing upon her, with the intention of killing her crew, or some of them, if a British jury should find that he had such an intention, he has been guilty of the capital crime of attempt to murder. The act presents a twofold aspect. It is a heinous breach of international law, perpetrated by a Federal officer against the peace of a neutral Power; it is also a heinous crime by British law, committed within the jurisdiction of her Britannic Majesty. And it is not easy to conceive that any reparation, short of the surrender of the criminal to be dealt with by British law, can satisfy the rightful claims and vindicate the insulted sovereignty of this country. It is exactly as if the Tuscarora had fired upon the Nashville in the port of Southampton, or were to attack the Gibraltar in the Mersey. We wish that it were possible to hope that Lord Russell would act in this matter as the honour of England and the safety of Englishmen imperatively require. But unhappily that Minister has always shown himself more anxious to keep on good terms with the American Minister than with his own countrymen, and more solicitous for the interests of the United States than for the dignity of Great Britain; and as he has acted on former occasions, so, we make no question, he will act now. He will ask nothing; or he will ask without earnestness, and submit to a refusal without an endeavour to enforce compliance.

We have the less hope of any vindication of British rights in this case, that a correspondence recently published has shown that the Foreign Secretary considers his duty fulfilled by a spirited remonstrance against the wrongful acts of the United States, even when most flagrant and most deliberate; and is quite satisfied to receive from Mr. Seward an answer which concedes the justice of all Lord Russell's arguments, while quietly announcing the determination of the Federal Government to persevere in the course which the English Minister has so forcibly denounced. On the 24th of April Lord Russell wrote to Lord Lyons, instructing him to protest against the interruption of British trade with Matamoras, on the plea that the goods carried thither were intended to be transferred to the Texan frontier. His Lordship said:—"It is an impression widely spread and deeply felt that it is the intention of the American Government, by captures without cause, by delays of adjudication, by wanton imprisonment of the master and part of the crew of captured vessels, to put a stop to the British trade to Matamoras altogether. The trade to Matamoras is, however, a perfectly legitimate trade. It is carried on from New York, as it is from London and Liverpool. To pretend that some goods carried to Matamoras may be afterwards transported across the frontier to Texas, does not vitiate the legitimate character of that trade."

These were spirited words, if Lord Russell had intended to act up to them; to tolerate no evasion and no equivocation on the part of the Federal Government, but firmly to insist on the legitimacy of the trade with Matamoras, and to protect British vessels concerned in that trade. But it has already become evident that he has no such intention. On the 12th of May Mr. Seward informed Lord Lyons, in reply to the above communication, that the trade with Matamoras had grown up since the war, was intended to feed a trade across Texas, and was therefore liable to suspicion. He did not deny in words that goods intended for a neutral port do not become liable to seizure by reason of their subsequent destination; but he allowed it to be understood that the Federal Government intended to seize all vessels bound for Matamoras on suspicion that their cargoes were intended to be landed on the side of the Rio Grande. As this is a suspicion which, in the nature of things, can seldom or never be proved or disproved, Mr. Seward's language virtually amounted to an intimation that the Federal Government would by any means that might be necessary "put a stop to the British trade to Matamoras altogether." And how has the British Ministry dealt with this insolent announcement? Have they insisted on explanations? Have they threatened resistance? Have they despatched a force to Matamoras? Have they expressed themselves to Parliament in terms of becoming indignation? No—on the 29th June the Solicitor-General was instructed to get up and explain that from the peculiar situation of the port of Matamoras the Americans might reasonably suspect that ships sailing thither might intend to land their cargoes on the Texian shore of the Rio Grande, and therefore we had no right to complain that all such ships were seized on suspicion of such intent. The trade to Matamoras, therefore, declared by Lord Russell on the 24th of April to be legitimate, is declared by the Solicitor-General, two months later, to be without the protection of the British flag, simply because it is found to be exceedingly inconvenient to the Federal Government. After this, we need hardly hope that the piratical outrage of the 29th May will receive punishment. Lord Russell will write an elaborate despatch, proving the unlawfulness of the act, and declaring that Great Britain cannot allow such proceedings. Mr. Seward will admit the accuracy of Lord Russell's legal knowledge, but reply that a blockade-runner is an object of suspicion even in British waters, or something equally relevant; and there the matter will rest. And if the citizens of Nassau object to being murdered by American shells fired upon their shore, we can only recommend them to remove inland or have their houses made bomb-proof; for they need expect no protection from the Foreign-office, so long as they lie under the displeasure of Admiral Wilkes and his superiors at Washington.

THE STRATEGY OF THE WAR. *

THERE probably never was a war which excited the attention of so vast an audience, and with which the interests and sympathies of the civilized world have been so closely identified as the war between the Federal and Confederate States of North America. And notwithstanding the tendency to exaggeration conspicuous in Northern reports and the difficulty of obtaining reliable data from the South, we doubt if there ever was a war of which the principal episodes and general results were so universally appreciated. The extraordinary political activity of the people engaged in the struggle, and the ready enterprise of their press in a great measure account for the large amount of information possessed by foreigners with regard to the operations in the field. But, beyond this, the importance of the issues involved in the conflict, and the fact that we live in the days of steam presses and electric telegraphs, have compelled almost every political observer to become an attentive spectator of the great drama being played out in the Western World, and to some extent a military critic. A battle has its millions of readers now, where fifty years ago the bulk of the people knew little about it, save by the ringing of the parish bells, or a proclamation from the municipal authorities. Every advance or retreat is scanned with as much eagerness as if the theatre of war were but a few miles off, and military reading is decidedly a popular amusement. How few Englishmen there are who have a distinct idea of the operations in the Peninsula, who can tell off-hand what French general commanded at Talavera, and who won Albuera; who can convey any adequate description of Wellington's successes and failures and final triumphs. Yet the battles in America are household words with us. Bull Run, the Chickahominy, Fredericksburg, are in everybody's mouth; and the future historian of the war will hardly give a more ample, or, on the whole, a more truthful account of the battles that have made these names classical in the history of America, than may be bought and studied at this moment in the penny press. But to gather up the broken threads of the plans of the rival commanders; to give definiteness and form and sequence to the operations; to show that the war has been something more than a series of gigantic and haphazard duels, of which the sole or principal result has been a bloody list of casualties: there is required some acquaintance with the rules of military art; some experience in military movements; and it is here that the sphere of the historian begins. Captain Chesney, whose recognised qualifications for giving us a valuable narrative of the American campaigns, render his work on the recent battles in Virginia and Maryland a most acceptable contribution to the military literature of the day, has exactly supplied the want alluded to. Bringing to bear on his work the historical knowledge of a student and the theory of a scientific officer he has succeeded in giving us a connected account of the operations of 1862, which is sufficient for the purpose of any general reader, at the same time that he has explained practically how it is that the North, with its numerous armies, its fine matériel, its superiority, in fact, in everything but the morale of the soldiers and the skill of the officers, has yet failed in half-a-dozen campaigns to get possession of Richmond, or even to illustrate the cause for which it is fighting by one signal and undisputed victory. "The reasons of this series of successes," writes Captain Chesney, "are not far to seek, for we find on their side a divided command opposed to unity of action; masses of men in arms without military esprit or discipline, meeting an army entitled to the name by the subordinate spirit, as well as by the valour of its soldiers; loud threats and idle bluster encountered by firmness and steadfast endurance; finally, a contempt for the principles of war on the one hand against a marked use of them on the other." So much for the general aspect of the two armies. But the difference in their internal economy was still more marked. The Federal battalion was a political rather than a military formation. At its head was some political adventurer who dispensed its commissions amongst his party friends; the question of fitness never arose. All that was sought on the one side was party support, on the other pay or importance. The consequence was that the army was officered, from brigadier-generals down to ensigns, by men in no degree better qualified to command than the rank and file. In cases where a little more self-respect was shown, the officers were elected by men who, of course, took care to let them feel the obligation. All these battalions, hastily levied and equipped, were marched off to headquarters, where there was no general staff to superintend their redistribution and subsequent formation; so that when McDowell and even McClellan took command, the Federal army was a mere congeries of independent battalions, who had grouped themselves almost spontaneously about some state official. On the other hand, the troops were well equipped and armed, and supplied with a magnificent artillery. Their physique was excellent, their individual aptitude for soldiering undoubted. The Southern army shared to some extent the vices of the same hasty formation. The volunteer principle, according to the testimony of General Bragg and others, long after the commencement of the war, on more than one occasion, seriously impeded the operations and jeopardized the safety of the army. But the social system of the South supplied her army with a very different set of officers;—men accustomed, and, as it were, born to command. Of the well-trained and highly-skilled officers of the regular United States' army, if not the large majority, certainly the most distinguished, were Southerners. The Government from the first retained the commissioning of the different regiments, from the rank of second lieutenant, in its own hands; and substituted for the State volunteering a rigorous conscription, which secured a large and permanent army without the debilitating influences of excessive bounties, or the dangerous limitations of service which so frequently impaired the efficiency of Northern armies at a critical period. In point of equipment, the South, however, was decidedly inferior. The Government of the United States had the arsenals of Europe open to it. The Southern Confederacy was limited to its own resources, and the weapons it could acquire from the enemy. For months this disparity exercised an important influence upon the operation of the war, but at this moment the Confederates are as well armed and equipped as their opponents.

In reviewing the events of the campaigns of 1862, Capt. Chesney defends the plans of General McClellan from the criticisms with which he has been assailed by Northern writers, and justifies his choice of the York Town Peninsula as the line of advance upon Richmond. The direct road from Washington to the Confederate Capitol passes through a tract of country singularly unfitted for the operations of a large army. Thickly covered with virgin forests, sparsely populated, with a heavy soil, and roads rendered almost impassable by a heavy day's rain, with three or four rivers running east and west, each of them offering excellent positions for an army acting on the defensive, the 150 miles of country between Washington and Richmond presented extraordinary obstacles to the invader, and although the railway communication to a great extent got rid of the difficulties of transport, the fact that the whole supplies of the army depended on a single line of railway which might at any time be cut by an enterprising enemy, neutralized this advantage. Leaving Washington, therefore, secured against a coup de main by a formidable chain of defences, which Captain Chesney likens to the lines of Torres Vedras round Lisbon, McClellan determined to transport his army to within seventy miles of the Confederate Capital, and land them at the extremity of the York Town Peninsula. Once landed, the York and James Rivers would afford them excellent bases of supplies; and the army, overbearing all opposition, fed from the rivers, and supported by its gunboats on either flank, would march direct upon Richmond. McClellan's first disappointment was the disclosure of his plans. Long before his orders were given, they were anticipated by the Southern generals, who changed front, withdrew from Manassas, and called up reinforcements to Richmond. His second disappointment was the reduction of the force by some 40,000 men, and the breaking up of the army into four distinct corps d'armée on the old Imperial system. This formation sensibly weakened his authority, and undoubtedly did much to frustrate his plans. Simultaneously with McClellan's change of base, McDowell advanced directly upon the Rappahannock and Fredericksburg. It was McClellan's intention that, sooner or later, this division should effect a junction with his right wing by way of Hanover Court House. But McDowell, either through the jealousy of Mr. Stanton or the fears of Mr. Lincoln, was never allowed to go far from Washington, and when subsequently Jackson made his bold advance upon the Shenandoah Valley, and shattered Milroy's, Banks', and Fremont's forces, McDowell was hastily recalled. For all practical assistance to McClellan, his corps might have been in Washington. Into the details of the campaign on the Chickahominy there is no need to enter. They are fresh in the memory of our readers; and Captain Chesney does not add largely to our information respecting them, but his judgment upon McClellan's conduct is that which is entertained generally by military critics in this country, namely, that by his excessive caution McClellan more than once threw away great opportunities. The first occasion was two or three days after the landing when this great army of 110,000 men found itself arrested by the York Town lines crossing the Rappahannock, held by General Magruder, with a force which Captain Chesney estimates at 12,000, but which we are enabled to fix positively at 5,000 men. This small force detained McClellan some three weeks until reinforcements came up. And it certainly implies an extraordinary want of dash on the part of the invaders, that they should have been imposed upon by the bold front Magruder put on, and the exaggerated accounts of the strength of his force; while it speaks strongly for the skill and courage of the Confederate General and troops. Another opportunity missed was the interval between the battle of Fair Oaks and the battles of the Chickahominy, when the Confederates, after a hard and indecisive fight, attended with considerable loss on both sides, were greatly inferior in numbers to his own army. Of the battles of the Chickahominy, Captain Chesney gives a very elaborate account, and perhaps the most accurate that has yet been published; but here again he over-estimates the strength of the Confederate forces.

* A Military View of the Recent Campaigns in Maryland and Virginia. By Captain C. E. Chesney, R.E., Professor of Military History at Sandhurst College. London: Smith, Elder, and Co. 1863.

The battle of the Chickahominy introduces Stonewall Jackson, and one of the best chapters in the book is that in which Captain Chesney portrays the military character of the dead hero, and describes the wonderful skill and daring vigour of the movements by which he has won himself a place beside the greatest generals of any age. Jackson had been detached to the lower part of the Shenandoah Valley to watch General Banks's force, and had been compelled to retire by the advance of Fremont in his rear. Jackson had but 15,000 men under his command, yet with this small force he contrived to inflict a series of stunning blows on both Banks and Fremont. Early in May he fell upon the brigades of Generals Milroy and Schenck, and entirely defeated them. Contented with this blow, and leaving Fremont to collect his scattered forces, he turned northward, fell upon the advance of Banks's column at Front Royal, defeated Banks himself at Winchester, and drove him across the Potomac. "These brilliant operations of Jackson," writes Captain Chesney, "by which he had delivered that county from three different forces, each about equal to his own army, bear comparison with the ever glorious week of victories of Napoleon in 1814, when he divided and routed corps of the allies advancing on Paris in numbers quite overwhelming, had those generals also neglected the common-sense principles of war, by separating their armies so dangerously, that they contrived to be always weakest at the point of attack." With the defeat of Banks' and Fremont's corps, and the consequent panic at Washington, Jackson's work in the Shenandoah Valley was done. And now, carrying his men right across Virginia, by the Virginian central railroad, through the Blue Mountains, he suddenly flung himself on the right flank of McClellan's army, almost before the Federals knew of his departure. How greatly his bold advance contributed to the retreat of the army of the Chickahominy, and to the change of base to James' Landing for strategic reasons, is well known.

We have not space to follow up the movements of the year, to trace out the disasters of Pope and Burnside, and recount the operations which led to the invasion of Maryland by the Confederates, to the battles of South Mountain and Antietam Creek, and the subsequent retreat of Lee. All of these, Captain Chesney details succinctly and lucidly. But again he seems to us greatly to overrate the forces under General Lee's command. He does justice to McClellan's organizing power, to the confidence he had inspired in the minds of the Federal soldiery. But he is of opinion, in which we fully concur, that with a little more activity Harper's Ferry might have been saved, and that if McClellan had advanced along the Potomac, he would have had a better chance of striking a decisive blow at the invading army. The attack upon the hills above Fredericksburg by Burnside, and Hooker's subsequent advance across the Rappahannock, are also discussed by Captain Chesney; and in both he exposes the obvious errors of the Federal commanders, and lauds the ability and tactical skill of the Confederate General-in-chief. But he cannot absolve General Lee from the charge of want of vigour in allowing Burnside's army to cross the Rappahannock, after the terrible defeat at Fredericksburg. No doubt "the basis of real defensive action is a readiness to take the offensive at the right opportunity." But there must, we believe, have been good reasons for Lee's inaction. And from our own knowledge of the forces that Burnside still had at his disposal, from the value of every life to the Confederate cause, from the strong probability that Burnside would attack again, and the fact, that Lee by becoming the assailant, would throw away the advantage of an almost impregnable position, we are inclined to believe Lee only acted prudently in not risking his forces.

Captain Chesney's narrative is full of spirited sketches of the principal actors in this great drama, and displays a wonderful knowledge of locality and detail. To the military student, or to the political reader, it will be alike interesting and useful. It will give valuable information to both; but it will teach the former especially, that the rules of war are changed by no circumstances, and that while a genius like Napoleon may know how to transgress them with safety, men of the ordinary stamp of Northern Generals expiate their contempt of them by disgrace to themselves and destruction to their armies.

MAGAZINES FOR JULY.

FRASER has an article on "Liberty of Criticism, and the Law of Libel," a subject which deserves attention. We have lately had rather more than the average number of actions for libel against newspapers, and in such actions it is notorious the newspaper has by far the worst chance. Of this we do not complain, for where the press is so powerful as it is in this country, it is necessary that the law should be somewhat partial and side with the public. But there must be a limit to this partiality, and that limit was reached in the case of Campbell v. Spottiswoode. It was in that instance held that the criticism might be the sincere opinion of the journalist, but still a libel, unless the facts were of such a character that no one could reasonably arrive at a different conclusion. We have, this week, had another illustration of this point. The proprietor of a fortune-telling almanack brought an action for libel against a gentleman for charging him with imposture, and the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff with twenty shillings damages, but the judge refused to certify for costs. It is time we remembered and acted on the maxim of Lord Ellenborough, who held that without liberty of criticism "we cannot have purity, either of taste or morals." Fraser has a criticism on Mr. Kinglake's book, which is not the less severe and effective because its sharp censures are mingled with praises. "Our Modern Youth" is an essay on the fast manners of young people, and points out some evil results which are too evident, but, it may be, past remedy. The current number, which is an excellent one, has also articles on "Indian Prospects," on "Tacitus and his Times," and a good paper on natural history, entitled "British Snails and their Houses."

A Frenchman being asked whether he found English dinners as execrable as they are popularly believed to be in France, replied that he found them altogether excellent, both as to ingredients and cooking, but that no one ought to eat an English dinner at a sitting. Every course, even the sweets, is a pièce de résistance. This very well expresses the kind of feeling we have in respect to the current number of Blackwood. All the articles are of average merit. Some of them are above the average; but all of them are heavy—not dull. Light literature is altogether eschewed, with the exception of the chapters of "The Perpetual Curate," and even that novel, though very pleasant, is anything but light reading. To recite the titles of the articles is to vindicate our judgment. We find elaborate and instructive contributions on Poland, Italy, Ireland, and Berlin. So far as amusement is concerned, could it be possible to find four more unpromising subjects? We know that Russia oppresses Poland, and we cannot deny that the tales of her oppression are grossly exaggerated, and that the Poles are not without offence in their conduct of the present struggle. Irish topics are always a bore, because no one will write about the fair land without indulging in moral reflections upon the social condition of the Irish. Italy is worse than a bore; for just now it rather ruffles the sweet temper of John Bull. We have gone in for Victor Emmanuel and the kingdom of Italy without the slightest reservation. We have pictured the Piedmontese as white as angels, and the exiled princes as black as devils, and it is aggravating that we are forced to admit that the men of Turin are not without faults, and that the royal exiles are not without virtues. The article on Berlin has the recommendation of not devoting much space to the muddy obscurity of Prussian politics. We are told that the people have confidence in the liberal and constitutional character of the Crown Prince, and look forward with eagerness to the day when the Crown will descend to him by the abdication or decease of the present monarch. We hope for the sake of Prussia, and for the sake of the daughter of England, that this estimate of the character of Prince Frederick William is correct, though it is useless to deny that at present there is no evidence to warrant this opinion. The bright anticipations of the virtues of the heir to the throne of Prussia are prompted by a motive not very creditable to the Prussians. They put them forward to excuse their ready submission to what they are pleased to call the despotism of the King.

There is, however, one paper in Blackwood which, though not light, is eminently readable. We refer to an essay on "Posthumous Reputation," by Sir E. B. Lytton. He considers that mediocre men chiefly pursue the phantom, but that men of first-rate genius are not much troubled about it after middle life. Perhaps it is that such persons have won fame and know its true worth. It is religion, it is the conception of and faith in the life that begins with death, which checks the desire for posthumous reputation. "Thus the dream of fame, so warm and vivid in very early youth, gradually attains its euthanasia among the finest orders of minds, in a kind of serene sense of duty. The more beautiful and beautifying is the nature of the man, the more beauty nature throws into its ideals of duty. So that duty itself loses its hard and austere aspects, and becomes as much the gracious and sweet result of impulses which mellow into habits, as harmony is the result of keys and chords fitted and attuned to music." This charming essay abounds with passages equally brilliant and truthful.

"What to eat, drink, and avoid" is an easier problem to solve than "How much to eat and drink?" Of the importance of the matter any one may be convinced by reading the article entitled "Over-eating and Under-eating" in the Cornhill Magazine. Too much and too little equally result in the starvation of the system. The poor man becomes gouty by reason of his scanty diet; the rich man becomes gouty from indulging in a rich diet. The digestive powers of the poor man are exhausted by being used too little; those of the rich man are enfeebled by being used too much. The Cornhill tells us all this, but it does not tell us how much we ought to eat. To attempt to give such information would be sheer quackery. So many men, so many constitutions, and each constitution requires special treatment. Nor are we without a guide. We never eat or drink too much without being warned of our mistake, but we too often prefer to disregard the warning, to indulge the appetite, and then talk about martyrdom to dyspepsia. The Cornhill notices a curious and unlooked-for effect of the American war on our manufacturing population. Lancashire is noted for excessive infant mortality, and this is due to mothers being employed out of doors, and therefore not sufficiently attending to the nourishment of their infants. But "during the recent distress, this mortality has become most markedly less, notwithstanding the diminished resources of their parents. The explanation, on the principles laid down, is simple; the mothers are now unemployed, and have time to attend to the feeding of their children; and they are far more skilful at this task than the incompetent persons to whom it is ordinarily confided, by whom the little creatures are, in plain truth, slowly starved in great numbers, or, at least, so weakened as to be unable to resist the slight shocks of disease, particularly of epidemic diseases."

A paper called "Commonplaces on England," is a patriotic endeavour to prove that we are vastly better than our neighbours think us. No doubt about it, yet we must except to some of the writer's conclusions. He says that of all nations in Europe, England is most readily moved by appeals to her sense of honour and duty. We do not deny this, but we do deny that our conduct in regard to America is a sample of our generosity. Certainly all Englishmen of intellect and reputation—and we may add the great body of the intelligent operatives—have felt a hearty and generous interest in the South; but the Government has been permitted for prudential reasons to give virtually aid and comfort to the North, and to refuse the South the simple recognition of her independence. The Cornhill says, "Let any one compare the weight which, in popular estimation, attaches to arguments on the American question drawn from anything which has any plausible grounds to be called a moral principle, with arguments professedly based upon interest. The one would command universal attention; no one would venture even to put forward the other." This is not true in fact, and it is as false in principle. The friends of the South—and they are also the friends of truth and the true friends of England—have persistently set forth the enormous advantages that will result to this country from the independence of the Confederate States. There is nothing immoral in being swayed by motives of interest, when interest and duty are united. "Was Nero a monster?" is an able disquisition on historical evidence. The writer does not whitewash Nero, but shows upon reliable evidence that he was not so bad as he has been represented.

London Society has more than a dozen articles and nearly as many illustrations, and the person who is not amused by this magazine must be in a very sad state indeed. A description of a powder-mill, and an essay on "Dickens's Dogs; or, the Landseer of Fiction," are contributions that deserve special commendation.

For many years there has been a warm contest as to the moral character of Lord Bacon, and the world has felt grateful to Mr. Hepworth Dixon for its successful vindication from the foul calumnies which had obscured it. The discussion of the moral status of Lord Bacon is not exciting enough in these sensational times, and accordingly Baron Liebig, President of the Royal Academy of Science, Munich, has come forward to prove that Lord Bacon, so far from being a great luminary of science, was, in fact, a humbug and an impostor. The matter does not very greatly surprise us. It is so easy to assail a reputation, it is so easy to throw mud, that all great men in their turn are denounced by critics who pant for notoriety. Shakespeare, Milton, and Newton have been severally charged with plagiarism, and we see no reason why Bacon, despite the wonderful service he has rendered to the world, should not be vilified. We are only surprised that such rubbish should be published in such an ably-conducted magazine as Macmillan's, and do not wonder the editor felt it necessary to append an apologetic note. Baron Liebig's criticism is puerile in the extreme, and though German students, under the influence of beer and tobacco, can swallow almost any quantity of metaphysical trash, we think even they will decline to endorse the sensational twaddle of Baron Liebig.—Those who desire to read an excellent defence of the conduct of the Turin Government, in reference to Southern Italy and brigandage, will do well to consult an article in Macmillan's, by Signor Saffi. He contends that brigandage will last as long as the French occupy Rome; yet he admits that the centralization of the Piedmontese Government has "retarded the progress of administrative reforms and local self-government, and created discontent in all provinces."

A SOUTHERN HISTORY OF THE WAR.

THE first volume of Mr. E. A. Pollard has been republished in New York and London, by C. B. Richardson of the former, and Bacon and Company of the latter place. In its present form it is a handsome volume in the American style of printing and binding, illustrated by good engravings of President Davis, Generals Lee, Beauregard, and Stonewall Jackson. As we gave an abstract of this book from the original Richmond edition in our impressions of December 18th and 25th, we need not repeat the opinions we then expressed. We learn from the Richmond papers that the second volume is now in press, and will shortly be, if it has not already been, issued by Messrs. West and Johnston of Richmond. The Enquirer states that this second volume "is much more carefully finished and elaborated than the previous volume. In addition to a complete memoir of Turner Ashby, it contains a full and accurate resumé of events down to the late battles around Fredericksburg."

OUR SOUTHERN CORRESPONDENCE.

CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA, May 20.

Since my last, a change has taken place in the affairs of the Confederacy. Then, comparative quiet reigned throughout the land—the calm preceding the storm; now we are encompassed with dangers, which threaten to put the spirit of our people to a test which it has not yet been called upon to endure. It is a peculiarity of the Southern mind, however, that it rises superior to misfortune, and derives strength and patience from every reverse. Whether this be the result of a universal religious sentiment pervading the masses, an unbounded faith in our ultimate success, or confidence in the strong arm of military power, it is unnecessary to consider; but it is an unquestionable fact that, in the mental elasticity of the people, we have the secret of that national calmness which attends every vicissitude of the war. The mercury in our joy-ometer rests always at a temperate heat.

It might be supposed that, following the example of the North, the receipt of the late tidings of victory over General Hooker on the Rappahannock, would have made the nation wild with joy; but a stranger would be struck by the utter absence of everything like demonstration or exhilaration. On the contrary, the Confederacy is in mourning. The loss of Stonewall Jackson is one which no victory can compensate, no advantage replace. All feel that a hiatus has been created in our ranks, which an army could hardly fill, and it will be long ere his memory or influence will fail to exercise their effect upon the country, especially that portion of it which is in the field.

As Jackson lived, so he died—a brave, consistent Christian soldier—a willing martyr in the cause to which he devoted his life. From other sources you may be already aware of the circumstances of his death. He had gone some distance in front of his line of skirmishers on Saturday evening, and was returning about eight o'clock. Having previously given orders to fire at anything coming up the road, the staff and couriers by whom he was attended were mistaken for the cavalry of the enemy, and received the contents of a regiment of rifles belonging to his own corps. The Chief of the Staff, Colonel Crutchfield, was wounded, and Captain Boswell and two couriers were killed. Jackson was struck by three balls; one passing through the left arm, shattering the bone just below the shoulder; a second between the elbow and wrist, and a third through the palm of the right hand. The enemy, only fifty yards distant, now opened a furious fire, and in bearing him to the rear, two of the litter-bearers were shot down. Frequent inquiries were made by the soldiers, "Who have you there?" but the General told the surgeon, "Do not tell the troops I am wounded." After reaction, the injured arm was amputated. One of his aides then asked him how he felt. "Very comfortable," was the response—"Order the infantry forward to the front." He subsequently made the remark, "If I had not been wounded, or had an hour more of daylight, I would have cut off the enemy from the road to the United States' Ford, and we would have had them entirely surrounded, and they would have been compelled to surrender or cut their way out. They had no other alternative. My troops may sometimes fail in driving the enemy from a position, but the enemy always fail to drive my men from a position."

On the following Sunday, a week afterwards, pneumonia having set in, it was apparent that he was sinking rapidly. His wife informed him of his condition, and told him he was going to die. His reply was, "Very good, very good; it's all right. I consider these wounds a blessing. They were given me for some good and wise purpose, and I would not part with them if I could." He then sent messages to all the Generals, and expressed a wish to be buried near the scene of his professional labours in Lexington, Virginia. During the delirium which ensued before his death, his last words, like those of other great captains, were of his troops. "Tell General A. P. Hill to prepare for action—tell Major Hawks (his commissary), to forward provisions to the men." The remains were received in Richmond on the 11th, and on the 12th, the funeral obsequies took place in the presence of thousands who had assembled to pay their sorrowing tribute to the memory of the departed chieftain."

In examining the policy of the Confederate leaders, you will observe that from the first, the South has stood strictly on the defensive. Even our advance into Maryland was a movement to cover operations against Harper's Ferry. Hence it is that thus far we have been so eminently successful in hurling back, with comparatively small numbers, the overwhelming forces of the enemy. Skill and strategy, it is true, have done their part in achieving success, but the main element of victory has always been the impetuous, obstinate, hard-handed onsets of our men. Besides this, they have a spirit which is indomitable—a spirit that clings to them in storm and sunshine, in victory or defeat, on the march or in the camp, amid the blessings of plenty or the sufferings of hunger. General Lee depends upon this feeling, and he has not yet been disappointed. It was this in the recent battle at Chancellorsville which enabled him with one army, inferior in numbers—say 70,000 against 130,000—to whip two in detail on three successive days, on a line of battle twenty miles in length, and re-establish the status disturbed by the Federal demonstration.

If the question is asked, why these great successes are not followed up, the answer is—because we gain nothing by such a step. If we flank the enemy, he may either give battle, or fall back upon or across the Potomac. The country between the two rivers has been eaten bare. Strategically, it is of no importance. Our object is to defend Richmond, and at the same time preserve a short line of communication with our base of supplies. Nowhere nearer the Potomac can we do this as well as at Fredericksburg, and if forced to fall back, we can always find two or three resting places between that point and the Capitol, equally as strong as the one which we now occupy.

Northern journals, with their usual extravagance, have probably given you glowing accounts of the Yankee raid around our army, by General Stoneman. From a bushel of chaff, you may select a grain or two of wheat. The results of that expedition may be summed up in a few words—a long ride, much fatigue, a few miles of railroad destroyed (and rebuilt in less than a week), some negroes and horses stolen—a curiosity to see the steeples of Richmond briefly gratified, a Confederate race enjoyed, a few men killed and wounded, and finally, some domestic éclat, and a "large scare." Had General Hooker retained his cavalry he might have done far better—possibly have prevented Jackson's surprise of his flank and rear, and thus changed the complexion of the fight. It is the first instance of "dash" of which the Eastern army has yet been guilty, and while we blame ourselves, we give due credit to the enemy for his enterprise.

If the Northern editors speak fairly, they will tell you of a similar but more successful undertaking which the Confederates now have in hand along the line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. Millions of dollars worth of property are being captured or destroyed, and that line of travel and subsistence is interrupted for months to come.

A Yankee, or rather Western raid of far greater importance than any the enemy have yet attempted is that of Colonel Grierson through the State of Mississippi. Starting from the army of Tennessee the daring Colonel passed entirely around our forces, and making "good time" as he entered and left the various villages and towns of the cotton States, has at last reached New Orleans. As he destroyed but little personal property, though an abundance of small articles were stolen from the ladies, the object of the movement was undoubtedly simply demoralization. In other words, to render negro property unsafe, and cause their owners to run their slaves to places of safety, thus disturbing the cultivation of the provision crops, which, at the present time, are our main reliance.

Still another cavalry demonstration was made from the army of Tennessee in the direction of Atlanta, Georgia, by a force of 1,400 men, but before it reached Rome, in that State it was overtaken, after a chase of two hundred miles, by a regiment of five hundred men under General Forrest, one of our most dashing leaders, and the whole party captured. One of the Federal officers thereupon became excessively angry and denounced the whole affair as "a heavy case of swindling." He said that when Forrest was negotiating for the surrender he suddenly appeared to get very mad, and swore he would wait no longer; that he would rather kill the whole of them than not; then ordered his couriers immediately to direct the commanders of four separate batteries to place them on separate hills, and ordered the colonels of four separate regiments to form their commands at particular points in line of battle. The couriers dashed off as if they were actually going to have these orders executed, and as they did so Forrest told them his signa gun would be fired in ten minutes, "when, in fact," said the officer, "the rascals had but two little cannon and not more than half a regiment of men all told, mounted on horses and that had fed on the Yankee leavings, and that Forrest showed himself to be nothing but a d—d swindler."

In the beginning of this letter, I adverted to the fact that the Confederacy was threatened with dangers which it had not before experienced. One of our most important political and military points is Vicksburg, which, with Port Hudson, now constitutes the key to the navigation of the Mississippi. With that great river opened to New Orleans, the West would have an outlet for its grain, be relieved of the pressure now weighing upon its prosperity, and encouraged to yield more liberally its valuable aid to the Lincoln Administration—for it is a fact which must be patent to even European eyes that that section has long been wavering in its allegiance to the East. Like the South, it is a natural antagonist of New England, while it is a natural ally of our own section. Hence, under present circumstances, to open its burdened markets to the world would tend to heal its dissensions and secure its influence.

Again, the opening of the Mississippi would divide the Confederacy, while it would afford facilities to the enemy for penetrating the rich cotton States along its border. They expect thus to reach "the heart of the rebellion." To this end the Federals have for months bent their best endeavours. Vicksburg has been besieged and bombarded without ceasing and without avail. The noble little city has withstood the terrors of shell and round-shot, until even the women and children have become so habituated to the roar of cannon and the falling of angry missiles, that they walk the street in calmness and regard a battle as an exhibition. Canals have been built, rivers ascended and descended, and attempt after attempt made to capture the place, but all without success; and the swamps and cotton fields opposite are rank with the malaria of the mouldering bodies of thousands who have died in the undertaking.

During the present season, however, another effort has been made, which promises more serious results. The Federal army under General Grant is attempting to capture Vicksburg by a demonstration in the rear. A force has succeeded in getting on land below Grand Gulf, from which point it will doubtless advance against the city, under the protection of the fleet, which will move up the river on a line parallel with the road occupied by Grant's army. This gives the latter the benefit of the gunboats while attacking our defences. In the meantime the fleet from above can approach and engage our upper batteries, and thus the battle will extend along our whole front. For the information of your readers, I will add that Grand Gulf is just below the mouth of the Big Black river, on the eastern bank of the Mississippi. The Big Black is a navigable stream that rises in the northern part of Mississippi, runs parallel with the Yazoo as far south as the neighbourhood of Vicksburg, leaving the city a few miles to the west of it, and emptying into the Mississippi some thirty or forty miles below. The Yazoo empties into the Mississippi some twelve miles above Vicksburg. The Big Black has long been one of the routes spoken of by the Yankees as a way of reaching the rear of the city. Severe fighting has occurred on the south or east side of the Big Black between several of our brigades and the enemy, in which we were forced to retire across the river, but we have now established a strong line of defence. Previous to this event Vicksburg had no defences on the south other than the river, the swamps, and the hills. The enemy's line is at least 10 miles long, and his situation will become hourly more precarious, from the hovering of considerable bodies of Confederate troops upon his flank and rear, to say nothing of the indomitable forces in front. By a recent movement Grant has captured Jackson, the capital of Mississippi, but as suddenly evacuated it, leaving behind a large number of his wounded. His forces, some 40,000 strong, were encountered by a small body of our troops—9,000—under General Joseph Johnston; but the latter, after fighting desperately through the streets of the city, were compelled to fall back. The accounts from the West, however, are exceedingly meagre, and notwithstanding the oft-repeated assertions that "our military men are sanguine that a signal victory awaits our arms," the people—perhaps it is from ignorance of the situation of affairs—feel desponding as to the result. A great battle is certainly to be fought soon. If there is no weak point in our defences, the enemy must take the bull by the horns; and when that hour arrives, the contest between the unprincipled horde of invaders and an exasperated people fighting for all they hold dear will be fearful. We may be defeated, but depend upon it we shall not stay so. There is a terrible vigour in the strong right arm of the Confederacy, and a heart behind it that "beats with a pulse like a cannon." The struggle may be prolonged and thousands of lives immolated, but we know that the star of our destiny is steadily approaching the zenith, and that the hosts of Heaven are on our side. PERSONNE.

THE GULF DEPARTMENT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA, June 7.

SINCE the assault on the Confederate works, May 27, when Banks was severely repulsed, the Federal army has actually been idle, so far as fighting is concerned, for ten long days. It was reported by the boat from Port Hudson, yesterday, and by telegram, that Banks intended to renew the attack, but to this hour we have not heard that he has done so. During the ten days he has erected and completed a line of earthworks extending four and a half miles from the upper battery to Springfield Landing below, and he has mounted a few more siege guns with the intention of starving out the small but heroic Confederate army, if he cannot carry the position by assault. The Federals industriously circulated through the city, yester evening, the report that Gardner had capitulated; but, advanced as the season is in summer promise, the people here have hardly yet attained a degree of verdancy sufficient to induce them to believe all that is reported—even from "head-quarters."

Grierson has been so much lionized on account of his recent raid through Lower Mississippi, that he thought it would be a good idea to send a few of his terrible cavalry to Clinton, for the purpose of reconnoitering and looking round generally. The result of the tour of observation was as follows:—Captain Perkins, commanding the expedition, was killed; thirty of his men were also killed; forty of them were taken prisoners; and sixty horses were captured. This was last Thursday. The Federals sent to Clinton were much surprised to find there 1500 of Wheeler's cavalry, who served them as indicated above, put them to rout, pursued them nearly to their army, and Banks immediately sent a small force to Baton Rouge, lest the Confederate cavalry should go there, and burn and destroy the army stores collected in that place.

Many of the negroes taken from homes of happiness and comparative comfort during the recent Teche expedition, have now an opportunity of testing the difference between slavery and "freedom." Those who go into the negro regiments are considered only as so much food for powder. The rest are crowded into the cotton presses in this city, are inconceivably filthy and miserable, and are rotting and dying at the rate of from six to ten a day. Will you believe it?—the farce of holding a coroner's inquest (!) over these smothered negroes is daily gone through with. The Federal official organ in this city, in speaking of these negroes as they live (and die) in the cotton presses, says—"The middle passage is NOTHING compared to their present condition." When will the Exeter Hallites in England and America learn that misery, disease, and death are the only aid they have ever yet extended to their pets, the negroes. I give you Banks's official organ's comment on the condition of the "confiscated" contrabands:—

"THE DYING CONTRABANDS—There seems to be a perfect epidemic among the contrabands on Cotton Press street, in the Third District. They are dying very rapidly from diseases contracted through a change of water, diet, condition, and general mode of life. Yesterday the Coroner was called to hold six inquests, and he had already given certificates for the burial of six from the same place. The inhabitants of that portion of the city fear that the stench and foul effluvia arising from the dead, the dying, the diseased, and other causes, will generate sickness in the neighbourhood. It is evident some healthier place and some better discipline are necessary to save these unfortunates from destruction. The middle passage is nothing compared to their present condition."

Of the five or six official orders issued within a week, almost all of them relate to penalties for stealing, or to the restoration of property stolen by Federal soldiers and officers from the planters. One order forbids the swindling of poor labourers out of money to pay for so-called "presents" for their employers. And yet the department (and all connected therewith) is imaculate!

You shall be duly advised of the fall of Port Hudson and the opening of the Mississippi.

THE JESSIE AND MARGARET.

NASSAU, June 6.

A most abominable outrage was committed by the Rhode Island on the steamer Margaret and Jessie, from Charleston, some days since. She was shelled, and a shot sent into her boiler when within 100 yards of the shore. The shelling was continued for several miles along the coast, and the shot falling on land caused no little consternation among the inhabitants of the little fishing settlements. She was at last run ashore, and has since been got off by the wreckers, who demand a high rate of salvage, which the owners will be compelled to pay.

The cotton is much damaged. She was commanded by Captain Wilson, of "Emilie St. Pierre" notoriety.

This case differs from that of the Blanche only in the fact that the Rhode Island did not burn the steamer. We are curious to know what Earl Russell will say to it.

The enclosed letter, published in our local newspapers, is a copy of one addressed to the Yankee Consul here, and shows the system of blockade we are subjected to in a British port. The letter, of course, was not intended for the hands into which it came, but its genuineness is beyond all doubt. If properly represented by our Governor, it may lead to some protection being afforded to our shipping from the Yankee pirates. We are now absolutely without a single gun-boat. We have the Rosario, but she can only be classed as a tub, and her commander seems peculiarly alive to the importance of avoiding any interference with these legal raids of the Yankees.

[The following are the extracts referred to by our correspondent]:—

[Nassau Guardian,"] Wednesday, June 3.

We have to record this evening another unjustifiable outrage committed by a Federal gunboat within the prescribed limits of our shores.

On Saturday last the steamer Margaret and Jessie, Captain Wilson, from Charleston, for this port, was fallen in with by the Federal steamer Rhode Island, off Abaco, and chased until she arrived close to the shore of James Point, Eleuthera.

There would have been no legal cause of complaint had the pursuit and firing ceased as soon as the Margaret and Jessie approached within the distance of three miles from the land; but as she neared the coast, and was only 250 yards off, that is, between the reef and the land, the gunboat, which was not more than from a quarter to half a mile distant, commenced pouring in broadside after broadside—varying the performance with shot, grape, and shell—not only to the imminent danger of all on board (and there were ladies among the passengers), but to the serious alarm of the inhabitants of the island, who suddenly found themselves subjected to a sharp and decisive bombardment. The missiles fired from the Rhode Island ploughed up the earth in various directions, and came in close proximity to, if not actually passing through, dwellings, and driving people to seek refuge behind rocks and other projections. This was kept up for miles, and at length the Margaret and Jessie received a shot through her boiler, and another through her bows, which forced her to take to the beach, then only fifty yards distant. We understand that one of the firemen was injured, and if a fatal result should ensue, it will assuredly be a case of aggravated murder.

Such are the plain facts of this ferocious outrage. No amount of prevarication and shuffling will enable the officers of the Rhode Island to prove that the offence was committed beyond the territorial limits of this colony. There are too many disinterested witnesses to the transaction, whose testimony will out-weigh any combination to pervert its truth. When the same vessel fired into the Sirius a few weeks ago there were no spectators on shore to determine the distance, and the assertion of the commander that he was five miles off was received as conclusive. But the captain of the Sirius, whose character for veracity cannot be impeached, emphatically stated that he was fired at within two miles of the land.

It is high time indeed that the Home Government should act energetically with respect to these aggressions. Certainly the circumstances connected with the attack on the Margaret and Jessie, and on Eleuthera are so flagrant that they cannot well be overlooked; and whilst, no doubt, reparation will be expected and made, yet the intimation should be conveyed also that a repetition of such outrages will not be tolerated. It will require in future not the exercise of forbearance, but of firmness, to prevent a rupture of peaceful relations.

Since penning the above, we have been informed that two men engaged in fishing off Eleuthera were struck by the missiles fired from the gunboat.

The steamer Racoon was specially despatched to Eleuthera on Monday, by the agents of the Margaret and Jessie, Messrs. H. Adderley and Co., in order to render assistance, but the latter had got off the beach, and arrived here yesterday.

To the Editor of the Nassau Guardian.

SIR,—The following letter, addressed to a Yankee resident of this city, was picked up the other day. Correspondence of this nature is not ordinarily intended for the public eye, but when found in the open street, the inference would seem to point to such a glut of this kind of literature, as will more than compensate for the loss of merely one specimen. And this inconvenience is remedied by the publicity now given to the underground mail arrangement, one which doubtless performs its functions with commendable precision, and might be invoked possibly as an efficient auxiliary in extending the facilities for inter-insular communication. Cautious people may object to the perfect freedom with which the neighbouring islands, cays and light-houses are employed for the purpose of experimenting on the rights of neutrals, but these persons will derive their best consolation from a frequent perusal of those doctrines of international law, laid down with such emphasis and clearness by the noble Earl who presides over the Department of Foreign Affairs,—doctrines which have this advantage moreover, that they are made to expand or contract just as the necessities of the case may require.—International law as now construed being little else but international inconsistency. X.

Nassau, May 28, 1863.

United States Gunboat Tioga.

At Sea, April 29, 1863.

My dear Sir,—Failing to find any communication from you at Stirrup Keys, I wrote South West Point, Bahama, by one Jerry Hanna; did you receive it?—requesting you to write me to Abaco Light, employing Hanna as the medium of communication, as I think he can be relied upon.

I have not yet been able to visit A. Light yet, on account of southerly winds and looking up a schooner. I had pretty good information of the President; has she arrived in Nassau yet?

I fell in with the Admiral shortly after despatching that last letter to you. He approved of the suggestion sending our communications to A. Light and Stirrup Keys, employing a schooner showing the American flag.

I made prize of the sloop Justina, master Stevenson, from India River, Florida. The sloop was old and leaky, and blowing fresh, was compelled to take the eight bales of cotton out of her, and destroy her—partly at the suggestion of her former master and owner, and the necessity of the occasion, the captain signing a certificate to that effect, which I copy here, as the fellow will misrepresent the circumstances, so that I write you to have the truth of the matter, and publish it if necessary,—he's a sharp rascal, tried to get a letter into a boat to warn Nassau people of our whereabouts. Found him trying to ascertain our position at sea by getting a meridian altitude of the sun. Shall send the fellow as far North as possible, as generally, however, try and get rid of all prisoners as soon as possible, as I have no room for them, nor can furnish twenty or thirty men with provisions—again, were I to leave the crews aboard the prizes, should have to double and treble the crew in charge, which I cannot well spare.

Then if the fellow will lie in the face of the above, I trust you will set the matter at rest.

I don't know what route the runners—steamers, go and return now. We have not seen one, barring the Norseman, just from Europe.

Did the schooner Sybil arrive all right, purporting to come from Matamoros, Mexico? I begin to suspect those vessels have forged papers. Can you get any clue to them? I know that one schooner I visited from Mexico had regular papers, the forms being printed in New York. We fell in with several vessels going to Nassau for registers.

Any privateers about the Bahamas?

Ah, but how, when, and where do the steamers go and come?—they have got a new route, certain, for I have been all around Nassau for the past two months, and, excepting the Stonewall Jackson, have not seen a smoke.

I have got a clue to some sailing vessels now, which you will hear of.

Look out for that schooner the Tally oh, she is for mischief, so too that little steamer the Norseman, we boarded. The blustering captain of her said, "England was't going to stand that sort of thing any longer."

Any vessels leaving Nassau with coal?

Did you find Dames, and my offer to him, &c. &c.?

Send me all the war newspapers—(Nassau ditto.)

We must keep those fellows stirred up. I try.

Yours, CLARY,
United States' Navy

PARIS TOPICS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, JUNE 30.

There is no doubt that the question of peace or war is in the hands of England at this moment. It is a mistake to suppose that all wars are popular in France;—that in Italy was not, and notwithstanding the elation with which the news of brilliant victories is always received in all countries, and in none more than in France, to this day the Italian war is not popular. There is a feeling which it would be difficult to make Englishmen understand in favour of the temporal power of the Pope, and this feeling has been deeply hurt by the result. Even now in the country places one finds not only old women, but men who remind their hearers that when the Italian campaign was commenced, the Minister of Cultes (Religion) wrote to the bishops that the throne of the Pope was in no way imperilled. It is otherwise with a war in favour of Poland. The old injustice of the partition is remembered; Voltaire's congratulations on the genius which dictated it are forgotten, and the descendants of Frenchmen who welcomed it a hundred years ago as the end of a hopeless anarchy, are now—legitimists, imperialists, and republicans—of one mind to demand the restoration of Polish nationality. It is a popular sentiment which Napoleon III. is unable to resist, it is contrary to the wishes of the Bourse, but if he can obtain the concurrence of England, I should say, rather, if this be forced upon him, he will be obliged to yield to it. The press is almost unanimously in favour of Poland; the atrocities of the Russian troops are daily paraded in its columns, and the fact that these atrocities are equalled by the Poles is carefully suppressed. Every paper in Paris had an account of the hanging of Count Plater; only two mentioned that he had begun by hanging the peasants who refused to take up arms. That these things are allowed to appear clearly proves the readiness of the Government to force upon Russia some measure in favour of Poland. In the thirty years of emigration the Poles have not been idle, and they have secured an amount of sympathy, not undeserved by the chiefs of the emigration, well earned by the very numerous body who have settled here to useful trades, but which the mass of the adventurers who battered on the public was far from meriting. It is, perhaps, the only political question which has united all parties. The legitimist and clerical party see only the schismatical Russian who has systematically persecuted the Catholic religion; the republicans welcome every cause which can be turned to the profit of the revolution; and those whom no party-feeling sways, think only of the redressing of an old but unquestionable wrong. Add to this the fierce hatred of Prussia, equalled only by the traditional enmity to England, which is the common feeling of France, and the calculation, which is already popular, that Prussia will pay the expenses of the war with the frontier of the Rhine. If England holds aloof no one believes in war; if England joins France in this question, it is not doubted that war will be the upshot. Prussia, not Russia, is the real object of attack on this side, and this war will be popular throughout France, where the conduct of the Prussian troops in 1792, 1814, and 1815, has not been forgotten. It will be the glory of the present Emperor to have rubbed off old scores first with Russia, then with Austria, afterwards with Prussia. England only will remain his debtor. For how long? asks the Frenchman. I do not believe that the Emperor would countenance such speculations, but they are ripe.

Of the Paris papers the Presse and the France are the only ones which do not cry out for war, the former because its singularly clever editor-in-chief, M. Emile de Girardin, has invented a solution of his own—free Poland in free Russia; the latter because it represents what would have been called, in the times of Mazarin, the party of the political.

I have given the precedence to the Polish question before speaking of the change of ministers, not ministry. I believe the INDEX was the first paper in Europe to point out with any detail the contemplated changes. That its correspondent did not anticipate the full extent to which they have been carried, nor the names of the new men, may be excused by the fact that they are so thoroughly new men, that the name of not one of them was known out of the bureaucratic circle to any individual in Paris, and those who knew their names were the last to suspect them of being of the stuff of which ministers are made. Their political insignificance is probably the best guarantee for their practical ability as ministers. The public has already named this ministry that of men of business. With such a responsible editor as the present Emperor, a ministry of men of business is perhaps the best that could be found for France. The formation of a new ministry has been speedily followed by a project of administrative reform, of which the importance is indicated by its being deemed worthy of an Imperial rescript. The value of this measure of decentralisation, which on the bases laid down by the Emperor may affect the entire system of administration, a system which dates from the latter half of Louis XIV's reign, can only be appreciated by those who are acquainted with the wheel-within-wheel machinery by which the French Government was worked. De Tocqueville has shown that the Revolution and the first empire only continued and perfected the system of centralization, which the latter monarchy devised. He mentions thirty-two formalities which had to be fulfilled to obtain leave to make some repairs in a village church, and the Emperor speaks of eleven references and two years' delay before an unopposed application can be granted. The abolition of laws and decrees which this measure will necessitate, will be on a scale hardly less vast than would be the purging of our statute books. The 14,711 laws and decrees passed between the year '89 and the dissolution of the Convention, have been far more than doubled since then. The Emperor in doing away with these formalities, which hampered not only all public business, but even private enterprise, makes a first step towards creating a spirit of local self-reliance in France. When the Government no longer claims to be consulted on every trifling measure, the governed will cease to depend upon any initiative but their own.

The belief in a projected mediation in America gains ground in the Paris press, and especially in that portion most hostile to the South, in proportion as it seems to be discredited in England. The Opinion Nationale of last night speaking of the intervention in favour of Poland, of which it is one of the warmest supporters, says:—"Poland is now at our doors. Railways and the telegraph place us in rapid or instantaneous communication with that country, so worthy of our solicitude, and with the aid of steam we could, in a few days, disembark an army on the coast of Samogitia. But one is tempted to believe that the cabinets incline to postpone European questions to those which arise every day in the furthest countries of the globe. We have made war by turns in China and Cochin China, in Mexico, and we seem likely to go next to Japan, and it is now certain that the French Government is about to compromise itself with the Cabinet of Washington, by offering a mediation which we have always opposed, because in our opinion it may carry us further than we can wish to go. An article in the Mémorial Diplomatique, which we reproduce without, of course, accepting its responsibility, gives all the details of the negotiations which are said to be begun with the British Cabinet with a view to this mediation. According to the Mémorial the French proposition may be reduced to two lines, 'Recognition of the Confederate States and a six months' armistice with a raising of the blockade.'"

The article here referred to says that an answer was expected from London on Sunday. My inquiries lead me to doubt whether any such has been received, or could have been made in the time, to propositions which Lord Russell stated had not been made on Friday night.

The Emperor held yesterday the first council of his new cabinet. The sitting was a long one, but the subjects debated have not yet transpired, with the exception of the publication of the decree rendering the Bakers' trade free in Paris. This measure has long been under discussion, and was strongly opposed by M. Haussmann, the prefect of the Seine. Prince Polignac, the son-in-law of M. Mires, son of the celebrated minister, died this morning. He was a most accomplished mathematician. It is this evening announced that the conferences on Poland, if accepted by Russia, will be held in Brussels.

The Moniteur of this morning has the first page filled with the despatches just arrived from Mexico. There is a report not contained in these despatches, that General Ortega has broken his parole and escaped to Mexico, with five members of his staff. In a letter from New York it is mentioned that a deputation of Louisianians had gone to Washington with an offer to guarantee the submission of that State, if the constitution be again put in force, and property, including the slaves, is respected. This news is given as certain, however improbable it may seem; the reason assigned being the conviction felt by the Louisianians that the object of the United States' Government is to depopulate the country, and afterwards recolonise it. By its treaty with the United States at the time of the cession of Louisiana, France would, in such a case, have a right to interfere.

AFFAIRS, FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

MONEY AND DISCOUNT MARKET.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

THE minimum rate of discount at the Bank of England remains at 4 per cent.; the rate charged by the Bank of France is also 4 per cent., and at present there seems no immediate prospect of a change. Of course a great deal will depend upon the state of the weather; for the harvest, which will, during the next few weeks, exercise great effect, while the payment of the dividends on and after the 11th inst., will in a degree indicate whether the general supply in the open market will or will not increase. Even the most sanguine capitalist and financier, do not expect to see a lower rate rule than 3½ per cent. should the influx of Australian and American gold continue, and the exports of specie to the East be kept at a low point. If an alteration in this direction should take place, it would probably ensue about the middle of the current month, but a great number of parties scarcely fancy that any alteration will be made. A reduction of a half per cent. would not much matter, and as the market is now supposed to be more than ever regulated by the law of supply and demand, the Bank in self-defence, if capital becomes more abundant, will have to take action; it would be a subject for regret, however, if through comparative stagnation of trade, the general terms of accommodation are to drop lower, since in that case unusual stimulus would be afforded to speculative enterprises, which have already accumulated to an extent sufficient to produce apprehensions for ultimate consequences. Business in the aggregate is not in an unhealthy state considering the restrictions placed upon it by the American struggle, and the returns in many branches are satisfactory, but if any relief could be obtained in relation to our Transatlantic connections by the raising of the blockade or the absolute recognition of the South, then it would expand and in such proportion that the rate of discount would immediately increase through the new channels opened for mercantile adventure requiring enlarged financial facilities. The money and discount markets have experienced pressure for the last two days—first, from the reserves held to pay off the proprietors of Udon Bay stock, who have drawn forward their rights and privileges to the International Financial Society at the price of £300 for the original £100 issue,—and secondly, in consequence of heavy payments of interest in railway debentures first falling due. To aggravate the temporary stringency there have also been an arrangement of engagements to close the half-year, and the fortnightly settlements at the Stock Exchange. Although the demand has then been exceptionally augmented no increase of resources has been available. The Joint Stock and private banks refusing any proportional aid having to provide for their own periodical balance. After to-morrow we may expect a partial mitigation of the tightness as the effect of some of these causes will have passed; but it is believed that the average full quotations will be maintained. The terms for three months' bills are 3½ to 4 per cent., with difficulty in placing them at the former price. Six months' bankers' remittance bills are negotiated at 4½ per cent., but there is not now so great a disposition to take them in.

BULLION AND SPECIE MOVEMENTS.

The gold sent into the Bank the last week has been £308,000, including £40,000 this afternoon. The bullion arrivals have been £982,426, of which £81,131 were reported to-day. They have been principally from Australia, America, the East Indies, and the Pacific. The price of bar silver has gone down to 5s. 1d., and that of Mexican dollars to 5s. 2½d. per ounce. In the latter case it is a decline of nearly 5d. The large arrival by the Shannon occasioned this depression.

TENDERS FOR BILLS ON INDIA.

The biddings for 40,000,000 rupees in bills on India took place on the 1st of July, at the Bank of England. The proportion allotted were to Calcutta 22,00,000 rupees, to Bombay 16,00,000 rupees, and to Madras 12,00,000 rupees. The declared minimum price was as before, 1s. 11½d. per rupee on Calcutta, and 1s. 11¼d. on Bombay and Madras. Tenders on Calcutta at 1s. 11½d. will receive about 32 per cent., on Bombay at 1s. 11¼d. about 21 per cent., on Madras at 1s. 11¼d. about 45 per cent., and all above these prices in full.

BANKING FAILURES.

The Hereford Banking Company, following the example of the Ross and Hereford Banking Company, has suspended. The state of credit in the neighbourhood has been terribly shaken. The chief office was at Hereford, with branches at Leominster, Evesham, Hay, and Kingston. The amount of notes issued was fixed at £25,047. The Hereford City and County Bank (Messrs. Matthews and Co.) has likewise been placed in difficulty. The Bank has closed, but it is hoped there will be no large loss to depositors. The fixed amount of notes issued was £22,000. The letters from Hereford state that the place is literally panic-stricken.

HOME AND FOREIGN SECURITIES.

The transactions in English Stocks have been on a limited scale, with symptoms of heaviness through the undecided character of foreign political intelligence. Consols were at one period particularly depressed, and went back to 91½ to 92 for money, and to 91½ to 92 for the account; they have since recovered to 92 to 93 for money, and to 92½ to 93 for the account. Exchequer Bills have varied from 4s. discount to par, and may be now considered to stand at that quotation. Violent changes have taken place in foreign securities, and only a moderate recovery has occurred in prices. After Greek went up to a high point, there was an immediate relapse, the price having receded to 34; a rally to 36½ has once more been noticeable; now it is weak at 35 to 36, owing to renewed sales. Mexican and Spanish have oscillated considerably the former moving between 36½ and 37½, and the latter from 35½ to 34½. There has been a heavy fall in Venezuela, from the intelligence of fresh disturbances in the Republic. Peruvian ought to be better, it being quoted ex-dividend, while the purchases for the sinking fund must come at once into operation.

AMERICAN SECURITIES.

American securities have not been largely dealt in. The Confederate Cotton Company Loan was firm on the advices of yesterday at 1 discount to par. It was less buoyant to-day, because of the character of the debate on the Southern recognition and the payment of another instalment. Virginia 6 per cent. bonds redeemable in 1886 have been taken at 33½ and 34. Northern securities, including Atlantic and Great Western, Illinois Central and others, were rather lower.

RAILWAY SECURITIES.

Business in the market for Railway shares has not been marked by any great activity, and the tendency of prices has been weak. The bulk of the operations have been in the heavier descriptions of securities, but chiefly the last few days at a decline. Indian descriptions have been fairly supported; the Continental are for the moment almost neglected.

PROGRESS OF ENTERPRISE.

The fever for Joint-Stock speculation has not abated. Companies continue to be introduced one after another in rapid succession, but they cannot all succeed. The most important undertaking announced within the past few days has been the Brazilian and Portuguese Bank, which is to come into competition with the London and Brazilian Bank; and the latter enjoying a very good position, the former is regarded with partial favour. Next in importance come the Credit Metropolitan and the Leasehold Investment Company. The issue of each will depend upon management, partaking, as they do, of the principle involved in the existing Building Societies. The Newport Dry Dock Wood and Shipbuilding Company, the Staffordshire Rolling Stock Company, the Richmond Hotel Company, and the West Kent Music Hall, are ephemeral enterprises that depend upon the temper of the public market, which is already overweighted, and cannot be long sustained if the present high pressure pace is to be persevered in.

THE COURSE OF THE PRODUCE MARKETS.

The heaviness which has long prevailed in every department of our American trade, has not been either modified or increased perceptibly by the last advices in reference to the new phase which the war has assumed. The uncertainty as to its duration is unrelieved, and transactions are entered upon in the same cautious spirit as hitherto observed. In the protracted absence of speculation, however, which has thus been induced, the markets for American produce, as well as for articles adapted to American requirements, have acquired a degree of strength which renders them not easily affected by any other than the legitimate influence of actual supply and demand. The cotton purchases, since this day week, have been quite up to the recent moderate average, prices graduating upwards ¼d. per lb. Some rather extensive sales of Western leaf tobacco have recently been made, for Mediterranean port, and the better qualities of this description becoming relatively scarce, bring very full prices, whilst Maryland and Ohio tobacco do not realize the improvement that had been expected, and the trade generally is without any great amount of activity. American wheat and flour, in common with our own, is influenced by the extremely fine weather for the harvest, and with its continuance lower prices may be regarded as tolerably certain. With extremely little doing, American oil-cake remains stationary in value. The trade in turpentine is at the moment confined to the produce of France, which offers at 89s. to 90s. per cwt., whilst the small stock of American is held at 99s. to 100s. Petroleum is again coming more into demand, and crude Pennsylvanian is firm at £17 per ton; stocks are not considered heavy. The few American orders in the market for Cape aloes can be filled up only at high prices, good qualities being firmly held at about 45s. to 46s. per cwt. Cardamoms promise a better market for buyers, available supplies having increased, and further consignments of some extent being on the way. Camphor has fallen 20s., bringing the present price to £6 per cwt.; the stock here is heavy, and a large quantity coming; a further reduction is therefore probable. American oil of peppermint, the stock of which is very much reduced, is firm at 16s. for Hotchkiss mark, an advance of 3s. to 4s. from the late lowest point. Alexandria gum arabic is scarce, and likely to rule high; fine "sorts" are difficult to buy under 60s., and fine picked ranges up to £7 per cwt. Shellac is 5s. per cwt. cheaper, but is still very dear; and, considering the statistical position of the market, prices are supported remarkably well. Plumbago suitable for the American demand continues very scarce and dear; 29s. to 30s. per cwt. is quoted for fine. Several purchases of bar iron for the States are reported, and moderate orders are said to be still in hand; full rates have in all cases been paid, and there are no indications of being able to buy upon more advantageous terms. Pig iron is also very firm, and has advanced 2s. to 2s. 6d. per ton within a month, in the face of considerable stocks.

COTTON AND DRY GOODS MARKET.

LIVERPOOL, Wednesday, July 1.

At the close of our last report the cotton market was dull and lifeless, with a small demand daily from the trade, prices were barely steady.

On Thursday and Friday, with sales of 6000 and 5000 bales, a considerable desire to realize was apparent, and lower prices were accepted to effect sales—Chinas being sold in quantity at 14½d. and Middling Bowed at 20d. This depression was mainly caused by the revived mediation rumours, which still obtained some credence.

On Saturday, however, it became known by Lord Russell's statement in the House that no overtures had yet been made by the Emperor of the French to our Government regarding mediation; at the same time the startling news was received by the Persia of a second Northern invasion by the Confederates, and the advance of a small force into Pennsylvania. This movement on the part of the Confederates was generally considered as unfavourable to the prospect of cotton supplies from the West, as it would prevent reinforcements going forward to Grant, and so strengthen the Confederate cause on the Mississippi; at the same time by the rigorous measures President Lincoln had adopted, and the response to these by the different state governors, the flagging zeal of the North appeared to have received a fresh impetus, and under an invasion cry—probably an exaggerated one—their armies would be largely recruited, and volunteers thus obtained for the prosecution of the war which could be raised in no other way. Our market accordingly showed more activity, and with sales of 6000 bales, the decline of the two previous days was recovered.

On Monday a fair business was done at steady prices, sales 5000. Yesterday the market was very slow, awaiting the result of Roebuck's motion for Southern recognition. To-day 5000 bales have been sold without change, the market closing very quietly. We quote Middling Orleans 21½, Fair Egyptian 20½, Fair Dhollerah and Omrawatie 17½ to 18.

MANCHESTER, Tuesday, June 30.

Since our last report there has been no new feature in the condition of our market, the same dull feeling has prevailed throughout the week, buyers taking only the smallest parcels possible, and making business of quite a retail character.

The uneasy feeling, as regards the present aspect of the American question, and the fear that France may enter into negotiation with our Government, having for its object the recognition of the South, all this has a depressing effect on the market generally.

Spinners and manufacturers who are running out of contract, are anxious to take orders, as they do not feel disposed to go on working to stock with such an uncertain future hanging over their heads, and rather than do so if the present state of things should continue, they will close their mills again.

Among the Contents of THE INDEX of June 25, are—

- Case of the Alexandria.
- The Siege of Port Hudson; our New Orleans Letter.
- The Alabama and the Georgia.
- Special Correspondence from Bahia.
- Letter from Paris.
- Letter from Turin; Federal Recruiting in Italy.
- Letter to the Editor on Recognition.
- A British Monument to Jackson.
- Recognition before Parliament.
- Vicksburg and Port Hudson.
- The Value of the Southern Trade.
- Mr. Mason a Friend of England.
- Extracts from Southern Papers.

SHIRTS.—International Exhibition. Clays 27 C. No. 4872. Prize Medal and honourable mentions 1851 and 1862. Shirts, Collars, Flannels, and every description of underclothing manufactured on the premises.

J. BRIE AND CO.,

43, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

The only Shirtmakers admitted as Exhibitors at the International Exhibition of 1862.

BEACH & ROOT,

Commission Merchants,
CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA
and
ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

BEACH, ROOT, & CO.,

APSEY BUILDINGS, OLD HALL STREET,
LIVERPOOL.

S. ISAAC, CAMPBELL, & Co.
CONTRACTORS & MERCHANTS.

71, Jermyn-street,

LONDON.

Sherbro: West Coast of Africa.

Represented by

W. B. HART,
Nassau, New Providence.

WIGGINS, TEAPE, & Co.,

WHOLESALE AND EXPORT STATIONERS,
10, ALDGATE, LONDON.

Special Papers suited to Foreign Markets.

ROWLAND & BROTHERS,

Commission Merchants,
NORFOLK,
VIRGINIA.

JOHN FRASER & CO.,

CHARLESTON,

South Carolina.

FRASER, TRENHOLM, & CO.,

Liverpool,
Commission Merchants.

SEARING AND CO.,

Commission Merchants,
MOBILE AND NEW ORLEANS, C.S.A.

Represented by

R. G. BEESLEY, Cotton Broker,
No. 2, Byron's-court, Royal-exchange,
Manchester.

J. E. HERTZ,

(Of the late Firm of MORDECAI and CO.),

Commission Merchant,

CHARLESTON,

SOUTH CAROLINA.

References to

M. C. MORDECAI, Esq.,

Charleston, South Carolina.

Messrs. COHEN and HERTZ,

Savannah, Georgia.

LAMB, BALL, & CO.,

Ship and General Commission Agents,
ST. THOMAS,

WEST INDIES.

WEBER BROTHERS,

Commission Merchants,

SAVANNAH,

GEORGIA, C.S.A.

AMERICAN WINES AND SPIRITS, &c.

W. R. S. MARKWELL,

WINE MERCHANT TO HER MAJESTY AND THE IMPERIAL COURTS,

35, 40, & 45, ALBEMARLE STREET,

AND

4, STAFFORD STREET, PICCADILLY, LONDON, W.

Monagahela, Bourbon, and Old Dominion Whiskies; Peach Brandy; Staughton, Sickles, and other Bitters; Fruit Spirits; Sparkling and dry Catawba; Californian Champagne; all kinds of Continental Wines, including the original importations from Hungary.

The Stock of Wines, Spirits, and Liqueurs are of the oldest, most extensive, and best selected in England. TERMS, CASH!

ACCOUNT BOOKS, &c.,

Of all Rulings, ready in Stock, or made to any Pattern on the Premises.

LITHOGRAPHIC AND COPPER-PLATE.

—Circulars printed on the Shortest Notice; all kinds of Copper-Plate Printing with economy and despatch.

CARD-PLATES.—Engraved in various styles with despatch. 2s. each.

LETTER-PRESS.—Letter-Press work of every description: Circulars, Catalogues, Share-Plates, &c.

NOTE-PAPER.—Embossed die, Plain, and Colours, with Crest and Initials, and Printed Address, without charging for Dies or Plates.

All Articles being prepared on the Premises can be ensured with despatch and economy at Wholesale and Shipping Prices.

F. ARNOLD, MANUFACTURING STATIONER, ETC., 86, FLEET STREET, E.C.
(CORNER OF ST. BRIDE'S AVENUE.)

VINS SUPERIEURS DE CHAMPAGNE.

DINET-PEUVREL ET FILS,

PROPRIETAIRES ET NEGOCIANTS.

A. A. VIZE, MARNE,

EXECUTE ORDERS FOR ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

Please send References with Order.

C. W. WHITE,

Ship and General Commission Agent,
ST. THOMAS, WEST INDIES.

REID AND STEWART,

Commission Merchants,
SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

Represented by

ANDREW STEWART, 1, Ramford-place,
Liverpool.

HARPER AND CAUGHEY,

Commission Merchants,
SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

Represented by

J. and A. CAUGHEY, Tempest Chambers,
Tempest Hwy.
Liverpool.

SAMUEL SMITH,

COTTON BROKER,
11, Manchester Buildings,
LIVERPOOL.

FRANCIS PRESTON,

ENGINEER AND CONTRACTOR TO HER
MAJESTY'S WAR DEPARTMENT,

35, Loveday Street,

BIRMINGHAM.

And Auctions' Bridge Works,
MANCHESTER.

Established 1816.

J. H. ASHBRIDGE & CO.,

Shipping and Commission Merchants,

NEW ORLEANS.

Office—55, Brown's-buildings, Liverpool.
Agents—Liverpool and New Orleans Mail Steam
Navigation Company.

H. O. BREWER & CO.,

MOBILE, ALABAMA,

General Commission and Shipping Merchants.

HENRY ADDERLEY & CO.,

Shipping and Commission Merchants,
NASSAU, N.P.,
BAHAMAS.

A. G. MILWAINE, AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, Tobacco, Cotton,
Grain, and other produce, PETERSBURG,
VIRGINIA.

McDOWELL, WITHERS, AND CO., MOBILE ALABAMA, C.S.A., Commission Merchants.

FRANCIS FORD, MANCHESTER,
Manufacturer of Three and Six Cord Spool
Thread, Cotton Balls, Knitting and Embroidering
Cottons, &c. Imported by F. RIMILHO and NEVIL, New Orleans, and GEORGE CHAM-
BERS and CO., Nassau, N.P.

R. D. RUSDEN, MANCHESTER,
ENGLAND, American Drills of all kinds,
Denims, Stripes, Shirtings, and all sorts of Manchester Goods.

ANDREW LOW AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH
GEORGIA.

HAMILTON AND GRAHAM,
Importers, Wholesale Dealers in Dry
Goods, &c., PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA.

H. LEVY AND SON,
Commission Merchants, MOBILE.

GARLAND GOODE, MOBILE,
Cotton Factor and Commission Merchant.

BOYKIN AND McRAE, Cotton
Factors and Commission Merchants,
MOBILE, ALABAMA, C.S.A.

J. W. ANDERSON AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH,
GEORGIA.

JAMES CHAPMAN,
Commission Merchant, CHARLESTON.

N. A. HARDEE AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH,
GEORGIA.

R. N. GOUDINE AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, Charleston.

DUNLOP, MONCURE, & CO.,
General Commission Merchants,
RICHMOND.

WARWICK AND BARKSDALE,
GALLEGO FLOUR MILLS.

This immense establishment of capacity to manufacture 1000 barrels of Flour per day, purely for South American Market. RICHMOND.

MILLER AND BATRE, Exchange
Brokers, MOBILE, ALABAMA, C.S.A.

R. AND D. G. MILLS, Cotton
Factors and Commission Merchants,
GALVESTON, TEXAS, C.S.A.

The Second Half-Yearly Volume

OF
THE INDEX,
Is Now Ready, Price £1 Is.

Subscriptions and Advertisements to be sent, and Post-office Orders made payable to

J. B. HOPKINS, 13, BOUVERIE STREET,
FLEET STREET, E.C.

GENERAL THOMAS J. (STONEWALL) JACKSON.

Two Continents, both friend and foe, combine to mourn the premature death of General JACKSON, hero and Christian. Two years have been sufficient to create a fame which has won the kindly respect of enemies and the admiration of the Old World, which twenty-four months since was ignorant of his existence.

It has been suggested that some general recognition from Great Britain of the worth of such a man, by name, by race, and by character related to us, although the citizen of another land, would be a graceful token of friendly feeling from the old country to our kinsmen across the Atlantic.

The eminent sculptor, J. H. FOLLY, Esq., R.A., has undertaken to execute a marble Statue, heroic size, of the General for £1,000, while £500 may be required for pedestal, inscription, and other extras. Accordingly, for £1,500 a complete Statue of "Stonewall" JACKSON, by one of our most distinguished sculptors, may be prepared for transmission to his native country when the unhappy war shall have ceased. Towards raising this sum, the Subscriptions of our countrymen and countrywomen are earnestly solicited. Central and Local Committees, with auxiliary Ladies' Committees, are being formed to collect the necessary funds.

The undersigned will gladly receive Subscriptions until the final arrangements are made, and an account has been opened for "General JACKSON'S Statue," at Messrs. COURTTS and Co.'s, Strand, London, W.C.

N.B.—It is not at all intended that Subscriptions to the Statue should imply any opinion on the merits of the American struggle. They will be taken solely and simply as a recognition of the rare personal merit of General Jackson.

COMMITTEE.

A. J. B. BERESFORD HOPE, Esq.
LORD CAMPBELL.
SIR JAMES FERGUSSON, BART., M.P.
W. H. GREGORY, Esq., M.P.
SIR E. KERRISON, BART., M.P.
COL. GREVILLE, M.P.

EARL OF DONOUGHMORE.
HON. C. FITZWILLIAM, M.P.
HON. ERNEST DUNCOMBE, M.P.
LORD EUSTACE CECIL.
J. S. GILLIAT, Esq.

SIR COURTTS LINDSAY, BART.
W. LINDSAY, Esq., M.P.
G. PEACOCK, Esq., M.P.
G. E. SEYMOUR, Esq.
J. SPENCE, Esq.

A. J. B. BERESFORD HOPE, Esq., 1, CONNAUGHT PLACE,
Hon. Treasurer.
W. H. GREGORY, Esq., M.P., 19, GROSVENOR STREET, W.
Hon. Secretary.

MANCHESTER SOUTHERN CLUB.—Gentlemen desirous of Enrolling themselves as members of the above Club can obtain their cards on application at the office, 71A, Market-street, from nine to six daily, or by letter directed as above.—By order of the Committee, W. E. STUTTER, Hon. Sec.

JAMES J. BENNETT & WAKE,
Steam-Ship Insurance and General Commission Agents,
77, Cornhill, London,
and James J. BENNETT,
Matamoros.

NEW LINE OF STEAM PACKETS

LIVERPOOL, ST. THOMAS, LA GUAYRA, PTO. CABELLO, CURACAO, SANTA MARTHA, CARthagENA to COLON, RETURNING FROM THAT PORT BY KINGSTON (JAMAICA), PORT-AU-PRINCE, CAPE HAITIEN TO LIVERPOOL.

The Liverpool, Western and Spanish-American Steam Packet Company

WILL commence running powerful A 1 Screw Steamboats from this port on the 20th June next, to be at Colon in time to take the Goods and Passengers brought to Panama by the Steamers, from the North and South Pacific, and to Colon, about the 21st July, continuing the same dates monthly. The Steamboats are:—

The CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS, 1,572 tons, W. Baker, Commander, to sail from Liverpool, 20th June.
The SAINT THOMAS, 1,210 tons, W. 20th July.
The GILBERT, 1,230 tons, W. W. 20th Aug.
The HUMBOLDT (building), 1,400 tons.
Goods and Passengers will be taken, if required, at through rates from the Continent, via Liverpool, over the Panama Railway to Ports in the Pacific, and also back from those Ports by same route.

The CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS has very spacious and well-ventilated berths and saloon, which will afford every comfort to Passengers. The Rates for First and Second-class Passage will be moderate.

JMRE & TOMLINSON,
ALEXANDER DURANTY & Co.
Liverpool, May 1, 1863.

WEST INDIES.—LIVERPOOL, WEST INDIAN, AND CENTRAL AMERICAN STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.

For SAINT THOMAS, PORT-AU-PRINCE (HAYTI), KINGSTON (JAMAICA), SANTA MARTHA, CARthagENA, AND COLON OR ASPINWALL.

Taking Goods at through rates for Panama and Ports in the North and South Pacific (in connection with the Panama Railroad, the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company).

The following line now A 1 full powered Steamers will sail from LIVERPOOL on the 21st of each month, receiving goods up to the 19th of each month.

DARIEN .. 1,172 tons.
VENEZUELAN .. 1,000 "
GRANADIAN .. 1,100 "
MEXICAN (now building), 1,100 "

In consequence of the VENEZUELAN not being quite completed, the first-class Screw-steamer SHAFESBURY, Captain VICKERMAN, will be despatched for the above Ports on the 21st May, taking goods until the 19th May.

Goods taken at through freights from the Continent.
For rates of freights or passage, having superior accommodation for passengers, apply to J. M. CURRIE, Paris and Havre; GLAFER and HENNING, Hamburg; LATITE and VANDERPUY, Bordeaux; W. D. ROBERTS and Co., Glasgow; or to

LEE & HARRISON, & FORWOOD,
Agents, Liverpool.

THE PATENT FILE MACHINE.
LAWYERS AND FILE MANUFACTURING COMPANY.—Lithographic and every description of Stationery and Printing for Engineers, Machinists, Agricultural Implement Makers, and for the general and export trade. Works, Ashton Old-road, Manchester.

ELEVENTH EDITION (Corrected to December, 1862).
Dates and Facts relating to the History of Mankind from the most authentic and recent records, especially interesting to the Historian, Members of the Learned Professions, Literary Institutes, Merchants, and General Readers.
In One handsome Library Volume, beautifully printed in legible type, price Eighteen Shillings, cloth.

A DICTIONARY OF DATES

RELATING TO ALL AGES AND NATIONS: FOR UNIVERSAL REFERENCE:

Comprehending Remarkable Occurrences, Ancient and Modern,

The Foundation, Laws, and Government of Countries—their Progress in Civilization, Industry, Literature, Arts, and Science—their Achievements in Arms—and their Civil, Military, and Religious Institutions, and particularly of THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

By JOSEPH HAYDN.

Eleventh Edition, revised and greatly enlarged, by BENJAMIN VINCENT, Assistant-Secretary and Keeper of the Library of the Royal Institution of Great Britain.
LONDON: EDWARD MOXON AND CO., 44, DOVER STREET, W.

COMPLETION OF THOMAS HOOD'S WORKS.

Illustrated with a Portrait of the Poet and Humourist, photographed by J. & C. Watkins, from the Original Painting by Lewis,

THE WORKS OF THOMAS HOOD:

COMIC AND SERIOUS, IN PROSE AND VERSE.

Edited, with Notes, by His SON.

Containing all the Writings of the Author of the "Song of the Shirt" ("Hood's Own," first and second Series, excepted) that can be discovered by the most careful research and inquiry.

In Seven Volumes, small 8vo., price £2 2s., cloth.

LONDON: EDWARD MOXON AND CO., 44, DOVER STREET, W.

WORKS BY THE POET LAUREATE.

TENNYSON'S IDYLLS OF THE KING.

A New Edition.
WITH A DEDICATION TO THE MEMORY OF THE PRINCE CONSORT.
Price 7s. cloth.

TENNYSON'S POEMS.

Fifteenth Edition. In One Volume. Foolscap octavo. Price 9s. cloth.

TENNYSON'S PRINCESS. A MEDLEY.

Eleventh Edition. Price 5s. cloth.

TENNYSON'S MAUD; AND OTHER POEMS.

Fifth Edition. Price 5s. cloth.

IN MEMORIAM.

Thirteenth Edition. Price 6s. cloth.

** The above Works are always to be had in Morocco Bindings.

LONDON: EDWARD MOXON AND CO., 44, DOVER STREET, W.

PARIS EXHIBITION, 1855.

LA GRANDE MEDAILLE D'HONNEUR

WAS AWARDED TO

THOMAS DE LA RUE & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

PATENT PLAYING CARDS. PATENT METALLIC BOOKS; WITH

HARD ELECTRO-GILT PENCILS WHICH NEVER THICKEN AT THE POINT.

INDIA INLAND NOTE OR CHIT PAPERS, for Half Anna Postage Rate.

WATER-LINED OVERLAND NOTE PAPERS, in great variety.

MACHINE-FOLDED ENVELOPES. PATENT METAL SLATES.

POCKET TOURISTS' CASES.—Size, 5½ in. by 3½ in. by 1½ in. with every requisite for Correspondence.

ALLIANCE DESPATCH DESKS.—The most perfect Despatch Desk yet made.

DE LA RUE & CO.'S INDELIBLE DIARIES.—Published annually for exportation in August.

WALLETS, ALBUMS, SCRAP BOOKS, &c., &c.

The above can be obtained through any Stationer or Merchant.

Dedicated to H. R. H. the DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE.

Now Ready, with Maps, post 8vo., price 6s.

A MILITARY VIEW

OF THE

RECENT CAMPAIGNS

IN

VIRGINIA AND MARYLAND.

By Captain C. C. CHESNEY, R.E.,

Professor of Military History, Sandhurst College.

Smith, Elder, and Co., 63, Cornhill.

ADDRESS TO CHRISTIANS

THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

By the

CLERGY OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA

London: James Nisbet and Co., 21, Fenchurch-street, Oxford-street.

Price 6s., Quarterly (Annual Subscription, 1 rep. id.

21s.), post-free.

THE HOME AND FOREIGN

REVIEW. No. V. (July, 1863).

CONTENTS:—

1. BELLIGERENT RIGHTS AT SEA.

2. AUSTRIA AND GERMANY.

3. ALBANIA.

4. IRON-CLAD SHIPS.

5. EPICURUS.

6. ORIENTALISM AND EARLY CHRISTIANITY.

7. ULTRAMONTANISM.

8. CONTEMPORARY LITERATURE.

9. CURRENT EVENTS.

Williams and Norgate, London and Edinburgh.

18mo., cloth, extra gilt edges, price 1s.

BEN RHYDDING, THE ASCLE-

PION OF ENGLAND: its Beauties, its

Ways, and its Water Cure. By the Rev. R. W.

Thomson. With Map of the Railway Routes to

Ben Rhydding. Third Edition.

T. NELSON and Sons, London and Edinburgh.

To be had, free by post for 13 stamps, of SHUTTLE-

WORTH, Bookseller, Ilkley.

VALUES OF GOLD.—WATHER-

STON and BROGDEN, for the information of the public and their numerous patrons, beg to make the following announcement regarding the VALUE OF GOLD, feeling persuaded that the interests of the fair trader and public will be alike protected by the wide circulation of knowledge on the subject. Gold being divided into 24 parts or carats, it follows that gold of

Per oz. Per oz.

24 carats fine is 13 carats .....

worth ..... £4 4 11 12 ditto ..... 2 6 0

23 ditto ..... 4 1 5 11 ditto ..... 1 18 11

22 ditto (British 10 ditto ..... 1 15 4 standard) ..... 3 17 10 9 ditto ..... 1 11 10

21 carats ..... 3 14 4 8 ditto ..... 1 8 3

20 ditto ..... 3 10 9 7 ditto ..... 1 4 9

19 ditto ..... 3 7 3 6 ditto ..... 1 1 2

18 ditto ..... 3 3 3 5 ditto ..... 0 17 8

17 ditto ..... 3 0 2 4 ditto ..... 0 14 2

16 ditto ..... 2 16 7 3 ditto ..... 0 10 7

15 ditto ..... 2 13 1 2 ditto ..... 0 7 1

14 ditto ..... 2 9 6 1 ditto ..... 0 3 6

Manufactured by 16, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden,

London, W.C.

N.B.—Assays made of Chains and Jewellery for 1s. each.

NOTICE.—This Establishment is closed at six o'clock in the evening, and on Saturdays at one o'clock.

TWO PRIZE MEDALS awarded

"For General Excellence" in DRESSING

CASES, BAGS, DESPATCH BOXES, &c. Gentle-

men's Travelling Bags, Useful Size, 11s. 6d.; Full

Size, 18s. 6d.; Large Size, 21s. Courier Bags, with

Shoulder Strap, from 10s. 6d. Morocco Ladies

Bags, 10s. 6d.; 12s. 6d.; 14s. 6d.; 16s. 6d.; and 21s.

Tourists' Writing Cases, 8s. 6d., 10s. 6d., to 21s.

Finest Cutlery in Razors, Scissors, Needles, &c.

JENNER and KNEVELD, Manufacturers to the Royal Family, 33, St. James's-street, and 66, Jermy-street.

Printed for the Proprietors by HENRY FLORENCE

MACINTOSH, of 11, Crane-court, Fleet-street in the Parish of St. Dunstan, in the City of London; and published by him at THE INDEX Office, 13,

Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, in the Parish of St.

Bride, in the City of London.—Thursday, July 2nd, 1863.

THE INDEX

A WEEKLY JOURNAL OF POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND NEWS.

Vol. III—No. 63.]

LONDON—THURSDAY EVENING, JULY 9, 1863.

[PRICE 6D.]

CONTENTS.

THE EVENTS OF THE WEEK AT HOME AND ABROAD.
LETTER FROM NEW ORLEANS: FEDERAL REPULSE AT PORT HUDSON.
PARIS TOPICS.
THE EMPEROR AND MR. ROEBUCK.
THE NORTH ON ITS DEFENCE.
A CONCEIVABLE CALAMITY.
DRAMATIC TOPICS.
TWO WRITERS ON THE WAR.
AN ENGLISH CLERGYMAN ON THE SOUTH.
REVIEWS FOR JULY.
EXTRACTS FROM SOUTHERN PAPERS.
LIST OF REFUGEES FROM NEW ORLEANS.

NOTES ON EVENTS OF THE WEEK.

AMERICA.

THE only definite intelligence of the movement of the Confederate army is, that the Federals have evacuated Carlisle, that the Confederates have occupied McConnellsburg, after driving Milroy out of that place. According to the Northern reports General Lee is cutting off Washington from communication with the States. The estimates of the Confederate forces differ considerably. The highest gives General Lee 130,000 men for his forward movement, and leaves 40,000 troops in the neighbourhood of Richmond. The Northern critics seem to agree that "General Hooker can no longer choose his ground, or, as he boasted, give battle or abstain. He will be compelled to fight at the moment General Lee thinks proper to attack him, and he cannot postpone a fight when the day comes."

On the 14th of June General Banks made an attack on Port Hudson. The assault was repulsed with heavy loss, and the Confederates, making a sortie, spiked the siege guns. An account of the operation will be found in the letter of our New Orleans Correspondent.

We have no news from Vicksburg, except that General Kirby Smith has possession of Milliken's Bend, above that city. There are various rumours about Confederate forces in Grant's rear.

The apathy of the Northern people, whilst their soil is being invaded, is a complete refutation of the oft-repeated assertion, that the recognition of the Confederate States would rouse the North to fresh exertion to continue the war. The most bigoted opponent of recognition cannot pretend that it would be more galling than invasion.

The Northern accounts of the defeat of Milroy at Winchester represent it as a complete and disgraceful disaster. The Confederate attack commenced on the 13th of June, and was renewed on the following day. At midnight a council of war was held, and three hours later the Federal troops were ordered to retreat to Harper's Ferry. The retreat soon became a rout. "Our losses," writes a Northern correspondent, have indeed been terrible. Not a thing was saved, except that which was worn or carried upon the persons of the troops. Three entire batteries of field artillery and one battery of siege guns—all the artillery of the command, in fact—about two hundred and eighty wagons, over twelve hundred horses and mules, all the commissary and quartermaster's stores and ammunition of all kinds, over six thousand muskets and small arms without stint, the private baggage of the officers and men, all fell into the hands of the enemy. Of the seven thousand men of the command, only from sixteen hundred to two thousand have as yet arrived here, leaving to be accounted for over five thousand men. These comprise the list of horrors, except the names of the killed and wounded, which it is impossible to ascertain, as the slain remained unburied, and the wounded unsurgeoned where they fell." Other accounts estimate Milroy's forces at 15,000 men. Nor does the above extract give the entire losses. The New York Herald informs us that "two regiments were captured wholesale," and that "the officers were compelled to leave even their wives behind them in the hands of the enemy." They knew that their wives would be safe, for there are no such men as Milroy in the Confederate service. According to a letter written by a Federal officer, and published in the Northern papers, the flight was commanded,—"The General told us to look out for ourselves." This Milroy, whom his countrymen now justly stigmatise as an arrant coward, is noted as a bully. He it was who made war on the women and children of Winchester. He it is who has shown no mercy to the weak and defenceless. He it was who lately wrote a letter to a meeting of the "loyal league," held in New York, in which he proposed to curb the freedom of the press and freedom of speech in the North. He it was who behaved himself so extravagantly at the second battle of Bull Run. "When he spoke to me," says General McDowell in his evidence before the Congressional Committee, "he was in a frenzy, not accountable scarcely for what he said, and attracted the attention of every one by his unseemly conduct." No wonder that such a creature should flee in terror from the presence of a brave enemy. The only wonder is that even such a Government as Lincoln's should trust him with a command. It is reported that he has been relieved of his command.

How the negro fares in the North, and particularly in the city which is the head-quarters of Abolitionism, we may learn from a paragraph that appeared in the New York Herald of the 23rd June. It says—"In Boston last year the number of coloured births was only forty-five, and the year before only forty-seven. In the last eight years the births have been three hundred and four, and the deaths five hundred. In every year the deaths have exceeded the births." In the South the negro increases in a greater ratio than the white race. Such facts tell us plainly where the negro is best treated.

The Confederate cruisers are daily destroying Federal vessels, or releasing them on bond. A Confederate steamer is off Cape Sable destroying the fishing vessels; and three other vessels are reported at work off the mouth of the Bay of Fundy. In all the published statements of the captains of the vessels so destroyed or bonded, there is a frank admission of the courteous treatment of the crews by the captors. It seems as if the North determined to do all that is possible to make the South give up conducting war according to the rules of civilization.

The commanders of the blockading fleet at Charleston, maddened by their non-success, and the small amount of prize money they make, have commenced sinking blockade runners instead of capturing them. The Herald, from Nassau, has been sunk, and the Federal Lieutenant West reports, "The fate of her officers and crew is unknown, as broadside after broadside was poured into her on every side until she sank." It is also asserted that another vessel has been sunk in like manner, name unknown. The same report from which we have quoted says,—"The blockade off Charleston is perfect. The fleet hereafter will not wait to capture, but will fire broadside after broadside into the blockade runners, until they sink or surrender." Are the Confederates to submit to this system without retaliation? And where is it to end? Will the fleets blockading the British port of Nassau, and the port of Matamoras act on the same plan? Will British vessels going to these ports be sunk on the supposition that at some future time they intend to try to run the blockade? Perhaps this accounts for the Federal steamer persistently firing into the Jessie and Margaret.

A glance at the Northern papers shows the disunity at the North. All the comments on the war consist of angry recriminations against the Government and against the several parties. The New York World declares that incompetent generals have been selected for the highest posts. "The South has sent its best men to the front, and its worst to the rear, but we have reversed their process." The Tribune virulently abuses the people of Pennsylvania: "No passion stirs the sluggish blood of this unworthy race to any noble purpose. Roused they certainly are, but the excitement is wholly of fear, and the only thought is of retreat." The New York Times says—"It becomes Washington to put its hand on its mouth, and its mouth in the dust. While Washington monopolises the military power and resources of the States, it has no right to cast upon the States the duty of self-defence." The New York Herald bitterly denounces the apathy of New England, and asks, "Where are Greeley's 900,000 abolitionists who have never smelled battle, but who were ready to advance against the rebels, making the welkin ring with the song of 'John Brown' the moment the President complied with the demands of the radicals?" The same journal, referring to the indifference of the people of New York, and especially of the Government contractors, says:—"Hitherto they have had no desire that the war should cease. Every day that it has been prolonged they have been able to coin more money from the distresses of their fellow-citizens, and for this purpose they have assisted in prolonging it. Now, at length, they will perhaps be taught by bitter experience some of the woes which they have prepared for other people; and, if they could all be drafted, equipped in their own shoddy uniforms, fed upon the hard tack and diseased meat they have foisted upon our soldiers, armed with the defective rifles and useless muskets they have sold to the Government, and sent to the frontier to be the first targets for the rebel cannon, the country would be greatly benefited by the operation." The quarreling is not confined to the press. General Parker, of New Jersey, has disagreed with General Curtin, of Pennsylvania, and has directed the troops recently sent into that State to return to their respective places of enrolment, to be mustered out of the service.

The Northerners are astonished at the orderly conduct of the Confederate troops. Referring to the occupation of Chambersburg, we are told, "The rebels behaved themselves unusually well for soldiers. * * The people are well satisfied that the raid brought with it only so few disadvantages. They did not expect the considerate treatment that they have received at the hands of the enemy; on the contrary, they were prepared to witness scenes of the wildest disorder. The town does not present an injured appearance. The streets are very dirty; but the general appearance of the whole place is about the same as it was before the raid." The New York Express, of June 23rd, says, "The Confederates heap coals of fire upon our heads by not acting in a similar manner in Pennsylvania. Indeed, they might relieve us from shame, if they would only burn up a town or two, and thus take the blushes off our cheeks."

The Vicksburg correspondent of the New York World declares that the ammunition furnished by the Government contractors is so bad, that "the troops were ordered to fall back to save them from their own guns."

The Confederate steamer Atlanta, formerly the Fingal, commanded by Captain Webb, has been captured by the Federals after an engagement of fifteen minutes. After the surrender, Captain Webb addressed his crew, and attributed the misfortune to the vessel running aground. The Atlanta only fired five times.

Federal officers are not all good soldiers, but some of them are excellent hauguen. Two Confederates have lately been sentenced by General Burnside to be hanged: J. C. Lisle, of General Morgan's command, on the charge of being a spy; and J. T. Deal, on the charge of aiding and abetting the enemies of the Government.

The New York Tribune gives a list of five Federal lieutenants who have lately been dismissed the service: three for drunkenness and two for cowardice.

ENGLAND.

On Wednesday, the 1st of July, the Lord Mayor of London entertained the Earl of Derby, and the most eminent members of the Conservative party, in the two Houses of Parliament at dinner at the Mansion House. In answer to the toast of his health, proposed by the Lord Mayor, the noble earl made a long, and of course an eloquent harangue. He eulogised the forbearance and loyalty of the Conservative party in Opposition, which was the more praiseworthy when the pretext for its expulsion from office was considered. He ridiculed the weakness of Lord Palmerston's administration, the barrenness of its attempts at legislation, and its inability to rely on its supposed supporters, while he pointed out that the Opposition had in fact been supreme, its efforts in the furtherance of a Conservative line of policy being ably seconded by the present Premier. He stigmatised the representation of the city of London by four Liberal members as a monstrous monopoly, and deprecated the return of his own party to power, except in the event of its attaining an absolute majority in the Lower House. Mr. Disraeli returned thanks for the House of Commons, but his speech was more of a lively and humorous tone, than replete with political declarations. Speeches were also delivered by Lord Stanley and Lord Chelmsford. The distinguished visitors wore official costume, the remaining guests wore uniform or Court dress. Many ladies of high rank were present.

An equally interesting and not unimportant dinner took place the following evening in the metropolis; the anniversary festival of the Acclimatization Society being the subject of celebration. The particular purpose on this occasion was, "to illustrate in the first place some of the special objects of the Society, as for example—the introduction of the Chinese sheep, and the yam, or Dioscorea Batatas; and in the second place, the food of other countries which do not usually find their way to our tables." The chair was taken by Mr. Herman Merivale, C.B., and besides many noblemen and gentlemen of distinction, the celebrities, Captain Speke and Captain Grant, and M. P. Du Chaillu were present. The peculiar dishes were the white soup of the Channel Islands, Lucio-perca, grenouilles, or edible frogs, pepperpot, Chinese lamb, with pilaff and kuscoussoo, poulets à l'émancipation des negres, and ostrich eggs. Greek, Hungarian, Australian, and Californian wines were drunk. The rooms were of tropical temperature, and decorated with the horns and skins of many strange beasts.

A most disastrous fire, involving considerable loss of property, occurred last week in Liverpool, in the immediate vicinity of the Town-hall and Exchange. The buildings in which the fire broke out contained Egyptian and Sea Island cotton, and were flanked by other warehouses stored with petroleum and resin. The principal destruction of property was on the premises of Chapple, Dutton, and Co. At the time that the fire was demonstrating its ruinous powers in Liverpool, a series of experiments were being conducted in the gardens of the Crystal Palace, at Sydenham, to test the most effective description of steam-engine for the extinction of fires. Premiums of £250 for the best engine, and of £100 for the second best in the respective classes of engines not exceeding 30 cwt., and engines over 30 cwt., but not exceeding 60 cwt., exclusive of coal and gear, secured an entry not only of several English, but also of two American engines, designated as the Manhattan and the Alexandra. Each engine was to work for two hours, to raise its feed-water from a depth of eighteen feet, and to deliver it up a very steep hill through a 400 feet length of hose. The Manhattan, the representative of the New York Fire Brigade, after much straining vibration, and various vain efforts to project the water through the water-target, broke down hopelessly, and refused to do any more work. The Alexandra was more successful, and the general results of the English engines were highly satisfactory.

The annual match at the great English game of cricket between the Government and the Opposition side of the House of Commons has taken place. The Opposition was in immense force, and obtained 259 runs in the first innings. The Government only scored 46 runs in the first and 136 runs in the second innings, and consequently was defeated by an overwhelming majority. Not one of the eleven gentlemen on either side, however great they may be in athletic sports, or whatever may be their constancy in parliamentary attendance, and consistency in voting for their party, is known to fame as an orator or politician. It is not impossible that the cricket match was quite as attractive in the absence of the learned element. However that may be, the Government seems destined to defeat in all places and under all circumstances; and the disaster at cricket following close on the vote for the Exhibition Building, in which the Government was left in a minority of 166, must be ominous of evil in the eyes of many, even of those who do not belong to the modern prophetic school of Zaddiel.

The Archers from all parts of England, Scotland, and Ireland held their annual contest on the first and two following days of this month, at the city of Oxford. There were 155 competitors; 55 ladies, and 100 gentlemen. Unfortunately the weather was too boisterous to admit of satisfactory shooting. The renowned Mr. Ford was defeated for the championship by Mr. Peter Muir, while Mrs. Horniblow succeeded in maintaining her position as the Lady Champion of England.

In a suit in the Court of Chancery, instituted by Messrs. Tinsley, to restrain Thomas Hailes Lacy, the theatrical publisher, from issuing in a dramatic form the celebrated novels "Lady Audley's Secret" and "Aurora Floyd," the works of Miss Braddon, the Vice-Chancellor Wood decreed a perpetual injunction. The novels have been already dramatized with the sanction of the author, and played at various theatres since Christmas. However, a Mr. Suter, not content with the authorized versions, had written one of his own for Mr. Lacy, and this new version had been put on the stage. His method had simply consisted of patching the sensational scenes of the novels, copied bodily from the original, with some low comic business pre-eminently of his own composition. The counsel for the defence endeavoured to institute a comparison between the use which Shakespeare made of Boccaccio's tales and the imitation by Mr. Suter of the works of Miss Braddon. The idea was not particularly complimentary to the great English Dramatist, and the learned judge drew a very decided distinction between the efforts of the poet who had clothed the borrowed incidents in his own immortal language and given "to airy nothings a local habitation and a name," and the compilations of Mr. Suter, the principal design of which seemed to be to illustrate the most glaring method of infringing the Copyright Acts.

At the weekly meeting of the Central Executive Committee, held at Manchester on Monday last, it appeared from the report for the month of June, that a great increase of employment had been afforded in the mills, and that 47 local committees had suspended operations. Moreover, it was stated that 234,642 hands are in full work, 125,037 short time, and 180,729 out of work, against 192,527 full time, 129,741 short time, and 215,512 out of work in the month of April. No further improvement can be anticipated before next summer; and it is expected that at least 100,000 more persons will be in receipt of relief after the commencement of the winter season. No doubt seems to exist but that, with all possible care and economy, the funds of the committee will be entirely absorbed before the close of next winter.

The half-yearly return of the Government emigration officers has been completed. For the half-year ending June 30th, the number of vessels which sailed under the regulations of the Emigration Act was 103, and the number of steerage passengers 47,310. Of these ships 87 sailed for the United States, with 39,902 steerage passengers. The total emigration, up to the end of June of this year, amounted to 78,877 persons, while the return for the whole of last year was but 64,814. The Irish and the inhabitants of the mining districts furnish the great proportion of the emigrants—two classes among which the Federal agents are particularly active.

On Monday last the renowned tragedians, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean sailed for Melbourne, in the Black Ball liner the Champion of the Seas. They were accompanied by Miss Chapman, their niece, and also by Messrs. Cathcart and G. Everett.

The will of Mr. John Gully was proved last week in London. He bequeathed £70,000 of personal property, besides landed estates. This remarkable man, in his boyhood a butcher's assistant, then a prize-fighter and champion of the ring, next a "book-maker" on the turf, then possessing race-horses of splendid character and performances, eventually succeeded in amassing a large fortune, in obtaining a seat in Parliament, and what is more, in displaying qualities of mind and goodness of heart, such as utterly belied his early life, and extorted from every one a respect enhanced by a knowledge of the adverse circumstances in which so good a reputation had been won.

Her Majesty the Queen has left Windsor Castle for Osborne, in the Isle of Wight, where she will remain till the prorogation of Parliament. The Prince and Princess of Wales are still in London. The former dined with the Duke and Duchess D'Aumale, at Orleans House, last week. The principal members of the Orleans family were present. The Queen of Prussia, who had been staying at the residence of the Prussian Ambassador, in London, since leaving Windsor Castle, started on Monday morning on her return to Berlin. She visited the Queen Marie Amelie at Ramsgate, and then embarked on board the Vivid, Government steamer, for Antwerp.

Last Saturday, the screw steam ship Gibraltar, under which name our Southern friends will recognise the ancient Sumter, left the Mersey for Nassau. She has been considerably strengthened, and carries out some monster guns.

In September next, a Rifle contest will take place at the same time, in England and Australia, between ten English and ten Australian Volunteers. The challenge emanates from Australia, and the No. 1 Company of the Nottingham Robin Hoods, which proved itself the best shooting company in England in the year 1862, will supply the English Champions. The distances will range from 200 to 800 yards, five shots at each distance. The affair is in the management of the Council of the National Rifle Association.

The great annual meeting of the National Rifle Association at Wimbledon Common commenced last Monday. Immense exertions have been made to render the meeting as attractive as it has been hitherto. The competitors for the principal prizes to be shot for during the two weeks are encamped on the common, according to the usual custom, and their wants have been engrossing the labours of the Council to a great extent. Nothing can exceed the advantages of Wimbledon, either as a site for the encampment or for the shooting. It is picturesque, very dry, and within six miles of the metropolis. Yet the expense and trouble of rendering it a fit place for the sojourn of the 500 marksmen under canvas convey a faint idea of the wants of an army in the field. The water-service alone costs £190; a comfortable saloon for the sale of more potent liquors—ovens, telegraphs, camp equipage, and a hundred minor contrivances, are provided by the Association, while the volunteer officers appear to escape with the nominal payment for all these contrivances of 25s. each for the whole meeting, and the privates pay but 1s. a-day. The aggregate value of the prize list this year amounts to £4,300, while 1,300 volunteers have entered as competitors for the Queen's prize. The targets are sixty in number, and the Swiss or circular disc principle of marking has been adopted for the majority of them. In the way of eccentricities, the "running deer," the outline of which was sketched by Sir E. Landseer, and which is executed in iron and painted to the life, and also the "running volunteer," with one side in a grey and the other in a red uniform, to test the more distinguishable of the two colours, are not easily to be surpassed. On Monday the Prince of Wales visited the camp, and after a careful examination into the details and plans of the encampment and shooting, proceeded to try his own skill at the various ranges by way of an inauguration of the contest. He was immensely successful both at the fixed targets and the running deer, and his practice was considered equal to that recorded of any single rifle for the year 1862. The Rival Eight, who are to represent England and Scotland in the International match, have been selected. Four members of the famous family of Ross are named among the representatives of Scotland. The regular business commenced on Tuesday with the county matches, in which Lancashire defeated Gloucestershire and Middlesex. In the Oxford and Cambridge match Captain Ross, of Cambridge University—a member of the Scotch family already mentioned, won the Association medal. Amongst the flags of all nations exhibited in the encampment, the Confederate flag was conspicuous.

EUROPE.

ALTHOUGH the Russian reply to the English, French, and Austrian notes has not yet been despatched, and is probably not yet drawn up, several continental journals profess to know its substance. According to these soidisant authorities—who, it must be observed, are, for once, pretty nearly unanimous—Russia will accept in principle the programme of the three Powers, or, at least, that of Austria, and especially will give a ready assent to the suggestion of a congress. As Russia has everything to gain by delay, it is probable enough that, rejecting altogether the scheme of an armistice, she may accept the rest of the allied programme as the basis of negotiations, which may be protracted until the season for war in the Baltic is over, and she has six good months in which to crush out at her ease the ashes of the insurrection. That she will ever honestly concede the guarantees which are asked for Poland is out of the question. She does not misunderstand her position; she knows that war is very possible, and she is actively preparing for it. The Government is making immense preparations. The fortifications of Cronstadt and Sveaborg are being strengthened under the direction of General Todleben, the defender of Sebastopol, who has time and means enough at his disposal to render them impregnable; the army is being vigorously recruited, and every disposition is being taken to sustain a gigantic war. It is quite certain, too, that the Government has the enthusiastic support of the nation, which sees in the interposition of the three Powers an offensive interference in the affairs of Russia, a determined resistance to which is demanded by the national dignity. It is said that so entirely has this feeling expressed the public mind, that a complete revolution has occurred in its views of Poland. Formerly, people were ready to abandon Poland, or, at least, to give her the autonomy she is entitled to ask; now they insist upon her retention at any cost, and applaud all the severities of Mouravieff. The Poles, on their part, refuse to accept the six points. They are fighting for national independence, and not for liberty; and these points, moreover, refer only to Congress Poland, and leave the old provinces entirely at the disposition of the Czar. It appears that the National Government has made the demands which the Morning Post was instructed to intimate that it would make; it has announced that it will consent to a conference upon condition that an armistice is concluded; that its representatives shall be admitted to the Conference; and that a Diet shall be convoked for Poland and the Western provinces, under the guarantee of Europe and the protection of a Polish national army. These are terms to which Russia cannot consent, and least of all at a time when she feels that she has the insurrection at her feet. She may profess to treat to gain time and disarm Europe, but she would refuse, point-blank, the demand for an armistice.

The telegraphic accounts of great victories and drawn battles, which have come upon us rather thickly this week, may appear to indicate a revival of the insurrection, but, closely examined, they rather bear out the impression that it is at its end. The one piece of intelligence entitled to credit is the incursion into Volhynia from Galicia of a strong expedition numbering nearly two thousand men, under the command of Wysocki, a colleague of Langiewicz. The reports as to the fate of this little army are rather conflicting. It is certain that it has been engaged in several very bloody encounters, has lost one of its chiefs, whilst one division has retreated into Galicia, and it is probable that the advantage is with the Russians. But whatever the issue, this is no insurrectionary movement in Russian Poland. This force has been organizing for a long time in Galicia; its members are Poles, but they are Poles who are subjects of Austria, or who, although subjects of Russia, have long been fugitives from their country. As we have before said, the warlike material of Russian Poland is exhausted, and the contest is kept up from Posen and Galicia.

General Mouravieff goes merrily on with his brutal business at Wilna. He has not shot the Bishop, only sent him to Dunaburg, and afterwards to Perm, not far from the Ural, and a step on the way to Siberia. (Archbishop Felinski has been banished to Jaroslaw, in the interior beyond Moscow), but he goes on shooting priests and proprietors, and fines women who appear in mourning—the flogging was an invention of the Poles.

The National Government of Warsaw on its part is busy issuing decrees, most of which are evidently designed for foreign consumption. Amongst those which are intended for native use is one prohibiting all traffic on certain railways under terrible penalties, and another suppressing lotteries. The latter is worth giving as a sample of the revolutionary style:—"Considering that the lottery is an immoral institution, and that, moreover, it forms a source of revenue for the usurping Government, the National Government decrees, 1. The lottery existing in the kingdom of Poland is suppressed. 2. After the 101st drawing no one may engage in the sale of tickets or purchase them. 3. The execution of the present decree is confided to the civil and military authorities." The mixture of "considerations" is amusing. The second, we may fairly assume, had the more force.

It is said that the Treasurer of the General Post-office at Warsaw has absconded with 45,000 roubles, leaving a notice to the effect that he acted in accordance with the orders of the National Government. The functionaries who robbed the treasury are to be tried, if they can be caught—the two leading culprits are said to be in Sweden—by a military court.

Telegrams from Constantinople via Paris and Vienna announce the outbreak of a revolution in Georgia. Prince Cholukoff, they add, has been murdered, together with 200 soldiers, near the citadel of Zalatal, and the whole province is represented as in revolt. It is not improbable that the tribes which Russia has so recently brought under her sovereignty have availed themselves of the embarrassments created to her by the Polish insurrection to attempt to throw off her yoke; but these telegrams require confirmation.

An Imperial decree orders that a universal exposition of agricultural and industrial products shall open at Paris, in the Palace of Industry, on the 1st of May, 1867, and close on the 30th of September. The products of all nations are to be admitted to this Exposition; the conditions of which are to be regulated by a future decree. The report of M. Rouher, upon which the decree is founded, recommends that the Exposition shall include, as far as possible, the industrial products of all countries, works of art, and, in general, all branches of human activity, and announces that the Minister of State will immediately submit to the Emperor a special decree, authorizing the opening of an Exposition of Fine Arts for the same time. As the charge of the Fine Arts has now been transferred to the Ministry of the Imperial House, Marshal Vaillant is, we may suppose, engaged in preparing the decree, which Count Walewski, had he remained in office, would have presented for the Imperial signature.

A superintendent of theatres has been appointed, and the office given to M. Bacciochi, one of the chamberlains of the Emperor.

Decrees have been published—one re-establishing the class of philosophy in the lyceums, suppressed in 1852, on the ground that the study was unfit for children, and produced only vanity and doubts; the other appointing a special commission to inquire into the means of developing artistic and professional education.

M. Casimir Perier, who had been prosecuted for an article published in the Impartial Dauphinois during the elections, and impeaching the financial administration of the Empire, has been acquitted. He was defended by M. Berryer.

The Duke de Morny has repudiated the part assigned to him in the formation of the new Ministry. Complimentary as the imputation was, for the new Ministry has been generally well received, the Duke is right to refuse a position which, if honourable, is also awkward. He writes to the Constitutionnel,—"Several journals represent me as intervening in the formation of the ministry, and that in terms which would seem to indicate that they are almost authorized to do so by me. The fact is inexact, and the indecency of such supposition makes me overcome my habitual repugnance to concern myself with what is published on my account."

The King of Prussia is to leave Carlsbad on the 18th. He is, according to some accounts, to meet the Emperor of Austria at an estate in Bohemia belonging to the Grand Duke of Tuscany, who is making great preparations for the reception of his distinguished guests. The Crown Prince and Princess have returned from their provincial tour.

There have been some disturbances in Berlin, but not of a political character. A beerhouse-keeper in the Oranien Strasse was ejected by his landlord; his customers, sympathizing with him, broke into the house, and committed a great deal of mischief. A crowd assembled, and refused to disperse when ordered to do so by the police. Ultimately, barricades were erected with the materials taken from some houses building near—Berlin is about the worst town in the world for barricade-makers; its streets are very broad, and pavement is "conspicuous by its absence"—the military were called out, and soon cleared the streets with their swords. Several persons were wounded, and more than twenty were arrested, for the most part apprentices and young workmen. The excitement continued for several days, in spite of warnings and threats from the President of Police, and one or two serious conflicts are said by the telegraph to have taken place. Of course, if these disturbances are not suppressed soon, they may assume a political aspect. At present, they are nothing but an outbreak of the Berlin mob; one of the rudest, roughest, and most reckless in the world against the police, for whom they have an intense hatred.

Warnings continue to be freely distributed to the newspapers, and the result is that most of them abstain from all comments on domestic questions, only reprinting the triumphant articles of the organs of the Junker party, which enjoy an unlimited licence, and use it to revile and libel their opponents, who cannot answer them.

A trial has just finished at Turin which has excited very great interest, but to which, from the character of the crimes charged against the prisoners, a very general allusion only is possible. Six fathers of the order of the Ignorantelli, who possessed an establishment in Turin, at which the youth of the upper classes were educated, were arraigned upon the charge of acting with gross immorality towards their pupils. All the youths in the school, it was alleged, had been scandalously corrupted. Three of the fathers fled, and were condemned in contumaciam,—one, Father Theoger, the head of the establishment, to fifteen, one to eight, and one to six years' imprisonment. Of the three before the court, one was condemned to five years' imprisonment, and the other two were acquitted. In the present excited state of feeling against the clergy, much political passion has been imported into the trial.

The Italian Parliament is engaged in financial business for which it does not seem to have much stomach. It was so tired of the work of voting the budget of 1863, that it voted the same budget for the following year. Doubtless Herr Von Bismarck-Schonhausen regrets that the Prussian Parliament has not the same horror of figures. The question now before the Parliament is the income-tax, one of the measures by which Signor Minghetti promises the establishment of an equilibrium between income and expenditure at the end of four years. The Committee of the Chamber of Deputies, to which the measure was referred, has made a small rent in his calculation by striking a million sterling from the amount of the tax. The Minister wanted fifty-five million lire; it offers him thirty millions, which it divides amongst the provinces; the proportion of each commune, or rather group of 6,000 persons, to be settled by a syndical council with an appeal to the Council of State, the share of each individual to be determined by a municipal commission with an appeal to the prefect. The declaration of the tax-payer is to be the first basis of repartition, and incomes of 200 lire (£8) or less are to pay only two lire, or 1s. 7d.

The news from Greece is very unsatisfactory. The return of the deputations from their successful mission, charged with an autograph letter from the King to his people, could not stay the party conflicts. The Assembly did, indeed, declare the King of age, but it continued its stormy faction discussions; and now a mutiny has broken out in the army, which, accustomed by the Assembly to consider itself the ruling body, cannot brook the slightest attempt to reduce it to its proper position. We know nothing yet beyond the fact of the outbreak and the inability of the Government to suppress it. According to one account, the English, French, and Russian Ministers have arranged an armistice between the Government and the insurgents. Meanwhile in the provinces the same insubordination is manifest, and Nauplia is in the hands of a discontented soldiery.

The close of the Portuguese Chambers is, perhaps, a matter hardly worth recording, but if recorded at all, the record should be correct. We must, therefore, make a second rectification thereon. We announced, first, on the faith of a telegram supplied to the papers through the usual telegraphic agency, that the Chambers had been closed on the 12th of June, although the budget had not been voted. On the faith of a second telegram we corrected this statement, and substituted the 20th as the date of the event. We have now to make another and final correction—not on the faith of a telegram. The Chambers were closed on the 1st of July by a royal speech, which, inter alia, congratulated the members upon having voted the budget.

MADAGASCAR.

A revolution has taken place in Madagascar. King Radama II. has been strangled, and his widow Rabodo has been proclaimed sovereign under the name of Rasahery-Mangaka, which, as the Réunion newspapers tell us, signifies "Strong power." The revolution seems to have arisen in the discontent provoked by the king's favourites. The notabilities of the island, disgusted with their corruption, immorality and injustice, assembled, some 5000 or 6000 strong, and demanded from the king the heads of thirty-three of these favourites. The king resisted as long as he could, and at last gave way in part. In vain, however; he was himself strangled—it was announced that he had committed suicide. Rabodo was proclaimed sovereign, accepted the constitution, which it is said provides that she shall not drink strong liquors, and ascended the throne not as successor to Radama, whose reign seems to be treated as null and void, but of his predecessor Ranavolo. This intelligence created some excitement in France, who has always interested herself in Madagascar, and had, indeed, only abandoned her own claims to the sovereignty in a treaty of amity and commerce recently made with Radama, and not yet ratified. It was assumed without waiting for particulars, that the object of the revolution was to put an end to the treaties, and England was at once accused of being its instigator. One of the French papers went so far as to ascribe it to the influence of a particular English missionary. The particulars supplied by the French newspapers of the island of Réunion and by the French consul in Madagascar prove conclusively the absurdity of these accusations. The revolution seems to have had little or nothing to do with the treaties, which, in all probability, will be ratified. It is already announced that liberty of conscience is to be maintained, and the inhabitants say that the whole business is one which exclusively concerns themselves, a statement to which, as they have not injured any foreigners in the slightest degree, we heartily assent.

HAYTI.

President Giffard has had a little disagreement with the representatives of the people. They wanted to effect some reduction in the army, and the President disapproving the direction their labours were taking, had recourse to a dissolution. As this measure was not expected, it produced considerable discontent, and the President fearing disturbances has collected troops at Port-au-Prince, and declared the city in a state of siege.

PARLIAMENTARY NOTES.

THURSDAY, JULY 2.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

A bill for the separation of the Colonies of British Columbia and Vancouver's Island was, after a short discussion, read a second time.

THURSDAY, JULY 2.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

In reply to a question, Mr. Layard stated that no answer had yet been received to the notes sent by the three Powers to St. Petersburg, relative to the Polish question.

In answer to Mr. Forster, who inquired whether the Emperor of the French had, as Mr. Roebuck had said, made any application to our Government touching Mediation in America, which had been shown to Mr. Seward, and also, whether any recent proposition of that kind had been made by France, Mr. Layard said: I will answer the questions that have been put to me very briefly. It has been asked, first, Has any communication been made to her Majesty's Government by the French Government inviting her Majesty's Government to combine with the French Government in any proposed intervention, mediation, recognition, or interference of any kind? I stated on Tuesday night that no such communication had been made to her Majesty's Government. (Hear, hear.) I repeat it without equivocation (hear, hear), in the broad sense of the word, that no such communication has up to this time been made. (Hear, hear.) I mean, of course, since the communication of last November. (Hear, hear.) I was blamed, too, the other night for not having stated that a communication had been made to the noble lord at the head of the Foreign-office, who mentioned it in another place. The fact is, I was not at the time aware that such a communication had been received, inasmuch as it was not delivered until late in the afternoon. I now repeat it, that Baron Gros, hearing that rumours were in circulation that the hon. and learned member had stated that a communication had been made to her Majesty's Government by the French Government, came to Lord Russell of his own accord, and stated that he had not received any communication on the subject for her Majesty's Government, nor had he received any order to make a communication. (Hear, hear.) Lord Cowley has no knowledge of such a communication, and none has been made to him. I say, therefore, no such communication since last November has been made to her Majesty's Government. (Hear.) I trust that will be satisfactory to the House. (Cheers.) It is well known that M. Drouyn de Lhuys wrote a despatch proposing to her Majesty's Government to invite the United States to claim an armistice, in order that terms of arrangement might be come to between the contending parties. Although that despatch was dated the 10th of October, the communication was not made till the 10th of November. That despatch was read to her Majesty's Government, but no copy of it was given. In the papers relating to North America, marked No. 1, which have been laid upon the table of the House, it was stated in the first paragraph of a letter from Lord Russell to Earl Cowley, dated November 13th, that Count de Flahault came to the Foreign-office and read a despatch relating to the war in North America; but no copy of that despatch was given to her Majesty's Government. (Hear.) A very unusual course with respect to that despatch was taken by the French Government before her Majesty's Government had sent an answer to the proposal. The proposal itself, which had not been communicated to her Majesty's Government otherwise than by reading it, was published in the Moniteur of the 13th of November. I hold in my hand a copy of the Moniteur containing that despatch, and it is a curious fact that the published despatch ends by requesting Count de Flahault to read the despatch to her Majesty's Government; but it does not say anything about leaving a copy of the despatch. (Hear, hear.) The answer to that proposal, in the shape of a despatch to Lord Cowley, was sent off on the 13th of November, the very day on which it was published in the Moniteur. The answer was delivered to M. Drouyn de Lhuys on the 14th; but it was considered so important that the truth should be known, the French Government having taken the unprecedented course of publishing the despatch before receiving the reply of her Majesty's Government, that her Majesty's Government decided on publishing the answer on the same day it was delivered, and accordingly the answer appeared in the Gazette on the 14th. (Hear, hear.) The French Government explained why they had published the despatch. They stated that various rumours were abroad that the facts were very much exaggerated, and they thought it necessary to enlighten the public mind. Well, on the 15th, the day after the publication in the Gazette, the following despatch was sent, with a published despatch, to Mr. Stuart, who was Chargé d'Affaires at Washington, but it was received by Lord Lyons, who by the time it had arrived out had returned to his post:—

"Lord Russell to Mr. Stuart.

"Foreign-office, Nov. 15, 1862.

"Sir,—I inclose for your information a copy of the London Gazette of last evening, containing the answer returned by Her Majesty's Government to a proposal from the Government of the Emperor of the French, that the Governments of Great Britain, France, and Russia should jointly propose an armistice to the contending parties in North America."

No copy of the French proposal was sent, because Her Majesty's Government had not one at that time in their possession. (Hear, hear.) Well, Sir, on the 28th of November, Lord Lyons wrote to Earl Russell:—

"The intelligence that France had proposed to Great Britain and Russia to join her in advising the belligerents in this country to agree to an armistice reached New York by telegraph from Cape Race on the 25th inst. The substance of your Lordship's answer was received at the same time. Yesterday the text of the French proposal, of your Lordship's answer, and of the principal part of the Russian answer, was forwarded to New York by telegraph from Halifax."

(Hear, hear.) I may say that all the papers of the United States had got the entire text of the proposal and answer, and both were extensively commented on, and awakened a great deal of interest and excitement throughout the United States. M. Mercier had received a copy of the despatch of M. Drouyn de Lhuys on the 22nd, but did not communicate it. But on the 25th, the day of the arrival of the telegrams, M. Mercier went to Mr. Seward and communicated to him the text of the proposal of the French Government. So anxious had Lord Lyons been that he never broached the subject to Mr. Seward, and if hon. members will refer to the papers which I have quoted they will see a despatch from Lord Lyons on the 2nd of December in which he says—the first time Mr. Seward had spoken to him about the French proposal,—

"Mr. Seward, without my having in any way led to the subject, spoke to me yesterday of the proposal made by France to Great Britain and Russia to unite in advising the belligerents in this country to agree to an armistice."

(Hear, hear.) I hope the House has followed me as regards dates. (Hear, hear.) What I have stated will prove that it was not the English Government that published the proposal, but the French Government published their own despatch before we answered it—(hear, hear)—secondly, that it was not Lord Lyons but M. Mercier who communicated to Mr. Seward the copy of the proposal (hear, hear); and, thirdly, that it was Mr. Seward who spoke first on the subject to Lord Lyons, and not Lord Lyons to Mr. Seward. (Cheers.) I leave it to the House and the country to draw their own conclusions. (Loud cheers.)—Mr. Roebuck wished to ask a question. He wanted to know whether an application from the French Government to her Majesty's Ministers did not take place in the early part of the spring, very much to the same effect as he had stated; and whether the transaction to which he had referred was not that application.—Mr. Layard said he had requested every search to be made in the Foreign-office. Every despatch had been looked to, and he could find no other than he had referred to.—Lord R. Cecil asked whether there had been no verbal communications whatever.—Mr. Layard was understood to reply in the negative, and to say that he had stated all that was within his knowledge. (Hear, hear.)

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, in Committee of Supply, moved a vote for the purchase of the building in which the late Exhibition was held, the ground having been already purchased by the Government. He explained that the builders were not, according to contract, bound to remove the building in any given time; and therefore, as the House had agreed to purchase the ground, it would do well also to purchase the building that encumbered it.

The House evidently thought that this fact ought to have been communicated to it before the vote was taken for the purchase of the ground. It felt entrapped; and though all the chiefs of parties were committed to the measure, a furious debate ensued, ending in such a scene as has rarely been witnessed in the House of Commons. When Sir Stafford Northcote rose to address the Committee, the manifestations of impatience on the part of the hon. members were carried to such a height that the attempts of the hon. baronet to obtain a hearing were utterly in vain. Equally useless were the efforts of Mr. Disraeli and Mr. Lowe to restore something like order to the debate. At length, amid the universal uproar, the voice of Lord R. Cecil was heard entreating hon. members to conduct themselves with greater moderation.—Mr. Disraeli then succeeded in explaining that the object of Sir Stafford Northcote was to move that the matter be referred to a select committee. Subsequently, however, the committee divided on the proposal of the Government, when there appeared—For the vote, 121; against it, 287; majority against the Government proposal, 166. The announcement was received with great cheering from all parts of the House; and the vote having been struck out, the Chairman reported progress.

The House was shortly afterwards counted out.

FRIDAY, JULY 3.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

Lord Russell presented a petition from a few Fellows of divers colleges at Oxford, praying that subscription to the Articles of Religion may no longer be required as a qualification for certain academical degrees. The Earl of Derby and the Bishop of Oxford strongly objected to the proposal, which was supported by Lord Granville and the Bishop of London. The subject dropped, and their Lordships soon afterwards adjourned.

FRIDAY, JULY 3.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

On the order for going into Committee of Supply,—Mr. Caird brought under the notice of the House the question of the supply of cotton, and moved for a Select Committee to inquire whether any further measures could be taken, within the legitimate functions of the Indian Government, for increasing the supply of cotton from that country.—Mr. Cobden ridiculed the efforts hitherto made by the Indian Government to stimulate the growth of the cotton plant in our Eastern possessions, and which he said were more like those of a small chandler's shop than of an Imperial Government intrusted with responsible duties. Two measures had been recommended for encouraging cotton cultivation in India. One was the settlement of the land upon a perpetual tenure, and the other the sale of the waste lands; but he owned he did not share in the sanguine hopes which some persons formed with regard to the effects of these measures. He thought, however, that an alteration in the system of collection in India might be introduced with advantage. The hon. member also observed that at the foot of the Rocky Mountains, in the western valley of the Mississippi, there was an exhaustless field for the production of cotton, with a soil and climate admirably adapted to the plant, and which only required the investment of English skill, capital, and enterprise for its full development.—Sir C. Wood said he admitted that it was the duty of the Indian Government to improve the internal communications of the country, and that duty they had not neglected. In fact, the communications in India were quite equal to those of the United States, while every effort was being made still further to improve and extend them. As to cotton cultivation, it had already been tried in India, and after a five years' experience the experiment had proved a failure. It was true that in some instances it had been attended with a measure of success, but, on the whole, it was found that cotton raised in that country could not compete with that which was grown in more favoured regions. At the same time there was no indisposition on the part of the Government to assist private enterprise in the attempt to promote its culture in India.—Mr. Crawford approved of the course which had been followed by the Government in reference to this question.—Mr. Bright complained of the flippant and offensive manner in which the Indian Minister had treated the representations made by the deputation which had waited upon him. He did not believe that any material increase in the production of cotton could take place in India, or that the difficulties which now existed could be got rid of by any legislative miracle. Although as a rule demand created supply, that phrase had nevertheless its qualifications; and in India it was necessary to remedy the neglect, oppression, and total violation of all the economic laws which had so long prevailed there. Unless a proper land tenure was established, it was vain to hope for any customers or rapid improvement in the cultivation of the soil. What they wanted in India was an altogether new life—a revolution in the ideas and the practice of government. But that could not be brought about in a single year. It must be the work of time; and it was with that view he himself, some fifteen years ago, asked the House to consent to changes which, in his opinion, might have produced such a result. The House, however, objected, and now everybody was running down everybody else, and there was a contest as to who was to blame for the misfortunes which had arisen.

After some further debate the motion was withdrawn.

In reply to Mr. Butt, the Marquis of Hartington said that as the offence with which Colonel Crawley, of the Inniskilling Dragoons, was charged was of a military character, he would be tried by court-martial on his return to this country, and not by any civil tribunal.

Mr. Coningham again mentioned the case of Paymaster Smales, and the circumstances under which he had been cashiered in the same regiment. Having been more than once called to "order" by Mr. Bernal Osborne, who remarked that the hon. gentleman was doing an injury to the cause of his own client, Mr. Coningham made a personal observation insinuating that the hon. member was not "sober," which elicited from Mr. Osborne the retort that the member for Brighton was "not sane." Mr. Coningham then, in excited and angry terms, taunted the independent member for Liskeard with his habitual reticence when in office and the busy and prominent part he played when out, and concluded by expressing a hope that the Government would take compassion on him, and confer upon him some small appointment in the outskirts of the Administration. This outbreak of passion appeared to take the House completely by surprise, and Mr. Speaker sat bewildered and dumbfounded. At length Sir G. Grey rose and emphatically pronounced the scene discreditably to the House of Commons, rebuked both the gentlemen engaged in it, and suggested that here all further bandying of personalities must cease. The House then proceeded to business. Several orders were disposed of, and the House rose.

MONDAY, JULY 6.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

No business of interest was transacted.

MONDAY, JULY 6.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday the 13th instant was fixed, by agreement, for the resumption of the debate on the recognition of the Confederate States.

In answer to Mr. Seymour Fitzgerald, Mr. Layard said that the Government had received from the Governor of the Bahamas an account which tallied pretty well with the facts stated in the public press with regard to the Margaret and Jessie—namely, the deposition of the commander of that vessel. At the same time, the Government had heard from Washington that on a similar account having appeared in the American papers, Mr. Seward immediately wrote to Lord Lyons a note stating that he had received from the commander of a vessel of war an account of the same transaction, and that officer denied having fired into the Margaret and Jessie when within British waters. Mr. Seward stated that inquiries would be made, and that if it turned out that the vessel had been fired at in British waters the most ample redress would be afforded. This reply was received with cheers from the Radical benches.

After a debate raised by Mr. Ayrton in regard to the estate of the Commissioners of the Exhibition of 1851, which had no result, Lord Naas called the attention of the House to the policy of the present Government in China, of which he gave an elaborate history, and which he censured as likely to involve us in embarrassments and responsibilities of which no one could foresee the end. A long discussion took place on this subject, without any motion being put.

In Committee, a vote of £650,000 was passed, on the motion of Lord Palmerston, for coast and dockyard fortifications.

The House soon afterwards adjourned.

TUESDAY, JULY 7.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

After a brief conversation among the Law Lords, the Bill for the revision of the Statute Book was read a second time. On the motion for going into Committee on the Public Works (Manufacturing Districts) Bill, Lord Derby remarked that there had been of late a great increase of employment in Lancashire, inasmuch that forty-seven Local Relief Committees had suspended operations. He also stated that during the last year no less than £1,900,000 had been subscribed by private charity for the benefit of the sufferers, and that there still remained available a sum of £600,000, given or promised; but that this would be wholly insufficient to meet the demands of the coming winter.

The Bill passed through Committee, and after some formal business had been disposed of, their Lordships adjourned.

TUESDAY, JULY 7.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The morning sitting was occupied with a discussion on the Irish Fisheries Bill, which passed through Committee.

The evening sitting was consumed by an attack on the constitution of the Commission of Public Works, defeated by a majority of 116 to 24; and a motion by Sir F. Kelly, for inquiring into the claims of a pretender to the dignity of Nawab of the Carnatic, on which the House was counted out about half-past eight.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 8.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

No business of public interest was transacted.

THE EMPEROR AND MR. ROEBUCK.

The Moniteur of the 4th contains the following:—"Explanations have been rendered necessary by an occurrence which recently took place in the House of Commons. Messrs. Roebuck and Lindsay visited Fontainebleau to engage the Emperor to take official steps at London for the recognition of the Southern States. The Emperor expressed his desire to see peace re-established in America, but observed that, England having declined his proposal of mediation the previous October, he did not think he could submit a new proposition without the certainty of its acceptance. His Majesty stated further that his Ambassador should nevertheless receive instructions to sound the English Cabinet upon the subject, giving it to understand that if England thought the recognition of the South likely to put an end to the war the Emperor was disposed to follow her in that course. These explanations will demonstrate that the Emperor has not attempted, as certain publications pretend, to influence the British Parliament by the medium of two of its members. All that took place was a frank interchange of opinions, in an interview which the Emperor saw no reason to refuse."

The France, in copying the above says,—

"If the pacific proposals of the Emperor were resumed, their certain and well-defined object would be the recognition of the Southern Confederacy. Six months ago that recognition was looked on only as the eventual result of the cessation of hostilities. At present, in the opinion of the French Government, it is not the end of the war that would bring about recognition, but recognition that would bring the war to a close."

In the Times of July 4th, the following letter appeared from Mr. Lindsay:—

Sir,—Pardon me for saying it would have been as well to have reserved your comments on the statements made by Mr. Roebuck in the House of Commons on Tuesday night, until the debate was ended.

The debate is yet pending, and those comments can only prejudice. In the meantime I think it due to Mr. Roebuck to say that what he has stated is true, and shall be confirmed by me in Parliament with time, place, and circumstances when the debate is resumed. I have to regret that it is postponed for a time, even so long as the 13th inst.

You have been pleased to speak of us as self-constituted ambassadors. I have only to reply that at my first interview with the Emperor, in January, 1861, I was accompanied by her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris. That interview was proposed upon matters referring exclusively to English and French maritime interests.

My subsequent interviews with the Emperor, preceding the last, were upon a like mission. At some of them he introduced the subject of the civil war in America, and spoke freely upon it. Whatever he said was fully reported by me at the time to Lord Cowley, with the Emperor's knowledge and permission. The interview I had in company with Mr. Roebuck on the 23rd ult., to which he referred in the House, was brought about by circumstances which, in due time, shall be fully made known to the country. I should have had no objection to make what then passed equally known to Lord Cowley when returning to London from Fontainebleau, through Paris, had time permitted.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

W. S. LINDSAY.

A glaring inaccuracy in the statement of dates, made by Mr. Layard in Parliament on the 2nd, is thus exposed by the Times' Paris correspondent:—

In the explanation given by Mr. Layard in the House of Commons on Thursday night on the despatch of M. Drouyn de Lhuys, relative to intervention in America, it was stated that, "although that despatch was dated the 10th of October, the communication was not made till the 10th of November." I have before me the Moniteur of the 13th of November, to which Mr. Layard refers, and I find that the despatch is dated not the 10th, but the 30th of October. Where dates are in question a difference of twenty days is of some importance. The same despatch was addressed to the Russian Government, and bears the same date—viz., on the 30th of October.

IMPORTANT INTELLIGENCE FROM THE SPIRIT LAND.—The Independent has the authority of spiritualists for declaring that since his death Stonewall Jackson has become a strong anti-slavery man. We have the same authority for the statement that Greeley, Beecher, and Cheever will be Union men within five years after they are hung in 1865 by the democratic administration.—New York Herald.

THE WOUNDED IN THE LATE BATTLES.—We have been enabled to ascertain the exact number of our men who were wounded in the last battles about Fredericksburg. They amount to six thousand one hundred and thirty-eight. Six thousand one hundred have been brought by railroad to this city. The balance remain in hospital near the battle field. Of those who have been brought hither, the wounds of two thousand are very slight—only sufficient in the majority of cases to enable the sufferers to obtain furloughs.

THE GULF DEPARTMENT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA, June 14.

General Banks is fast earning the reputation of being a military Micawber. Ever since the assault of May 27 he has been waiting for something to turn up. So likewise have the people in this city. We receive news from Port Hudson by boat every day, but nothing is permitted to be published here; and, indeed, there is very little to print in the way of army movements. Excepting daily skirmishing between pickets, an occasional gun from the batteries at Port Hudson and a response from the Federal batteries, the affair at Clinton, and a subsequent fight between Augur's division and a few Confederates at Plains Store, near Springfield Landing, nothing has been done on either side. The Federals "hold out," and the Confederates hold in—in Port Hudson. Farragut's fleet lies below, and is ineffective now, since there is a liability of shelling their own troops if they fire at Port Hudson. Banks has advanced his lines, and several nine-inch guns with men to work them have been brought from the fleet to shore. The Confederates have fired whenever they saw an attempt to mount guns on the Federal earthworks, and the sharpshooters on both sides have been busily engaged in picking off men. A few deserters and prisoners taken by pickets report that there is an abundance of food in Port Hudson, and that there are plenty of cattle. All think the place will not surrender, but that the Confederates, if hard-pushed, will cut their way out through the Federal lines.

Last evening a telegram to this city announced that Banks was ready to make another assault, and the steamer to sail for New York this morning is detained for despatches, which are hourly expected by boat from Port Hudson. I hardly think, however, that I can send you an account of the reduction of that place by this mail.

We have had another "Fox" affair. The tug Boston, towing the bark Jenny Lind into the Passe à l'Outre, Tuesday last, was boarded by men from shore, who cut the tow line, and steamed out into the Gulf that night, as we learn by despatch last evening; and the Boston overhauled the bark Lenox, bound from New York to New Orleans, sent the crew and passengers ashore in the long-boat, carried away the captain and two mates, and burnt the bark. A Federal gunboat was sent in pursuit of the Boston, but did not find her. The steamer Matanzas, last from New York to this port, passed a large cotton-laden steamer, which had probably come through the blockade at Mobile. I wish our arrivals and departures were as frequent and regular as they are with our "strongly-blockaded" neighbour.

I inclose a list of the persons sent away from this city as "registered enemies." They arrived in Mobile as "Exiles from Louisiana," and most of the men are now doing good service in the Confederate States' army.

The fine St. Louis Hotel, in this city, has been seized for a Federal hospital, though the city is full of large, fine, and vacant stores and warehouses, which would answer for hospital purposes much better than the St. Louis.

A young girl has been murdered in this city, "because"—the evidence says—"she insulted" a drunken Zouave, "by talking seditiously!" The Zouave has been convicted of manslaughter only. I annex the account of the affair from Banks's organ:—

TRIAL FOR MANSLAUGHTER.—In our court reports will be found the proceedings in the case of the State v. George White, for manslaughter. White shot and killed a young female of bad character in Burgundy-street in December last, because she insulted him by talking seditiously. The girl's name was Susan Parker; she was quite young, and remarkable for her beauty, but as frail as she was beautiful. White deliberately shot her in the back with his revolver, and she died two months subsequently from the effects of the wound in the hospital. The evidence showed it to be clearly a case of murder, but as the grand jury had, through error, indicted him for manslaughter only, he is spared the rightful punishment of death for an atrocious and cowardly crime. Susan Parker, we believe, was a native of Louisville, Kentucky—was well born, respectfully connected, and bred for a higher position in society than the one she filled in this city. White was from New York, and was a member of the 6th Zouaves. He led a wild and dissolute life in this city, associating entirely with persons of the character of his victim, whose company he had kept for some time previous to the difficulty which resulted in her death.

The following defence is from the official organ's report:—

Mr. Horner remarked that he had been appointed by the Court to defend the prisoner. He said that this was a case resulting from the military condition of things; that the accused was justified by the provocation he had received. It was remarkable, since the military occupation of this city, how few cases of this kind had occurred. Without enlarging, he would submit the provocation and the military circumstances of the times in mitigation of the killing, which latter fact could not well be denied.

What do you think of our civilization in America? MORE anon.

EXILES FROM NEW ORLEANS.

Our New Orleans correspondent transmits to us a List, alphabetically arranged, of the "Registered Enemies," who have been banished from their homes by the edict of the Federal commanders. The list comprises all the arrivals in Mobile up to June 1st:—

John Allston, Joseph Adams, C. Andry and family, E. A. Atkins, J. Albert, M. M. Aloone, L. Anglade, E. Anglade, O. de Armas and wife, Mrs. A. de Armas and family, Joel Aken, J. R. Anderson, Gavine Albert, Mrs. Axson, Mrs. Alvares and family, W. H. Almindinger, C. Allain, E. Allen, Alex. Abrams and family, O. Andry, Jos. A. Adde, C. W. Allen, Mrs. V. Alvado, R. Alvado, A. Alvado, Felix Armand, Arthur Arroyo, Frank Alvarez, H. T. Axson, A. Barrit, A. Blake, Wm. Bell, T. T. Bolliny, Francis P. Beck, W. P. Brewer, Dr. J. C. Batchelor, Mrs. V. Barranco and family, W. H. Brooks, D. F. Bryan, James Bushy, L. D. Brindley, T. Bracken, E. Boudousquie and family, F. Bertoulin, Jules Bernudez, M. Bogart, W. Barnes and wife, R. B. Barrett, A. A. Brugier, Aug. Brugier, A. L. Brugier, S. E. Brunet, O. Blache, C. C. Bryant, John Bryan and family, J. A. Bailey, R. Y. Black and family, J. C. Black, E. C. Buchanan and family, Wilson Bibb, J. S. Berthelot, O. Benson, A. W. Brewerton, J. W. Breedlove, John Brooks, H. Burke, John Byrd, W. Bedford and wife, Mrs. Berry, Wm. Barker, George Blume, Bernaben, T. J. Black, W. Blumer and wife, J. B. Bailey, N. J. Baybi, V. J. Bellaume, W. J. Brabasin, A. H. Brevard, Dr. J. Burns and family, Jas. S. Brander, jun., John Black, W. Bramp, Mrs. Bertin, Alex. Bertin and family, Miss T. Bertin, Miss Bertin, M. A. Bertin, John Boyce, Felix Belson, J. Belson, jun., D. Belson, Mrs. Col. Bartlett and family, J. Baudreaux, A. Bochey, James S. Butler, C. Betat, P. Blanc, Alexander Baudier, Chas. A. Baudier, Louis M. Comes, Dr. Caire, R. B. Clark and family, Thos. Corbitt, W. W. Cooper, John H. Curry, George Clincher, C. W. Culbertson, A. T. Crebick, L. E. Charbonnet, G. E. Courtin, M. Contreras, A. Courtin, F. D. Craanes, M. S. Collier, M. Centliver, Mrs. M. Covett and child, S. Cottarex, S. S. Callender, Thos. Connell, Wm. Crayon, W. Cunningham, Dr. A. H. Cenas, A. R. Clark, Thos. S. Collins, Chas. W. Clark, Miss S. Calder, E. A. Clark, Thomas Condon, Mr. John Corbett and family, Chas. Clark, John E. Crone, Henry Campbell, Mrs. Charlton and son, Mrs. Anne Cooke, H. C. Clark, Alex. Cook, John Cox, J. A. Clough, R. B. Cenas, Thos. Cannon, John Conwell, Miss R. G. Cross, Ernest Corne, P. C. Cuvillier, Wm. G. Crawford, Mrs. Ann Cooper, E. V. Courtrain, S. Conen, B. E. Coffee, E. Cornu, F. Charleville, F. Coping, George Dunn, A. D. Dapny, R. A. Dumnit, Louis Dapremont, E. Davenport and family, F. A. Dentzel, John Davenport, Mike Dunn, E. Delesdernier, J. W. Davis, S. P. de la Barre, A. de la Barre, and wife, J. O. de Dastro and family, J. S. O. de Castro, A. Deby, L. Desforges, M. C. Dunn, Miss M. C. Dunn, P. C. Demier, W. H. Dumas, H. M. Dysart, E. A. Degruy, Alphonse Degruy, G. Duburst, Jos. Duvinageud, Thomas H. Dryden, W. W. Dixon, J. A. DeBlanc and family, A. Deley, W. Dennison, J. Davidson, E. Davenport, G. de Feriet and family, F. W. Delesdernier and family, S. M. Darby and family, Mrs. L. De Blanc, John E. Dutillet, A. Durie, V. Decoux, B. S. Delahoussay, P. Duvernay, Dr. Robert Davis, Frederick Eberhard, Y. T. Eggleston, Martin Eagan, P. H. Elliott and family, Peter Esuard, T. S. Elliott, G. W. Elmer, Miss A. Edgar, Miss H. Edgar, L. Exmielos, M. Esnard, George Ehrenborg, Mrs. D. R. Eakin, John N. Elliott, John Engleheart, Dr. E. D. Fenner, Mr. Francis, Tim Fannin, Thomas W. Fisher, C. H. Fearing, Charles Ford, James Fin, J. P. Fulkerson, F. B. Fleitas and servant, Charles E. Forstall, E. Fillicul, Joseph French, Jno. Forbes, A. H. Foster, Anatole Fagot, Frs. Faber, James Fitzgerald, P. H. Flood, C. S. Fayssoux, E. H. Flynn, E. F. Fayle, M. Fisher, Mrs. G. Folsom and family, Valcour Fortier, Mrs. E. Flood and family, J. Fennimore, Mrs. Fowler and family, P. D. Farrar, G. T. Freret, Justin Fremaux, Oscar J. Forstall, Ernest L. Forstall, H. Ferand, L. O. Fontenette, M. Greenwood and family, Robert Gray, Miss M. Grivot, James C. Gratton, James Grant, H. V. Garidel, R. P. Giles and servant, Thomas Gavin, F. H. Guillot, J. A. Guildig and wife, J. F. Gomez, James Grass, A. P. Garcia, E. P. Girod, F. Grace, Adam Giffen, F. H. Galpin, H. D. Gaines, S. Golden, W. S. Goff and wife, Rev. J. K. Gutheim and family, C. F. Grater, John W. Gayle and family, Mrs. H. Gallagher, Misses Gentin, Miss J. Garidel, William Garvey, Mrs. I. Gibbons, George A. Grimes, M. E. Garcia, Ed. Golden, L. M. Gerard, W. D. Hennen, S. S. Hatch, D. M. Hollingsworth, E. D. Hubbell, Benjamin E. Handy, W. H. Hoover, George F. Haller, J. M. Hodgkinson, J. O. Harrison and family, J. S. Hurst, A. W. Hill, Mrs. Henry O. Hall, Misses Emma and J. Hall, F. Holyland, Rev. C. S. Hedges and family, George Hull, James Hossacks, James H. Huckins, N. J. Hoey, John H. Heslin, Wm. Hale, J. B. Hubbard, Wm. J. Hammond, Miss Bettie Horrell, Captain S. Heno, Mrs. Dr. Hester, N. E. Hyams, H. J. Hurt, John Houlihan, John Holiday, George Hawthorne, H. Hombeight, John P. Hoffman, John Jones, P. L. Jacobs, A. Jacobs, J. Jackson, J. Johnston, Tim S. Jewitt, J. U. Jerreau, Arthur Jordis, Peter Jacobum, T. P. Jones, William E. Jerver and family, James H. Jagot, J. G. Judice, W. F. Johnson, P. Jourdan, James Kelly, John E. Kernan, J. P. Kofsky, jun., D. L. Kuerion and son, Miss Kerr, Aleck B. Kerkenot, J. B. Kendrick, James Kinrney, M. Kain, G. Kronberz, J. D. Kitchen, R. H. Kitchen, Wm. H. Kitchen, C. Kohler, James Kelly, R. C. Kerr, M. G. Kennedy, T. H. Kennedy and two sons, J. P. Kofsky, sen., F. S. King and family, Mr. Layton, John T. Luddy, S. B. Logan, George Land, John Land, Joseph Littlejohn and family, Mrs. Dr. Luckett and child, Dr. J. A. Lanauan, Lewis Levy, William De Lacy, Mrs. Lance, G. A. Landeaux, V. Labranche, Mrs. Lodge, C. Lombard, J. M. Lamare, Ernest Lehman, C. A. Labazan, Felix and Ernest Lambert, D. C. Labati and family, J. Lazare, S. Lyon, jun., Gustave and Eugene Leclerc, Eugene Lason, A. Lawson, F. A. Lombard, Dr. W. Lamberti and family, Charles Le Breton, A. L. Labarre, Philip Lodge, E. E. Livandais, Arthur Legendre, J. H. Landun, John E. and Jules Livandais, J. E. Le Conge, J. L. McIntyre, Philip Munch, John Murrah, Rev. G. L. Moore and family, L. J. Maddox, Miss Messey, A. T. Maxwell, Thomas McCanley, John Myers, L. V. Marye and family, Camille Monteau, Judge D. F. Mitchell, Frank Martin, J. E. Mortimer, J. F. Mayer, John McLeod, R. McCollum, G. W. Mader, Camille Montanet, L. M. Merrill, Geo. Maxent, J. E. Maguire, Patrick McDonald, Jeff. Moore, J. Maxent, T. A. Macosas, R. H. Marr and family, John Madden, Jere Mitchell, John Morrison, W. H. Manson, H. C. Marconneau, A. Magnon, E. H. Magnon, H. V. McCall, Emile Martin, M. Moran, Wm. A. McNemara, L. McCready, B. McDermott, Mrs. Mongean and children, S. D. McNeill, J. Minier, H. H. Marks, Mrs. A. S. Morgan, L. P. Melvaire, Dr. J. J. McQuilty, C. Moran, I. Macready, A. Maurice, A. McNeill, Jacques Mascot, A. Meit-leur, W. T. McGanghreen and family, C. C. Mazerat and wife, Mrs. Col. J. O. Nixon and family, Lucas Norris, J. O. Neibert and family, George Noble, W. C. Neal, J. Nugent, S. Nathan and family, Chas. Neames and family, Chas. Natall, A. Natall, W. R. Norcom and family, L. Nathan and family, O. J. Noyes, Chas. Newman, Edward Newman, H. L. Noyes, Peter O'Neal, Thos. O'Neal, A. Oehmichan, T. D. O'Rourke, Martin O'Keefe, Richard O'Donnell, John O'Neill and family, Gen. A. J. Powell, Saml. Phillips, H. J. Peterson and servant, F. F. Proctor, R. Painpare, Misses V. and E. Pollard, Wm. M. Pinckard, jun. and wife, Z. M. Pike, W. H. Paxton, A. Pettipain, E. Pettipain, S. Pescaux, Mrs. Pollock and child, A. Padron, J. H. Preston, G. A. Pierce, John Pfeiffer, Philip J. Panch, Philip Power, jun., Mrs. L. Palms, Geo. Palfrey, J. Paizer, P. S. Quaid, Smith Raynes, W. L. Robinson and family, J. H. Rareshide and family, F. J. Reade, C. H. Reed, P. Rousseau, C. Raymon, Isaac E. Roberts, Felix Ruleau, H. F. Requier, R. C. Richardson and lady, Eli Rhodes, John Reeves, Mrs. Ramp, J. W. Riddle, A. Reggio, W. H. Robinson, James Robinson, William Roger, H. C. Ranet, A. J. Rugely, R. L. Risk and wife, John Rodewald, Henry Rideau, D. D. Rogers, Paul E. Retif, Armand Retif, L. E. Retif, A. Reinert, Ed. Reffier, B. F. Sims and family, Wm. J. Starke, Patrick Swan, Theo. Smith, John Saul, Dal. Shay, E. A. Sannier, Benj. Stakeman, Thos. Stapleton, John D. Sebastian, W. H. Starke, Mrs. J. L. Shaw and three children, Solomon Spiers, F. Seheissnaydre, Dr. C. Seuzenneau, J. A. Simillier, John Stenfeltz, P. Shiger, Mrs. U. Sadler, Mrs. George Sadler, Mrs. E. Sadler, Miss F. Sadler, U. Sadler and son, A. Saulet, J. B. Scott, A. St. Arman, O. Smelser, Wm. Salomon and family, L. Seichsnaydre, A. Seichsnaydre, T. S. Semmerau, Chas. Staplin, W. F. B. Scott, E. Sauler, J. D. Sul, J. P. Todd and family, John Thomas, J. G. Taylor, J. Tucker and wife, John B. Tourant, Theo. Tureau, W. J. Thompson, M. J. Trinchard, Louis E. Tabaro, A. Treford, Jules Train, Henry Train, jun., G. W. Turs, N. O. J. Tisdale and family, W. S. Toledano, O. J. Toledano, James J. Tarleton, Wm. Vincent, G. Vincent, W. Van Benthuyssen and family, Miss H. V. Van Benthuyssen, Ch. Van Benthuyssen, Delphin Vinetti, J. G. Vienne, Oscar Villere, Cyr. Villere, O. Valetton, T. L. Villa, Edgar Verret, Joseph Vautier, S. P. Valette, Alfred Vean, A. D. Voisin, G. Villars, D. Villars, Abram L. White, Wm. White, L. D. C. Wood, Edward White, James Williams, J. L. Wilbur, J. H. Woods, Henry Wilkinson, Mrs. E. B. Wilson, John J. Wilson, D. P. White, Mrs. S. Walker, John Williams, W. Williamson, Mrs. Mary Williams, John Wallace, M. Whoolehan, W. T. Wagner, J. Winterhalter, T. Winterhalter, P. E. Wiltz, jun., J. C. Weems, J. R. Wooldridge, Henry Wright, Willis Watson, James Wallace, R. H. Walker, W. Weymouth, M. M. Wootan, Jules Webre, Philip Wirt, J. H. Young, R. Zimmerman.

The following are reported as having arrived in Mobile since June 1:—

Mrs. Nuna Augustin and family, Louis C. Arny, wife and three children, E. Bounep and family, H. Boislanc, J. L. Bourgeois, Mrs. M. C. Blair, Miss Anne Brown, Wm. H. Barnett, Adolphe Bourcin, Gen. B. Buisson and family, Edward Crevon, Mrs. Canter and daughter, E. D. Cuvillier, H. F. Cantson and family, Mrs. Chapotin and family, H. Dubuys, A. D'Aquin, Jules G. Dreux, Charles Funel, W. F. M. Fortier, Mrs. J. W. Fowler and family, William Fink, Mrs. Pagot, Anatole Forstall, Octave Forstall, William Forstall, Paul Forstall, Joseph Genois, jun., H. Girars and family, Pierre Gerard, Philibert Gerard, P. Greenwall, H. Guilloite, R. D. Hubbard, J. G. Harrington, E. J. Houston, Mrs. E. M. Keplinger and two children, L. M. Kennett, jun., Mrs. R. M. Lusher, John Miller, Julien Michel, Louis Mongeon, Catherine Myers, E. Mondelli, M. E. Marceaux, Mrs. Jane M. Farland, Mrs. Vessage and family, Mrs. Mathews and family, P. Michell and three children, Jeff Moyman, J. J. Osborne, S. O'Connor and family, J. A. O'Connor, P. S. Quaid, C. E. Quiza, Thomas Reid, Mrs. A. J. Rugely, L. N. Roche, D. Roche, G. Renaud, William Reef, H. St. Germain and family, E. Salomon and family, J. S. Saropara, Wm. R. Skelton, J. Thibaut, L. A. Trinchard, John Tonglet, F. B. Trinchard, T. Taquino, Wm. Thompson, R. Tarsan, Henry C. Weymouth, Carl Weysham, W. A. Woods, J. H. Young, R. Zimmerman.

PARIS TOPICS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, July 7.

I HAVE the pleasure of beginning a letter without having to devote the first lines to Poland. The press allows us a breathing space while waiting for the answer of Russia, and public opinion at once takes advantage of the lull to believe that the danger is past. Yesterday's Bourse was active, and there was a considerable rise in most of the public securities.

Sunday's Moniteur contained at the head of its non-official part, an article on Messrs. Roebuck and Lindsay's interview with the Emperor, which I need not translate, as the London papers of the next morning gave it in the telegrams. Of course, the newspapers which had only by degrees gathered courage to reproduce the divergent statements of Mr. Roebuck, Lord Russell, and Mr. Layard, all hung comments on this note, each as its affections prompted. The Presse, which, with the France, is the boldest of the French papers, concludes from the article, that "Baron Gros must have received instructions to sound the intentions of Lord Palmerston. This is now an ascertained fact; and without venturing to pry too closely into the mysteries of diplomacy, we think we may hope that at no distant time the question will again engage the attention of the two Governments and will assume a definite shape." The Opinion Nationale considers the note as a proof of ill-will on the part of France to the Cabinet of Washington. The Siecle produces the note without remarks, but in its next number it prints a letter dated from New York, the 23rd, which represents the enthusiasm with which the North is about to repulse the Southern invasion as equal to that which inflamed the population on the fall of Fort Sumter. It describes the cordial co-operation of the Governors of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and New York in providing the means of an energetic resistance. Your readers are aware that the French press really has a powerful influence on public opinion, and the false suggestions in which many of its members indulge are only equalled by the suppressions of the truth which mark their daily polemics. The opposition papers have, of course, a wider circulation than those friendly to the Government, among a people in whom the old spirit of the Fronde is as vivacious as in the days of Mazarin. All the sympathies of the French Government have, from the outset, been with the South, and this quite independently of other reasons, dictated the line which the opposition press has consistently followed; the Orleanist Debats republican Siecle, the Palais Royal Opinion, all join in the halloo against the South.

The Presse, which seems to aim at placing itself above party, though it is generally considered an opposition paper, and was formerly bitterly hostile to the South, has, since M. de Girardin's resumption of the pen, consistently advocated separation, which it has proved in many able articles to be inevitable. It is to the influence of the opposition papers that the general indifference of the French people to the bloody nature of the American struggle is to be ascribed, for here it is the reverse of England; the people is indifferent or hostile to the South, while the Government is strongly in its favour; while with us the popular sympathy with the Confederates has not yet reacted on the stiff-necked old gentlemen who govern us. The feeling of the country in England always ends by influencing the Government, but it is one of the great merits of our system that it does so slowly. In home questions this saves us from rash changes, but in such a case as the American civil war it necessarily delays our action and paralyses our influence in the cause of humanity.

The 4th of July was celebrated by a breakfast at the Grand Hotel, which passed off very quietly, notwithstanding an incident that might have had disagreeable results to that very flourishing establishment. The managers of the banquet had indulged their patriotism by hanging from a window of the room they were to meet in, the stripes and all the stars of the old Union. There are a number of Southern families living in the hotel, and at the sight of this emblem waving over their heads as they lounged in the great court, a natural feeling of indignation seized them. Might they not at least count on having their ease in their inn? One after another they called for their accounts, to the bewilderment and astonishment of the steward, a Frenchman, who knows not the Union or its flag. When the reason of the threatened exodus was explained, he at once had the cause of offence removed. The culinary merits of the entertainment probably suffered nothing by the withdrawal of the flag, and for the purposes of the speech-makers it would serve as well when hung from a peg in the room, as if it had fluttered in the gentle July breeze. The company, to the number of twenty-five, or according to a Northern authority of eleven, was exceedingly well conducted, and separated without creating any disturbance in the neighbourhood. In fact, no one would have suspected that a national festivity was being celebrated.

The news from Madagascar has created a very painful sensation here. All the published accounts, excepting those which occupy the first page of to-day's Moniteur, agree in ascribing the instigation to the king's murder to an English missionary named Ellis, and some go so far as to say he was present. In one account it is added that the English Consul countenances this accusation, which is too monstrous to be credible. There is only too great readiness in France to see the hand of England in an event which is a blow to French influence, and affects considerable pecuniary interests. The entire staff of a French company, lately formed for working the mines of Madagascar, was expected to arrive at the very time when this tragedy was enacted. The official accounts from the French Consul contained in the Moniteur are in very moderate language, and he confirms the report that the king had authorized duels and private wars by laws—laws which were the pretext at least of the movement, and too fully justified it. There are rumours for the truth of which I do not answer, that an expedition is already projected to revindicate the old French settlements, which the Emperor had renounced all claim to in the treaty which has just been thus violently annulled.

The French Exhibition of Fine Arts closed last Wednesday. The Moniteur gives the list of recompenses, among which are nine decorations of the Legion of Honour for Frenchmen and five for foreigners. Among these is the Russian artist Swertchikow, whose "Return from the Boar-hunt" was so much admired.

Notwithstanding my regret to be obliged to return to a subject which I had hoped to be able, for one week at least, to avoid, a violent article in this evening's

Patrie, headed "Intervention in Poland," forbids my silence. "In the case not of belligerents, but of victims and their executioners, diplomacy is powerless. In presence of the cruelties without name committed by the Muscovite pro-consuls, its prolonged action is illusory and even inhuman.... Diplomacy has played its part: it is the term for war. This will be short but effective: it must not be delayed. Every hour that passes is an hour lost to civilization. If autumn comes without something having been done, it may be said that Poland is no more—Finis Poloniae! She will be crushed, and Europe will remain with the shame of suffering the murder of a generous people when it could have saved it. The re-establishment of Poland is a question of European order. Let Europe look to it." The feeling of uneasiness, which for the last few days seemed to be quieted, has again made itself felt, and there is a heavy fall at the Bourse.

JACKSON AND HIS FORMER PUPILS.

The following is the General Order in which the death of Stonewall Jackson was officially announced to the Cadets of the Virginia Military Institute, in which the late General had for ten years been a professor:—

Head-quarters, Virginia Military Institute,
May 13, 1863.

General Orders, No. 30.

It is the painful duty of the Superintendent to announce to the officers and cadets of this Institution, the death of their late associate and professor, Lieutenant-General Thomas J. Jackson. He died at Guinney's Station, Caroline county, Virginia, on the 10th instant, of pneumonia, after a short but violent illness, supervening upon the severe wounds received in the battle of Chancellorsville. A nation mourns the loss of General Jackson. First, in the hearts of the brave men he has so often led to victory, there is not a home in this Confederacy that will not feel the loss, and lament it as a great national calamity. But our loss is distinctive. He was peculiarly our own. He came to us in 1851, a Lieutenant and Brevet-Major of Artillery, from the army of the late United States, upon the unanimous appointment of the Board of Visitors, as Professor of Natural and Experimental Philosophy, and Instructor of Artillery. Here he laboured, with scrupulous fidelity, for ten years, in the duties of these important offices. Here he became a soldier of the Cross; and, as an humble, conscientious and useful Christian man, he established the character which has developed into the world-renowned Christian hero. On the 20th of April, 1861, upon the order of his Excellency, Governor Letcher, he left the Institute in command of the corps of Cadets, for Camp Lee, Richmond, for service in the defence of his State and country; and he has never known a day of rest, until called by the Divine command to cease from his labours.

The military career of General Jackson fills the most brilliant and momentous page in the history of our country, and in the achievements of our arms, and he stands forth a colossal figure in this war for our independence.

His country now returns him to us—not as he was when he left us. His spirit has gone to God who gave it. His mutilated body comes back to us—to his home—to be laid by us in his tomb. Reverently and affectionately we will discharge this last solemn duty. And,

"Though his earthly sun has set,
Its light shall linger round us yet,
Bright—radiant—blest."

Young Gentlemen of the Corps of Cadets.—The memory of General Jackson is very precious to you. You know how faithfully, how conscientiously he discharged every duty. You know that he was emphatically a man of God, and that Christian principle impressed every act of his life. You know how he sustained the honour of our arms when he commanded at Harper's Ferry—how gallantly he repulsed Patterson at Hainesville—the invincible stand he made with his Stonewall Brigade at Manassas. You know the brilliant series of successes and victories which immortalised his Valley campaign—for many of you were under his standard at McDowell, and pursued the discomfited Milroy and Schenck to Franklin. You know his rapid march to the Chickahominy—how he turned the flank of McClellan at Gaines' Mill—his subsequent victory over Pope at Cedar Mountain—the part he bore in the great victory at second Manassas—his investment and capture of Harper's Ferry—his rapid march and great conflict at Sharpsburg—and when his last conflict was passed, the tribute of the magnanimous Lee, who would gladly have suffered in his own person, could he, by that sacrifice, have saved General Jackson, and to whom alone, under God, he gave the whole glory of the great victory of Chancellorsville, surely, the Virginia Military Institute has a precious inheritance in the memory of General Jackson.

His work is finished; God gave him to us and to his country; He fitted him for his work, and when his work was done, He called him to Himself. Submission to the will of his Heavenly Father. It may be said of him, that while in every heart there may be some murmuring—his will was to do and suffer the will of God.

Reverence the memory of such a man as General Jackson; imitate his virtues, and here, over his lifeless remains, reverently dedicate your service and your life, if need be, in defence of that cause so dear to his heart—the cause for which he fought and bled—the cause in which he died!

Let the Cadets' battery, which he so long commanded, honour his memory by half-hour guns to-morrow, from sunrise to sunset, under the direction of the commandant of the cadets.

Let the flag of the State and Confederacy be hung at half-mast to-morrow.

Let his lecture room be draped in mourning for the period of six months.

Let his officers and cadets of the Institute wear the usual badge of mourning for the period of thirty days; and it is respectfully recommended to all the alumni of the institution to unite in this last tribute of respect to the memory of their late professor. All duties will be suspended to-morrow.

By command of Major-General F. H. SMITH.

(Signed) A. GOVAN HILL,
A. A. V. M. I.

THE FIGHT AT MARYE'S HILL.

(From a Letter in the Richmond Enquirer.)

Fredericksburg, May 13, 1863.

When General M-Laws moved up the river, on the night of the 30th of April, my brigade was detached from his command, and I was ordered to report to General Early, who was charged with the duty of watching the movements of that portion of the Federal army which had been left in the vicinity of Hamilton's Crossing and opposite this place, on the other side of the river, and, as I supposed, to give him battle if he should offer it.

About 2 o'clock on Sunday morning, having thrown a pontoon bridge over the river, the enemy commenced crossing into Fredericksburg in large numbers. General Early was then with his entire division at Hamilton's Crossing. I at once informed him of the fact, and asked for reinforcements. With several batteries, which were under the command of General Pennington, and a single brigade of infantry, I had a front of not less than three miles to defend, extending from Taylor's Hill, on the left, to the foot of the hills in rear of the Howison house, and not "the short line in rear of and to the left of Fredericksburg," as stated by General Early. The 21st regiment was posted between the Marye house and the plank road, three companies of which were afterwards sent to the support of the 18th regiment, which was stationed behind the stone wall at Marye house. The 17th regiment was placed in front of Lee's Hill, and the 13th still further to the right.

One regiment from General Hayes's command was subsequently placed to the right of the 13th. Four pieces of artillery were placed on the right of Marye's house, two on the left, and the balance on Lee's and the hills in the vicinity of the Howison house—thus making the only disposition of the small force at my command, which, in my judgment, would prevent the enemy from passing the line. The battle commenced at daylight. A furious cannonading was opened from the enemy's batteries in town and along both banks of the river. Two assaults were made upon Marye's heights, but both were signally repulsed. About 8 o'clock a heavy column of the enemy was seen moving up the river, evidently for the purpose of getting possession of Taylor's hill, which, if successful, would have given him command of the position which I held. But this was prevented by the timely arrival of General Hayes with four regiments of his brigade. The enemy having thus been foiled in his purpose, turned the head of his column down the river again; but it was impossible to tell whether he had abandoned the attempt or intended to advance again upon the same position with a still heavier force. General Wilcox had now reached Taylor's hill with three regiments of his brigade, one of which he promised to send to the right in case it should be needed. This regiment was sent for, but there was not sufficient time for it to come up before the action was over. With a line as extended as this, and in consideration of the small number of troops at my disposal, and the uncertainty as to the point against which the enemy would hurl the immense force he had massed in town, I deemed it proper that the regiments should remain as they then were, and wait the happening of events.

Very soon, however, the enemy came out from his hiding place and moved in three columns and three lines of battle—20,000 strong—against the positions held by my brigade. At the same instant Colonel Humphries was assailed on the left, Colonels Hulder and Carter and the Louisiana regiment on the right, and Colonel Griffin in the centre. After a determined and bloody resistance, by Colonel Griffin and the Washington artillery, the enemy, fully twenty to one, succeeded in getting possession of Marye's Hill. At all other points he was triumphantly repulsed. But seeing the line broken at this point, I ordered the 13th, 17th, and the Louisiana regiment to fall back to the crest of Lee's hill, to prevent the enemy from getting in our rear. This they did, resisting his approach at every step, and with the aid of Frojin's and Carleton's batteries, both of which were handled with the most consummate skill and courage, finally succeeded in checking his advance. The 21st regiment, with the remainder of the 18th, after Marye's hill had been taken, fell back and rejoined the brigade on the hills.

The distance from town to the points assailed was so short, the attack so suddenly made, and the difficulty of removing troops from one part of the line to another was so great, that it was utterly impossible for either General Wilcox or General Hayes to reach the scene of action in time to afford any assistance whatever.

It will thus be seen that Marye's hill was defended by but one small regiment, three companies and four pieces of artillery, and not by the entire brigade. A more heroic struggle was never made by a mere handful of men against overwhelming odds. According to the enemy's own accounts, many of this noble little band resisted to the death, with clubbed guns, even after his vast hordes had swept over and around the walls. His loss, from reports, published in his own newspapers, was 1,000 killed and wounded; but, according to the statements of intelligent citizens, it reached 2,000.

WM. BARKSDALE.

THE BRITISH CONSULATE AT RICHMOND.

The Daily Telegraph copies from the Richmond Sentinel of June 12th, the subjoined de-patch from the Confederate Secretary of State to Mr. Mason, the Southern Commissioner at London:—

Confederate States of America, Department of State,
Richmond, June 6.

Sir,—Herewith you will receive copies of the following papers:—

A. Letter of George Moore, Esq., her Britannic Majesty's consul in Richmond to this department, dated 16th of February, 1863.

B. Letter from the Secretary of State to Consul Moore, 20th of February, 1863.

C. Letters patent by the President, revoking the exequatur of Consul Moore, 5th of June, 1863.

D. Letter inclosing to Consul Moore a copy of the letters patent revoking his exequatur.

It is deemed proper to inform you that this action of the President was influenced in no small degree by the communication to him of an unofficial letter of Consul Moore, to which I shall presently refer.

It appears that two persons, named Maloney and Farrell, who were enrolled as conscripts in our service, claimed exemption on the ground that they were British subjects; and Consul Moore, in order to avoid the difficulty which prevented his corresponding with this department, as set forth in the paper B, addressed himself directly to the Secretary of War, who was ignorant of the request made by this department for the production of the consul's commission. The Secretary of War ordered an investigation of the facts, when it became apparent the two men had exercised the right of suffrage in this State, thus debarring themselves of all pretext for denying their citizenship; that both had resided here for eight years and had settled on and were cultivating farms owned by themselves. You will find annexed the report of Lieut.-Col. Edgar, marked E, and it is difficult to conceive a case presenting stronger proofs of the renunciation of native allegiance, and of the acquisition of de facto citizenship, than are found in that report. It is in relation to such a case that it has seemed proper to Consul Moore to denounce the Government of the Confederate States to one of its own citizens as being indifferent "to cases of the most atrocious cruelty." A copy of his letter to the counsel of the two men is annexed, marked E.

The earnest desire of this Government is to entertain amicable relations with all nations, and with none do its interests invite the formation of closer ties than with Great Britain. Although feeling aggrieved that the Government of her Majesty has pursued a policy which, according to the confession of Earl Russell himself, has increased the disparity of strength which he considers to exist between the belligerents, and has conferred signal advantages on our enemies in a war in which Great Britain announces herself to be really and not nominally neutral, the President has not deemed it necessary to interpose any obstacle to the continued residence of British consuls within the Confederacy by virtue of exequaturs granted by the former Government. His course has been consistently guided by the principles which underlie the whole structure of our Government. The State of Virginia having delegated to the Government of the United States by the constitution of 1787 the power of controlling its foreign relations, became bound by the action of that Government in its grant of an exequatur to Consul Moore. When Virginia seceded, withdrew the powers delegated to the Government of the United States, and conferred them on this Government, the exequatur granted to Consul Moore was not thereby invalidated. An act done by an agent while duly authorized continues to bind the principal after the revocation of the agent's authority. On these grounds the President has hitherto steadily resisted all influences which have been exerted to induce him to exact of foreign consuls that they should ask for an exequatur from this Government as a condition of the continued exercise of their functions. It was not deemed compatible with the dignity of the Government to extort, by enforcing the withdrawal of national protection from neutral residents, such inferential recognition of its independence as might be supposed to be implied in the request of an exequatur. The consuls of foreign nations, therefore, established within the Confederacy, who were in the possession of an exequatur issued by the Government of the United States prior to the formation of the Confederacy, have been maintained and respected in the exercise of their legitimate functions; and the same protection and respect will be accorded to them in future, so long as they confine themselves to the sphere of their duties, and seek neither to evade nor defy the legitimate authority of this Government within its own jurisdiction.

There has grown up an abuse, however, the result of this tolerance on the part of the President, which is too serious to be longer allowed. Great Britain has deemed it for her interest to refuse acknowledging the patent fact of the existence of this Confederacy as an independent nation. It can scarcely be expected that we should, by our own conduct, imply assent to the justice or propriety of that refusal, now that the British Minister accredited to the Government of our enemies assumes the power to issue instructions and exercise authority over the Consuls of Great Britain residing within this country—nay, even of appointing agents to supervise British interests in the Confederate States. This course of conduct plainly ignores the existence of this Government, and implies the continuance of relations between that Ministry and the Consuls of her Majesty resident within the Confederacy, which existed prior to the withdrawal of these States from the Union. It is, further, the assertion of a right on the part of Lord Lyons, by virtue of his credentials as her Majesty's Minister at Washington, to exercise the power and authority of a Minister accredited to Richmond, and officially received as such by the President. Under these circumstances, and because of similar action by other Ministers, the President has felt it his duty to order that no direct communication be permitted between the consuls of neutral nations in the Confederacy, and the functionaries of those nations residing within the enemy's country. All communication, therefore, between her Majesty's Consuls or consular agents in the Confederacy and foreign countries, whether neutral or hostile, will hereafter be restricted to vessels arriving from or despatched for neutral ports. The President has the less reluctance in imposing this restriction, because of the ample facilities for correspondence which are now afforded by the fleets of the Confederate and neutral steamships engaged in regular trade between neutral countries and the Confederate ports. This trade is daily increasing, in spite of the paper blockade, which is upheld by her Majesty's Government in disregard, as the President conceives, of the rights of this Confederacy, of the dictates of public law, and of the duties of impartial neutrals. You are instructed by the President to furnish a copy of this despatch, with a copy of the papers appended, to her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.—I am, &c.,

(Signed) J. P. BENJAMIN, Secretary of State.

Hon. James M. Mason, Commissioner, &amp;c., London.

INTERESTING DETAILS OF THE BATTLE OF THE WILDERNESS.

(From the Richmond Whig.)

First. It was a battle of manoeuvre, in which we beat the enemy utterly in strategy. We marched from below Chancellorsville, where their left wing rested, by the flank in front of their fortified position, in order to get around their right wing and attack them in their rear—making a circuit of from eleven to thirteen miles to reach a position less than three miles from where we started. In this we had a grand success. It was a bold move, verging on the extreme of rashness, thus to expose our flank and weaken our centre; but our leaders knew the men they led and the men they had to attack.

Second. There was no straggling or disorganization. Our men came out, after eight or nine days of forced marches, and fighting against great odds, in perfect trim, ready to fight and march again. The army is now truly an army. It can move in compact column to front, rear, or flank, and lose no men by the way—a thing which would have been simply impossible eight months ago—a thing, too, which is worth all the rest of the battle. Adding this new-found solidity to the old fire, the army is capable of every task that may be set it. In the late actions, it formed front in three different directions, exclusive of the movements made in the encounters with Sedgwick at and about Fredericksburg.

Third. Our artillery is at last perfected. Under the new organization, for which the officers of this important arm have been so long and earnestly clamouring, and which red tape has so long delayed, ten batteries can be put together with more facility than, under the old scattered system, two could. Moreover, the artillery is now composed of the best and most approved pieces—consisting wholly of Napoleons, the best rifles, Parrots, and 3-inch guns of the Parrot or Dahlgren model. Hence the late battle was an epoch in that branch of the service. On one occasion thirty pieces were massed on a single point, and the duel that followed proved what our artillerists have always asserted, that gun for gun, the enemy can be whipped with ease. At Chancellorsville, our artillerists drove them from their guns. The fight was waged at a distance of from 800 to 1,200 yards; and at or inside of that distance our gunnery and courage are to theirs as our infantry to theirs.

The importance of these facts in relation to our artillery, which may be fully relied on, cannot be over-estimated. But for artillery, in which the enemy greatly excelled us, the war would long since have been over. McClellan knew this, when he declared that it was to be a war of artillery, and Hackett reiterated the opinion, when, six weeks ago, he sent for Lincoln to attend a review of 14,000 horse artillery. If we have succeeded in making this arm of the service as superior to the same arm in the enemy's service as our infantry have heretofore been, the gain is immense, and the announcement will be hailed with joy throughout the country. We repeat that what has been stated above comes from unquestionable sources.

A few words more in regard to the enemy and we have done. First. Theirs was a battle of manoeuvre also. They, like ourselves, separated their forces and tried the flank. Their general plan was good, provided it had been well carried out; but there is a glory of the sun and a glory of the moon. We can divide and conquer; they cannot. The leaders know the led, the led the leaders; with them, however, as at Chancellorsville, the head (whether of Hooker or of Halleck) planned well, but the hand lacked nerve.

Second. Their fighting, though assisted by a position superior to that at Gaines' Mill (we speak soberly) was fitfully brilliant but never obstinate. Our infantry officers confirm the opinion that their artillery is the only arm they now rely on, and that was overmatched in the late fight, as both parties confess. Their fighting did not compare with that at Malvern, Cold Harbor, Manassas No. 2, or even Fredericksburg.

For many reasons, therefore, we believe the struggle just ended to be more encouraging than any that preceded it. The enemy crossed, all told, 136,000 fighting men; took magnificent positions; fortified them completely, and were driven in confusion out of them and almost captured, by less than half their number. Let none complain that the battle was indecisive. A bare repulse, under the circumstances, would have been glorious; and this was literally a great and splendid victory. The battle is to the campaign, as Williamsburg was to that of last summer; compare the two.

SINKING BLOCKADE RUNNERS.—The most singular intelligence which has reached us by the late mail is that which relates to the blockade of Charleston. For some reason or other not very apparent the commanders of the vessels constituting the blockading fleet have decided for the future on sinking and destroying instead of capturing vessels which they conceive to be guilty of attempting to run the blockade. The "law's delay" appears to have disgusted them, and, sooner than await the judgments of prize courts, they have determined on constituting themselves Judges of Admiralty with summary jurisdiction. Two steamers have already been sunk in attempting to leave Charleston, and one whilst endeavouring to enter that port. At one vessel broadsides were fired until she sank, and of the others very probably the same story might be told. The fate of the crews is still unknown. Now, it is needless to say that if this extraordinary course of action has been taken by the blockading fleet, it is not only opposed to the dictates of humanity, but is in direct contravention of the principles of international law. No belligerent with prize courts open to it can be justified in delegating to its naval officers the functions of Admiralty Judges. The South has been reproached with destroying its prizes at sea; but then it must be recollected that neutral States have claimed their prize courts to both belligerents, and every port on the Southern States is under strict blockade. But at all events it has never been implied to the captains of the Alabama and Florida that they fired into defenceless merchantmen until they sank; nor, in the case of any of the captures which they have made, has the fate of the crews remained unknown. In the presence of the circumstantial account before us we can scarcely hope that the statements are unfounded, and if not it will become the duty of neutral States to take official notice of this novel mode of enforcing the rights of blockade. The Federal cruisers have no right to sink vessels if they can effect their capture and send them for adjudication to a prize court. The law of blockade is one which especially affects the rights of neutrals as well as of belligerents, and it does not lie with the latter to put on it whatever construction may best suit their inclination or their interests.—Morning Post, July 6th.

If this war has proved anything that was known before, it has only made it more evident that, on the whole, the Southern temperament and the social organization of the South produce the men best qualified to govern and command. That is a matter independent of moral principles and political opinions. Rome was at once the slave market and the mistress of the world, and the very men who never appeared but to show a natural superiority over the rest of the human race were themselves slave-owners. Whether they made the best use of their superiority, and whether they were as good as they were great, is another question. In this country we are accustomed to ascribe certain moral deficiencies to the aristocratic class in the comparison with that engaged in manufacture and trade, and the latter claims to itself a large share of the virtue supposed to be characteristic of England. With this estimate it is unnecessary to interfere; but be it ever so correct, it is, nevertheless, equally true that the habits of government and command are more natural and familiar to the higher class than the lower—that is, to the gentry than to the trading class. Even when the fact is resisted, and when it is urged that such a state of things ought not to be, and there are good moral reasons against it, the fact is all the time admitted. We mean, then, no defence or palliation of the moral condition of the Southern States when we admit that they produce the best soldiers, the best Generals, the best Statesmen, the best public functionaries of all kinds in the Union, and are thereby proved to be the nearest approach to a governing class. A fact is not the less a fact because it has its dark side, its dangers, and perhaps even a decidedly objectionable character.—Times, 9th July.

TO OUR FRIENDS AND SUBSCRIBERS.

Our friends in the United Kingdom and on the Continent are earnestly requested to forward to us, at their earliest convenience, such information relative to the military movements and condition of affairs in America as they may receive through private letters, either from the United States, or from the Confederate States. They may rely upon the most scrupulous precautions being observed; that no names or facts leading to identification will, under any circumstances, be revealed. No communications, however, will be noticed unless authenticated by a responsible name. Southern newspapers, of any date, will be useful and acceptable presents.

For the convenience of our distant subscribers, all the receipts for subscriptions signed by any of the official representatives, or commissioned officers of the Confederate States, will be recognized at this office.

Our subscribers in the South will have their paper supplied through HENRY HOTZE, Esq., the Confederate States' Commercial Agent at London, who has kindly tendered us his services in this respect during the continuance of the blockade.

Subscription, 25s. per annum—post paid, 30s., payable in advance. All communications on business to be addressed, and Post-Office Orders made payable to, J. B. HOPKINS, 13, Boulevard-street, Fleet-street, London E.C.

The INDEX may be obtained, and payments for subscriptions or other dues to the paper made:—

At Liverpool, to Wm. KNOX, Secretary Southern Club, 55, Brown's-buildings.

At Paris, to Messrs. PFEIFFER and MULLER, 52, Rue du Château d'Eau, Paris.

At Turin, to Sr. FILIPPO MANETTA, 4, Borgo Nuovo.

THE INDEX.

THURSDAY, JULY 9, 1863.

BRITISH JACKSON MONUMENTAL FUND.

The Honorary Treasurer of the Jackson Statue Fund acknowledges the receipt of the following subscriptions since July 2nd.

The Marquis of Lothian .. ..	£5 0
Lord Eustace Cecil .. ..	5 0
A. J. B. Beresford Hope, Esq. ..	10 0
Sir Eardley Eardley, Bart. ..	10 10
Lord Colville .. ..	5 5
D. Forbes Campbell, Esq. ..	5 5
G. E. Street, Esq. .. ..	5 5
T. H. .. ..	1 1

The Emperor and Mr. Roebuck.

It is only natural that the friends of the Foreign-office should press the advantage gained by its exculpation from the two-fold charge so defiantly and—with all due credit for good intentions, be it added—somewhat injudiciously preferred on the night of the American debate. To judge by the solemn indignation of one of our morning contemporaries, it might be supposed that Mr. Roebuck and his colleague had committed a crime only one degree removed from high treason. But the sober truth is, that, whether or no the use of a foreign sovereign's name in such a connection is sufficient ground to arouse the susceptibilities of the House, the most important and only essential point of Mr. Roebuck's statement is fully borne out by the Emperor's own version of this memorable interview, in the columns of the Moniteur. There is not, as malevolent critics have affected to discover, any discrepancy between the two versions which is not easily accounted for by the necessary caution of a monarch directly addressing the public on the one hand, and on the other by the characteristic vivacity of a speaker in the warmth of debate. Mr. Roebuck charged the Government, at least by implication, with prevarication or diplomatic evasion for the purpose of concealing the Emperor's communication. In this Mr. Roebuck, no doubt, was precipitate, since we are bound to believe that the French Ambassador had not, on the evening of the debate, received any instructions, although it is stated on high authority that he was entrusted with a communication, if not to Lord Russell, to Lord Palmerston, at the very time that he volunteered his visit to the former. But the really important question is, whether indeed the Emperor was ready to join England in recognising the Confederate States, and whether he had decided on signifying this willingness to her Majesty's advisers, and this question the Emperor has answered substantially according to Mr. Roebuck's statement. On the other charge preferred by Mr. Roebuck, that the Foreign-office had made an improper use of a former communication from the Emperor, the Moniteur is silent, and, considering in whose name it spoke as well as the nature of the charge, the official organ could not be otherwise than silent. But were it possible to consult the oracle on this subject also, it would no doubt transpire that Mr. Layard wasted his showy array of dates—not, by the way, so accurate as might have been expected, since Mr. Layard, as is pointed out by the Times' Paris correspondent, makes an error of twenty days in the date of the French despatch—to no purpose. The public, we have reason to think, would then learn that the Emperor's complaint referred not to his Mediation Proposal of October, but to a confidential communication far anterior in date; and that if Mr. Layard did not know this, Earl Russell could not have been ignorant of the fact. Much has been said at the expense of Mr. Lindsay and Mr. Roebuck about their assuming the character of amateur diplomatists. But we are not able to see how the most punctilious stickler for proprieties can justly object, if the mover of an important resolution, depending for its appropriateness and success mainly upon the intentions of a foreign Sovereign, avails himself of an opportunity to ascertain these intentions. Gentlemen interested in a question of foreign policy have often taken the pains to qualify themselves as eye-witnesses, and whether their testimony related to Italian prisons, to the state of things in America or in the East, it has never been considered as unacceptable to the House or inappropriate to a debate. Mr. Roebuck clearly intended nothing more than this; and it is further shown by Mr. Lindsay's letter to the Times on Saturday, that the opportunity by which both profited, was not altogether of their own seeking, for it was Her Majesty's Government which first introduced the last-named gentleman to the Emperor's acquaintance and confidence in what is now called an "extra-ambassadorial" quality, and it was out of his interviews with the Emperor in that capacity that the conversation about America incidentally arose. It is scarcely probable that in "a frank interchange of opinions" the Emperor of the French should have wished to communicate to his two visitors state secrets; and his authorizing them to repeat his words whenever or wherever they thought proper, neither would make him responsible for the use that might be made of this permission, nor is in any way inconsistent with his disclaimer of any "attempt to influence the British Parliament through two of its members." Nor, on the other hand, is it probable that these two gentlemen went to Fontainebleau with the intention or expectation of influencing the Imperial policy, but simply to set their own minds at rest in regard to conflicting rumours, which in London and in Paris had acquired considerable circulation and a tangible shape. Apart from the improbability of the Emperor being affected by private representations, it is now well known that he had decided upon "sounding" the English Cabinet before Messrs. Lindsay and Roebuck left London; and it is even reported that the United States' Minister at Paris had considered the previous interview obtained by the Envoy of the Confederate States a sufficient ground for a protest on the part of his Government.

But it is profitless to carry such speculations further. Whether Mr. Lindsay and Mr. Roebuck acted advisedly or not in what they did and said, is a question of individual judgment, but which in no way affects the important fact which it was evidently their sole object to bring to light and into full relief. "The Emperor," says the Moniteur, "expressed his desire to see peace re-established in America, but observed that England, having declined his proposal of mediation the previous October, he did not think he could submit a new proposition without the certainty of its acceptance. His Majesty stated further, that his Ambassador should, nevertheless, receive instructions to sound the English Cabinet upon the subject, giving it to understand that if England thought the recognition of the South likely to put an end to the war, the Emperor was disposed to follow her in that course." Here we have an authentic and explicit announcement of the Imperial policy, which can neither be retracted nor explained away. The Emperor leaves us in no doubt as regards his opinions and wishes, and he throws upon Great Britain the responsibility of declaring that recognition is inexpedient or ineffective. If Great Britain makes this declaration, she assumes the attitude of being the only obstacle to the admission of the Confederate States into the commonwealth of nations, and she rejects for ever the golden opportunity of retaining the friendship and earning the gratitude of a gallant people which has proved itself the better and the stronger half of the late American Union. The favourite assertion which those opposed to recognition have never wearied of repeating, that recognition will only embitter the North, is exploded by the glaring fact that even the actual invasion of their soil cannot rouse the masses of the Northern population from the apathy of despair into which uninterrupted failure has plunged them. If ever the arguments for recognition told with irresistible force, it is now, when this act of justice comes to stem the onward victorious march of the Confederates, and to save the crumbling fragments of what but latterly was a formidable aggressive power. It is, in fact, become an act of mercy to the North quite as much as an act of justice to the South. And it would be the crowning glory of the long and brilliant career of Lord Palmerston, which would retrieve and cause to be forgotten the many blunders in the foreign policy of the present Administration, were he, who is supposed to lack neither the courage nor the sagacity to appreciate great opportunities, to step forth as the sponsor of the young nation which has so well and wisely vindicated its title to existence. But it will not relieve him nor the country of the momentous responsibility, if he takes advantage of the ill-feeling that has sprung out of the recent debate and been designedly fostered and embittered, to change the real issue involved in the pending motion, and to make the result of the division, if it be brought to one, depend upon other questions than that of the claim of the Confederate States to recognition.

The state of the American question, as it now stands, can be resumed within a few words. There is an appeal made to the British Government by its nearest and most important ally to recognise jointly the independence of the South; there is a military situation pre-eminently favourable for such recognition, and in itself the strongest refutation of all opposition to the act; there is a general opinion throughout this country and the continent that the time has at length arrived; and the only objection to be argued against all this is, that the facts have been presented to Parliament in a manner which caused some unpleasant feelings, and has given umbrage to some excessively fastidious susceptibilities.

The North on its Defence.

WHATEVER doubts may have been entertained as to the expediency of an invasion of the Northern States, they must have been dispelled by the attitude of the population of the invaded districts, and the tone of the Northern press. Passing by the conclusive argument in favour of immediate recognition in the presence of a large "rebel" army within twenty-five miles of Washington, what are we to say of the strange apathy, the panic, and the want of patriotism exhibited by the sturdy farmers of Pennsylvania, at the moment when the Confederate soldiery, in comparatively small numbers, are stretching themselves over their well-cultivated fields, carrying off their accumulated stores, and even menacing their capital? Could there be stronger proof of the absence of all real feeling for the war policy of Mr. Lincoln? The New York press can hardly find words strong enough to depict the stolid indifference of the people of Pennsylvania. In vain are the most stirring appeals promulgated to these unexcitable yeomen. In vain are they summoned to take up arms against a danger which they are assured will pass away, like "rebellion" itself, in ninety days. They remain deaf to the call of honour. They prefer selling their goods for Confederate scrip. New Jersey sends her militia to their aid, and they insult them. They have contributed their quota of men to the prosecution of the war, and they hold the Government responsible for their property. Failing this, they decline to offer up themselves and their towns as victims on the altar of patriotism; and the Confederates find themselves in quiet occupation of a country teeming with agricultural produce and stores of every kind, in the midst of a population practically as favourable to their cause as their Virginia neighbours south of the Potomac. Perhaps some of this apathy is to be attributed to the mode in which the Confederate generals carry on the war. There is a wide difference between General Ewell's disciplined soldiers and the plundering Bashi-Bazouks of Milroy, and Schenk, and Blenker. No excesses, no flaming homesteads, no bombarded cities mark the progress of the invaders. The Southerner shows himself as superior to the Northern hordes in his treatment of unarmed towns as in the fury of battle; and at Chambersburg and Greencastle life and property and honour are as secure as at Philadelphia. But there are other causes than this to account for the disgust of the New York press. It is now clearly proved that the North has not its heart in the war. Were the men of Pennsylvania fighting for a great principle, they would not be found laggards. But they feel that this war is waged for objects with which they have nothing to do. They have made enormous sacrifices of men and treasure, at the call of the Administration, for the furtherance of these objects. It is too much, they say, that they should be expected, in order to secure Mr. Lincoln's credit and redeem Mr. Seward's pledges, to submit to the cruel fate of the Southern people, and have to fight for their own hearths. So if Hooker and his army cannot protect them, they will bow to the storm and leave the fighting to the men who have taken the bounties and have a taste for it. Contrast this with the stern, unflinching fortitude of the South, with the firm resolution which has made every man capable of staggering into the fight under the weight of his heavy musket a soldier, which lines every river and fastness with the rifle of the bushwhacker and guerilla, and makes every defensive position in the South a battle-field. If there were no other demonstration of the hopelessness of the contest on the part of the North, the indifference of Pennsylvania, and the absolute inability of the Federal Administration to afford protection to its own citizens, would suffice to place it beyond a doubt.

It would be idle, on the mere speculations of Northern writers, to discuss the probable objects of General Lee's advance. The secrecy which has attended the Confederate movements from the first, the pains taken to prevent any knowledge of the Confederate plans reaching the councils of the North, make the information of the Northern press concerning the plans of the invaders of very little value. But we know enough from the actual movements of troops to assume that we are on the eve of a great crisis in the war, and that the present campaign is likely to surpass all that have gone before it in the magnitude of the issues which it involves. Washington is in danger. Foreign representatives at the capital are discussing the alternatives of retiring with President Lincoln, or treating the district of Columbia as neutral ground, and awaiting there the ingress of the victorious Confederates. Baltimore is in a state of panic; Philadelphia and Pittsburg are clamorous for troops. The invasion is not a mere cavalry raid; it is a serious operation of war conducted by a principal army well supplied with pontooning appliances, siege guns, and all the equipments for a protracted campaign. And while Hooker is drawing up his army in order of battle south of the Potomac, division after division of the Southern troops is spreading itself over Maryland and Pennsylvania, and pushing on to the rear of the capital. The Confederates hold the country for nearly ninety miles along the river. Everything betokens a terrible conflict for Washington. According to the New York press the plan of the Confederate General is to isolate the capital: to march a considerable force from Fredericktown, and cut off the communication between Baltimore and Washington; to hold the Baltimore and Ohio railroads, so that no reinforcements can come up from the West, and to push a division across the Potomac below Washington on to Bladensburg. We may dismiss this programme without much consideration. General Lee is not the man to expose an isolated corps to the attack of General Hooker's whole army. Doubtless, if the Federal army be once drawn across the Potomac, the batteries on the southern bank will be rearmed, and a new blockade of that river be introduced. But we do not believe the reduction of Washington is the immediate object of the advance. It must be recollected that Virginia has for two years been trodden by the two hostile armies, and that the "subsistence" of the Confederate troops about Richmond has been seriously threatened. The present movement has already given them the Shenandoah, with its luxuriant grain crops ready for harvesting; it has opened to them the barns of Western Maryland, and the pastures of Pennsylvania, up to the banks of the Susquehanna. Confederate cavalry have ridden up to the very gates of Baltimore and Washington. And to rescue this vast tract of country from the grasp of the invader, to wipe out this national humiliation, Hooker's army must once more assume the initiative, and attack the Confederates, on ground of their own selection. Hooker, it is said, is waiting for reinforcements. From Suffolk, from the York Town Peninsula, from Newbern the Federal troops are hurrying up in transports to the aid of the capital. What has become, then, of that boasted army of 150,000 men which, two months ago, was intended to march into Richmond? The battle of Chancellorsville cost at least 30,000 men. The expiration of the term of service of the two years' men has deprived the North of its most serviceable troops, and at this moment Hooker is barely able to hold his own in the lines of Alexandria or Arlington Heights.

In the meantime General Lee is steadily enveloping Harper's Ferry, and in all probability Hooker will be compelled to fight to save the garrison. General Milroy's retreat has cost the Federals 5,000 or 6,000 men, a splendid artillery, and $5,000,000 worth of stores. But the fall of Harper's Ferry would be a still more terrible disaster, and General Hooker dare not remain quietly south of the Potomac, while Maryland Heights are stormed by the Confederates. So far victory has favoured the latter. General Lee has completely outwitted his antagonist. He has marched nearly round him; he has inflicted a series of disasters on the Federal armies opposed to him; he threatens half-a-dozen of the greatest cities of the North, the capital amongst the number. Above all, he is in possession of a great area of grain-growing country, which will "subsist" the whole Confederate army of Virginia for months to come. Even were there no other advantages to be reaped from this movement than the moral and material gains we have alluded to, Lee's advance would be amply justified; but we are not without hope that as his plans are developed, the objects of his northward march will assume greater dimensions, and that the time has really arrived when, in the opinion of this great general, there is a favourable opportunity for striking the decisive blow of the war, and enforcing a peace upon the beaten, disgraced, and panic-stricken Administration of the North.

A Conceivable Calamity.

In Mr. Bright's violent and malignant diatribe against Mr. Roebuck, the South, and the proposal of recognition, there was one suggestion which, as coming from so ardent a partisan of the Federal Government, thoroughly imbued with Yankee feeling, and more familiar with the temper of New York and Massachusetts than with that of the English people, deserves a brief consideration. It is a suggestion which has more than once been repeated by the eccentric but well-informed New York correspondent of the Standard, a thorough-going Unionist of the democratic school, and a fair representative of the passions and extravagances of the unthinking majority of the Northerners. What if this war should end neither in separation, nor yet in the conquest of the South by the North, but in the submission of the North to the South? There was more sense than some of his hearers seemed to think in the question of the member for Birmingham—

Is it not possible that a Union may be formed on the basis of the South? There are persons who think that possible. I hope that it is not, but I would not say that it is absolutely impossible. (Hear, hear.) Is it not possible that the Northern Government might be beaten in their military operations, and that, by their own incapacity, they might be so humiliated before their people, that even what you call the peace party in the North, but which I say is in no sense a peace party, might unite with the South, and the Union be reconstituted on the basis of Southern opinions? Is it not possible that the Southern people should appeal to the Irish population of America against the negro, there being but little sympathy and respect between the two? Is it not possible that they should appeal to the rich commercial classes of the North, who, like the same classes in other countries, from the uncertainty of their possessions and the fluctuations of their interest, are always timid and almost always corrupt? (A laugh, and "Hear, hear.") Is it not possible that the commercial classes might prefer the union of the whole country on the basis of the South, rather than that disunion which so many members of this House seem to look upon with hope and approbation?

As an argument against recognition, of course, this possibility has no force whatever. It is the very height of absurdity to allege, as a reason for refusing to recognise a new Power, that there is a chance of the indefinite extension of its Empire, and even of the submission to its rule of the State which now claims to exercise sovereignty over it. The greater the equality of strength between the belligerents, the clearer becomes the claim of the new State to be placed on a footing of diplomatic equality with the old; and if it be the case that the South is in the remotest degree likely not merely to conquer its own independence, but to receive the adhesion of the whole or a certain number of the Northern States, it is difficult to understand on what conceivable ground Mr. Bright can affirm that the power of the Southern Confederacy is not yet established on such a basis, that it has a right to be acknowledged as a de facto Government by foreign nations. When Mr. Forster urges that we ought not to recognise the Confederate Government, because we do not know as yet whether it will be able to retain four of the States whose allegiance it already claims, but which, lying westward of the Mississippi, may be cut off from the Eastern States by the Federal supremacy on that river, we understand the bearing of the argument, though we dispute the truth and deny the relevance of the premises. But when Mr. Bright urges that we ought not to recognise the Confederacy because it may one day come to receive applications for admission from Ohio, Pennsylvania, and New York, we confess that he seems to us to be talking sheer paradox. The greater the probability of such an event, the stronger the case in favour of recognition, and the more urgent the necessity of securing the goodwill of the dominant section of a country so powerful as this supposed Confederacy would be.

We do not agree with Mr. Bright in thinking that the reunion of the severed States in this manner would be so undesirable an event for England and for the peace of the world, as the restoration of the Union by the re-conquest of the South, if such an event were possible. We should see in the latter issue an omen of continual disturbance, and probably of immediate war. We know that it would not be long before the victorious army of the North would need fresh occupation, and we can hardly doubt that our American provinces would furnish the employment necessary to keep the lawless mercenaries of President Lincoln from preying upon the country which pays them. The enlarged Confederacy would, no doubt, be a Power formidable by its greatness, and by the energy and ability of its Government; and it would also have some difficulty in finding employment, not indeed for its own forces, but for those disbanded hordes which, on the conclusion of peace, would infest each of the States that would severally join it. But the Confederate Government not only would not covet Canada, but would see in its acquisition a source of imminent danger to itself, as increasing the power of that free-soil element which would, in any case, be constantly and increasingly troublesome. Our West Indian colonies might be better worth having; but no one would dream of invading the island possessions of the mistress of the seas. And moreover, the vast commercial interests of the South would be an invaluable security for peace. War with England would involve, to the Southern States alone, the deterioration, waste, and possible destruction of proerty worth forty millions sterling per annum; and, therefore, it is hardly likely that to gratify national ambition, or to satisfy the restlessness and cupidity of a disbanded army, a Confederacy in which the South was dominant would pick a quarrel with England. Still it is clear that the reunion of the States—"on the basis of the South," or on any other basis—would be a misfortune to England and to the world. Their division is a security for peace, and the best security that we could have. Even separate, each section will be strong enough to be respected; but the two will hold each other in check, and the South, for its own sake, will be ever ready to assist us in restraining the inordinate ambition and covetous greed of land which has always made the Northern States of the Union our most dangerous neighbours and most inveterate enemies. Separation is a security for free trade; reunion on any terms would almost certainly be followed by a revival of protection in some form or other. And while it is certain that the carrying trade of the South will, in the event of separation, be done by English ships, that its markets will be supplied with English hardware and English manufactures, and that its trade will be carried on by the help of English capital, it is almost equally certain that political reunion would restore these advantages to the North, and that the bright commercial hopes which open to us as the immediate consequence of peace would be snatched from our grasp. Our interests, therefore, are most clearly and strongly opposed to a reconstruction of the Union on any terms whatever. This would not, of course, entitle us to prevent that reconstruction, if it should appear that the North were likely to succeed in its hope of reducing the South to submission; but it does entitle us to consider how far we are doing wisely in forcing upon the Confederates a temptation so strong and so hardly to be resisted. If we recognise them, we shall, in all likelihood, terminate the war; and the Confederates will be enabled to make peace on their own terms—simple and unconditional separation. If not, we may possibly drive them to consider whether they would not do well to consider another method of making peace. They have seen their towns burnt, their country ravaged, their women insulted, their families threatened with the horrors of servile war; and they know that while the contest continues they must remain liable to suffer these outrages and endure these perils. It would, no doubt, be insufferable to them to receive once more into political fellowship those who have scourged their land with an invasion marked by utter disregard of all the laws of civilized warfare. We do not believe that they will do it. But by encouraging, as we do encourage, the prosecution of the war, we tempt them to terminate it in any way they can; and it happens that a way is open to them of ending it in triumph, with glory to themselves and humiliation to their enemies. Has England no fear that they should embrace the opportunity? Are our Statesmen indifferent to the consequences, or blind to the folly of a course which offers every inducement to the South to close with the offer which the Northern democrats are only too ready to make?

Only a very few of the most reckless and untruthful of the partisans of the North in this country pretend that their clients are fighting for Abolition. Nay, in the North itself, the Abolitionist faction finds itself compelled to veil its real purposes, and to pretend a furious zeal for that Union which it was wont to denounce as a league with Death and a covenant with Hell. Abraham Lincoln, the President of the party which includes the Abolitionists, surrounded by Abolitionist advisers, and owing his election in no small degree to Abolitionist intrigues, is forced to pretend, or actually feels, indifference to Abolition, and professes to look only to the restoration of the Union. There is no Democrat, there are few Republicans, who would not consign the whole negro race to slavery for all eternity in order to restore the Union. For President Lincoln no one cares; towards the Confederates, except as Secessionists, no hatred is felt. And, therefore, if the Confederates were to repudiate Secession; if President Davis or General Lee were to issue an address to the Northern States, declaring that they made war not against the Union, but in defence of the Constitution, that they are sending their armies northwards not to enforce separation, but to overthrow an imbecile and unconstitutional faction in possession of power, to vindicate State Sovereignty, to punish treason, and to restore liberty; if they were to invite the Northern States to send in their adhesion to the Confederacy, or propose a reconstruction of the Union with the Montgomery Constitution—the Federal armies would melt away like snow before the suns of spring, and not another regiment would go from any of the Western or Middle States to the defence of a hated creed and a despised Administration. Nay, we doubt whether the army itself would not be likely to seize Mr. Lincoln, his Cabinet, and his Provosts Marshal, and deliver them up to be tried as traitors to the Union and rebels against the law. Except in New England, it would scarcely be possible to offer any resistance to a proposal to deliver up the leaders of the Abolitionists to be hanged as traitors and instigators of arson and murder, and to reconstitute the union with Jefferson Davis as President, and the Montgomery Constitution as the law of the land. New England might demur; with all her selfish baseness, with all her Puritanic hypocrisy, she is not wholly shameless in her devotion to Mammon, nor wholly insincere in her hatred of the slave-owner. But the Union could do without the Puritan States; and the proposal to "leave New England out in the cold" has been cheered at many a meeting of Northern Unionists. It rests, then, with the South to be "lords of their own lands," or lords of the Union; Mr. Davis has but to say the word, and the North would seat him in the chair of George Washington.

We do not fear that even this temptation will overcome the strong national antipathies, the just and prudent instincts of the Southern people, or the loyalty and wisdom of their leaders. The countrymen of Stonewall Jackson will never accept as friends and brethren the ruffianly soldiers of Butler, the plundering banditti of Blenker, the worthy comrades of Turchin, and Mitchell, and M'Neil. They could not forget, even if they could forgive: they would remember that no dependance can be placed on Northern promises and constitutional guarantees, even if they were willing to cancel the recollection of burning towns and devastated homes, and to trample over the bodies of Southern martyrs to shake hands with their murderers. Mr. Davis, and those who enjoy his confidence, Ministers and Generals, soldiers and civilians, will be true to the people's trust, and will prefer their posts of honour and duty at Richmond to those of fame and power which they might hold at Washington—will prefer to be remembered by posterity as the founders of a great nation, than as the reconstructors of an unnatural and abhorrent Union, doomed inevitably to a renewed disruption. But England will not do well to put this strain upon Southern virtue and moderation; to teach the Confederates that they may have peace and Empire at once, but that they must wait for years, it may be, for peace and independence; and English Statesmen will have no reason to regard with pride the timid, selfish, senseless part which they have played at this great crisis of a struggle as momentous for England as for America.

Dramatic Topics.

If we may judge from the attendance, two opera houses have not proved too much for the demands of the musical public. But for the production of M. Gounod's "Faust" at Her Majesty's, and of the same opera under the title of "Faust e Margherita" at the Royal Italian Opera, we might have said that neither house had done anything to signalize the season of 1863, except that hitherto unheard-of achievement of both managers doing a profitable business. "Faust," which was first given at Her Majesty's, is a genuine and, we may add, an unqualified success. The music hits the happy medium between the grand which requires an artist to appreciate its beauties, and the simple melodies of Balfe, which are common place as well as pretty. Besides several vocal gems, a waltz which is wonderfully fresh and inspiring, is a great favourite at Covent Garden; the scenic effects are, thanks to the superiority of the stage, grander than at Her Majesty's; but though Mr. Costa has done his best, and of course done well, no one pretends that M. Gounod's fine work can be heard to better advantage at one place than at the other.

There is, however, a novelty in connection with Her Majesty's which is worth a passing notice. When, at the commencement of his career as a tenor, Mr. Sims Reeves made a tour in Italy, he was everywhere received in that land of song with boundless enthusiasm. Strange stories are told of diplomatic intrigues to keep the English vocalist in Florence or in Naples when he was engaged to be in Rome, but whether they be true or false he had unquestionably a triumphant reception. It occurred to the then manager of the London Italian Opera to engage the services of Mr. Reeves. If he had been an Italian there would have been no question about the propriety of so doing, but it was contrary to all precedent for an English artist to appear on the stage of the London Italian Opera. The manager determined to try the experiment, and Mr. Reeves made a successful debut; but soon the prejudice against native talent compelled him to throw up his engagement. We have become wiser and more liberal. Mr. Santley has been singing during the season at Her Majesty's, much to the satisfaction of the subscribers, and now Mr. Sims Reeves has also joined the company, appearing first as Edgardo in "Lucia di Lammermoor," and being announced to take the part of Huon in "Oberon."

Mr. Lumley has published a pamphlet, in which he explains the history of his difficulties in connection with Her Majesty's. The moral he would have his readers draw from the narrative is, that he has been harshly used by the Earl of Dudley. The matter seems to be, that the Earl having assisted Mr. Lumley with advances of money, took the best security for repayment that he could procure, and was not slow to enforce his claims. We have only an ex parte statement, and before we charge the Earl with harshness, we must know what reasons he alleges for showing his creditor so little indulgence.

It would be impossible to give even a bare list of all the concerts of the season. They have overflowed the concert halls, the Crystal Palace, and other places appropriated to such entertainments, and have, in several instances, been given at the private houses of the nobility and gentry. The lovers of the pianoforte are regretting the retirement of M. Thalberg, who announces his farewell matinée for Saturday next. M. Thalberg leaves his profession whilst his power is undiminished, and there is no one to succeed him. His peculiar school of playing will not survive his own performances.

The concerts of the Wandering Minstrels have, and are attracting a large share of public attention, but not more than they deserve. The Wandering Minstrels are a company of amateurs belonging to the élite of society, and the object of their public appearance is to further the cause of charity. Under such circumstances, the most acrimonious critic would be little disposed to find fault, even if the performances were a trifle below professional mediocrity, but it happens that the Wandering Minstrels need not any merciful consideration, for their performances are altogether excellent, and marked by an artistic finish that only first class professionals attain.

Although the musical attractions have been so numerous, the drama has, by no means, been neglected. The only failure we know of, or what seems to be a failure, is a performance at Drury Lane, to procure funds for the erection of a monument to Shakespeare in the Metropolis. We suspect this foolish scheme would never have been propounded, if there had not been a prospect of the promoter's name finding a place on the pedestal. There is next year to be a festival on the 300th anniversary of the poet's birth. We may remark, without depreciating the laudable effort, that the demonstration is hardly likely to be worthy of the occasion, and that we rather wish these celebrations, which are so thoroughly German in their character and conception, were left to the Germans.

There is no lack of evidence that the English people are continually mindful of the classic drama. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean started on Monday for Australia, on a professional tour, and their farewell performances were attended by enthusiastic audiences. It is some comfort to find that there are a few thousands who have not bound themselves to pay homage only to sensation dramas and the innuities of Lord Dundreary.

Not less noteworthy is the reception we give to such foreign artistes as M. Fechter, who won his position in England by his personation of Hamlet and Othello, and though we refuse to tolerate his presentments and emendations, we admire him as an accomplished actor. At the Lyceum M. Fechter has not yet produced "Othello" as he promised. One reason is, that "The Duke's Motto," which has had a run of 150 nights, still draws full houses, and whatever may be the taste of the actor, it is the business of M. Fechter, as manager, to let well alone. Another reason is a dispute with Mr. Phelps. That gentleman refused to play the Ghost to M. Fechter's Hamlet, and the engagement was broken off. Indeed, M. Fechter has found the manager's place anything but a bed of roses. Closely following on the dispute with Mr. Phelps, was a disagreement with Mr. Walter Montgomery. Mr. Montgomery pined to make his London debut, and seeing no end to the run of "The Duke's Motto," refused any longer to receive a salary for doing nothing, took an engagement at the Princess's, and the Court of Chancery has decided that he was justified in so doing.

At the Princess's Mr. Montgomery is playing with Mdlle. Stella Colas, a French actress. Four months ago she was entirely ignorant of our language, and placed herself under the tuition of Mr. Ryder, and her excellent though not faultless pronunciation of English is remarkable. She has made her debut as Juliet, and a more charming Juliet has never appeared on any stage. Her natural rendering of the love scenes, and the dramatic power which she infuses into the tragic scenes are equally admirable. She pays more attention to the minutie of stage effect than is common with English actresses; but though her success is heightened by, it does not depend upon these effects.

It is a pity that Madame Ristori, who has been playing in London, has not learnt our language. Her personation of Lady Macbeth is magnificent, yet the Italian version of the play is awfully wordy, and the Italian company has not generally much idea of English tragedy. The actor who took the part of Macbeth was provokingly comic. According to his reading, Macbeth was a kind of sneaking brigand. However, the genius of Madame Ristori triumphed over all disadvantages, and made the performance an event not to be forgotten.

Another distinguished foreign actor—Mr. Levasior—has been visiting London, but he has played French pieces in French. Critics have joined with the world of fashion in paying tribute to his genius and versatility.

"Our American Cousin" having departed from the Haymarket pro tem., Lord Dundreary's place is supplied by a comedy, by Lady Giffard, entitled "Finesse." This piece, after a run of nearly fifty nights, is, it is said, about to be withdrawn. At the Olympic, Mr. Tom Taylor's play "The Ticket-of-Leave Man," has met with a qualified success. The subject is not a very attractive one, and though Mr. Tom Taylor's moral is good, it does not reconcile the public to the plot. At an East End theatre—the Standard—the same topic is treated, under the title of "The Return of the Ticket-of-Leave Man." No doubt it is very cruel that society should not allow penal servitude to fully expiate crime, but the custom is useful in deterring many from committing crimes. A comedy by Mr. John Brougham, called "While there's Life there's Hope," is being played at the Strand. At the Adelphi, and at a very minor theatre, the Britannia, the present stars are literally nobodies—that is, they are scientific ghosts, and very awful apparitions to the young and to the superstitious. At the Adelphi, Mr. Dickens's "Haunted Man" has been adapted for the occasion. Professor Pepper, the inventor of these scientific ghosts, has patented them. He enjoys a complete monopoly, being the only person licensed to sell such spirits.

Mr. Boucicault, in spite of the success of "Colleen Bawn," has gone to bankruptcy—or, rather, bankruptcy has gone to him. The coup de grace, it is reported, was a dispute between Mr. Boucicault and the gentlemen who were to have found him the money for carrying on the Westminster Theatre, and to build another. The affair with Mrs. Jordan had very likely something to do with bringing about the crisis. There is considerable curiosity to learn how much was made by the "Colleen Bawn," and still more to know what, in so short a time, has become of the money.

A very important decision as to copyright has lately been decided in the Vice-Chancellor's Court. An injunction was sought by the proprietors of the copyrights of Miss Braddon's novels, "Aurora Floyd" and "Lady Audley's Secret," to restrain the publication of the dramas named after and founded upon the novels. The Vice-Chancellor held that even if the performance of the dramas was lawful, the publication was an infringement of the copyrights. In the course of the argument the counsel for the defendant said that such publication was usual, and that Mr. Dickens's works had been dramatised without complaint. The learned judge, referring to the argument, remarked, "he must say that he felt it might well be that the distinguished authors to whom reference had been made found that their greater genius manifested in their works was a better protection to them than any court of law could be." True enough, but very unkind to Miss Braddon. That lady ought not, however, to complain after the way she has—most unintentionally—injured the reputation of her country. A version of "Aurora Floyd" is being played in Paris under the quaint title of "Le Secret de Miss Aurora," and the dramatic critic of Le Constitutionnel says the drama founded upon the novel,—which, as our readers are aware, is a tale of sensational crime, a highly-spiced hash of Newgate Calendar horrors,—is "a picture of English manners," not of imaginary English people, but "of veritable English people of the present age," and the worthy critic emphatically repudiates the notion of Miss Braddon's story being coloured.

Miss Helen Western, an American actress, who is a capital representative of male characters where there is plenty of fighting, has been playing for a few nights at Sadlers' Wells. She is a sprightly lady, and will not lack engagements on either side the Atlantic.

A rope-walker, calling himself Valerio, was lately killed by a fall at Cremorne Gardens. We are a droll nation. We protest against the brutality of bull-baiting in Spain, we punish cock-fighting at home, but we permit a pastime from which the only pleasure derived is the thrilling consciousness that the performer is in imminent danger of breaking his neck.

THE CONFEDERATE PUBLIC DEBT.—The debt of the Confederate States bears no proportion to that of other States in like extremities. Suppose it to amount at the end of the fiscal year to 1,000,000,000 dollars. France, when exhausted by long wars, by the loss of all her colonies, and a population about two and a half times our number, and prospective resources certainly not greater, had about assignats to the amount of 8,000,000,000 dollars. Her revenue was 187,000,000 dollars; perhaps a little more than our tax will yield in our present blockaded and isolated state. England, with twice our population, in 1831, had a debt of $4,000,000,000, while her revenue was $247,000,000. Yet her credit has been sustained, and why not that of the Confederacy?—Charleston Courier.

THE Peter-bury (Virginia) Express announces the arrival of several steamers at Mobile, "from blockaded British ports."

TWO WRITERS ON THE WAR.*

We have copies of two reprints—English and Northern—of Mr. Pollard's "First Year of the War." As we gave, some time ago, a very complete analysis of the contents of this work, we shall not now enter into any discussion of its merits. It is enough to say that Mr. Pollard at all times writes very badly; and that when, as now and then happens, he forgets the patriot in the partisan, and the dignity of history in the zeal of opposition criticism, he writes not merely ill, but unfairly. It is not his fault that he is unable to rise above the style of a third-rate newspaper article; nor do we impute it to him as a crime that he belongs to a party which bears no goodwill to the great and good man whose name, as the founder of a new and better Union, will stand in history on a level with that of George Washington. But the presumption which has led so incompetent a person to assume the important duty of historian of the war is, we think, censurable; and we can find no excuse for the want of taste and temper which has led him to introduce into such a history poor ebullitions of temporary party feeling and personal malice. Happily there is not the least chance that so unsatisfactory a work will go down to posterity. It can only serve an ephemeral purpose; and for that purpose—to remind living observers of the chronology and details of the great struggle waged before their eyes—it is useful enough.

Infinitely less respectable in every way than the work of Mr. Pollard is that of Colonel Estvan, recently published in an English form. We do not know whether this person be really a Colonel, or in what European service he may have earned that rank. But we do know that he was not a Colonel in the service of the Confederate Government. We believe that he never held a commission from that Government. We feel assured that he has not seen one-half of the battles of which he speaks as if he had been an eye-witness; we know that when the statements now compiled in two octavo volumes originally appeared in the newspapers, they were publicly denounced as a tissue of falsehoods; that many of his assertions are notoriously untrue; and that on the evidence afforded by its own pages the work may be condemned at once as the production of a man to whom no credit can be given—a man who, on his own showing, ought never to have been allowed to associate with the officers and gentlemen of the Confederate army, and who pleads guilty to baseness in comparison with which that of slanderous misrepresentation seems absolutely trivial.

Colonel Estvan, be it remembered, was under no obligation to join the Confederate cause. He does not, like another author of the same stamp, pretend to have been forced into its service. He was not a citizen of the Confederate States; he was not even an American; but a European by birth, an adventurer by profession, ready to sell his sword to any Government, and cut throats at the bidding of any commander who would give him the pay and position he desired. Men of his sort are not honourable soldiers, entitled to the courtesies of war or to those of literature. He was not indifferent in the quarrel in which he agreed to draw his sword. On the contrary, he was a strong partisan of the North. Ignorant of American politics, but attached, like most European exiles of his class, to the lawless democratic notions prevalent in the Free States, his sympathies, such as they were, and his convictions, if he could be said to have any, were entirely with President Lincoln. This much is clear from the English edition of his book; and from the German edition we learn that he actually offered his services to the cause which he approved, and only drew his sword against the cause because he could not obtain satisfactory terms from the Federal Government. He held that the South was engaged in a wanton, wicked, and causeless rebellion. He held that the North was doing its duty to itself, to the slave, to myriads of Unionists in the Southern States who had been silenced by the violence of the seceding faction. He held that Mr. Davis and the leaders of the South were engaged in a foul and treacherous conspiracy against an excellent, just, and equitable Government; he held that President Lincoln was entitled to put down this conspiracy by force. He considered that the North was fighting for liberty and nationality; the South for a system of social tyranny and political iniquity. He believed that secession was the work of a factious minority; he believed that coercion was the right and duty of that which he probably mistook for a sovereign power. Yet this man deliberately cast in his lot with rebellion; took part in a conspiracy which he himself regarded as not merely treasonable, but purely selfish; agreed to fight for slavery against freedom, for evil against justice, for wrong against right; hired himself to kill the men whom he regarded as patriotic soldiers, doing their best to defend their fatherland against the ambition of traitors bent on its destruction. We can draw no distinction between the case of such a man and that of one who deserts his colours for fear or lucre. We cannot accept him as a credible witness; we must rank him with the class which Clarence Randolph Young represents.

We do not know whether General McClellan, whom Colonel Estvan represents as the hero of the war, is much gratified by an admiration which he shares with the braggart and murderer Corcoran. With all his ability and his military virtues of generosity and humanity, McClellan is said to be vain; and it is possible that if he should one day be reappointed to command, by some reviving gleam of rationality in the Federal Government, his panegyrist may be offered a commission under him, and may not refuse it. Almost the only true portion of Colonel Estvan's book is that which describes the strategic genius of the only Northern general who has yet ventured within sight of Richmond, and even here there is a scandalous amount of exaggeration. It is quite true that General McClellan's plans were well laid, that his forces were well led, and that he achieved more than any other Northern officer, and more than any average officer of any country could have achieved with such troops and against such an enemy. It is true that he was ill-treated and ill-supported by his Government, though not half as ill-treated as Wellington in his peninsular campaigns. But it is utterly untrue that, however well supported, he was likely to have proved a match for Lee, and Johnston, and Stonewall Jackson; or that his mongrel horde of mercenaries would ever, in fair fight, have been a match for their own number of Southerners. McClellan's greatest achievement was the creation of the Federal army; a work which required much moral courage, and no small powers of organization; his other great achievements consisted rather in the retrieval of disaster than in the accomplishment of success. The retreat across the Chickahominy to the James River; the six days' fighting, often with balanced success, in which the surprised and beaten Northerners made good their retreat in the face of a victorious army, led by such men as Lee, and Jackson, and Longstreet; the battle of Antietam, fought with the remnants of beaten and disgraced armies; these were feats which proved McClellan a good soldier, a brave man, and a general not unworthy of the enthusiastic regard in which he was held by his troops. Far be it from us to disparage the only Federal officer who has made war like a soldier and a gentleman; who has understood that marauding does more harm to the army which perpetrates than to the country which suffers it, and that murders in cold blood never serve any other purpose than that of turning every citizen into a soldier, and exposing the murderers to that condemnation by the conscience of mankind at large, against which, in modern times, no Power has been able permanently to make a stand. But to compare McClellan to his opponents is as absurd as it would be to compare President Lincoln to President Davis, or Colonel Estvan to Stonewall Jackson; and to say that, if properly supported, he would have conquered them, is as irrational as to affirm that, had he commanded in Sebastopol, Inkerman and the Tchernaya would have been Russian victories. It cannot, perhaps, be fairly affirmed that on any occasion except on the first day's fighting on the Chickahominy, McClellan was simply and completely out-generalled; but it is certain that with every advantage of numbers and matériel he was completely beaten, and his reputation will not gain by the desperate attempts of his eulogist to prove that he ought to have been victorious.

Colonel Estvan, as we have said, sympathizes entirely with the North; but more than this, he hates the South. His sketches of the Confederates, from first to last, betray a rancour that is perfectly inexplicable by anything that is publicly known of his history. If he had been drummed out of their service for cowardice, or detected in a treasonable correspondence and forced to fly for his life, he could not revile them with more unscrupulous and unparing bitterness. He paints them as mere braggarts and boasters, apt at talking, but by no means ready to make good their boasts when it came to fighting; drunkards at home and savages in the field; four-fifths of them were ignorant peasants, fighting because they were ordered to fight by their lords, and the rest a selfish oligarchy, disposed to stay at home themselves, and leave the war, begun for the defence of their property, to be fought out by those who had less to make life worth having. He says in one place that "this has been a rich man's war, but a poor man's fight." No one, who had spent even a few weeks in the South, could possibly believe such an outrageous mis-statement. The first army raised in the Confederacy was composed almost exclusively of the sons of the richer class—of the youth of that slave-owning aristocracy so bitterly denounced by Radicals like Mr. Peter Taylor, and renegades like Col. Estvan; and these men are still in the army, and multitudes of them are still in the ranks. The battles of the South have been won, not by Irish and German mercenaries, but by Southerners of every class mingled in the same ranks; the blood that has dyed half a score of Virginian battle fields is the blood of the very flower of Southern chivalry. From the first, the war was a war of the people, not of politicians; and it has been sustained by the people at large, fighting as citizen-soldiers for all that citizens hold dear, and not by men whom poverty has forced or high pay allured into the ranks of a mercenary army.

* "The First Year of the War." By E. A. Pollard.

"War Pictures from the South." By R. Estvan, Colonel of Cavalry in the Confederate Army. London: Routledge, Warne, and Routledge.

We need hardly take the trouble to vindicate against the sneers and slanders of such a writer as this cosmopolitan colonel, the political honour and personal courage of the Southern President. Mr. Davis was chosen to the high position which he fills at present by the voice of an assembly which knew well what it was doing; he was accepted with unanimous satisfaction by a people familiar with his past history; he was confirmed in office by the people after a year's experience; and he has won for himself and his country the esteem and admiration of Europe by the statesmanlike calmness which he has displayed in the hour of triumph, and by the heroic fortitude which never deserts him in the hour of peril. His military reputation was made by a display of rare personal courage at the crisis of a great battle; his political reputation has been made as much by the moral courage which is a remarkable and almost exaggerated feature in his character, as by his high political sagacity; and it would need something more than the assertion of an Estvan to make the most stupid and prejudiced Englishman believe that this man was found wanting in courage when the enemy approached his capital.

We need not enter into an examination of minor misrepresentations; such as that which describes the siege of Fort Sumter as a mere sham fight, or that which assigns to the Confederates a superiority of numbers at the first battle of Manassas. It is enough to repeat what we have already said: that no assertion of this writer's is entitled to any credit whatever.

AN AUTOGRAPH LETTER OF STONEWALL JACKSON.—Character is as well, and very often better, illustrated in the trifles of every-day life, than in the acts which form the eras of a great career; and for this reason the subjoined private note, addressed to an English gentleman of this city, deserves a place in our columns. It is another evidence of that simplicity and modesty which formed the leading characteristics of a man whose fame fills two continents:—

Head-quarters, 2nd Corps,
Army of Northern Virginia, February 24, 1863.

I have had the honour of receiving your esteemed favour of 14th of November last, accompanied by your present of an English military saddle, with every appurtenance for its complete use which a liberal and judicious taste could suggest. I take pleasure in advising you of the safe arrival of the box with its contents, and to assure you of my cordial acceptance of your present. I desire especially to return you my thanks for those generous sentiments towards my country which have prompted this testimonial of your friendly consideration.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Very respectfully,

Your obedient Servant,

T. J. JACKSON.

AN ENGLISH CLERGYMAN ON THE SOUTH.*

WE have before had occasion to make incidental reference to a little book of modest literary pretensions, half diary, half table-talk, chatty, gossiping, which, if it is not destined to any very brilliant or enduring fame, is yet sure of finding very many kindly and interested readers. It is "An Errand to the South," by a clergyman of the Church of England, who visited the much-vilified country from no mere curiosity, nor for the purpose of making a book, and who tells what he saw and heard there in a straightforward, honest manner, as if he rather had the object to fix his own impressions than to instruct the public. He was a welcome and honoured guest in every hospitable household. His descriptions are lively rather than graphic, and he was evidently most favourably impressed with the persons he met and the things he saw. There is a sort of enthusiasm of friendship which shows how agreeably he must have been disappointed in his visit. Such a witness is worth hearing, and though his sympathies are not concealed or disavowed, the most inveterate prejudice could not suspect him of wilfully misrepresenting facts. The precautions which the author took to reach his destination are characteristic and not a little amusing.

Mr. Malet desired to go to the Confederate States to communicate to an English lady, the wife of a planter in South Carolina, the sad intelligence of the death of three of her nearest relatives in this country. In order to effect his object, he applied to Mr. Adams, who at once gave him a letter of recommendation to Mr. Seward. Earl Russell gave him a letter to Lord Lyons. Having thus procured what assistance he could from the ready kindness of the Federal Minister, and from the "warm neutrality" of our Foreign Secretary, he called on Mr. Mason, who gave him an introduction to General Hugér, then commanding at Norfolk, and to the Governor of South Carolina. With these credentials, he went to Washington. He had an interview with Mr. Stanton, who told him, "I cannot give you a pass, Mr. Malet, to go to South Carolina at present; I will give you one when Charleston is taken, and that will be very soon." Mr. Malet, not being perfectly satisfied with this assurance, waited on Mr. Stanton the next day, accompanied by a brother clergyman. He then obtained the required pass, and at the same time was introduced to Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Seward. He gives a curious account of his interview with the President. "He told me he was born in 1809; and remarked that when employed as a lawyer to settle the French claim in Illinois, he had met with my name. We pored together over a comparative chart of rivers, which showed that America had the two longest rivers in the world—Mississippi and Amazon—the former 4,400 miles long." Mr. Malet must not suppose that Mr. Lincoln was poring over the chart for the purpose of glancing that fact. The first lesson taught to a Yankee child is that America has the biggest rivers in the world, and that the American people can whip all creation. Mr. Lincoln was only bent on instructing his benighted guest after the manner of his people, whether at home or abroad. We readily believe that he was sincere when he "lamented the occurrence of the war, observing that, if he could have foreseen it, he would not have accepted the office of President." Mr. Seward came in and shook hands with Mr. Malet, "not speaking a word," but on the 1st of June, at the solicitation of Lord Lyons, he gave him a permission to land at Charleston, and on the 10th of June our traveller, after an uneventful voyage in H.M.S. Rinaldo, found himself in the Palmetto City. It is fortunate for the Confederate States and for Europe that it is not so difficult to run the blockade, or to cross the lines, as it is to go South en règle.

We lately reviewed a book written by an English Merchant, who visited the Confederate States on business, and who paid little or no regard to any matters that did not immediately concern the commerce of the South, present and prospective. Mr. Malet also confined his attention to those things which directly concern his vocation. Whilst he was in the Confederate States, the military events were more than usually interesting; but a bare mention of them suffices for our author. Nor does he give much space to politics. Only now and then, when he has been describing a religious gathering of whites or negroes, he cannot refrain from expressing surprise that a whole people—a people manifesting ready obedience to law and government and earnest piety—are called "rebels." Rebellion should be made of sterner stuff than faultless obedience to ancient laws, time-honoured institutions, and prayerful intercessions for Divine aid in defence of home and country against an invader. Our author was impressed with the entire absence of boasting in the South. He quotes at length an eloquent sermon preached by the Rev. Mr. Reed on the 11th of September, the day appointed by President Davis for thanksgivings for the Southern victories gained by General Lee at Manassas, and General Kirby Smith at Richmond, Kentucky. The preacher says very little about the success of the Confederate arms, except as they have induced the people of the Confederate States to "humble themselves before God, and to implore His mercy." So far from concealing reverses he parades them, and notes how they have been beneficial to the Confederacy, and especially calls attention to the way in which the war has vindicated the character of the South to Europe. In the very flush of victory the preacher says:—"We look to the future with hope, we feel assured that all that courage and skill can do, will be done; and if we are finally overborne, it will be because God does not will us to be a nation." * * * We do not know what is in the future. Neither the power nor the spirit of our persecutors is broken. * * * Or if it should be God's pleasure to subject us to final overthrow, we shall leave to the world another legacy of heroic endurance that will animate another generation in the eternal contest of right against power. But let us pray against such an issue. Let us beseech God, who hears prayer, to interpose His own arm to stay the shedding of blood." This is what the North will call the language of pusillanimity and defeat. We think it is the language of true heroism, and that it presages victory. We think a people who confess that the issue of war is dependent on the will of the Lord of Hosts, and who in the hour of triumph dare to contemplate the chances and exigencies of defeat, are more likely to endure to the end and to conquer than a people who prate about their invincibility from platform and pulpit, and blasphemously assert that Heaven is pledged to the success of their enterprise.

Mr. Malet's business in the South was soon disposed of, and he then gave his attention to inquiring into the condition of the slaves. Our author is a conscientious clergyman. He never feels that he is off duty. He held a service on the Cunard steamer that took him to New York. He preached several times in Washington; and when in the South, he lost no opportunity of praying, preaching, attending the sick, baptizing the young, and administering the sacrament. We will not repeat his testimony respecting the piety of the white race. We can well understand how, under present circumstances, the religion of the people is fervent and prominent. They cannot help feeling that they have been wonderfully cared for and protected. When the war began, they were totally unprepared, but their well-equipped foe was for months kept at bay by Quaker guns, and feared to assault fortifications innocent of cannon. Then there were a series of victories of inferior numbers against superior forces, such as military genius never before achieved. Even on the sea, where the Northern boast of absolute supremacy seemed reasonable, all the laurels of the war have been gathered by the Confederates. Cut off from intercourse with foreign markets, the Confederates find that they have within their own territory all things necessary for their maintenance and defence. Threatened with a servile war, they find that the negro is devotedly loyal, for we venture to say that in no country in Europe could the working population prove more true and patriotic. The Confederates have been deprived of all foreign aid, and however strong the sympathy with their cause throughout the civilized world, yet their very existence has been officially ignored. No wonder that so situated they should confess that they do not stand alone, and that their success is to be ascribed to the blessing of the Giver of all Victories, even more than to their valour and their patriotism.

But Mr. Malet was even more surprised and delighted with the moral and religious condition of the negroes. He found that the tales about the separation of negro families are grossly exaggerated, if not wholly false. Such separations happen, but they are much less frequent in the South through slavery, than in Europe through poverty.

It is the custom for masters to arrange for man and wife to be together; the wife is often bought on purpose to be with her husband, and vice versa. A man who sells a wife away from her husband, out of reach, is reckoned inhuman in society; still it is done, and none that I conversed with on the subject but agree that a law should be passed to prevent it. A master at Wilmington sold a little child away from its mother; a subscription was immediately raised to buy the mother from him to put her with the child. He dared not refuse, and he was so avoided that he was obliged to quit the place.

The Abolitionists are not always so humane to the negro, if it be true what was told me, viz., that among some property in South Carolina left to Mr. Sumner, the Senator, was a remarkably fine, intelligent servant. Some friends wrote to him in the North, saying, that if sold by private contract a good place could be ensured for the man, though the price would be less than if put up for competition; the answer was, that he was to be sold for as high a price as he could fetch. Certainly, this was all fair; but what an opportunity was lost of practising this principle!

The hours of labour for the negro are remarkably few. At the plantation in South Carolina where Mr. Malet was residing—and in this respect it is not exceptional—the negroes have finished their day's toil at 3 o'clock, and on Saturdays at noon. There may be plantations where the labour is more protracted. We only speak to the rule, not to the exceptions. There might have been, though we do not, in the absence of evidence, believe it, a Legree in the South, just as in London there is a court dress maker whose assistant died from the effects of overwork and sleeping in an overcrowded chamber; but the slaves in the South are usually privileged to work fewer hours than any other labouring class in the world. The food for the negro is abundant, but we do not in this case claim any particular credit for the Southerner. It is his interest to feed his negro well. The negro is his servant for life, and not his Coolly slave for seven years. The weekly allowance for the field hands in South Carolina is as follows:—

Each adult, male and female, had one peck of clean rice, and half a peck to each child; sometimes corn flour is given instead. As soon as a child is born, the mother has half a peck a week for it; they can lay by plenty for their poultry and pigs. Meat is given out to the field labourers three times a week, in such quantities that every family may have meat daily; honey, sugar, and salt were also given out.

Mr. Malet was struck with the care taken of the aged; with the free intercourse between the white and coloured children, leading to that affection which subsists between the two races in the South and nowhere else; and with the devotion of the negroes to their masters and their masters' families. That the negroes should dislike the Yankees, who hate them, is but natural, and this war is likely to confirm and increase the dislike. Mr. Malet embraced every occasion of catechising the negroes, and he discovered that they were exceedingly well instructed in the doctrines of the Christian religion. The spread of Christianity amongst the black race is miraculous. There are more communicants among the negroes in the South than in all the other missions of the world. Ethiopia has stretched out her hands unto the Lord. Even the enemies of the South even Mrs. Beecher Stowe and the fanatics of New England—unwittingly testify to the religious progress of the Southern negroes. And this does not conciliate, but it rather exasperates the Abolitionists.

* "An Errand to the South in the Summer of 1862." By the Rev. William Wyndham Malet, Vicar of Ardeley, near Buntingford, Herts. London: Richard Bealey.

At Richmond, our author visited President Davis, with whom he had a titre-à-titre over a cup of tea, Mrs. Davis and the children on that occasion being at Raleigh, North Carolina, and he gives us a very full summary of the conversation. Soon afterwards Mr. Malet was invited to breakfast by Mrs. Davis, "to consult with their clergyman, Dr. Minnegrode, about organizing some system for Divine service in the hospitals." The description of the party is graphic:—

¶ Here was I sitting at a breakfast table, with certainly very good fare upon it, in company with the ruler of 10,000,000 of people, and commander-in-chief of 400,000 soldiers—the President of a Senate and a Congress—the chosen chief of thirteen States, each one more extensive than England—and no more formality than at a squire's table in England. Everything was in order—nothing extravagant; and last, not least, Mrs. Davis had good but loving rule over her fine, healthy children, whom I had the pleasure of seeing.

Beside the clergyman, Generals Pendleton and Gustavus Smith breakfasted with the President:—

The two generals were off to the army at Gordonsville soon after breakfast, Mrs. Davis disappearing for a time to order sandwiches, &c., to be put up for them on their journey. When they were off, we two clergymen sat talking with Mrs. Davis, and arranging for the Divine service in the military hospitals; and before we left, the President held out two cigars, one for the doctor and one for myself, which we smoked in the garden portico. His Excellency called me "doctor;" I said I could not lay claim to such an honourable distinction, on which he replied: "Oh, they must make you a doctor on your return to England, after this visit you have paid us."

The world has often paid homage to the simplicity of great men in their retirement after their task has been accomplished, but there is something still more grand and touching in the simple yet earnest life of the Chief Magistrate of the Confederate States. We had marked several more passages for quotation, but our space is limited, and we must refer our readers to the book itself for a mass of useful information about the South, and for many pleasing incidents and anecdotes. Among other things, not the least acceptable to lady readers will be the words and music of the song of "Maryland, my Maryland," which now deservedly disputes with the more homely "Dixie" the honour of being regarded the national song of the South.

THE REVIEWS FOR JULY.

The Westminster Review, No. 47, New Series. In recommending the current number of the Westminster to the notice of our readers, particularly as regards the article on Lancashire, it will scarcely be necessary to state that we have not the slightest sympathy with its principles. We utterly repudiate the infidel doctrines of the Westminster as we do its political theories, which combine all the vices of French and German socialism, without any of the virtues that grace, though they do not redeem that system. It is singular that wherever we go we find abolitionism and infidelity linked together. We do not moralize; we merely state an indisputable fact. We do not mean that a sincere and hearty opposition to slavery is incompatible with a sincere and hearty profession of Christianity, we only refer to abolitionists. Take up the Westminster. The first article is on "The Growth of Christianity," and is just such an essay as Voltaire might have called extreme, and Hume and Thomas Paine would have cordially endorsed. When we come to Article 10, we find the Southern defence of independence called an "infernal project," and the cruel, vengeful, and selfish war waged by the North described as a revolution on the part of the North "to purge this stigma from mankind." We nevertheless do not see any objection to culling a few facts from heathen ground, and since these facts are strongly in favour of a course which we advocate, they will not be less trustworthy because they are the utterance of a clever and unscrupulous enemy.

We are not going to present our readers with a synopsis of the article on Lancashire. We cannot do so, for the article in itself is an admirable and ably-condensed summary of a mass of valuable information. All we care or need to do is to notice the reviewer's results. He begins by disposing of the fallacy that the cotton famine is over. The problem is thus stated:—

"By last returns nearly 300,000 of the best workpeople in England are still, after sixteen months of idleness, without their ordinary employment. Their numbers have been slowly diminishing; but the causes of that diminution are not increasing." The reviewer in another place suggests a simple reason, and one which we have frequently had occasion to advance, why our cotton trade cannot revive under present circumstances. "The vast cotton trade of England is virtually dependent on the low price of the manufactured article," and in a note we are reminded that in 1861 we exported to China 160,000,000 yards of plain cotton goods, and in 1862 only 54,000,000 yards. It follows that if India is effectively to replace the American supply of the raw material, Indian cotton must be as cheap as American cotton. And here we must be careful not to be guided by a mere comparison of the price per lb. Irrespective of the difference in the quality of the fabrics produced, there is an enormous difference in the cost of production. Speaking of the working of Surats compared to American, the reviewer says, "It is our belief that, on the average, the loss of wages is about 30 or 40 per cent.," and this is still more important when we recollect that in cotton fabrics the raw material is of vastly less value than the labour. The reviewer recommends that the operatives should be to some extent encouraged to emigrate, and those that remain at home should be employed on public works. We have not, be it observed, only to deal with 300,000 persons. Nearly the whole of Lancashire is directly and indirectly dependent upon the cotton trade, and so if affairs do not become better than they are at present, we shall have to provide, at a moderate and inadequate calculation, for 1,000,000 persons.

Emigration—at least to our own colonies—on a very large scale is out of the question. If we chose to provide the funds, our colonies are not ready for such a sudden augmentation of their population. No doubt New England looks to, and will make a great effort to secure our skilled operatives, but just now emigration to the United States is neither profitable nor attractive. Besides, emigration is a ruinous alternative. It demolishes our most profitable industry, by transferring it to other lands. On this head the reviewer says, "In a word, wholesale emigration is no specific for the cotton crisis; firstly, because it would be fatal to capitalist and workman; secondly, because it is repugnant to both; lastly, if it were not, because it is impossible." The other alternative of employing the operatives on public works is nearly as objectionable. It is costly, can only engage a few of the operatives, and unfits them for the resumption of their normal industry.

Must our cotton trade be permanently crippled? If we can get our usual supply of raw material the saints of New England will have been premature in singing songs of triumph over our industrial decadence. But we cannot get for years, if ever, a supply from India, even if we adopt the protective system of Mr. John Bright, who with the zeal of a renegade from free trade clamours for the Government to foster the agricultural resources of India. Our only chance is the return of the American supply. The Westminster sees no hope of this, and says that, even if we had peace now, the effects of the war "would be to leave the Cotton States exhausted, depopulated, disorganized, changed in character, and broken in credit. Cotton would again be grown, but slowly, precariously, and under new conditions." What may be the result of a prolongation of the war we cannot say, but it would undoubtedly cripple the productiveness of the South. But we have to deal with the actual, not to speculate upon the future. At present, the Confederate States are neither depopulated nor disorganized. A present peace would replenish our exhausted stocks, and ensure a supply equal to the demand. A present peace would save our cotton trade from ruin and restore it to its pristine prosperity. It is surely then the duty of the British Government to do all that is possible to bring about peace, for the sake of Lancashire and for the sake of British interests. Surely it is criminal to encourage the continuation of the war by ignoring such a palpable fact as the existence of the Confederate States. Although we have no hand in this war, we are not the least of the sufferers.

The New Review, No. 3. When the New Review made its debut, we had occasion to commend it to the notice of our readers, and the perusal of the third number confirms the first favourable impression. We do not, however, endorse all the opinions of the New Review, or credit all its assertions. We do not believe that the Polish insurrection "creates an interest more purely sympathetic than the struggle raging in the New World." If it were so it would not be accounted for by the suggestion that, in America, "no sure promise of wide-spread good unfolds itself in the ultimate success of either party." If it is a good thing for an alien race to throw off the yoke of political servitude, it must be a good thing for a kindred race to succeed in defending their independence. In an article on "Our Constitutional History," the effects of political agitation are considered. The reviewer thinks the "pressure upon Government" resembles that of stimulants on the human system which leave it more languid and enfeebled after each dose. There is an evil which is more palpable. Agitators are usually men of one idea. If the agitation succeeds their work is done, but their restless ambition is not satisfied. Like the worn-out prima donna, they long in their retirement for another public appearance and more public applause. So they hinder good Government by trading on their reputation. Ever since the repeal of the Corn-laws the Corn-law agitators have been like fish out of water, and it is to be regretted that they were not provided with places or pensions as soon as their occupation was gone. The New Review has an essay on "Married, or Single Life," for which spinsters ought to feel grateful, but we do not think that any benefit results from such exhortations. If the winsome charms of the fair cannot persuade young men to marry, we are convinced the persuasion of the reviewer will be in vain. An article on autographs is illustrated by some curious specimens. One is of Queen Victoria, dated 1844. A note of Sheridan's, in which he says, "in future I will discharge my accounts every month," is eminently characteristic. The calligraphy of distinguished persons is bad, and the bad handwriting of a lord looks just as ugly as the bad handwriting of a peasant. The prevailing fashion of bad, that is illegible, handwriting, is a discreditable nuisance.

A NORTHERN DEFENCE OF RECOGNITION.

This pamphlet is an able resumé of the leading arguments in favour of recognition. Mr. O'Sullivan first dilates on the legality of the proceeding, and in doing so gives a very proper and courteous reply to the special pleading of "Historicus." He says, international law is not "dependent upon minute identity of precedents. New cases are very apt to arise, to which no parallel perfect in all its features may have been furnished in past history. Not only so, but in no case or under any circumstances do we expect a precedent to be exact. When our English barrister cites a former decision he does not plead identity of circumstances, but identity of principle." In the various instances of recognition it was not asked how many troops the belligerents had in the field, or how long the contest was likely to continue. European Governments were guided by far more precise principles; and these principles are fairly applied to the present instance by Mr. O'Sullivan. He asks, if there is any prospect of the South being subjugated? Are the people of the South united in demanding independence? Is the Confederate Government capable of maintaining public order—that is, is it a Government in fact? Now no one believes the South will be subdued. No one believes in the farce of Union feeling in the South. It is beyond dispute that the Confederate Government is vastly more popular in the South, than the Lincoln Government is in the North. All the conditions that are involved in the legal doctrine of recognition are satisfied. There is no prospect of the subjugation of the Confederacy; the people of the Confederate States are singularly united in their determination to get rid of the connection with the North; and the Confederate Government is as constitutional, as free, and as loyally supported a Government as is the Government of England. Mr. O'Sullivan enforces the doctrine by an enumeration of the details of some precedents that have escaped the notice of "Historicus," or have been kept in the background by that rash advocate. For example, "it is not necessary that hostilities on the part of the Northern Government should have actually ceased. Such was not the case in regard to the Swiss Cantons, to the United Provinces, to Greece, to Belgium, to some of the South American States, to Texas, or (as a precedent in point for the present argument) to Hungary in 1848." Mr. O'Sullivan supplements his plea for recognition by reciting the constitutional right of secession, and the greatest and political efforts of the South to maintain their independence; and he further urges the policy of recognition. He contends that the threat of war with the North is a mere bugbear; that peace in America is important to the commercial and industrial interests of Europe; that for the sake of humanity we ought to exercise our moral influence on the side of peace, and for other reasons. In conclusion Mr. O'Sullivan urges the policy and duty of immediate recognition. He says—"But beware that your necessary eventual recognition be not too tardy to wear any aspect of grace or value in the eyes of any party or of any body on either side of the Atlantic. The general opinion of the country will both justify and applaud, and, on a word from your lips, Parliament will sanction with acclamation, that recognition for which the friends of peace in America, alike at the North and at the South, now appeal to England, and to Europe, as a means of peace, and as the necessary precursor of peace. France is prepared, most of the other European Powers are prepared to unite in the act. And at the door of England, and England alone, will rest the true moral responsibility, with all its consequences, both to Europe and to America, of its refusal." The British Government may not heed, but it cannot deny the right of the Confederate States to recognition.

"Recognition. A Letter to Lord Palmerston." By John L. O'Sullivan, late United States' Minister to Portugal. London: Waterlow and Sons.

FEDERAL REPULSE AT PORT HUDSON.

(From our own Correspondent.)

NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA, JUNE 18.

Sir, - From May 27th to June 14th, operations in the vicinity of Port Hudson were confined to occasional skirmishes between pickets, skill-tests among sharpshooters, with now and then a gun from the earthworks on either side. Last Sunday morning, soon after daylight, Generals Weitzel and Grover commanding the brigades on the right of the Federal army, attempted once more to carry the northernmost part of the Confederate works by assault. So soon as the assault commenced, the Federal centre, under Angur and Dwight, also opened attack from behind the earthworks. This last was a feint; but as a diversion, was not more successful than the famous attack of March 14th, when General Banks gave battle on the Plains of Port Hudson, to "divert" the attention of the Confederates, while the fleet should pass the river batteries. Diversions, in a military sense, are evidently not the Federal forte. Thus the feint of the centre last Sunday morning seemed only to concentrate the Confederate resistance at the actual point of attack. Weitzel and Grover assaulted vigorously, and in half an hour were disastrously repulsed. They were driven back with a loss, at the lowest admitted estimate, of 700 killed and wounded. Among the killed were the colonels of two regiments, Holcomb, of the 1st Louisiana (white), and Bryant of the 175th New York; Colonel Paine, Acting Brigadier-General, was severely wounded; Colonel Smith, of the 114th New York, was mortally wounded; Colonel Curry, of the 131st New York, was also wounded; and the 75th New York lost a large number of line officers. No accounts are permitted to be published here, but the wounded have been brought down the river by boat-loads since Monday, and I do not understand this Federal mode of computing figures; but of the "700 killed and wounded" nearly 800 wounded men have already arrived in New Orleans.

While Sunday's assault was in progress, five companies, comprising 400 men of the Metropolitan cavalry, were on picket duty within one mile and a-half of Banks's headquarters. Suddenly, and without warning, down swept a squadron of Wheeler's Confederate cavalry, surrounded the Metropolitan, and, without a shot on either side, "bagged the lot," and took them prisoners. At least 400 of the Teche-seized horses were thus recovered, with an equal number of sabres, revolvers, and carbines.

The assault of the Federal right was as short as it was sudden. It was worse, if possible, as a repulse, than the ineffectual attempt to carry the same part of the works three weeks ago. Banks can scarcely be blamed for his want of success. The Confederates have been preparing Port Hudson for these very assaults since November last. Their line of works is formidable—indeed frightful. On the road—every route—to the interior of Port Hudson, the following obstacles present themselves to the assaulting army: Almost impenetrable abatis of felled and interlacing trees and branches; a ditch forty feet wide and from four to six feet deep, filled with water; a glacis with an earth embankment at the summit, covering and concealing regiments of rifle-armed sharpshooters; next comes a dry ditch, and then the batteries themselves—the defenses proper of Port Hudson—heavily mounted with guns en barbette. These obstacles are more easily passed by than passed through. As a Federal officer says, "We cannot blame a man for not carrying such works, but he is open to criticism for being such a fool as to attempt to carry them."

And yet the attempt will, perhaps, be made again. The boats down to-day bring word that General Dudley was willing to lead 4,000 or 5,000 men, who would volunteer as a forlorn hope to carry Port Hudson. It is said that an order for the volunteers has been issued, but I do not imagine we shall hear anything of their movements in time for the morning steamer to New York.

These repeated assaults, closely followed by repeated repulses, can hardly fail to dishearten the Federals and encourage the Confederates. The investment of Port Hudson has thus far proved an investment unproductive, save in large returns of killed and wounded. Banks's force is not large enough to accomplish what has been undertaken. It is said that he has sent to Grant twice for reinforcements from the army in the rear of Vicksburg, and that Grant has been equally anxious for assistance from Banks.

Since the assault of Sunday last, the old programme of skirmishes between sharpshooters and pickets has been resumed, varied with a gun or two occasionally from the batteries. We are waiting now for the forlorn hope. If Port Hudson is carried, your readers shall have a faithful account. There is no necessity for an evacuation of the position, and there seems to be no immediate need for a surrender. The attempts, thus far, do not indicate a reduction by assault.

There are persons in this city to-day, and they are neither soldiers, deserters, prisoners, nor contrabands, who have been in Port Hudson within a week. The ingress and egress to all but Federal soldiers is by no means difficult. I know of a boy, body-servant to a Confederate officer, who has been from Port Hudson to New Orleans and back again twice within thirty days past. A gentleman who was there June 4, gave a flattering, but, I know, truthful account, of affairs inside the Confederate works. There were 7,000 effective men behind the batteries. In addition to the large supplies of bacon, corn, and salted meats laid in for the anticipated siege, and accumulated before Red River was cut off, there were about 500 cattle on the hoof; and that day's inventory showed 170,000 lbs. of powder. The place will not be "starved out" this week. The few picket-taken prisoners, an occasional deserter or runaway negro to the Federal lines, all carry the intelligence that there is plenty to eat in Port Hudson; and a scout from General Kirby Smith, who visited General Gardner to see if he wanted reinforcements, was sent back with word that there were men enough there to hold the position.

Mr. Lincoln's emancipation proclamation, declaring for ever free the slaves "in the States and parts of States in rebellion against the United States," expressly excepts the very small portions of the Confederacy where the Federal armies had secured a foothold. I do not propose to refer to this proclamation at present, more than to say that it virtually declares Louisiana in rebellion, "except the parishes of St. Bernard, Plaquemines, Jefferson, St. John, St. Charles, St. James, Ascension, Assumption, Terre Bonne, Lafourche, St. Mary, St. Martin, and Orleans, including the City of New Orleans." These parishes, in respect of territory, embrace a very small portion of the State. But they cover every inch of ground where the Federal authorities had possession on January 1 (the date of the proclamation), and it is questionable whether the Federal jurisdiction extends over all of the section specified, to-day. The recent raid—for it was nothing more than a negro, mule, cattle, and cotton collecting tour—through the Teche and Lower Red River country, cannot be called a conquest of territory, an extension of the Federal lines, or a restoration of so much of the State to the Union, since the occupation was followed by an immediate abandonment for the movement, via Red River, upon Port Hudson. Recent accounts say that piles of collected cotton waiting for shipment have been destroyed. The army went through that part of the State as a whirlwind might have done,—devastating, destroying, leaving a wide-swarth of prostrate and ruined property to mark its course, and then was gone. Banks did not hold the country, simply because he had no force to leave in occupation. And yet there are those who consider the Attakapas advance of so great importance, that they fancy they already have control over the whole, instead of a limited portion of Louisiana, and they propose to immediately divide the entire property among the new-found and self appointed heirs.

Thus a small and restless set in this city, made up mainly of new-comers, some of whom have been here six weeks, and a few of them, perhaps, six months, declare that "we Louisianians" need a revision of the State Constitution, and a civil (in place of the military) Government. The "we" of the Tooley-street tailors calling themselves "the people of England" is entitled to respect when compared with the claims of the new "citizens" of Louisiana—or, rather, it would be, if the assumption of the latter did not merit a degree of admiration for the intensity of its impudence. Apart from the fact that a large part of the State is now governed by a regularly and constitutionally elected Executive, these criers for a new civil Government seem to forget that General Banks with a large army corps has been trying since March 14th—more than three months—to add one small town to the few "excepted parishes," and that, so far as we know in this city to-night, Port Hudson is not yet taken, unless it has been "taken" (at a safe distance) by some Federal photographer. Mrs. Glass, I believe, suggests some slight preliminaries before cooking the hare, and it might be well enough to "get" the State before devising the means and mode of its government.

The Federal "military governor of Louisiana," as he is styled—which means, in plain English, the governor of the few parishes which are not governed by some one else—has yielded to the pressure of the reconstructionists, and has ordered a registration to be made of all free white male citizens of the United States, who have resided six months in the State, and one month in the parish where the registry is made, who shall take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation:—

I ———, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I am a citizen of the United States of America; that I have resided six months in the State of Louisiana, and one month in this parish; that I am of the age of twenty-one years and upwards; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America, and will support the Constitution thereof; that I solemnly renounce all allegiance to any other Government, or pretended Government, and especially the so-called Government of the Confederate States; that I now register myself as a voter, freely and voluntarily, for the purpose of organizing a State Government in Louisiana, loyal to the Government of the United States.

Imagine, if you can, a popular election in Poland for a king, with the registration of voters limited to those who would swear true faith and allegiance to Russia, and renounce all allegiance to any other Government, especially to the so-called Government of Poland. The proposed scheme here is so farcical and so transparent that it does not even provoke public discussion. It is simply the plan of a few Northern adventurers to go through with the farce of a pretended election by Federal soldiers and followers, of a sufficient number of officers to draw the salaries attached to the offices they will pretend to fill. Those who have no been participants in the profits of cotton and sugar transactions, may thus revive their fortunes by holding a nominal yet lucrative office. When this promising programme is carried out, from the governorship at $4,000 a year to the gubernatorial boot-black at four shillings a day, the parishes to be "governed" must be controlled then, as they are now, by martial law. The "civil" government, so clamorously demanded by the would-be public officers and their friends, is only a respectable name for a disreputable swindle—a "constitutional" pretence for otherwise unauthorized plunder.

This horse-leech, shilling-sucking mania for unearned and unnecessary salaries is becoming disgusting even to Federals themselves. A few days ago, a city ordinance was passed incorporating the school and city libraries into a single public library for the benefit of the people. There was a natural desire to know what necessity prompted this purely literary scheme in an almost beggared city, depleted in population, and filled mainly by strangers, adventurers, and soldiers. A clause providing for the appointment of a librarian, an assistant, and a page, with an appropriation of $5,000 therefor, explains the motive for the plan.

A few days since we recorded the capture in Passé-a-l'Outre of the towboat Boston, and the subsequent destruction in the Gulf, by the Boston, of the New York barks Texana and Lenox. This morning, a boat going up the river, discovered at Plaquemine Landing (fifteen miles below Baton Rouge) two Federal towboats on fire, and nearly burned to the water's edge. On landing it was ascertained that they were the Sykes and the Anglo-American. The first was bringing down about sixty bales of cotton; the other boat had no freight. While lying at the landing they were boarded by some of Wheeler's men. The officers, crews, and negroes on board were taken prisoners, and the boats were then destroyed. Think of this happening in broad daylight, between this city and Port Hudson, under Banks's very nose as it were, and within a few miles of his base at Baton Rouge. The matter was telegraphed to headquarters in this city.

General Magruder has withdrawn all his forces from Western Texas. There is no danger of a Federal occupation of that portion of the department so long as the Mississippi is unopened. In the meantime, Magruder's men, with General Dick Taylor's and Kirby Smith's forces, are "reviewing" the ground so recently "gone over" by General Banks in his advance to Alexandria. Squads of cavalry come down occasionally as far as Berwick city, opposite Brashear, and the Confederates hold undisputed possession of the Teche region.

The New Orleans refugees in Mobile are kindly cared for. Those who are poor are receiving relief from local committees, and from banks and citizens in other places. Affairs in Mobile, as indicated by late papers, are very lively, and plenty of English goods are arriving, in spite of the blockade.

AFFAIRS, FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

MONEY AND DISCOUNT MARKET.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The favourable state of the weather for the harvest, and the payment of the Dividends, will, for the next week or ten days, exercise a partial effect upon the rates of money, both in the discount market and at the Stock Exchange. The cessation of active business, usual at this period of the year, is likely to induce an additional accumulation, the flow of capital to one common centre being sure to follow at a time when bona fide and speculative operations are equally neglected. Last week severe pressure was experienced through exceptional causes; the liquidation of the Hudson Bay claims, with the termination of the engagements for the end of the half-year, having sustained the demand to the last moment. This week, there seems in every quarter a better supply, with considerable balances over among the Lombard Street and Cornhill establishments. The rates for first-class paper this afternoon were 3½ and 4 per cent., with the greater proportion of business at the former figure. Although sums of money are withdrawn for export to Brazil and Constantinople once or twice a month, they are speedily supplied by receipts from Australia and America, and since little or no Continental orders are in the market the Stock at the Bank of England will, no doubt, be maintained at a very satisfactory point. It is not therefore immediately anticipated that we shall see any important fluctuations in the terms; even under the most favourable circumstances, it is not supposed that a reduction below 3½ per cent. will ensue should such an alteration in reality take place. On the Stock Exchange the last twenty-four hours, the abundance has become complete, for whereas loans from day to day ruled on Monday and Tuesday at from 2½ to 3½ per cent., the principal money-jobbers this afternoon offered large sums at 1½ and 2 per cent., and could not secure employment for a quarter of the amount with which they had to deal. Concurrently with the disbursement of the dividends, important totals in the shape of advances have to be repaid to the Bank, and these will have the effect of shortly reducing the existing plethora.

BULLION AND SPECIE MOVEMENTS.

The quantity of gold sent into the Bank during the past week has been unusually small, the total being only £150,000, but there was withdrawn this afternoon 100,000 sovereigns for transmission to Brazil. The arrivals of bullion have been moderate, the aggregate being £415,078, of which only £25,143 was from America, nearly the whole of the remainder being from the Australian colonies. There has been no alteration whatever in the price of bar silver, which is still at 5s. 1d. per ounce, and Mexican dollars 5s. 2½d. per ounce; the late large arrivals of the latter by the Shannon, from the West Indies, have not yet been sold. From a statement just issued, it appears that the total shipments of specie from this country to India and China, for the half-year ending the 30th of June, amounted to £5,234,998, against £4,839,531 in the corresponding period of last year. Of the above sum £4,311,522 was in silver, and £923,476 in gold. From the Mediterranean ports, in the same period, the shipments have been £3,020,588 and £2,253,694 respectively.

A LOAN FOR WELLINGTON.

A small loan is being raised by the Union Bank of Australia, for the Government of Wellington, New Zealand. The sum required is only £25,000, for which debentures of £100 each will be issued, with coupons attached, and which will become due on the 1st of July, 1877, and bear interest up to that time at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum.

HOME AND FOREIGN SECURITIES.

Notwithstanding that business has been inanimate generally on the Stock Exchange, prices have, on the whole, shown a rising tendency, although there have been occasional inclinations toward a decline, induced by the somewhat unsatisfactory nature of political affairs on the Continent. Consols, which on Wednesday last closed at 92 to  $\frac{1}{2}$  for money and 92  $\frac{1}{2}$  to  $\frac{3}{4}$  for the account, are to-day 92  $\frac{1}{2}$  for money and the same for the account. There has also been a corresponding improvement in Exchequer Bills, which now stand at 2 dis. to 1 prem. There has been much less speculation during the past few days in Foreign Stocks, particularly in those descriptions which have been more immediately affected by political influences. Greek has been dealt in at a slight decline, and leaves off at 35  $\frac{1}{2}$  to  $\frac{3}{4}$ . Mexican are likewise rather less firm, but the variation is merely fractional, the closing price being 36  $\frac{1}{2}$  to 37  $\frac{1}{4}$  for the account. There has been a considerable decline in Spanish, particularly the passives, which are down to 33  $\frac{1}{2}$  to 33  $\frac{3}{4}$ . Russian Stocks have been more extensively dealt in, at steady prices, but Peruvian have been quite neglected. Venezuela has slightly recovered from the recent heavy fall, the 6 per cents. closing at 56  $\frac{1}{2}$ .

AMERICAN SECURITIES.

American Securities have been rather more actively dealt in during the past week, at firmer quotations. United States 5 per cent. 1874, have been sold at 59; Virginia State 6 per cent. 44 to 44  $\frac{1}{2}$ ; Atlantic and Great Western New York Sec., 1870, 1870, 71  $\frac{1}{2}$  ex. div.; do. Pennsylvania 1877, 70  $\frac{1}{2}$ ; Erie shares \$100 (all paid), 60  $\frac{1}{2}$ ; Illinois Central \$100 shares (\$90 paid), 29  $\frac{1}{2}$  div.; ditto \$100 (all paid), 62; Pennsylvania Railroad bonds, 2nd mort. 6 per cent. convert. 86  $\frac{1}{2}$ . The Confederate Cotton Loan has been rather depressed, but to-day there has been some improvement manifested, and it closed at 1 to 0  $\frac{1}{2}$  discount.

RAILWAY SECURITIES.

In railway shares the business has been remarkably quiet, but prices, notwithstanding, continue to be well maintained. Although the traffic receipts hitherto have contrasted favourably with those of the corresponding periods of last year, they are now beginning to show less satisfactorily, but this was to be expected, as the returns from about July to November in 1862 were unusually swelled by the arrivals to the Great Exhibition. Still, on a general comparison the traffic continues to improve. In Colonial descriptions there has been rather more business doing, with a tendency to an advance in value, but in foreign shares the transactions have been very limited.

PROGRESS OF ENTERPRISE.

The state of the money market being still favourable for the introduction of Joint Stock projects, new undertakings from day to day continue to be brought forward, though as to some of them their ultimate success appears very doubtful. During the past week six have been launched, for which the aggregate capital sought to be raised is £3,030,000. The most important of these is undoubtedly that of the Hudson's Bay Company, under the auspices of the International Financial Society, the latter having agreed to purchase the interests, territory, business, &c. of the former, and to conduct operations on a very extensive scale. The next is the Company of African Merchants, and the London and African Trading Company, each of which required large capitals. The minor undertakings comprised the British and Foreign Domestic Machinery Company, the Portugal Iron and Coal Company, and the City of London Hotel Company.

JOINT STOCK BANKS.

Several of the Joint Stock Banks have held their half-yearly meeting during the past week. At the meeting of the proprietors of the Union Bank of Australia a dividend was declared of 8 per cent., making with the previous distribution 16 per cent. for the year, which as compared with the previous year is an increase of 2 per cent., the chairman remarking that the bank was never in a more prosperous state. At the first annual meeting of the shareholders of the Bank of Hindustan, China, and Japan, a very satisfactory report was presented, although it was stated that from the short time the bank had been in operation it was impossible to furnish a complete balance sheet; but the statement of accounts received to the 30th April, showed the liabilities of the bank on sums due to the public; on current accounts, deposits, bills payable, &c., to be £450,000. Branches had been already opened at Calcutta and Bombay, and arrangements had been made for others at Hong Kong and Shanghai. The chairman stated that £4,000 had been paid to the promoters of the undertaking, but this expense would be spread over a number of years. At the Union Bank of London meeting to-day, an increased dividend of 18s. per share, free of income tax, being at the rate of 15 per cent. per annum, for the past half-year was declared, and after adding £60,000 to the reserve fund, which would then stand at £110,000, there would remain £668 to be carried forward. The net profits for the half-year were £39,446. The proprietors of the Colonial Bank also met to-day, when a dividend of 6 per cent. for the half-year was declared, out of an available balance of £34,827.

THE CONFEDERATE COTTON LOAN.

The Confederate Cotton Loan has been very firm throughout the past week, but transactions have been only on a limited scale. We close to-day, buyers, at 1 per cent. discount, but no sellers. The public are waiting for further news from America, and if favourable to the South, as nobody doubts it will be, we may see a considerable rise in the loan. The closing quotation is 1 dis. to par.

THE COURSE OF THE PRODUCE MARKETS.

In American produce transactions continue restricted, no deviation being made from the cautious line of policy hitherto observed. The great reaction in prices, that would follow any sudden termination of the war renders the merest possibility of it sufficient on the one hand to keep purchasers rigidly in check, whilst on the other hand, any anxiety to sell is as effectively prevented by the utter improbability of such an occurrence. The American advices from time to time have, therefore, but little effect in these markets, although consulted with undiminished interest. The proceedings of the Confederates in Pennsylvania have induced holders of Petroleum to enhance their terms, 2s. 2d. to 3s. 3d. per gallon for refined, and £18 per ton for crude being the present London rates for parcels on the spot, at which, however, sales progress slowly. For future delivery there is more inquiry; business has been done in refined for the last four months at 2s. 4d., and at the close 2s. 6d. was asked. American spirits of turpentine continue in some request for shipment to the United States, and the small quantity here is held for 98s. to 100s.; whilst French, owing to increased supplies, have further declined to 87 per cwt. American rosin is firm at 26s. 6d. to 28s. 6d. for common to medium, but the trade buy only for immediate requirements. Barrel flour has given way another 6d. from rather large arrival upon a very dull market, and the fine weather renders a further decline by no means improbable. Nearly all kinds of cured provisions are steady in price. American cheese is dearer; 46s. to 48s. being the current rates, with very light stocks; bacon at 24s. to 28s. per cwt., hangs on hand; and lard at 36s. to 38s., moves off slowly. The cotton market has not undergone any quotable change since our last report, but American descriptions now comprise only a very small proportion of the moderate daily sales. The tobacco trade generally is quiet; for small selected lots of most growths, rates are very firm, whilst large parcels can be moved only by some concession in terms. Stocks of Cavendish, notwithstanding some important transactions, are still increasing. American oil peppermint remains at 16s. An improved continental demand for Peruvian and other barks has given an upward tendency to prices. Sales of crown and yellow have been made at 1s. 8d. to 2s. per lb., being 3d. advance. Gums, suitable for the American trade, still graduate upwards in value; red Arabic makes 30s. to 40s.; and good "sorts" 60s. to 65s. per cwt. Gedda at 25s. to 27s. is steady. Anime is purchased sparingly, but maintains its value. Tartars are all very flat; cream offers at 110s.; gray at 92s. 6d. to 95s.; and brown at 85s. per cwt. Argols also participate in the prevailing dullness, and are generally lower. Cape can hardly be quoted over 90s. to 95s.; and white Bologna 85s. to 90s.; whilst common red Oporto is quoted as low as 40s. per cwt. The metal market throughout is very firm. Scotch iron brings 58s. to 58s. 6d.; tin is purchased less freely, but is firmly held; spelter with a marked extension of demand, has risen 2s. 6d. to 5s. per ton; the closing price to-day being £17 17s. 6d. to £18.

COTTON AND DRY GOODS MARKET.

LIVERPOOL, Wednesday, July 8.

At the date of our last report the market was very quiet, and prices barely steady.

On Thursday and Friday the demand was extremely languid, and though holders generally adhered to previous prices, buyers in some cases obtained a slight concession, sales 4,000 and 5,000 bales. On Saturday, upon receipt of the Africa's news, a more cheerful feeling prevailed, and 5,000 bales were sold at full prices. This improved tone was maintained on Monday, and with a large attendance of the trade 7,000 bales were sold, at rather higher rates for longstaples and good Sarats. Yesterday and to-day, with a healthy feeling in the market, and sales of 5,000 and 6,000 bales, prices are quite steady. We quote Middling Orleans, 22d., Middling Bowdels, 20  $\frac{1}{2}$ d., Fair Egyptian, 21d., Fair Dhollerah and Omrawtee, 18d., Fair Sawginned Dharwar 18  $\frac{1}{2}$ d., and the best Inglegthaut 19  $\frac{1}{2}$ d.

In the Eastern markets the decline in goods and yarns appears at length to have been arrested, and as news had been received of the heavy shipments from this side, some improvement in prices was anticipated. The Brazilian markets were also showing more signs of life, and a scarcity of goods was at length apparent.

The Confederates steadily advance into Northern territory, but their movements are still wrapped in mystery, and their ultimate designs concealed. On the Mississippi they increase in strength, and have, at Port Hudson, repulsed Banks with heavy loss, so that the prospects of a supply of cotton through the opening of the Mississippi are as remote as ever.

MANCHESTER, Tuesday, July 7.

Since our last report there has been a much more cheerful feeling evinced on the part of holders than for some time past, although there has been a very small amount of actual business in either yarns or goods. The telegraphic advices from Calcutta and Bombay are of a more satisfactory character than was expected by our India merchants for a month or so to come; and attempts have been made to buy both yarn and cloth suitable to those markets, at prices which might have been accepted in some instances a week before, but would not tempt holders now.

Our market, altogether, is quiet just at present, but there is a feeling prevailing to the effect that we shall see a better state of things shortly, as advices from nearly all parts of the world report small stocks of piece goods.

Among the Contents of THE INDEX of July 2, are—

- LIST OF KILLED AND WOUNDED AT THE BATTLES OF CHANCELLORSVILLE.
- THE ENGLISH PRESS ON RECOGNITION.
- CORRESPONDENCE FROM CHARLESTON, NEW ORLEANS, NASSAU, AND PARIS.
- THE DEBATE OF TUESDAY.
- THE ADVANCE OF THE CONFEDERATES.
- BRITISH SECURITY AND YANKEE IMPUNITY.
- THE STRATEGY OF THE WAR.
- THE MAGAZINES FOR JULY.
- THE OFFICIAL ORDER FOR THE DISMISSAL OF THE BRITISH CONSUL AT RICHMOND.
- AFFAIRS COMMERCIAL AND MONETARY.

SHIRTS.—International Exhibition. Class 27 C. No. 4572. Prize Medal and honourable mentions 1851 and 1862. Shirts, Collars, Flannels, and every description of underclothing manufactured on the premises.

J. BRIE AND CO.,
43, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.
The only Shirtmakers admitted as Exhibitors at the International Exhibition of 1862.

VALUES OF GOLD.—WATERSTON and BROGDEN, for the information of the public and their numerous patrons beg to make the following announcement regarding the VALUE OF GOLD, feeling persuaded that the interests of the fair trader and public will be alike protected by the wide circulation of knowledge on the subject. Gold being divided into 24 parts or carats, it follows that gold of

Per oz.	Per oz.
24 carats fine is worth.....£4 4 11	13 carats.....£2 6 0
23 ditto.....4 1 5	12 ditto.....2 2 5 $\frac{1}{2}$
22 ditto (British standard).....3 17 10 $\frac{1}{2}$	11 ditto.....1 18 11
21 carats.....3 14 4	10 ditto.....1 15 4 $\frac{1}{2}$
20 ditto.....3 10 9 $\frac{1}{2}$	9 ditto.....1 11 10
19 ditto.....3 7 3	8 ditto.....1 8 24
18 ditto.....3 3 8 $\frac{1}{2}$	7 ditto.....1 4 9
17 ditto.....3 0 2	6 ditto.....1 1 24
16 ditto.....2 16 7 $\frac{1}{2}$	5 ditto.....0 17 8
15 ditto.....2 13 1	4 ditto.....0 14 2
14 ditto.....2 9 6 $\frac{1}{2}$	3 ditto.....0 10 7 $\frac{1}{2}$
	2 ditto.....0 7 1
	1 ditto.....0 3 6 $\frac{1}{2}$

Manufactory, 16, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London, W.C.
N.B.—Assays made of Chains and Jewellery for 1s. each.
NOTICE.—This Establishment is closed at six o'clock in the evening, and on Saturdays at one o'clock.

TWO PRIZE MEDALS awarded "For General Excellence" in DRESSING CASES, BAGS, DESPATCH BOXES, &c. Gentlemen's Travelling Bags, Useful Size, 14s. 6d.; Full Size, 18s. 6d.; Large Size, 21s. Courier Bags, with Shoulder Strap, from 14s. 6d. Morocco Ladies' Bags, 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 14s. 6d., 16s. 6d., and 21s. Tourists' Writing Cases, 8s. 6d., 10s. 6d. to 21s. Finest Cutlery in Razors, Scissors, Needles, &c. JENNER and KEMPSTUB, Manufacturers to the Royal Family, 33, St. James's-street, and 65, Jermyn-street.

A. G. MILWAINE, AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, Tobacco, Cotton, Grain, and other produce, PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA.

MCDOWELL, WITHERS, AND CO., MOBILE ALABAMA, U.S.A. Commission Merchants.

GEORGE CHAMBERS, & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants, NASSAU, N.P. BAHAMAS.

J. PFEIFFER & MULLER,
Commission Merchants, 52, Rue du Chateau d'Eau, PARIS.

SAMUEL SMITH,
COTTON BROKER, 11, Manchester Buildings, LIVERPOOL.

HENRY ADDERLEY & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants, NASSAU, N.P. BAHAMAS.

FRANCIS PRESTON,
ENGINEER AND CONTRACTOR TO HER MAJESTY'S WAR DEPARTMENT, 35, Loveday Street, BIRMINGHAM.
And Ancients Bridge Works, MANCHESTER.
Established 1816.

J. H. ASHERIDGE & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants, NEW ORLEANS.
Office—56, Brown's-buildings, Liverpool.
Agents—Liverpool and New Orleans Mail Steam Navigation Company.

BEACH & ROOT,
Commission Merchants, CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA and ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

BEACH, ROOT, & CO.,
APSELY BUILDINGS, OLD HALL STREET, LIVERPOOL.

S. ISAAC, CAMPBELL, & Co.
CONTRACTORS & MERCHANTS, 71, Jermyn-street, LONDON.
Sherbro: West Coast of Africa.
Represented by W. B. HART, Nassau, New Providence.

WIGGINS, TEAPE, & Co.,
WHOLESALE AND EXPORT STATIONERS, 10, ALDGATE, LONDON.

Special Papers suited to Foreign Markets.

ROWLAND & BROTHERS,
Commission Merchants, NORFOLK, VIRGINIA.

JOHN FRASER & CO.,
CHARLESTON, South Carolina.
FRASER, TRENHOLM, & CO., Liverpool, Commission Merchants.

SEARING AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, MOBILE AND NEW ORLEANS, C.S.A.

Represented by R. G. BEESLEY, Cotton Broker, No. 2, Byron's-court, Royal-exchange, Manchester.

J. E. HERTZ,
(Of the late Firm of MORDECAI and CO.), Commission Merchant, CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA.

References to M. C. MORDECAI, Esq. Charleston, South Carolina. Messrs. COHEN and HERTZ, Savannah, Georgia.

LAMB, BALL, & CO.,
Ship and General Commission Agents, ST. THOMAS, WEST INDIES.

WEBER BROTHERS,
Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH, GEORGIA, C.S.A.

FRANCIS FORD, MANCHESTER,
Manufacturer of Three and Six Cord Spool Thread, Cotton Balls, Knitting and Embroidering Cottons, &c. Imported by F. RIMAILHO and NEYREY, New Orleans, and GEORGE CHAMBERS and CO., Nassau, N.P.

R. D. RUSDEN, MANCHESTER,
ENGLAND, American Drills of all kinds, Denims, Stripes, Shirtings, and all sorts of Manchester Goods.

ANDREW LOW AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

HAMILTON AND GRAHAM,
Importers, Wholesale Dealers in Dry Goods, &c., PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA.

H. LEVY AND SON,
Commission Merchants, MOBILE.

GARLAND GOODE, MOBILE,
Cotton Factor and Commission Merchant.

BOYKIN AND McRAE, Cotton
Factors and Commission Merchants, MOBILE, ALABAMA, C.S.A.

J. W. ANDERSON AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

JAMES CHAPMAN,
Commission Merchant, CHARLESTON.

N. A. HARDEE AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

R. N. GOUDINE AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, Charleston.

DUNLOP, MONCURE, & CO.,
General Commission Merchants, RICHMOND.

WARWICK AND BARKSDALE,
GALLIGO FLOUR MILLS. This immense establishment of capacity to manufacture 1000 barrels of Flour per day, purely for south American Market. RICHMOND.

MILLER AND BATRE, Exchange
Brokers, MOBILE, ALABAMA, C.S.A.

R. AND D. G. MILLS, Cotton
Factors and Commission Merchants, GALVESTON, TEXAS, C.S.A.

The Second Half-Yearly Volume OF THE INDEX, Is Now Ready, Price £1 1s.

Subscriptions and Advertisements to be sent, and Post-office Orders made payable to J. B. HOPKINS, 13, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C.

GENERAL THOMAS J. (STONEWALL) JACKSON.

Two Continents, both friend and foe, combine to mourn the premature death of General JACKSON, hero and Christian. Two years have been sufficient to create a fame which has won the kindly respect of enemies and the admiration of the Old World, which twenty-four months since was ignorant of his existence.

It has been suggested that some general recognition from Great Britain of the worth of such a man, by name, by race, and by character related to us, although the citizen of another land, would be a graceful token of friendly feeling from the old country to our kinsmen across the Atlantic.

The eminent sculptor, J. H. FOLEY, Esq., R.A., has undertaken to execute a marble Statue, heroic size, of the General for £1,000, while £500 may be required for pedestal, inscription, and other extras. Accordingly, for £1,500 a complete Statue of "Stonewall" JACKSON, by one of our most distinguished sculptors, may be prepared for transmission to his native country when the unhappy war shall have ceased. Towards raising this sum, the Subscriptions of our countrymen and countrywomen are earnestly solicited. Central and Local Committees, with auxiliary Ladies' Committees, are being formed to collect the necessary funds.

The undersigned will gladly receive Subscriptions until the final arrangements are made, and an account has been opened for "General JACKSON'S Statue," at Messrs. COUTTS and Co.'s, Strand, London, W.C.

N.B.—It is not at all intended that Subscriptions to the Statue should imply any opinion on the merits of the American struggle. They will be taken solely and simply as a recognition of the rare personal merit of General Jackson.

COMMITTEE.

LORD CAMPBELL.
LORD EUSTACE CECIL.
EARL OF DONOUGHMORE.
HON. ERNEST DUNCOMBE, M.P.
SIR EARDLEY EARDLEY, BART.
SIR JAMES FERGUSSON, BART., M.P.

HON. C. FITZWILLIAM, M.P.
J. S. GILLIAT, Esq.
W. H. GREGORY, Esq., M.P.
COL. GREVILLE, M.P.
A. J. B. BERESFORD HOPE, Esq.
SIR E. KERRISON, BART., M.P.

J. LAIRD, Esq., M.P.
SIR COUTTS LINDSAY, BART.
W. S. LINDSAY, Esq., M.P.
G. PEACOCKE, Esq., M.P.
G. E. SEYMOUR, Esq.
J. SPENCE, Esq.

A. J. B. BERESFORD HOPE, Esq., 1, CONNAUGHT PLACE,
HON. Treasurer,
W. H. GREGORY, Esq., M.P., 19, GROSVENOR STREET WEST.
HON. Secretary.

MANCHESTER SOUTHERN CLUB.—Gentlemen desirous of Enrolling themselves as members of the above Club can obtain their cards on application at the office, 71A, Market-street, from nine to six daily, or by letter directed as above.—By order of the Committee, W. E. STUTTEE, Hon. Sec.

JAMES J. BENNETT & WAKE,
Steam-Ship Insurance and General Commission Agents,
77, Cornhill, London,
and JAMES J. BENNETT,
Matamoras.

NEW LINE OF STEAM PACKETS
BETWEEN
LIVERPOOL, ST. THOMAS, LA GUAYRA,
PTO. CABELLO, CURACAO,
SANTA MARTHA, CARTHAGENA TO COLON,
RETURNING FROM THAT PORT BY
KINGSTON (JAMAICA), PORT-AU-PRINCE,
CAPE HAITIEN TO LIVERPOOL.

The Liverpool, Western and Spanish-American Steam Packet Company

WILL commence running powerful A 1 Screw Steamboats from this port on the 20th June next, to be at Colon in time to take the Goods and Passengers brought to Panama by the Steamers from the North and South Pacific, and to Colon, about the 21st July, continuing the same dates monthly. The Steamboats are:—

The CHRISTOPHOL COLON, 1,572 tons, W. Baker, Commander, to sail from Liverpool, 20th June
The SAINT THOMAS, 1,210 tons, W. Gilberry, Commander, 29th July
The BOLIVAR, 1,239 tons, W. W. Kiddler, 20th Aug.
The HUMBOLDT (building), 1,400 tons

Goods and Passengers will be taken, if required, at through rates from the Continent, via Liverpool, over the Panama Railway to Ports in the Pacific, and also back from those Ports by same route.

The CHRISTOPHOL COLON has very spacious and well-ventilated berths and saloon, which will afford every comfort to Passengers. The Rates for First and Second-class Passage will be moderate.

IMRIE & TOMLINSON,
ALEXANDER DURANTY & Co.
Liverpool, May 1, 1863.

WEST INDIES.—LIVERPOOL,
WEST INDIAN AND CENTRAL AMERICAN STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.

For SAINT THOMAS, PORT-AU-PRINCE (HAYTI), KINGSTON (JAMAICA), SANTA MARTHA, CARTHAGENA, AND COLON OR ASPINWALL.

Taking Goods at through rates for Panama and Ports in the North and South Pacific (in connection with the Panama Railroad, the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company).

The following line now A 1 full powered Steamers will sail from LIVERPOOL on the 21st of each month, receiving goods up to the 19th of each month.

DARIEN .. .. 1,172 tons.
VENEZUELAN .. .. 1,000 "
GRANADIAN .. .. 1,100 "
MEXICAN (now building), 1,100 "

In consequence of the VENEZUELAN not being quite completed, the first-class Screw-steamer SHATESBURY, Captain VICKERMAN, will be despatched for the above Ports on the 21st May, taking goods until the 19th May.

Goods taken at through freights from the Continent.

For rates of freights or passage, having superior accommodation for passengers, apply to J. M. CURRIE, Paris and Havre; CLAYTON and HENNING, Hamburg; LATITE and VANDERBILT, Bordeaux; W. D. ROBERTS and Co., Glasgow; or to LEOH, HARRISON, & FORWOOD, Agents, Liverpool.

THE PATENT FILE MACHINE,
AND FILE MANUFACTURING COMPANY, (LIMITED) makers of every description of Steel and Files suitable for Engineers, Machinists, Agricultural Implement Makers, and for the general and export trade. Works.—Ashton Old-road, Manchester.

AMERICAN WINES AND SPIRITS, &c.

W. R. S. MARKWELL,

WINE MERCHANT TO HER MAJESTY AND THE IMPERIAL COURTS,

35, 40, & 45, ALBEMARLE STREET,

AND

4, STAFFORD STREET, PICCADILLY, LONDON, W.

Monagahela, Bourbon, and Old Dominion Whiskies; Peach Brandy; Staughton, Sickles, and other Bitters; Fruit Spirits; Sparkling and dry Catawba; Californian Champagne; all kinds of Continental Wines, including the original importations from Hungary.

The Stock of Wines, Spirits, and Liqueurs are of the oldest, most extensive, and best selected in England.

TERMS, CASH!

ACCOUNT BOOKS, &c.,

Of all Rubrics, ready in Stock, or made to any Pattern on the Premises.

LITHOGRAPHIC AND COPPER-PLATE.—Circulars printed on the Shortest Notice; all kinds of Copper-Plate Printing with economy and despatch.

CARD-PLATES.—Engraved in various styles with despatch. 2s. each.

LETTER-PRESS.—Letter-Press work of every description: Circulars, Catalogues, Share-Plates, &c.

NOTE-PAPER.—Embossed die, Plain, and Colours, with Crest and Initials, and Printed Address, without charging for Dies or Plates.

All Articles being prepared on the Premises can be ensured with despatch and economy at Wholesale and Shipping Prices.

F. ARNOLD, MANUFACTURING STATIONER, ETC., 86, FLEET STREET, E.C.
(CORNER OF ST. BRIDE'S AVENUE.)

VINS SUPERIEURS DE CHAMPAGNE.

DINET-PEUVREL ET FILS,

PROPRIETAIRES ET NEGOCIANTS,

A AVIZE, MARNE,

EXECUTE ORDERS FOR ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

Please send References with Order.

PARIS EXHIBITION, 1855.

LA GRANDE MEDAILLE D'HONNEUR

WAS AWARDED TO

THOMAS DE LA RUE & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

PATENT PLAYING CARDS, PATENT METALLIC BOOKS; WITH

HARD ELECTRO-GILT PENCILS WHICH NEVER THICKEN AT THE POINT.

INDIA INLAND NOTE OR CHIT PAPERS, for Half Anna Postage Rate.

WATER-LINED OVERLAND NOTE PAPERS, in great variety.

MACHINE-FOLDED ENVELOPES. PATENT METAL SLATES.

POCKET TOURISTS' CASES.—Size, 5½ in. by 3½ in. by 1½ in. with every requisite for Correspondence.

ALLIANCE DESPATCH DESKS.—The most perfect Despatch Desk yet made.

DE LA RUE & CO.'S INDELIBLE DIARIES.—Published annually for exportation in August.

WALLETS, ALBUMS, SCRAP BOOKS, &c., &c.

The above can be obtained through any Stationer or Merchant.

REID AND STEWART,

Commission Merchants,

SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

Represented by

ANDREW STEWART, 1, RUMFORD-PLACE, LIVERPOOL.

C. W. WHITE,

Ship and General Commission Agent,

ST. THOMAS, WEST INDIES.

HARPER AND CAUGHEY,

Commission Merchants,

SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

Represented by

J. and A. CAUGHEY, Tempest Chambers, Liverpool.

H. O. BREWER & CO.,

MOBILE, ALABAMA,

General Commission and Shipping Merchants.

MRS. KEMBLE'S AMERICAN JOURNAL.

Just published, in 1 vol. post 8vo. price 10s. 6d.

JOURNAL OF A RESIDENCE

IN A

GEORGIAN PLANTATION

IN 1838 AND 1839.

By FRANCES ANNE KEMBLE.

"If Mrs. Kemble had been wise in her generation she would have written a pleasing account of her Georgian life, dwelt fondly on the kindness, grace, chivalry of the Southern planters, and expatiated on the good humour and affectionate disposition of their sable dependents. Her book would have been welcomed as an independent testimony to the truth of the popular faith, and would have received the applause due to those who speak pleasant things. The authoress, however, has preferred truth to fiction, and has written the most outspoken, damning record against slavery that we have read for many years past. The book should be read by every one who believes in Southern chivalry."—Reader.

LONDON: LONGMAN, GREEN, and Co., Paternoster-row.

Dedicated to H. R. H. the DUKE of CAMBRIDGE. Now Ready, with Maps, post 8vo. price 6s.

A MILITARY VIEW

OF THE

RECENT CAMPAIGNS

IN

VIRGINIA AND MARYLAND.

By Captain C. C. CHESNEY, R.E.

Professor of Military History, Sandhurst College. Smith, Elder, and Co., 63, Cornhill.

ADDRESS TO CHRISTIANS
THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

By the

CLERGY of the CONFEDERATE STATES of AMERICA
London: James Nisbet and Co., 21, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

Price 6s., Quarterly (Annual Subscription, prepaid, 21s.), post-free.

THE HOME AND FOREIGN

REVIEW. No. V. (July, 1863).

CONTENTS:

1. BELLIGERENT RIGHTS AT SEA.
2. AUSTRIA AND GERMANY.
3. ALBANIA.
4. IRON-CLAD SHIPS.
5. EPIGRAMS.
6. ORIENTALISM AND EARLY CHRISTIANITY.
7. ULTRAMONTANISM.
8. CONTEMPORARY LITERATURE.
9. CURRENT EVENTS.

Williams and Norgate, London and Edinburgh.

18mo., cloth, extra gilt edges, price 1s.

BEN RHYDDING, THE ASCLE-
PION OF ENGLAND: its Beauties, its Ways, and its Water Cure. By the Rev. R. W. THOMSON. With Map of the Railway Routes to Ben Rhydding. Third Edition.
To be had, free by post for 13 stamps, of SHUTTLEWORTH, Bookseller, Ilkley.

STONEWALL JACKSON, PRESIDENT JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Generals Lee, Johnston, and Beauregard.

Authentic Portraits, painted from life by B. F. Reinhardt, Esq. On view at REVELL'S ART GALLERY, 3, Leadenhall-street, London, E.C. Admission by address card.

Printed for the Proprietors by HENRY FLORENCE JACKSON, of 11, Crane-court, Fleet-street in the Parish of St. Dunstan, in the City of London; and published by him at THE INDEX OFFICE, 13, Boulevard-street, Fleet-street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London.—Thursday, July 9th, 1863.

THE INDEX

A WEEKLY JOURNAL OF POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND NEWS.

VOL. III—No. 64.]

LONDON—THURSDAY EVENING, JULY 16, 1863.

[PRICE 6D.

CONTENTS.

NOTES ON EVENTS OF THE WEEK.
ENGLAND AND SOUTHERN STATESMANSHIP.
THE BATTLES IN PENNSYLVANIA.
THE DISCHARGED ORDER.
BRITISH INTERESTS IN SECESSION.
THE VETERAN OF SOCIETY.
LETTERS FROM RICHMOND AND NEW ORLEANS.
PARIS TOPICS.
THE WINCHESTER CAPTURE.

NOTES ON EVENTS OF THE WEEK.

AMERICA.

AGAIN we have to record a series of battles; but whether the conflict was over when the mail left, is more than doubtful. We have only Northern accounts, and those accounts are signally, exceptionally confused. President Lincoln, in the very midst of the contest, has published a congratulatory order, and not for the first time has sung a song of triumph before the issue is decided. We may, however, conclude from the accounts before us, that the battles fought on the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd inst. were hotly contested, and resulted in great loss, perhaps, on both sides, but certainly on the Federal side. General Meade says that it was one of the severest contests of the war; that he has suffered severely in killed and wounded, and he adds a list of one general killed and four wounded. The result of that battle, according to Federal and official accounts, was that the armies occupied their respective positions after the engagement, and it must be remembered that, in this instance, the Confederates were the invading force, and that, therefore, such a result is prima facie a Federal defeat. It will be observed that the Federals had concentrated all their available forces for this engagement, and that the Federal General French had abandoned the Maryland heights and destroyed all the fortifications; but except the unsupported assertion of General Meade, we have no reason for knowing that the main body of the Confederate army was in the battle; and, therefore, it is not only possible, but probable, that whilst President Lincoln was rejoicing in the supposed triumph of his forces, the Confederates had brought up fresh troops. In our leader column we have discussed, as far as the intelligence will permit, these engagements, and we must wait for the next mail for reliable details.

From Vicksburg and Port Hudson, the news per Bohemia is very favourable to the Confederates. Vicksburg is holding out, and General Johnstone, reinforced from General Bragg's army, which has taken up a position behind fortifications, is pressing on Grant's rear. The supplies of General Banks have been cut off by the Confederates occupying the position of Berwick Bay, opposite New Orleans.

The Federals have been beaten at Lafourche Crossing, and compelled to retire to New Orleans. The Confederates occupy the whole of the State of Louisiana, west of Lafourche Crossing, and north of the Opelousas railway.

The Confederates have also captured Brashear city, with 1,000 men, 20 pieces of artillery, and valuable stores, and have seized Pass Manchoc Bridge.

General Ewell is highly praised by the Southern press for his skill and conduct in the present campaign, and Stonewall Jackson's veterans are delighted with their new commander. The Richmond Sentinel, of June 20, says, "General Ewell's success will be counted as among the most brilliant of the war, and has already invested the successor of Jackson with much of his éclat."

The letter of our Richmond correspondent, found in another column, though backward in arrival and speaking of events already fully known and canvassed in England, will be found to contain many items of especial interest to those desirous of being candidly informed of the state of feeling existing in the Confederate capital. Our correspondent's anxiety for the safety of Vicksburg is natural in a warm-hearted patriot many hundreds of miles from the scene of conflict, but unnecessary for Grant and his army are now in the identical dilemma prepared for them long ago by the sagacity and foresight of General Joseph Johnstone. Instead of besieging, Grant is himself besieged; and Johnstone's seeming inactivity is far more destructive to the Federals at this season of the year, than any losses he might inflict upon them from a series of operations culminating in a relief of the city. When accused of inactivity before Richmond last year Johnstone quietly answered,—"I am fighting, sir, without firing a shot!—Is it nothing that I keep McClellan in yonder swamps, unable to move, and losing hundreds daily?" Such is the policy at present pursued at Vicksburg.

The current letter of our New Orleans correspondent contains various items of moment to those interested in the sanguinary conflicts which have lately taken place at Port Hudson and its immediate neighbourhood. Although from the pen of one actually living under the military despotism of Northern rulers in the "Crescent City," it speaks boldly and without fear, of things as they really are. His picture of the gallant Gardner commanding at Port Hudson, and of the unparalleled heroism of the garrison, are hopeful signs of the future now unfolding to Confederate forces in that distant and little known region. The approach of Magruder and his corps of Texans and Louisianians threatens Banks it would not be at all surprising if he should find his base of operations completely cut off.

The most interesting item of information received from the North, per Scotia, is the withdrawal of General Hooker from the chief command, and the appointment of General Meade in his stead. General Hooker was relieved, it appears, at his own request, and in his farewell order, states that "he parted from the army impressed with the belief that his usefulness as a commander was impaired." General Meade, the newly-appointed chief, has hitherto commanded the 5th Army Corps, and has accomplished so little of note that his name has seldom or ever been mentioned before, and is alike unknown to persons North or South. In assuming command, he modestly states that "he accepted the appointment, which was totally unexpected and unsolicited, with just diffidence; that he relieved an eminent and accomplished officer, and relied upon the troops to assist him in discharging his trust." It was rumoured that General Butler has been appointed Secretary of War, vice Stanton, and McClellan as Commander-in-Chief; but as these persons are strong democrats, and inimical to the Administration, no one credits the report.

Northern advices represent the state of things to be in the utmost confusion and alarm. Confederate forces have pushed forward through Pennsylvania to within three miles of Harrisburg, its State Capital, and have vigorously shelled the many intrenchments thrown up around it. A panic seems to have seized the Pennsylvanians. Thousands from the districts immediately threatened, have journeyed eastward with all their movables, while others remain quietly under the rule of their Confederate friends, and astonish the whole North by their apathy. In Philadelphia, "great numbers are leaving the city, and the wharves are crowded with property for shipment to places of greater safety. Bankers are sending their specie to New York." Defences are being thrown up around the city, and there seems to be a general stampede.

among the Quakers. To prevent Southerners crossing the Susquehanna, many valuable bridges have been destroyed—one of them having originally cost more than £250,000. General Ewell has levied taxes upon the inhabitants of York to the amount of $150,000, $30,000 of which was immediately paid.

New York city is also in a state of alarm. Much concern is manifested on account of its defenceless condition by land and water. Large appropriations have been made to remedy the evil, and citizens are urged to rally to its defence. The Governor of New Jersey has recalled home the troops already sent to Harrisburg, and it is probable that George Seymour, of New York, will act similarly. Such is the need of men for defence, that the Northern Government has issued an order offering $400 bounty and one month's pay ($13) in advance for all volunteers between the ages of 18 and 45, whose term of service has expired or is about to expire, who will patriotically re-enlist for three years or the war." From all appearances none are inclined to do so.

While General Lee and his army of invasion was concentrating in Pennsylvania for important movements, the Northern Government sent forth an expeditionary force to the Yorktown Peninsula. General Dix commands this corps, but at latest advices he had resolved to abandon the peninsula and join his force to that of Meade.

It is said that great excitement prevails throughout Kentucky, Ohio, and Indiana, from the fact that Generals Humphrey, Marshall, and Pegram, with 15,000 veteran troops, are advancing through Cumberland Gap, from Tennessee, and are invading the first-named State. With every available man drawn from them for other quarters, the people of Ohio and Indiana are in just alarm, for from the well-known character of the Confederate commanders, they expect little else than the invasion of their States, with its many accompanying evils. Cincinnati, Pittsburg, New Albany, and Evansport, on the Ohio River, are being put into a state of defence by municipal authorities.

Late telegrams inform us of a brilliant feat performed by Lieut. Reed and his Confederate privateers. Having captured the merchantman Tacony, they committed sad havoc among the mercantile marine in eastern waters, and for a long time eluded detection and capture. The Tacony proving unserviceable, Lieut. Reed and crew transferred themselves to the schooner Archer (prize), and attempted something truly brilliant. Quietly proceeding to the harbour of Portland (Maine), and observing the Federal cutter Caleb Cushing to be improperly guarded, they boarded her during the night, overpowered the crew, and put to sea. This bold proceeding was soon discovered, and fleet-armed steamers immediately sent in pursuit. The Cushing was overtaken, but finding himself unable to contend against such a disparity of force, Lieut. Reed and crew fired the Federal cutter, and transferred themselves to the Archer again, and endeavoured to get far out to sea. They were shortly overtaken, however, and conveyed in great triumph to Portland, where the bold privateer is now in close confinement.

From General Joe Johnstone's main army, under Bragg, in the West we learn that, unable to entice the Confederates towards his fortified position on the Cumberland, General Rosecrans took the initiative and began his advance (24 June) towards the Confederates, who were camped on Duck River and at Shelbyville. Except skirmishing between the advanced posts, little transpired worthy of comment, as the Confederates were probably disinclined to offer or accept battle until they had enticed the Federal commander under their works at Chattanooga—a point more than a hundred miles southward. Such a march to the Federals at this season of the year must prove more disastrous than a general action.

It was reported that the wife of General Milroy had been captured, and the Southern journals discussed what ought to be done with her. Milroy has almost rivalled Butler in his savagery and his dishonesty. We are in a position to vouch for the truth of the statement contained in the following paragraph, that is to say, we know that General Milroy notified to a lady that she was to leave her house in two hours, as he required it for the use of his wife; and the house and the property, including the wearing apparel, were seized, and appropriated by Mrs. Milroy and her daughter. The Richmond Sentinel of the 20th of June, says:—

She took possession not only of a lady's house—who was driven out for her accommodation—but she stole the wearing apparel and the ornaments, and the household effects of all those whom her husband's tyranny placed in her power. Let the stolen goods be displayed, and the owners be invited to come forward and claim them; and, if Justice gets her due, our penitentiary may prepare for another inmate. In any event, it would be eminently proper to hold her and her daughter as general hostages for the proper treatment of our ladies whom fortune may place in the power of such brutes as Milroy, and such vixens as his wife.

We elsewhere publish a correspondence between Earl Russell and some Liverpool shipowners. We do this not from the intrinsic value thereof, for it has none; but many of the signers have had business in the South in times past, and may hereafter continue in the same trade, and it is well that the people of the Confederate States should know who are their friends and who are their foes.

ENGLAND.

In our last number we gave some account of the inauguration of the meeting of the National Rifle Association, at Wimbledon, and the events of the first two days of the affair. Even now the meeting is not concluded, and the contests, which have been pursued with the utmost vigour up to the present time, will not be concluded till next Saturday. The otherwise favourable character of the proceedings has been somewhat marred by the occurrence of accidents to the "markers." The authorities had allowed men from the Coldstream Regiment of Guards to fulfil that office, and, unfortunately, no less than three men were, more or less, wounded in one day. We have before explained that the targets used are principally on the Swiss plan, so that it is the business of the marker to indicate upon the face of the target with an iron disc the point where the bullet has struck. It seems that one marker imagined that he was sufficiently protected by the back and sides of his hut, and that it was unnecessary to retire before each shot behind the glass door which warded off the leaden splash that rebounds from the target. The other two men were probably injured from the premature firing. Eventually the military authorities declined to expose the troops to the risk, and the Volunteers, being equally determined not to impair the success of the meeting by giving up the adopted system, performed the office of markers for themselves, the members of the Council leading the way. However, as a fresh accident occurred, fresh contrivances have been used, calculated to avert similar misfortunes. On Wednesday, July 8th, the public schools of Eton, Harrow, Rugby, Marlborough, Winchester, and Cheltenham competed for Lord Ashburton's challenge shield, which was won by Eton, Rugby being second and Marlborough third. Eleven boys were champions for each school, and the shooting was at 200 and 500 yards. Earl Spencer's cup, in which one boy only was champion for his school, was carried off by the representative of Winchester. The shooting for this prize was at 500 yards. The firing for the Queen's Plate, so far as the shooting at the range of 200 yards was concerned, was completed on the same day. The competition for the twenty-one prizes given by the House of Lords, and also the several series of extra prizes commenced on that day, and continued in their various stages through the week. On Thursday evening a meeting was held round the camp fire, at which not only volunteers, but also the wives of the more distinguished officers were present. Part of the time was consumed in amusement, and the remainder in the debates of what may be called the Rifle Parliament. The general administration of the camp, the commissariat department, and the question of the discipline of marking came in turn under discussion. Lord Elcho presided, and entered fully into the merits of the various suggestions offered, while the particular question of the targets and the arrangements at the firing points were explained by Captain Page. On Monday, the 14th of July, the match between the members of the House of Lords and of the House of Commons was shot off. The Prince and Princess of Wales were present to view the contest. The Lords were favourites in consideration of their last year's victory. However, the Commons had gone into training for the event, while the Lords relied on their ascertained merits. The result was an easy victory for the Lower House. Eleven champions appeared on either side. The best scores made for the Lords were those of Earl Ducie and the Marquis of Abercorn, and for the Commons those of Viscount Bury and the Hon. W. Duncombe. On the same day Cambridge University defeated Oxford, the Alexandra prize was decided, and numerous other matches advanced in their several stages. On Tuesday the Queen's prize was decided in favour of Sergeant Roberts, of the 12th Shropshire, a true English Yeoman. On the evening of that day a camp fire meeting was held, at which little business and much fun, revel, songs, and music were satisfactorily accomplished.

The running-man, with one side of him in a grey, and the other in a red tunic, received the greater portion of his wounds on the grey colour. This seems to point to the fact that the uniform of the British army is not so good a mark for the rifle as that of the Confederate or the Russian armies; but it is right to remark that at Wimbledon the background is green or dark, and, perhaps, the result would be different if the scarlet were backed merely by the sky line; moreover, the red man runs from right to left, and the grey from left to right.

In the Schedule to the Fortifications Bill, the second reading of which was carried last Thursday evening by a majority of seventy-one in a house of 193 members, the total estimated cost of the works is set down at £6,920,000, of which amount the sum of £3,200,000 has already been voted, and £2,041,449 spent. The vote taken on Thursday was for £650,000, leaving the sum of £3,070,000 to be voted in succeeding years. The proposed works are being, or are to be constructed at Portsmouth, and at the Isle of Wight, at Plymouth, Pembroke, Portland, Gravesend, Medway, and Sheerness, Chatham, Dover, and Cork, with the doubtful addition of a central arsenal. The most important works, however, are those at Spithead and the Needles for the defence of Portsmouth. At the present time Portsmouth is amply secured on the land side, but from the sea it lies completely at the mercy of the first fleet of iron-clads that chooses to attack it. It is now proposed to convert our great arsenal into a Cherbourg, and not to trust entirely to the power of the English Fleet for protection. In the channel at Spithead, leading up to Portsmouth, two sea forts will be built, one on the Horse-Sand, and the other on No-Mans-land, and will occupy, with respect to each other and to Portsmouth, much the same positions in which Forts Moultrie and Sumter are placed in regard to each other and to Charleston. The distance between the forts will be 2,000 yards, and their distance from Portsmouth 7,500 yards. Each fort will mount ninety guns of the heaviest kind. As to the Needles, a different plan is to be adopted. The defences there will consist of a series of batteries scattered along the Needles shore, placed at high elevations at points where the channel is narrowest, and the windings too intricate to admit of an advancing fleet proceeding, except slowly and with caution. The entire range on both sides of the Needles passage will amount to about 250 guns, of which 100 guns will be able to concentrate their fire on a vessel in any part of the channel. The passage at the Needles as well as that at Spithead would, of course, in case of need, be rendered doubly secure by the usual appliances of chain-booms, and nets, and floating batteries. The Spithead channel will also receive the additional strength of a second line of forts and batteries, the principal of which will be a circular fort on Stourbridge Sand, situated at a distance of 4,500 yards from the outer forts; and mortar batteries will be erected, calculated to shell vessels lying in the open water mid-way between the two lines of defence. When these works are completed, Portsmouth will not suffer by comparison with either Cherbourg or Charleston.

A Royal and State review on a magnificent scale took place on Tuesday at Aldershot. The Prince and Princess of Wales were present, accompanied by the Commander-in-Chief. The number of troops on the ground was 16,000, consisting of six regiments of cavalry, with three troops (18 guns) of horse artillery; 12 battalions of infantry, with 4 field batteries (24 guns), engineers, military train and ambulance corps. General Pennefather was in command. The formal inspection was followed by a sham fight, in which the troops holding position on heights which may be described as a miniature Fredericksburg, resisted, charged, and overthrew an army advancing from London. The heat was terrific, and the dust such as only Aldershot can produce.

Last Saturday gave the public a delightful opportunity of comprehending the singular urbanity, forgetfulness of self, and consideration for others which has throughout life characterised the Earl Russell. The Prince of Wales had gone down to Caterham, to lay the foundation-stone of certain schools for the orphan children of members of the warehousemen and clerks' charity. Earl Russell, as President thereof, opened the proceedings by reading an address in so pleasing a manner that not a word of it was audible, even to persons in his Lordship's immediate vicinity. To this the Prince made answer, and duly laid the first stone; after which all the ladies who had made, by dint of the most extraordinary exertions, a collection on behalf of the charity, amounting to about £4,000, advanced in procession in the most exquisite of toilettes, themselves wreathed in smiles, to deposit the purses of £5 and upwards, in which the collected sums had been placed for the purpose. All the return that these kind creatures expected for their toil and trouble was a smile from their pleasant Prince, and that gained, each would have felt duly and amply rewarded. The Prince, too, would doubtless have taken as much pleasure in contemplating the procession as in gazing into the profound and intellectual countenance of the noble Earl; yet that important personage, for some reason best known to himself, took it into his head to engage the Prince in conversation a little apart, so that his Royal Highness was quite unaware of the outpourings of gold or the courtesies of the fair file of ladies. Earl Russell's idea of good taste and good manners in public affairs has, however, long been appreciated.

Immediately after the vote in the House of Commons negating the proposal to purchase the building used for the Exhibition of 1862, the contractors commenced pulling down the whole structure. The work of demolition has, however, come to a full stop, as the Alexandra Company has opened negotiations for the purchase of nearly the whole pile. This company, with a capital of half-a-million, has purchased an estate of 400 acres on the slopes of Muswell-hill, above Highgate and Hornsey, on the north of the Metropolis. The building, when erected on the new site, and surrounded with beautiful gardens and all the appliances of art, will prove a formidable rival to the Crystal Palace at Sydenham. The estate at Muswell-hill is nearer London, and possesses even more magnificent views than the hills of Norwood.

From all parts of England, and also from Ireland, the reports of the state of the crops are most encouraging. Potatoes are excellent and free from disease; the prospects for barley and oats are good, and in both great improvement has latterly taken place. But the wheat harvest promises to be unique in bulk and yield. It did not suffer much in the spring droughts, and it has since recovered even its slight defects. It is probable that a crop will be obtained such as has not been seen in England since the Crimean War. The foreign producers will find their trade very considerably curtailed.

It appears from the returns, that, in the year ending Michaelmas last, out of the number of persons who passed through the prisons of England, 4,053 had been in prison ten times before. Of these 2,968 were women and but 1,085 men. Four years ago the number of such criminals was less by 1,000. Of the 33,364 females who passed through the county and borough prisons in the year, 15,268 were old offenders. Indeed the women seem far less susceptible of reformation than the men, and more liable to relapse into crime. 117 women were tried for burglary and housebreaking, and 55 for robberies from the person with violence.

The returns of the expenditure on National education, under the management of the Committee of Council, from 1839 to the end of 1862, have been published. The total sum is £6,710,863. Schools connected with the Church of England absorbed £4,039,333. The British and Foreign School Society, £587,279; the Wesleyan Schools, £308,113; the Roman Catholic Schools, £228,110; the Church of Scotland, £406,185; and the Scottish Free Church, £332,778.

The most delightful of all the cricket réunions of the season took place last week at Lord's cricket-ground with immense success. The great rival schools of Eton and Harrow joined in their annual contest for supremacy in that peculiarly English sport, and it may safely be affirmed that on no occasion has a finer display of skill been made by the schools, or a more remarkable proof been given of the vast interest excited among the noblest classes of England in everything that concerns those important institutions. Indeed, it is impossible to suppose that ten thousand persons of the highest rank in society would assemble to see a match the details of which were unintelligible to many of them, if the clue to their attendance were not to be discovered in the fact that each could claim a relationship, more or less close, a connection more or less interesting with those who are or have been members of one or other of the two schools. The match lasted for two days, but unfortunately even that time was too short to accomplish a solution of the problem of superiority. The Etonians enjoyed the luck of obtaining the first innings, and made 184 runs. Their adversaries obtained the formidable score of 268 runs, and advanced thereby to the position of decided favourites. However, this success served only to raise the courage of the Eton boys, who outdid all previous efforts by adding the number of 285 runs to the quantity gained in their first attempt. The unusual magnitude of the three scores left no time for the Harrow boys to prove whether they could obtain the 201 runs necessary to entitle them to the victory, the match being limited to two days; and the result consequently exists only in the hopes and imagination of the respective partisans. An enormous number of ladies were present in carriages and on foot. Bonnets, parasols, walking-sticks, driving-whips, bridles, and coats, bore evidence, by the decoration of dark or light blue ribbons, of the side to which the wearers or owners bore allegiance; and the excitement of the boys and men who were spectators, though naturally more demonstrative, seemed scarcely more intense than that of the fair portion of the community. A visitor who was a stranger to the whole affair might well have imagined that a most important national problem was being solved, and that all the gentlemen and ladies of the highest rank in the country had met at Lord's cricket-ground to witness the solution.

The Court of the Vice-Chancellor Stuart was the scene of a remarkable exhibition last week. Every one who has ever watched the career of that learned judge is as fully aware of his kindness of heart and his high principles of conduct, as of his impulsive and somewhat irritable temperament. In the course of the week a matter in which the Countess Della Seta was the plaintiff and Lord Vernon defendant, and which affected the interests of their children, had been heard by the Vice-Chancellor in private, and in spite of this precaution some particulars of the case had found their way into certain of the daily journals. There are cases in which the Court of Chancery has held that a private hearing is suitable, and this appeared to the Vice-Chancellor to be one. We are not prepared to discuss here whether on this point his decision was sound, but we certainly shall not, in imitation of some of our contemporaries, assume that we understand the practice of the Court better than a Vice-Chancellor. However that may be, the disclosure had a very startling and painful effect on the Vice-Chancellor; and when the case was referred to by the counsel on Saturday last, the judge gave way to an uncontrollable fit of splenetic abuse. He first called the press "vile and scurrilous," and appeared to cast an imputation on the learned Queen's Counsel who conducted the case, as though that individual had been concerned in the unauthorized publication. Thereupon that functionary insisted on an explanation, and the imputation was withdrawn; but this was merely a shifting of the charge on the solicitor, in whom the judge seems to have caught a decided Tartar, for he not only stated that the expression "base" ought not to be applied to any officer of the court, but even told the judge to his face that "he would not submit to such observations from the Vice-Chancellor, or from any judge in the kingdom." After this terrific rebuff, the Vice-Chancellor took refuge in vague and abstract denunciations of the press and its representatives, designating the whole concern as "contemptible," "even beneath contempt," and declaring that the publication was made either for a pecuniary purpose or a malevolent purpose—either to extort money from Lord Vernon or to give pain. We can easily understand that, after a judge has been careful to screen from the public eye what he honestly believes should be heard in secret (and what Sir John Stuart does he assuredly does from the most honourable motives), the knowledge that his precautions have been foiled by the astute machinations of the agents of the press, may cause considerable vexation; but we must regret that an English Court should be the scene of such a glaring mistake on the part of an English judge—a mistake rendered the more striking by the rarity of similar occurrences. Matters were rendered almost worse the next day, for on taking his seat the judge stated that he had received a letter, dated from Brooks' Club, addressed to him as "My dear Vice-Chancellor," purporting to be written by Lord Vernon, and containing a gross insult to the judge. However, the counsel and solicitor were enabled to state that the letter was a forgery, and thereupon the document was handed to them that steps might be taken against the possible author. The principal point in the suit was to obtain a decree to raise the lady's allowance from £400 to £700 a-year, and also to secure to her proper access to her children. The story involved simply amounted to this, that in the year 1842 an intimacy commenced between Lord Vernon and the Countess, which lasted for ten years, and resulted in the birth of four daughters. At the close of it Lord Vernon settled £1,000 a-year on the lady for life, with remainders of £200 a-year to each of the four children, and as to the balance with remainder to himself. Shortly afterwards the lady married the Count, from whom she subsequently separated. One of the children had died, and the three survivors were under the care of their mother. The children, a short time since, were unable to live with their mother on terms of happiness, and left her at Cairo. A suit was then instituted by Lord Vernon to make the young ladies wards of the Court, and pending the suit the allowance was withheld from the Countess until the Court should arrange a scheme for maintenance and education. The payment had only been withheld for two months, and the Countess now brought a cross-suit to obtain the arrears. There does not seem to be any reason to suppose that Lord Vernon in any way desired to avoid his liabilities under the settlement.

The palmy days in which our grandfathers could indulge in a third bottle, and then turn out to fight the Watch without the smallest shock to public opinion, seem to have faded entirely away. Not even on a Derby or Oaks night may gentlemen let off their superfluous Teutonic muscle and fighting instinct, without the painful sequel of a trial for riot and conspiracy to commit a breach of the peace, to the no small horror of their respected relatives, and with serious injury to their purses. Last week, Reginald Herbert, John Birkett, Joseph Edward Saville, Robert Shawcross, Charles McDougall, and Charles Mott, were placed at the Bar at the Middlesex Sessions to answer the charge of creating a riot, committing a breach of the peace, and assaulting the police at Cremorne Gardens, on the night of the race for the Oaks stakes at Epsom. There was no doubt about the riot, no doubt that doors had been broken in, glasses smashed, plants thrown about, women pushed about, men's hats knocked off, and no doubt that some policemen had been struck, and that all the policemen had drawn their staves and struck some persons in return. The question was, how far the defendants were implicated in the affair. All of them were persons of most respectable positions in life, two or three being gentlemen of fortune, and one an officer in the army. The evidence for the prosecution was furnished almost exclusively by the police, whose statements were suspiciously uniform, and their testimony was supplemented, though, perhaps, not strengthened, by that of a man named George Forest, who was not exactly a rioter, because he offered to fight, not the police, but "the white-choker division," who got his coat torn to pieces for his trouble, and seemed desirous to avenge the loss, and whose antecedents were that he had fought a battle with one Ward about a bet, on which occasion he had received the professional assistance of the renowned Tom Paddock, Jerry Noon, and Bob Travers. However, as in the face of the averment of such noted pugilists being his friends he swore that he had never been at any other prize-fight in his life, we must conclude that that was the only spot in his otherwise pure and exemplary career. His chief recommendations at present are, that he is a commercial traveller, and on the free list at Cremorne Gardens; and the proprietor, if he be wise, will not readily remove so valued a supporter from off that list. Mr. E. T. Smith, the lessee of the gardens, was also called, and both as a witness and also after the verdict, made certain reservations and recommendations to mercy, on behalf of the accused, in virtue of what he was pleased to call his position as a "public man." What is the precise meaning which Mr. Smith attaches to that stupendous expression, it may be difficult to define. We believe that the person in question was once in what is called "the public line;" we know him also as ex-lessee of Drury Lane and Her Majesty's Theatre; and we also are aware that he has for five years conducted Cremorne Gardens in such a manner, as his counsel somewhat hyperbolically said, as to render them a fit and proper place for all classes of society. But still, we shall not conscientiously concede to Mr. Smith the title he so loves and covets until he represents some metropolitan borough in the House of Commons, or in some equally superb style realizes our ideal of "a public man." The defence set up consisted in the statements of the friends and companions of the accused, who appeared to be unanimous in their opinions that the defendants were all of them "the quietest men about town," and on the particular occasion were harmless spectators, occasionally receiving violent blows from the staves of the police. The jury were evidently rather staggered by the conflict of evidence, for they remained locked up for two hours and a half, and then returned a verdict of "guilty of riot" against all the defendants, with an acquittal on the charge of conspiring to riot. Fines were inflicted by the Judge, varying from £50 to £10, and the parties were all bound over to keep the peace for twelve months. Of course, in all such cases the most guilty parties, as a rule, escape detection; and, perhaps, therefore, these persons are rather to be pitied on the score of their bad luck; but the general public will congratulate themselves on the probability of the trial diminishing the chances of a "row" at Cremorne for a considerable time, to the better security of their heads, and the smaller jeopardy of their reputation.

EUROPE.

We have now the text of the three notes which have been the subject of so much speculation and anxiety. The Foreign-offices of England, France, and Austria cannot, or will not, keep a secret. The substance of the despatches, and even the special character of each, was stated correctly enough a month ago. They are all three couched in moderate language; and even Earl Russell, although he cannot drop the schoolmaster, labours to be courteous and conciliatory. His lordship begins by disavowing any desire to continue a barren controversy or fix the precise meaning of the article of the Treaty of Vienna which deals with Poland; he is willing to seek with the "enlightened" Emperor, whose benevolent intentions he admires, for a practical solution of a difficult and most important problem. He then, a matter of course with him, lays down two leading principles on which any future government of Poland ought to rest—confidence in the Government on the part of the governed, and the supremacy of law over arbitrary will. This confidence and this supremacy are wanting in Poland. It will be no easy task to restore confidence. In present circumstances, it appears to her Majesty's Government that nothing less than the following outline of measures should be adopted as the basis of pacification:—

1. Complete and general amnesty.
2. National representation, with powers similar to those which are fixed by the charter of the 15th (27) November, 1815.
3. Poles to be named to public offices in such a manner as to form a distinct national administration having the confidence of the country.
4. Full and entire liberty of conscience; repeal of the restrictions imposed upon Catholic worship.
5. The Polish language recognised in the kingdom as the official language, and used as such in the administration of the law and in education.
6. The establishment of a regular and legal system of recruiting.

But how, asks his lordship, after referring to the allegations of atrocities made by each side against the other, can we hope to conduct to any good end a negotiation carried on between parties thus exasperated? The first thing to be done, in the opinion of her Majesty's Government, therefore, is, to establish a suspension of hostilities. This might be done in the name of humanity by a proclamation of the Emperor of Russia, without any derogation of his dignity. The Poles, of course, would not be entitled to the benefit of such an act, unless they themselves refrained from hostilities of every kind during the suspension. Tranquillity restored, the next thing is to consult the Powers, parties to the treaty, as to the best means of giving effect to the treaty. England proposes, therefore, the adoption of the six points as the bases of negotiations, a provisional suspension of arms to be proclaimed by the Emperor, and a conference of the eight Powers who signed the treaty of Vienna. Earl Russell makes no allusion to concert with the other Governments. He speaks for England alone; and so far as his note is concerned, there is no sign that these propositions had been agreed to between the three Powers. The French and Austrian notes, on the other hand, expressly refer to this concert. The French note, after presenting the six points as bases of negotiation agreed upon by the three Cabinets, observes that many of the propositions embraced in this programme already form part of the line of conduct which the Cabinet of St. Petersburg has traced out for itself; others hardly go beyond the advantages it has promised or allowed to be hoped—they are all but the most simple expression of the elementary laws of justice and equity, and contain nothing which is not in conformity with the stipulations of the treaties which bind the Russian Government with regard to Poland; and expresses the consequent confidence of the French Government that they will meet with no objection from Russia. M. Drouyn de Lhuys then refers to the sanguinary manner in which the struggle is carried on, and points out that the continuation of these calamities during the negotiations might irritate a debate which ought to remain calm if it is to be useful. A provisional pacification founded upon the maintenance of the military status quo, to be promulgated by the Emperor and observed by the Poles under their own responsibility, should therefore be provided for. The French Minister remarks that Russia has already suggested the form which the negotiations should take by recognising the right of the Powers which signed the treaty of Vienna to concern themselves with the question; and the Government of the Emperor is therefore ready to enter into a conference if Russia, as it hopes, accepts the bases proposed by the three Cabinets. The despatch, which is written with M. Drouyn de Lhuys's usual elegance, concludes with the hope that the resolution of the Emperor Alexander will be in harmony with the great interests which considerations at the same time legitimate and powerful have induced France to recommend to his enlightened solicitude; for this question withdrawn from the judgment of force, which would cut it once more, perhaps without deciding it, would enter from the present time into a friendly discussion; the only way to prepare a solution vainly sought up to the present day.

The Austrian despatch, after recommending the six points as the bases of negotiation—the one difference being that in the third, where England and France ask for a national representation with powers similar to those which are fixed by the charter of 1815, Austria asks for a national representation participating in the legislation of the country, and possessing efficacious means of control—urges, in almost the same words used by M. Drouyn de Lhuys, that some points of the programme have been already adopted by Russia, and that none go beyond the treaty stipulations in favour of Poland. Count Rechberg then, referring to the form of the negotiations, declares that Austria will have no objection to a conference, and expresses a hope that the wisdom of the Russian Government, and the conciliatory efforts of the Powers, may succeed in arresting a deplorable effusion of blood. He is glad to believe that the generous sentiments of the Emperor Alexander will powerfully aid in effecting this result, which, if it could be obtained, would much facilitate the task of the Cabinets in the conferences. Austria, it will be observed, does not propose a suspension of hostilities, probably because she does not believe it can be obtained, but she says it would be a very good thing if it could be secured.

The Russian reply left St. Petersburg on Tuesday, the 14th. It will probably be an acceptance of the six points as bases of negotiation, and of the conference; but it will reject the suspension of hostilities, which must prove abortive even if proclaimed. The Polish National Government, and the recognised organs of Polish nationality, protest against the points as completely inadequate to their wants, and denounce the armistice. Their views may be modified by the emphatic declaration of Earl Russell and Derby against war under any circumstances. The English Government has pledged itself not to fight for them, and its declaration will have a very pacific influence on the French Government.

The expedition into Volhynia proved a complete failure. Prepared at great sacrifices it has only damaged the Polish cause. It was intended to influence European public opinion, to induce a belief that Volhynia and Podolia are hostile to Russia. It has fixed upon the European mind what it had obstinately refused to believe before in spite of the clearest testimony, that in these provinces of old Poland the population prefers the Government of the Czar to the citizenship of a reconstituted Poland.

It was only by immense exertions on the part of the Galician nobility that this expedition was collected together, and concealed as well from the peasants as from the Austrian troops. One of the leading members of that nobility, Prince Adam Sapieha, and heir of the Prince Sapieha, who is marshal of Galicia, and an hereditary member of the Upper House of the Austrian Reichsrath, seems to have carried his sympathy too far, and exhibited it so actively as to have made it impossible for the Austrian Government to wink at his proceedings. He has been arrested.

The telegraph mentions encounters in different parts of Poland. They are, however, of very little importance, even if we assume them to be true.

The invention of the Polish manufacturers of news is inexhaustible. They announced that the Emperor of the French had written a letter of condolence to the mother of Count Leo Plater, executed at Dunaburg by order of Mouravieff, in which he expressed a hope of a better fate for Poland in a near future. It was added that the father of the Count had been an intimate friend of the Emperor. The Emperor, the Moniteur tells us, has written no letter to the Countess Plater, and did not know the Count Leo's father.

General Mouravieff is not at all disturbed by the indignation of Europe at his real and alleged cruelties. He reprints in the Wilna official journal, the violent diatribes of the Morning Post and some other papers. Amongst his recent decrees we may notice one directing that all moneys taken by the insurgents from the State or communal treasuries shall be refunded within ten days by the Polish proprietors of the district. Forced sales are to take place on the estates of those who refuse to comply with the order. He has also addressed a proclamation to the peasants, in which he tells them that they have no longer any obligation to work for their lords, promises that they shall have land in full and free property, and, in fact, authorizes and orders them to seize all persons whom they may consider discontented and unreliable, such as "priests, gentlemen, proprietors."

The National Government is making itself rather ridiculous. It has addressed a communiqué to one of the clandestine journals, and it has prohibited crinoline. The last order led to a most disgraceful disturbance in Warsaw. Boys and men seized ladies wearing crinoline, tore their clothes, and treated them in the most disgusting manner. The police could not protect the women, and the military were obliged to go to their aid. The National Government has since expressed its annoyance at the disturbance, but it cannot escape the responsibility of provoking it.

The Marquis Wielopolski has left Warsaw on leave of absence for the benefit of his health, and General Von Berg has everything his own way.

We do not know whether there is any truth in the story that the new King of Greece has already abdicated, but at any rate, the accounts of the recent disturbances in Athens might well incline him to take that step. As far as the wretched squabble which has cost more than two hundred lives, and made the streets of Athens a bloody battle-field for two days and two nights, can be understood, it seems to have originated in an endeavour on the part of the friends of Bulgaria, one of the members of the former provisional Government, to recover the power lost in one of the paltry revolutions which took place a few weeks since. The artillery, the gendarmerie, the military police, and a large number of other soldiers were for the émée; the Minister of War rallied to his side some battalions of infantry, the larger part of the cavalry, and a few members of the national guard. The fight lasted two days and nights without result. At last, the ministers of the protecting Powers addressed a very energetic remonstrance to the President of the National Assembly, to the effect that if the fratricidal struggle was not put an end to within forty-eight hours, the Ministers would invite their countrymen to retire to the ships of war, and would immediately take their departure. The President managed to have the note placarded. The leaders of the two parties consented to an armistice of forty-eight hours: the national guard then made their appearance and occupied the public buildings. The Assembly was convoked at a gymnasium, its usual place of meeting being threatened by the artillery of the movement party. Some members made their appearance spontaneously; others were dragged there by force by the national guards; some being taken from the bath and carried to their seats, we are told, in something like a state of nature. The Assembly being legally constituted voted the removal of the entire garrison from the capital, their provisional replacement by the national guard, and a new Provisional Government under the presidency of Roufos, composed of members of both factions. These measures, received with frantic applause by the people, who seem to have seen in them a wisdom seldom or never displayed before, appear to have had the desired effect, and peace is restored for a short time. What hope can there be of settled government, when the leading politicians of the country can be guilty of such disgraceful proceedings? King George should either resign the Greek throne and abandon the Greeks to their own devices, or if he still holds to his kingdom, he should commence his reign by banishing every member of the National Assembly, and every officer of the national army.

The German Diet has adopted the proposition of the committee to which the Holstein question had been referred, that Denmark should be required to withdraw the ordinance of the 30th March. A few votes were given for the proposition of the Oldenburg Government, which asked the Diet to declare all the agreements and treaties of 1851 and 1852 null and void, and the representatives of Denmark and of Holland voted against both resolutions. If Denmark refuses to withdraw the ordinance, and there is no doubt that she will do so, the next step for the Diet to take will be to vote federal execution in Holstein; but that next step, although it would like, it will hardly dare to take.

The Estates of Schleswig, the elections to which have been rather in favour of the Danish party, are convoked for the 17th. Bills for extending the right of petition, the electoral franchise, and religious liberty, are to be submitted to their approval. The bill for extending the electoral franchise will certainly be rejected. The existing law gives the nobility who are Germans very great advantages which they certainly will not surrender. An extension of the franchise would give the Danes a large majority in the Estates, whilst now the two parties are about equal. The other bills are evidently designed to meet the complaints of Earl Russell: the denial or restriction of the right of petition, and the use of the Danish language in church and schools, were the grievances which he has in different despatches pressed upon the Danish Government.

The South German Gazette, a Frankfort newspaper, which preaches Prussian hegemony to the somewhat incredulous South Germans, and, as a reward for its zeal, has recently been prohibited in the Prussian kingdom, publishes a correspondence which, if genuine, and the relations of the newspaper with the Prussian liberal party are in favour of the genuineness, has a very considerable importance. The correspondence consists of a remonstrance addressed by the Crown Prince to the King, his father, against the decrees of June—a remonstrance which indicates that for a considerable time the Prince had been urging his father to adopt a liberal policy—a reply of the King, in which he vindicates the decree, and recommends the Prince to prove the truth of his statement, that he does not wish to offer his father any opposition by slighting the Progressionists and courting the Conservatives. There is then a formal protest of the Prince against the press decree addressed to Herr Von Bismarck, in which his Royal Highness says, "I deem the proceedings of the Cabinet both illegal and injurious to the State and the dynasty." This protest is followed by a letter to the King, in which the Prince says that the constitution is set aside by the decree. We have then a letter of the King, provoked by the speech of the Prince at Dantzic, and rebuking him very strongly, and the Prince's reply, justifying his conduct on the ground that the Ministry are imperilling his future and that of his children, refusing to retract, but promising to be quiet, and offering the resignation of his commission in the army and his seat in the council, and requesting the King to appoint him or permit him to select a place of residence at home or abroad. The King's reply is couched in a milder tone, and amounts to a refusal to accept the proffered resignation. Assuming this correspondence to be genuine, its publication will be of great use. The Prussian people have already resolved to take their stand upon the law, and this identification of himself by the Prince with their contentions will encourage them in their determination not to abandon that ground.

General Von Roon, the Minister of War, made a speech the other day to a conservative assembly in a rural district, in which he said, amongst other things, that it did him good to look at so many thousand true faces, after being obliged so often to look upon regards of hatred and dislike. All affairs of State were determined and decided by the king alone, and that was of course the case with the army reorganization. He was nothing but the king's sergeant, and every one who had served knew that the captain directed the company, although the sergeant, as loyal assistant, had at times to speak a word in loyalty and obedience. Herr Von Roon may be an honest man and a good soldier, but he certainly is not in his right place as the responsible minister of a constitutional king.

The disturbances in Berlin have at last been suppressed. The rioters appear to have been composed, almost entirely, of the criminal class. All of them, it is said, had made acquaintance with the criminal courts on their own account. More than four hundred persons have been apprehended, and are awaiting their trial, and altogether an immense amount of damage has been done in the part of the town which was the scene of the riot.

The so-called brigandage, far from suppressed, seems to be more rampant than ever in Naples. The more vigilant guard of the French authorities upon the Roman frontier does not affect it, the truth being that it is indigenous, and so far from being provoked by supplies of men and money from Rome, has its roots in the discontent of the inhabitants of the Neapolitan kingdom. The conscription is a great cause of discontent. It has just been carried out in Sicily, but only by the adoption of the harshest means. The young men drawn have all attempted to evade their fate, and have been hunted down, it is said, like wild beasts. Some brigand chiefs were arrested the other day on board a French vessel in the harbour of Genoa, as urns out, without the consent of the French Consul. The affair seems likely to lead to some little discussion between the French and Italian Governments.

THE EAST.

A telegram from the rebels are quiet in China, or rather in the neighbourhood of Shanghai, and that a further delay has been accorded to the Japanese Government, to determine upon its answer to the English ultimatum. There appears, however, to be little hope that this answer will be satisfactory. A most important announcement, if true, is that troops have been sent for from India. This would imply the intention of the British Government to occupy one of the Japanese ports, if not to make war in regular form.

MEXICO.

The French have taken possession of the city of Mexico, the Mexican garrison having evacuated it. The chiefs of the Conservative party have made their submission to the French.

PARLIAMENTARY NOTES.

THURSDAY, JULY 9.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

The sitting was occupied by a discussion on the dismissal of two Ionian judges, which terminated by the Government consenting, with much reluctance, to produce all papers on the subject.

THURSDAY, JULY 9.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Lord Palmerston moved the second reading of the Fortifications Bill. He said that the greater part of the works which had received the sanction of the House were now nearly completed, and expressed a hope that the Government would be allowed to carry out their scheme in its entirety.—Sir F. Smith proposed as an amendment, "that no further expenditure be incurred for the present upon that part of the project for fortifications which is based on the assumption that an enemy might land in force and attempt to besiege Portsmouth and Plymouth, except such works as are in a very advanced state of progress."—General Sir de Lacy Evans supported the Government proposals, declaring that unless our principal naval arsenals were secured against attack, the effectiveness of our land forces would be materially diminished.—The Marquis of Hartington, as Under-Secretary for War, defended the Government measure, and explained its details.—Mr. Cobden said that this scheme of fortifications was entirely attributable to one person (Lord Palmerston), and if that person were now absent, he believed the project would not be carried further. In fact, as the member for Birmingham had somewhat bluntly remarked, nothing could be done in this House unless the Prime Minister was present. The whole matter had its origin in the brain of that noble lord, who had been long haunted with the idea that steam had bridged the Channel, and thus diminished our power of resistance to France. But how could that be unless the French possessed a larger amount of steam than we? And comparing our steam mercantile marine with that of the French, we had twenty horse-power to one of theirs. Surely, then, a fact like that could not have rendered this country more vulnerable. With regard to the fortifications on Portsdown Hill, if the House would agree to hold a session there for one day, he undertook to say that they would vote either that the works should be stopped, or that Englishmen must no longer sing "Rule Britannia" or "Ye mariners of England." For what was the object of these fortresses, but that English soldiers should take refuge in them from the attack of an enemy's army who had succeeded in effecting a landing on the coast. His objection to the scheme of the Government was that it was a disgrace and dishonour to the age, new to Englishmen, and one that would never have been tolerated in former times. It was also calculated to inflict a more permanent wound upon the reputation and good fame of the so-called Liberal party than anything that had yet been done by a Parliament that was famous for ignoble deeds. These inland fortifications, moreover, would require an enormous force to render them safe or useful, and protect them from capture by a coup de main. He concluded by entering his earnest protest against the bill.—The Government scheme was defended by Sir J. Fergusson, Mr. Newdegate, and Lord C. Paget, and opposed by Col. Dickson, Lord Fermoy, Sir E. Colebrooke, and other gentlemen.—Lord Palmerston condemned the amendment of Sir F. Smith as neither more nor less than a motion to throw out the bill, stop these works, reverse the decision deliberately arrived at by the House, and act in opposition to the general sense and intentions of the country. Mr. Cobden had undoubtedly been a successful amateur diplomatist; but he warned the House by the example of America how they trusted the public defences to the hands of amateur generals; for in America, where a military uniform and a cocked hat were sufficient to qualify a man for the command of an army, they had seen that instead of Richmond being captured by the Federals in ninety days, as had been predicted, the ninety days had not even yet begun, and the rebels were daily expected at Washington. The noble lord also replied to the various objections that had been raised against the proposal of the Government, and reiterated his opinion, founded upon the advice of the most experienced military men, that the contemplated works were essential to the security of our naval arsenals and dockyards, and that whatever might be the value of iron-cased ships it was absolutely necessary that they should be supported by permanent land defences.—On a division the amendment was negatived by 132 to 61. The bill was then read a second time.

The Bill for the Sale of Crown Livings, of which we gave an account when it was brought forward in the Lords, was read a second time; after a debate and division, 179 to 29. Some further business was disposed of, and the House adjourned.

FRIDAY, JULY 10.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

The Earl of Carnarvon called for an account of the reasons which had led the Government to threaten hostilities against Japan, censuring especially the demands made on the Tycoon to do more than his limited powers allowed.—Lord Russell defended the course of the Government, and insisted on the necessity of protecting British subjects, and enforcing treaty rights.—Lord Grey protested against the practice that had grown up of late years of making war without consulting Parliament.—After a few remarks from the Duke of Somerset and Lord Wodehouse, the subject dropped, and the House adjourned.

FRIDAY, JULY 10.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The morning sitting was occupied by Committee of Supply. At the evening sitting Sir J. Fergusson moved the adjournment of the House for the purpose of requesting Mr. Roebuck upon the recognition of the Confederacy of North America, as in presence of the great events now acting in the United States, this was a time not for action but for observation.—Lord Palmerston seconded the motion, in order to add his request to the member for Sheffield to drop the continuance of the debate which stood for Monday. Events of the utmost importance were now transpiring in America, and he thought these were of themselves sufficient to show that it would not be desirable to resume the discussion at the present moment, or to call upon her Majesty's Government to pledge themselves as to their future action. Upon general grounds, then, he should urge upon Mr. Roebuck the propriety of complying with the request. But there was yet another circumstance peculiar to the debate which made compliance still more advisable. It was hardly possible that the debate could be resumed without a discussion on what had passed at the late interview between the hon. member, the member for Sunderland, and the Emperor of the French; and he submitted that what took place on that occasion between two independent members of the English House of Commons and a foreign Sovereign was a delicate matter scarcely fitting to be detailed in that House, and might tend to prevent the Emperor of the French from according that courteous and gracious reception with which he was wont to honour all Englishmen of distinction.—Mr. Lindsay complained of the attack which had been made upon his veracity by a Ministerial organ, and declared that all Mr. Roebuck had stated respecting the late interview with the Emperor Napoleon was true—he regretted to say too true! He believed that if her Majesty's Government would only utter the word recognition in concert with the Emperor, that word would be heard in the States as the harbinger of a speedily-returning peace. With regard to the request made of his hon. friend, he hoped his hon. friend would take time to consider the question before he gave it an answer.—Mr. Osborne had never doubted the veracity of Mr. Roebuck, but he had not the same confidence in his discretion. He thought, therefore, his hon. friend was not acting fairly by the House in keeping this subject in abeyance, and not letting them know whether it was to come on next Monday or not.—Mr. Gregory believed that if Mr. Roebuck persisted with his motion it would be rejected by a large majority, in which case the opinion would go forth to the world that the feeling of the House of Commons was opposed to the independence of the Southern Confederacy, whereas the fact was, that a vast number of members were Southern heart and soul, but did not wish, in the face of events now pending, to force the Government or the House to pronounce a premature decision on the subject.—Mr. Newdegate thought the House should mark its sense of the unconstitutional course which Messrs. Roebuck and Lindsay had pursued, and their attempt to import a foreign element into the debates and decisions of the House.—Mr. Forster objected to the interruption of the debate. He thought the House ought to come to a decision.—Lord R. Cecil pointed out to Mr. Roebuck that the friends of the South desired to postpone further discussion, which only the fanatical partisans of the North desired to go on.—Mr. Roebuck said he would give his answer on Monday; but he thought that a very much better answer might possibly be given before that day.—Mr. Layard repeated his assertions with regard to the non-appearance in the Foreign-office of the communications referred to by Mr. Roebuck on a previous occasion, and made a violent attack on Mr. Lindsay.—And Mr. Peter Taylor railed at the idea of recognition durante bello. The motion for adjournment was then negatived.

A discussion subsequently took place on the bombardment of a Siamese port by a British man-of-war, in which Sir C. Wood admitted that there had been "precipitation." Mr. Bentinck initiated a long conversation on the speed of railway trains as a cause of accidents, which elicited much diversity of opinion, but led to no result. The House was counted out a little before two A.M.

MONDAY, JULY 13.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

After some conversation upon the Burial Service, in the course of which the Archbishop of Canterbury said that he hoped to be able to propose some measure on the subject when Parliament reassembled,

Earl Grey moved an address to the Queen for papers with regard to Poland. He entertained such serious apprehensions with regard to the existing state of that country that he thought Parliament ought not to separate until the opinion of her Majesty's Government had been elicited on the subject. A war with Russia on behalf of Poland would be a great calamity, and his fear was that, whilst we did not intend, we might be gradually drawn into hostilities. He wished to know, therefore, what ground her Majesty's Ministers had for supposing that the Poles would accept national institutions upon the terms proposed to Russia by the Western Powers? His own impression was that the insurgents were not prepared to accept anything short of complete independence, and he condemned the interference of England between a Sovereign and his subjects as much more calculated to produce a bad than a good result, and to encourage hopes which might prove cruel and delusive. If negotiations were to go on month after month without any practical advantage accruing to the Poles the only effect would be to excite passions in the public mind which it might be difficult to restrain, and perhaps to eventually plunge us into war; for already significant symptoms had been exhibited in Russia, where the people were prepared unitedly to support their rulers in engaging in what they regarded as a holy war. But although he deprecated any idea of war on behalf of Poland, he deeply lamented the condition to which that country was reduced, and he had read with horror and indignation the published accounts of the atrocities committed by the Russians upon an unfortunate people. He contended, nevertheless, that this was not a case for armed intervention, which he believed would only aggravate and increase the evils that he would gladly see at an end. Earl Russell did not complain of his noble friend for bringing forward the question, nor for the tone and temper in which he had treated it. But the question was one in which her Majesty's Government were acting in concert with the Governments of France and Austria, who would necessarily have to be consulted in regard to any ulterior steps that might be taken. He admitted that this was not a case for armed intervention, and that such a proceeding would be more likely to produce fresh calamities than put an end to those which already existed; but he denied that simple diplomatic action need lead to war, or that the remonstrances and good advice which this country had offered to Russia could produce any evil results. The course which her Majesty's Government had pursued was this:—In the first place, they entered into communications with France, which had always displayed a warm sympathy with the wrongs of Poland; and also with the Government of Austria, which was strongly in favour of ruling its Polish subjects with as much regard as possible for their nationality, their religious opinions, and their habits and customs. In conjunction, therefore, with these two Powers, her Majesty's Government submitted six propositions to Russia, which provided for an armistice, and would, if accepted, secure for Poland national institutions and a national representation. Further than this, they could do nothing. They could neither assist the Poles by force of arms, nor propose terms to Russia for the recognition of the independence of Poland. If anything was obtained for the Poles, then, it would be the result of the force of reason and representations of what upon principles of honesty and good faith was demanded from Russia. He could not say what the answer of Russia would be, or what course after receiving that answer it would be the duty of her Majesty's Government to pursue. Everything depended upon the answer itself, and the spirit in which the proposals of the Western Powers were received. He regretted to say that the appointment of General Mouravieff and the decrees issued by that officer were not favourable to the hope that the Emperor of Russia would act a liberal and generous part towards Poland.—Lord Brougham regretted that the Foreign Secretary should have thought fit to declare, before the answer of Russia was received, that an armed intervention was out of the question.—Earl Russell said the Emperor of Russia had already decided upon his answer, which would be sent off from St. Petersburg this (Tuesday) morning.—The Earl of Derby said the present moment was inopportune for thus discussing the propositions which had been submitted to Russia. At the same time he wished to express his entire concurrence in the views entertained by the Government with regard to the impolicy of an armed intervention, and he believed it was the general opinion of the country that we ought not to allow ourselves to be drawn into hostilities on this question. But he went further than this, and deprecated even diplomatic interference as calculated to draw us sooner or later into war. It was possible, indeed, that we might be dragged into a war with Poland herself. For if the six propositions were accepted by Russia, and it was then found that the Poles themselves were the obstacle to carrying them out, Russia would have a right to call upon us to throw the whole weight of our moral influence into the scale on her behalf. He thought her Majesty's Government had acted injudiciously in basing their demands on Russia upon the Treaty of Vienna. They ought to have declared that it was a matter of European interest that the insurrection should end and the grievances of the Poles be redressed. Such a course as that he could have understood; but he did not understand the policy of basing the propositions upon a right to demand the fulfilment of the treaty obligations of 1815. He saw great danger in the line on which the Government had entered; and he should have regretted the occurrence of this discussion were it not that it had elicited a clear and distinct answer from the Foreign Secretary to the visionary and exaggerated dreams of Poland with regard to an armed intervention in her behalf.—Earl Granville vindicated the policy pursued by her Majesty's Government in a brief speech; and after some observations from the Marquis of Clanricarde, the Duke of Argyll, and the Earl of Harrowby, the motion for papers was agreed to.—The House shortly afterwards adjourned.

MONDAY, JULY 13.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

On the order for the adjourned debate on Mr. Roebuck's motion, that gentleman moved that the order be read and discharged. He had brought forward his motion in the hope that the House might be induced to adopt a step which would have the effect of arresting the terrible carnage in North America, and be of service to the interests of Great Britain. For taking this course he had been subject to much obloquy from a noisy, if not very wise, party. He wished it to be understood, however, that he had arrived at his present determination not on that account, but because the Prime Minister had stated that he considered the continuance of the debate would be an impediment to the good government of the country. Having, in brief and sarcastic terms, commented upon the official arrogance of the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, the hon. member proceeded to address some admonitory remarks to Lord Palmerston, who, he said, had a heavy responsibility weighing on his shoulders. The noble lord had stated that the time was not yet come for the consideration of this question by the House; and to that suggestion he (Mr. Roebuck) had yielded; but let the noble lord bear in mind that there were two dangers which would have to be met. One was the possibility of a reconstruction of the Union upon a Southern basis; the other the acknowledgment of the Confederacy by the Emperor of the French alone. No doubt the noble lord would fully justify the confidence of the people in considering these two grave questions; and without hesitation he would leave them in his hands.—Mr. Lindsay complained of the manner in which he had been treated by Mr. Layard, who had denounced him as an amateur diplomatist, and had taunted him with having come over from Paris on a former occasion as a special envoy, and being repudiated by a telegram sent by order of the Emperor. He had been employed for three years, with the full knowledge and sanction of the Ministry, in communicating with the French Emperor on the subject of the maritime and commercial relations of the two countries. On one occasion he had been charged to communicate certain matters directly to the Foreign-office, and had done so. He knew nothing of any telegraphic repudiation; and thought the story "passing strange." He had been received on his return to Paris on that occasion in the same manner as usual; whereas, had he really been the blunderer and busybody that Mr. Layard represented him to be, he certainly should have found his Majesty "not at home" when he called.—Lord Palmerston was of opinion that Mr. Roebuck had judged rightly in moving to discharge the order, for no good could possibly arise from a debate and division. He regretted, however, that both Mr. Lindsay and the hon. member should have mixed up with that well-considered determination an attack upon the Under Secretary; and he hoped this would be the last time that any member of the House of Commons would deem it to be his duty to communicate to the House what might have passed between himself and the sovereign of a foreign country. He did not impute the slightest blame to the hon. members, who, he was persuaded, had acted with the best intentions; but he would impress upon them and on the House that their proceedings were most irregular, and he trusted would never be drawn into a precedent. The British Parliament received communications from the Sovereign of the United Kingdom, but they had no relations or intercourse with or official knowledge of any other sovereign, and it was no part of their functions to receive communications from a foreign government unless through the responsible Ministers of the Crown. If the Emperor of the French and the Queen of England had any communication to make to each other the Queen had an ambassador at Paris and the Emperor an ambassador in London; and these were the proper channels for the interchange of such communications. Sovereigns and governments communicated with the sovereigns and governments, not with the legislatures of other countries. The hon. member for Sunderland had left it to be inferred that he was employed by the British Government to communicate with the French Emperor on matters connected with trade and navigation. The fact was that the hon. member had called at the Foreign-office, stated that he was going to Paris, and made an offer of his services with regard to these questions, and then the Foreign Secretary gave him a note of introduction to Lord Cowley, in order to secure him access to the Emperor. It was not the practice of her Majesty's Government to carry on a double diplomacy; and the case of the hon. member for Sunderland was entirely different from that of Mr. Cobden; for the latter was employed by the British Government, the former was not.—After a few words from The O'Donoghue and Mr. Whiteside, Mr. Newdegate thanked Lord Palmerston for having given a warning to the House against the repetition of conduct which was not only in derogation to the prerogatives of the Crown, but was calculated to lead to grave complications between England and other states of the world.—The order was then discharged.

The House then went into Committee on the Fortifications Bill, the several clauses of which were agreed to after a long and stormy debate. The House adjourned at a quarter to one.

TUESDAY, JULY 14.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

The Earl of Airlie called attention to the case of the Margaret and Jessie, and also to the report that the blockading squadron at Charleston had threatened to sink all blockade runners, which, as he contended, they have no right to do.—In regard to the Margaret and Jessie, Earl Russell said the Governor of the Bahamas had not mentioned the circumstances of the case from his own knowledge, he only said there was a report to this effect. On the other hand, Mr. Seward, having seen the statement in the New York papers, immediately assured Lord Lyons that the captain of the Rhode Island gave a different account of the affair. Obviously the facts must be inquired into further. It was impossible to do anything more than ascertain what the facts were, and if it should appear that the statement made was borne out, he had no doubt that the Government of the United States would give the reparation which they volunteered. With regard to the other occurrence which had been reported in the newspapers, there had been no official information of it, and he hoped the report was inaccurate.—A discussion then took place on the Brazilian quarrel, the conduct of Lord Russell being censured in strong terms by Lords Chelmsford and Malmesbury, and defended by himself in a speech, in which the facts were curiously mis-stated. He informed the House, however, that the King of Portugal had instructed his Minister at Rio to use his endeavours to bring about a reconciliation.

The House soon afterwards adjourned.

TUESDAY, JULY 14.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The morning sitting was occupied by a discussion on the report of the Fortifications Bill from the Committee, and by the consideration of the Union Relief Act (Lancashire), which passed through Committee.

At the evening sitting, Mr. H. Sheridan moved a resolution that the duty now chargeable upon fire insurances is excessive in amount, that it prevents insurance, and should be reduced at the earliest opportunity. Having explained the reasons which had prevented this question being brought forward earlier in the session, he stated the grounds upon which he supported his resolution, and the reduction of duty he proposed—namely, that the present rate of 3s. per cent. should be reduced 1s. per cent., and at the end of five years another 1s. per cent. The immediate loss of revenue, he contended, would be more than made up by the increase of insurances, while the reduction would be a benefit to the country. He showed, in the course of his argument, the vast amount of property that might be brought within the area of insurance, criticising, in considerable detail, the positions laid down in the work of Mr. Coode, upon whom, he observed, the Government relied, but whose authority upon this question he impugned, preferring the evidence of practical men; and he cited the testimony of well-known writers and public bodies to the soundness of his own views.—Mr. Hubbard, assuming, from the manner in which Mr. Coode's work had been circulated, that its arguments and facts were adopted by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, minutely examined some of the conclusions of the writer, exposing what he considered to be his fallacies and false views regarding not only the theory of insurance, but the general principles of taxation, and his arithmetical errors. He supported the resolution.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer said the question really before the House was, be the merits of the fire insurance duty what it might, whether the resolution was proper to be adopted by the House. With respect to Mr. Coode's report, although the Government did not adopt all his conclusions, in his opinion it had been the means of leading to a more thorough investigation of the subject. In replying to Mr. Sheridan, he pointed out the essential distinctions between the duty in question and other taxes. Its increase, he observed, had been more rapid than that of the general wealth of the country. He did not, however, push this argument as a reason why this duty should be maintained. But the question was whether it was right for the House to adopt an abstract resolution without taking any step to remove the duty. He protested against such a practice as at variance with the duty of the House. It was an attempt to secure for the fire insurance duty a preference over all other taxes for a remission to the extent of £500,000. He was not prepared to write down any duty No. 1 for reduction, which circumstances might hereafter render inexpedient. What occurred in regard to the paper duty ought to be a warning of the danger attending these abstract and ambiguous resolutions. After some observations by Mr. Hankey in support of the motion, and a reply from Mr. Sheridan, the House divided, when the resolution was carried by 103 to 67.

Some matters of minor interest were discussed, and the House adjourned at twenty minutes to one.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 15.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

No business of public interest was discussed.

PARIS TOPICS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, July 14.

THIS has been the week of accidents. No less than four persons have been killed by the bad driving of French coachmen in this short time. Those who know how coachmen drive in Paris only wonder that so few accidents occur, they cannot be astonished at anything which happens. Much less danger is incurred driving the crowded streets of Paris than in the comparatively empty Boulevards of Paris, broad as they are, or even in a side street down which a single carriage is driving. The aim of a Paris coachman seems to be to go over the greatest possible amount of ground in the smallest possible space, and to effect this he goes from one side of the road to the other as if at the will of the horses or according to some law of curves not described in works on geometry. We complain of the evil of "crawling" which the police does everything in its power to put down; here there is a licensed class of crawlers, the remises, carriages with red numbers, which seem invented on purpose to render the streets impassable. On the Boulevards, which are twice as wide as Piccadilly, with two files of carriages going in each direction, and a few interlopers, it is often dangerous, always difficult to cross, from the different pace at which each advances, and the utter uncertainty as to its course. In the widest street of Paris, the Rue Royale, a distinguished German journalist was killed a few days ago by an omnibus, which knocked him down, one of the wheels passing over and crushing his head. On Thursday a carriage containing Mlle. Augustine Brohan, the well-known actress of the Theatre Francais, with two gentlemen, was run away with; the coachman was thrown to the ground and died of the injuries received, one of the gentlemen was also thrown out and seriously injured; the other, in jumping out, was killed on the spot, and the celebrated actress alone escaped with slight injuries. She was well enough to write a letter, describing the accident, a few hours afterwards, and the papers were able to announce with congratulations, that her child was not an orphan, that she had been able to go to her country seat at Tille d'Avray the next day. A hundred years ago the Mercur would have told the sad tale, with the addition that the actress, who in these present days will no doubt still charm many an audience, had entered the Carmelites. Other times, other nerves. Yesterday there was a collision of two carriages in the Avenue de l'Impératrice, another wide road; the lady who was in one of them, not possessing Mlle. Brohan's presence of mind, unfortunately jumped out, and was killed on the spot. If French coachmen cannot keep their horses in hand, they should be forbidden to drive beyond a slow pace. As it is neither foot passengers nor the occupants of carriages are safe. Whoever has dined or supped at the Maison Doré, remembers the precipitous staircase which leads from the private rooms down to the street. On Friday evening the Duke of Hamilton, who had been dining there, missed his footing, and was precipitated, head foremost, on the pavement. He was carried to his hotel, where he still remains in a precarious state. The Empress, on hearing of the accident, came from St. Cloud to see him, but he was unable to receive her.

The news of the fall of Mexico was received with the usual official illuminations, excepting the Palais Royal, which remained dark, but it produced only an improvement of 2½ centimes or one farthing in public securities on the Bourse. The explanation is that, the news had already been discounted, as they say here; hardly a satisfactory one when the 3 per cents. are at 63½. The fact is, that a long occupation of Mexico, with all its attendant expenses, is counted on, and, however, desirable this may be for the re-establishment of order in Central America, it is not a cheering prospect for those who will, or may, have to pay the bills. It is generally believed in well-informed circles, that the Archduke Maximilian is still the favoured competitor for the throne, which it is not doubted will be founded in the capital of Montezuma. This will, of course, entail an occupation, in the present distracted condition of the country, but it may be accompanied with conditions which will retain France from the threatened outlay. It is supposed that the crown of Mexico is, in some way, to compensate Austria for the surrender of Venice, but one cannot see how a great Empire can be brought to accept a gift to a member of the reigning house as a compensation for loss of territory. I therefore give you the rumours without in any way vouching for their truth. For myself, I do not give them any credit. The Emperor has the well-earned reputation of respecting his word. There is a princess to whom he is under engagements, which events have hitherto prevented his fulfilling, a daughter of France, and it is much more probable that his choice would fall upon the Duke of Parma, her son, who is also an infant of Spain, than on a prince whose only claim can be that he has none whatever. Spain would accept this arrangement with pleasure, and the Duke of Parma, though a Bourbon, is too completely a stranger to the royal family of Spain, for his name to create any adverse feeling in Mexico. On this occasion the Queen of Spain has been the first to send her congratulations to the Emperor, a <sup>thrice-given</sup> Queen of England, <sup>probably</sup> <sup>secretly</sup> have not arrived. Any event which promises regular government in Mexico, and payment of the just claims of its creditors, must be welcome in England.

I need say nothing of the effect which the last news from North America has had here among those who interest themselves in the restoration of peace. It is not doubted that on the news of General Lee's next victory, the Emperor will press upon England the mediation between the two parties, or, at least, the immediate recognition of the South. It is generally reported that at the last ministerial council held before he left for Vichy, he laid down as the French programme, both in the Polish and American questions, joint action with England. But this does not, of course, preclude his urging his views in either case on the English Cabinet. In a conversation with M. Drouyn de Lhuys at the end of the week, Mr. Dayton, in answer to a question as to whether an offer of mediation would be well received at Washington, answered that it would not be accepted, but no longer spoke of making it a casus belli. This change in his language, which is said to be very reserved, is reflected in the papers which favour the North. The Siecle ascribes General Milroy's defeat to the retirement of a French officer, General Cluseret, whose letter of resignation complaining of the utter want of discipline in the Federal army, it reprints. The comments which follow may be accepted as a first confession that things in the North have not been as they should be. "The steady attachment of the Siecle to the cause of the North, which is that of justice and humanity, entitles it to be plain-spoken with its friends, and not to palliate their faults. It is certain that these have been grievous. It is not with the absence of discipline, of which so many generals have shown the example, that an enemy, fanatically proud, and subject to the iron rule of an implacable despotism, can be beaten. Those same volunteers who disgrace themselves under incapable leaders, would be heroes if properly officered. It is not soldiers which are wanting to the North. It possesses all the elements of victory, but these elements must be properly marshalled." This is a great change in the language of the Siecle, which has hitherto extenuated all defeats, and been silent on the atrocities which have for ever disgraced the armies of the North. We may hope that it will next discover that the volunteers whom it praises hypothetically are hirelings, and that their want of discipline is the most unbridled licence.

The Débats has recommenced its crusade against recognition, taking for its theme the French interest in the preponderance of the power of the United States of America, against the English interest, to which their division would be favourable. It therefore exhorts Frenchmen to maintain a neutrality which has hitherto been so advantageous, and of which the results must be ruinous to England. The France, blaming the selfish policy of England, is equally opposed to the not less selfish policy of the Débats. "Nations do not live only by bread and cotton. They live also by sentiments and ideas, and the selfishness of a people is not more respectable; nor in the long run, more profitable than the selfishness of an individual. How, then, could the recognition of the South, decided at the same time by England, France, Russia, and by the other powers whose maritime interests are less important, become hurtful to us or to our neighbours? Who will venture to say that this recognition would expose us to the danger of a war with the Northern States? Where have these States a navy capable of opposing at the same time us, and the English, and the Americans of the South? What diversion would be caused at Washington and New York by a division of French troops, supported as they would be by the population, as well as by the soldiers of the South? The recognition of the South would present none of the dangers with which it is the fashion to menace Europe. It promises, on the contrary, to the whole world, and in particular to France, advantages which the very nature of things renders too self-evident for it to be necessary that we should insist upon them." The Presse, in giving a view of the present position of the war, notices the new measures adopted against neutrals at Charleston. "The blockading squadron at Charleston seems to have adopted a new system against the vessel which attempt to pass it. It no longer takes the trouble to make prizes; it shells and sinks them. This is certainly expeditions, but is it the way of carrying on war among civilized nations?"

The new ministry is giving satisfaction to all parties and seems determined to earn the name it has already received, as that of men of business. Its appointment is unquestionably a pledge for the continuance of peace, an impression still further strengthened by the measures of the War-office, which all point to a reduction in the effective strength of the army. The new Minister of Instruction, M. Luruy, has just instituted a board of assessors, without whose concurrence no professor is henceforward to be suspended or removed, and this only after hearing his defence. Up to the present time all the professors in France have been at the mercy of the Minister, who could dismiss or suspend them at his pleasure.

Notwithstanding that no fear of war is any longer entertained, for this year at least, the Bourse is very heavy, and although money is abundant all public securities remain very depressed. This is probably owing to long outstanding engagements, which are only now being liquidated, and force sales in larger proportion than there are buyers.

Nothing is known of the decision of the Government regarding the recent events in Madagascar, but the belief that ships and 3,000 troops will be despatched to protect French interests seems to gain ground.

The evening papers contain nothing on any subject but Poland.

I regret to state that the Duke of Hamilton died yesterday morning (Tuesday) at four A.M.

THE RECONSTRUCTION FARCE.

(To the Editor of THE INDEX.)

SIR,—It is astonishing to any, of Southern feeling, to hear an intelligent press like that of England still speculating on the possible "reconstruction of the Union" on a Southern basis, although reason should teach them the impossibility of such an event; for none at all acquainted with the spirit of Confederates but are fully aware that the bare idea of again affiliating with the North fills them with loathing. To once more go hand in hand with a Power who has moved Heaven and earth to debase, humiliate, and destroy them—to once again call them "brethren" who have sacked and robbed among the unoffending, whose fathers and brethren were on distant battle-fields—who have traversed the land with fire and faggot—ignominiously punishing the old and feeble, exciting very servants by every possible means to uprise and cut the throats of women and children—to again live with such in the bond of brotherhood and friendship fills the soul of every Southerner with unmitigated contempt and scorn. A thousand deaths—total extinction—positive obliteration from the earth and history's annals, would be a fate far more preferable than to once again coalesce with such an ignoble race.

The Morning Post, in commenting upon this subject, so complacently advocated and urgently advised by Northern politicians, very justly observes:—

Already sanguine politicians in the North have begun to speculate on the possibility of the Union being restored in its original integrity under Southern auspices, and have gone so far as to express a hope that, under the restoration, the North may once more secure its previous supremacy. "We will fetch up again on that arrangement," writes Manhattan, the correspondent of one of our contemporaries, "for we can out-vote if we cannot outfight them." But it might possibly have occurred to Manhattan, and those whose spokesman he is, that the South has not "outfought" the North in order to afford the latter an opportunity of afterwards "outvoting" it. Setting aside political considerations, is it at all probable that the South would ever coalesce with a people which has laid its territory desolate, and which would, if it had been possible, have exterminated its population? The bare idea of such a contingency appears to our mind so inexplicable that again we are obliged to account for its being entertained by referring to the singular condition of opinion in the North. It is scarcely necessary to say that the Southern States will, if they prove victorious, form an independent league. They have learnt too bitter a lesson during the administration of an ultra-republican President not to profit by the moral which it inculcates. Slavery is no doubt an odious institution; but for that very reason there can be no amalgamation of States if by some it is tolerated and by others disavowed. The separation which has at length taken place between the free and slave States of America was foreseen long since by American statesmen; and the only cause for wonder is that it was so long postponed. It is much to be regretted that the separation was not effected, as it might and as it ought to have been, in peace; but having occasioned a war, the bloodiest and most disastrous with which modern history has made us acquainted, it would be strange indeed if it was not final.

THE WINCHESTER CAPTURE.

(From the Rockingham Register, June 19.)

General Lee is first rate at keeping secrets, and so are the few to whom he is obliged to intrust his designs. Hence, the movement upon the enemy at Winchester was almost a profound secret, until it burst upon us "like a clap of thunder from a cloudless sky." The important responsibility of directing our army movements in the valley has devolved upon Lieutenant-General Ewell, who has already won a name and a title to proud distinction in former movements over this field of strife. Who so fit as he to lead the Confederates in triumph again over former victorious battle-fields? And who so eminently deserving of the high honour of rushing upon the vindictive and cruel foe who has been desolating the fairest portion of this lovely Valley, as the gallant troops who constitute a portion of the old "Stonewall Brigade?" Such a leader, with such veteran troops as he commanded in the expedition for the recovery of Winchester, would almost necessarily be successful. How could they fail? They could not, and yet their success has been far greater than the most sanguine or hopeful could have expected.

The attack was made on Saturday last, when the enemy were driven into Winchester and into their intrenchments near by.—We again fought them on Sunday, opening again on Monday morning, at four o'clock, and after a struggle of one hour, the Abolition flag was lowered, and Milroy surrendered his entire command, from 4,000 to 5,000 strong. We captured all the enemy's stores, ammunition and equipments, with several hundred wagons, horses, artillery and trains. We had previously, that is to say on Sunday, "picked up" Colonel Ellet, and his command of 2,000 men, on their way from Berryville, Clark county, to reinforce Milroy at Winchester. We took this detachment of the Abolition army without firing a single gun, "overwhelming them," as the Yankees frequently say now, "by superior numbers." Our loss in killed, wounded and missing around Winchester does not, we are assured, exceed one hundred. We had no officer killed. The only drawback upon the completeness of the victory was the stealthy escape of the brave and gallant Milroy, who either hid himself or got out by adopting the guise of his master and illustrious predecessor at Washington—the guise of the "plaid cloak and Scotch cap."

We need not say the good people of Winchester were glad when the Confederate flag once more floated over their town; they were happy, and their joy found expression. Our noble women, the especial object of chivalrous Yankee cruelties and barbarities, were wild with delight when they saw their deliverers march in.

RECENT CAPTURES OF FEDERAL STEAMERS.

The Richmond Sentinel of the 20th of June copies the following account of the capture of the steam-tug, Boston, and burning of the barques Lennox and Texana, from the Mobile Register:—

A party of our daring marines started to get a steamboat; the party was under the command of Captain James Duke. After experiencing rather hard fare in the marshes of the Mississippi for some days, they discovered the Boston towing the ship Jenny Lind, loaded with ice, up to New Orleans.—This was some three miles from the Passe l'Outre light-house. The brave fellows hailed the ship, and a line was thrown out to them; they were in an open boat. On getting aboard of the Boston, the Confederates made a very pretty display of revolvers, when the captain of the ship remarked, "I told you they were d-d rebels." It was too late, the fastenings were instantly cut, and our men were in possession of the steamer.

In coming round at sea, they met the bark Lennox, from New York, loaded with an assorted cargo, principally stores, to which they helped themselves, and retaining the captain and mate as prisoners, sent the passengers and crew ashore; they then set fire to her—completely destroying the vessel. This took place yesterday (Wednesday). There were about forty on the Lennox.

About an hour afterwards they came up with the bark Texana, also from New York. They did not take anything from her but the captain and mate—the balance they sent ashore. The Texana was then set on fire, and was burning splendidly when she was left.

Among the prisoners is Captain Wolf, of the old bark Asa Fish, well known here.

There are about seventeen prisoners on board of the Boston, all of whom seem quite resigned to their fate.

The Boston arrived at Port Morgan this morning about two o'clock, and at the wharf at eleven o'clock. She is a staunch tug, runs about twelve knots an hour, and is a propeller.

In the Mississippi river the Confederates were for some time in speaking distance of the United States man-of-war Portsmouth, 16 guns, and about half-an-hour previous to their capturing the Boston, a gunboat had passed up within gunshot of our men.

This prize will prove very valuable to the captors, and shows what daring can accomplish in the way of a little private enterprise. What a howl will go up in New York when they hear the news.

The Boston was cheered all along our front as she came in, the Confederate flag over the gridiron. She now lies in the slip back of Gage's icehouse.

SOUTHERN SUMMARY OF WAR TO THE 30TH OF JUNE.

(From the Richmond Sentinel.)

It is difficult to obtain early and accurate information from Lee's army. The present interesting operations are in a region the mail facilities with which are in a state of suspension. In addition to this, each advance of our column puts it further away from us.

We find ourselves unable to add much to-day to the previous accounts. The destruction of Milroy's force at Winchester laid the whole line of the Potomac open to us from Harper's Ferry up. General Ewell was free to go where he pleased. It is believed, and we suppose there is no doubt of it, that he has crossed the Potomac at several points. He has doubtless seized such places as contained magazines. There is a report that he has thus occupied Harper's Ferry, capturing 300 prisoners; but we are not able to verify it.

The number of prisoners captured is believed to be 7,000. The exchange officer here has been notified to expect that number on to-day or to-morrow.

The despatch from General Lee, which we published yesterday, showed Ewell's plan of operations was admirable. While advancing the veteran Early directly against Winchester, that promising officer, General Rodas dashed down the Shenandoah, leaving Winchester to the left so as to get in Milroy's rear. On his way he caught up, without firing a gun, a couple of thousand soldiers who were going to Milroy's aid. Pushing on, he occupied Martinsburg, 22 miles north of Winchester, on Sunday evening, while yet the fight was pending at Winchester. Securing the valuable stores of the enemy at that place and capturing the guard, he was ready to operate against Milroy, whose retreat he had cut off. But early the following morning, Winchester was ours, and both Early and Rodas had nothing to do but move on. Rodas was only ten miles distant from Williamsport or Shepherdstown, both on the Potomac.

This manoeuvre and success will be counted as among the most brilliant of the war, and has already invested the successor of Jackson with much of his déclat. We trust that the mantle of Elijah, with a double portion of his spirit, has fallen on Elisha.

We are without Northern dates since the operations in the Valley. But a citizen who has made his way from Washington reports the most delightful consternation as prevailing there,

All Lincolndom was in ferment, and Abraham was chief among the sorrowful. The mystery which hangs over Lee's movements was a prime source of their terror. They did not know where to look for him, or when. A hundred thousand "melish" had been called for to resist invasion. Pennsylvania, it is said, is asked for half the number, and Massachusetts is called upon for thirty thousand.

Where is Hooker? It was reported, in the early part of the week, a large part of his army was strewn along the Orange and Alexandria railroad, near Warrenton Junction. But we have no idea he is there now. Lincoln has called him, we doubt not, to cover Washington.

The defamer of McClellan will attempt to imitate his Maryland campaign. But our generals are immensely ahead of him. Last year we sent into Maryland a battle-wasted footsore army. They fed on green corn and apples for want of food, and arrived weak and exhausted. Now we send an army in excellent condition, full fed, and in the highest spirits. They are in Maryland all bright and fresh. It is Hooker who will have to make forced marches to bring his whipped men in front of those who have whipped them so often that both sides recognise it as a thing of course.

YANKEE OUTRAGES IN GLOUCESTER COUNTY.

The following paragraph requires no comment—deeds such as those detailed are too frequent to excite surprise in the minds of any at all acquainted with the Northern mode of warfare, among a people whom they profess to consider friends and fellow-citizens:—

The Yankees have recently been committing a series of outrages in the county of Gloucester, Virginia. During the past week they visited York River, and after burning his stable and cornhouse, stole all the horses of Mr. W. T. Taliaferro but two, and all the horses of General W. B. Taliaferro but one. From there, they went to the house of Dr. Philip A. Taliaferro, the only practising physician in the neighbourhood, and destroyed his stock of medicines, stole his clothes and books, and some of his chairs. Every house on the river was visited and plundered. They burned the barn on the farm of Mr. James Dabney; went to the residence of Mr. Patterson Smith, who suffered so severely some time ago, and searched his house again, and stole every horse upon his farm. They also visited, we understand, the farms of Messrs. James and Charles Talbot, of this city, and took all their stock of horses, cows, and wagons, and destroyed nearly all their furniture. Two gunboats co-operated with the land force.

The officers landed at Mr. W. T. Taliaferro's, and though his house was searched, they are represented as having been polite and respectful to the ladies of the family. One gentleman of the county was compelled to surrender his gold watch, some of the scoundrels presenting a cocked pistol, and demanding it at the peril of his life in the event of his refusal.

DEATH OF THE DUKE OF HAMILTON.—The late Duke, who died in Paris, on Wednesday, was not only a peer of England, but also the premier peer of Scotland, and a peer of France. From the Red Book we learn that the late Right Honourable William Alexander Archibald Hamilton Douglas, Duke of Hamilton, Marquis of Hamilton, Douglas, and Clydesdale, Earl of Angus, Arrian, and Lanark, Baron Hamilton, Baron of Abernethy, Jedburgh Forest, Aven, Polmont, Machanishire, and Innerdale, and premier peer in the peerage of Scotland, Duke of Brandon and Baron Dutton, county Chester, in that of Great Britain (by which titles the Duke sat in the House of Lords), and Duke of Chastellault in France, was the only son of William, tenth Duke, by Susan Euphemia, second daughter of Mr. William Beckford, the author of Vathek, and owner of Fonthill Abbey. He was born on the 19th of February, 1811, so that he was in his fifty-third year. He married on the 23rd of February, 1843, her Serene Highness the Princess Maria Amelia Elizabeth Caroline, youngest daughter of Charles Louis Frederick, late reigning Grand Duke of Baden, by the late Grand Duchess Stephanie, and cousin of the Emperor Napoleon III. By his marriage the Duke leaves surviving issue, William Alexander Louis Stephen, Marquis of Douglas and Clydesdale, born March 12, 1845; Lord Charles, born May 18, 1847; and Lady Mary Victoria, born December 11, 1850. The late Duke was Hereditary Keeper of Holyrood Palace, (an honour held by his ancestors since 1646), Knight Marischal of Scotland, and Colonel of the Queen's Own Royal Lanark Militia, and was from 1849 to 1857 Major Commandant of the Glasgow Yeomanry. He was Lord Lieutenant of Lanarkshire, and a Deputy-Lieutenant of the county of Bute. The titles and estates are inherited by his eldest son, the Marquis of Douglas and Clydesdale.

REPORTED SEIZURE OF A CALIFORNIA MAIL STEAMER BY THE ALABAMA.—A telegram was received on Wednesday at Liverpool, from Lloyd's, dated Barbadoes, June 25, to the effect that the steamship Moses Taylor, with $1,000,000 of Californian gold, had been seized by the Confederate cruiser Alabama, and that the conveying vessel was sunk. This report is probably incorrect, as the Moses Taylor was in the Pacific and the Alabama in the Gulf of Mexico, according to the latest advices. Another telegram from Barbadoes states that the prize crew of a vessel captured by the Florida, being pursued by a Federal vessel, ran her ashore and fired her. The Federal Consul claimed the wreck, but the Vice-Admiralty Court took possession of it.

"I HAVE no confidence, therefore, in this policy of doing nothing, nor can I imagine that a great country like this can separate itself from all the affairs of the world, and say, 'Let not our voice be heard, or our influence prevail. We must look only to ourselves, and take no part in the politics of the world.'" This frank and unadorned statement is in strict accordance with the principles that we have constantly advocated in opposition to the policy of selfish inactivity pursued by our Foreign Secretary in reference to America, and we commend it to his attention. Strange to say, the above words were used by Earl Russell himself on Monday night, in the course of the debate on Poland. His lordship did not conclude his speech without explaining these generous utterances, and limiting their meaning. With respect to Poland, our only right of interference is to encourage insurrection by diplomatic action, and at the last moment avow that we do not mean to move a finger to enforce our diplomacy, but we will leave the Poles to be dealt with by Russia. Earl Russell said we were justified in interfering with Poland because of the treaty of Vienna, but we had no right to interfere in America because we had no such treaty. Surely, if we wanted an excuse for intervention in the name of our interest, and for the sake of humanity, we might find it in the separate recognition of the several States, as in the Treaty of Vienna, which treaty has been broken over and over again.

TO OUR FRIENDS AND SUBSCRIBERS.

Our friends in the United Kingdom and on the Continent are earnestly requested to forward to us, at their earliest convenience, such information relative to the military movements and condition of affairs in America as they may receive through private letters, either from the United States, or from the Confederate States. They may rely upon the most scrupulous precautions being observed; that no names or facts leading to identification will, under any circumstances, be revealed. No communications, however, will be noticed unless authenticated by a responsible name. Southern newspapers, of any date, will be useful and acceptable presents.

For the convenience of our distant subscribers, all the receipts for subscriptions signed by any of the official representatives, or commissioned officers of the Confederate States, will be recognized at this office.

Our subscribers in the South will have their paper supplied through HENRY HOTZE, Esq., the Confederate States' Commercial Agent at London, who has kindly tendered us his services in this respect during the continuance of the blockade.

Subscription, 25s. per annum—post paid, 30s., payable in advance. All communications on business to be addressed, and Post-Office Orders made payable to, J. B. HOPKINS, 13, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, London E.C.

The INDEX may be obtained, and payments for subscriptions or other dues to the paper made:—
At Liverpool, to Wm. KNOX, Secretary Southern Club, 55, Brown's-buildings.
At Paris, to Messrs. PFEIFFER and MULLER, 52, Rue du Château d'Eau, Paris.
At Turin, to Sr. FILIPPO MANETTA, 4, Borgo Nuovo.

THE INDEX.

THURSDAY, JULY 16, 1863.

BRITISH JACKSON MONUMENTAL FUND.

The Honorary Treasurer of the Jackson Statue Fund acknowledges the receipt of the following subscriptions since July 9th.

Lord Edwin Hill Trevor, M.P.	..	..	£5	0
Mrs. Majnard Ingram	..	..	5	0
Lord Campbell	..	..	10	0
Captain Thompson	..	..	1	0

England and Southern Statesmanship.

"ENGLAND has no interest to maintain the moral superiority of the South, for it is to Southern Statesmen that she owes the numerous insults she has received from America, and the generally impracticable tone of American diplomacy." This is the language of the leading organ of British public opinion in a recent article professedly friendly and commendatory to the South. It expresses a popular conviction which has outlived most of the other equally glaring misconceptions about the South and its position in the late Union, and which, thanks to Northern ingenuity in perverting the truth, has gained so firm a hold upon the public mind of this country, that to dispute it at this late day will appear, even to many friendly readers, as something rather worse than a paradox. And yet not only is it not true in fact, but the very reverse is the truth. It is the turbulent, restless, quarrelsome, excitable democracy of the Northern States, egged on by reckless and ambitious demagogues, that has constantly driven the transatlantic Federation to the verge of hostile collision with other countries, and especially with this Empire; and it is the staunch conservatism of the Southern populations which has more than once stemmed the impetuous torrent, and the prudence and sagacity of Southern Statesmanship which have averted the threatening storm.

We might content ourselves with the a priori argument in support of our position, and we might ask which of the two great sections of the late Union was most exposed to the temptation of breaking the peace of the world on any pretence whatever? Was it the agricultural free-trade South, with its fixed population, incapable of artificial or extraneous increase—the South, absorbed in a desperate struggle to maintain its ground against the preponderating rival section—the South, which had nothing to expect from further territorial expansion except an addition to the already overwhelming strength of its rival? Or was it not rather the North, whose commerce and manufactures were in jealous competition with those of Great Britain—the North, eager for maritime supremacy, and intoxicated with visions of "manifest destiny"—seeking outlets for the stream of foreign immigration which inundated its shores—its lust of territory sharpened by the contiguity of British possessions? Was it the jealous competitor and greedy neighbour, or the wealthy consumer and distant customer, that would be most likely to come into collision with this country? The answer is self-evident. Or we might start at the facts of the present; and we might ask, has the North, since it was released from "the incubus of Southern dictation," shown itself more friendly and more conciliatory to Great Britain than the Union in its integrity? Has its diplomacy, as represented by Mr. Seward, Mr. Dayton, and Mr. Cassius M. Clay, been less impracticable? Or are the insults systematically perpetrated by Wilkes and his colleagues less numerous and less galling than those she had to complain of before Southern statesmanship was banished from Washington?

But we need not rely upon arguments of this nature. The truth is broadly traced on every page of American history. Open any volume of Congressional debates. Wherever the eye lights upon a vehement denunciation of the "effete monarchies of despotical Europe;" wherever shameless boasting, insolent threats, impudent vulgarity move your pity or disgust, you will find a Northern speaker addressing from the legislative arena a constituency whose tastes he consults, and whose self-conceit he flatters. The exceptions are so few and stand so boldly in relief, that they only the more conclusively prove the rule. The "spread Eagle" and all its rhetorical paraphernalia have constituted from the beginning the exclusive property of the North, and secession neither did nor could carry off any part thereof. Among other items of this delectable stock in trade of the Northern politicians is the patent process of punishing England by fomenting an insurrection in Ireland, and of this Mr. John Quincy Adams, the father of the Federal representative in London, may claim the merit of invention. Frenzied appeals to popular passions fell upon deaf ears among the sparse rural populations of the South, whose representatives replied to them, sometimes by silent scorn, more often by solemn warnings, and always by prudence and moderation in action. Take as an illustration the Oregon dispute. During the whole period between the last war with Great Britain and the dissolution of the Union, there has occurred no crisis so dangerous to the peaceful relations of the two countries. The alliterative war-cry, "Fifty-four forty or fight," resounded from one end of the Northern States to the other, drowning the voice of reason and of common sense, just as did, two years ago, the cry of "Union." It was a question easy of settlement by negotiations,—the United States claiming as the boundary of a tract of wilderness, the line 54deg. 40m. latitude, while Great Britain insisted on placing the line a few degrees southward—ultimately compromised by adopting the present frontier, coincident with the 49th degree. But it suited the purpose of Northern politicians to describe the British claim as a heinous attempt at aggression, and characteristic of her "insatiable rapacity;" and accordingly they delivered themselves from the stump and in the Halls of Congress of philippics against this country, much after the fashion of the orators and presses of the present day, when speaking of the "rebels." The aged ex-President, John Quincy Adams, of Massachusetts, acted in literal accordance with the example of his Puritan ancestry, who resolved "that the earth was the inheritance of the saints, and that they were the saints." He had the Holy Scriptures read by the clerk of the House of Representatives to prove that God had decreed man to multiply and replenish the earth, and that to His chosen people He had given the heathen for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession. This, he argued with a blasphemous application of the Word of God to the purposes of politics which has never found toleration or imitation outside of New England—this was the title by which the United States might rightfully claim the disputed tract in Oregon. "The Government of Great Britain," he added, "hold the island of Ireland by no other title. . . . If we come to war, she will find enough to do to maintain that island. . . . I want the country (Oregon) for our Western pioneers." This was said on the 13th of April, 1846. Almost simultaneously in the Senate, General Lewis Cass, of Illinois, the acknowledged leader of the Democratic party of the North, as ex-President Adams was of the Whigs, thundered forth threats of war and conquest against Great Britain. "Let us have no red lines on the map of Oregon," he said, "and if war comes be it so. . . . England might as well attempt to blow up the rock of Gibraltar with a squib as to attempt to subdue us. . . . Why the honourable Senator from South Carolina fixes upon ten years for the duration of the war, I know not; long before the expiration of that period, if we are not utterly unworthy of our name and our birthright, we should sweep the British power from the Continent of North America." (Congressional Debates, March 30, 1846.)

Much more violent language might be quoted from the almost daily speeches of Northern members of both Houses during that memorable controversy; not a word in behalf of peace or conciliation was heard, except from the South, and just as the North was united, without distinction of parties, for war, so the South, democrats and whigs alike, was resolved on peace and compromise. Mr. W. L. Yancey, of Alabama, was then a rising young member of the Lower House, and already then, as in his later years, regarded as a representative of ultra-Southern views. Let us see what this young Hotspur of the South had to say on so inflammatory a topic:—

We should be careful lest prosperity and continued success should blind us to consequences; lest in our pride we fall. Sir, it cannot be treason—it cannot be cowardly—it cannot be unwise—for us calmly and dispassionately to consider our true position in this matter. And I beg of our friends that, if some of us of the South are disposed to put a curb on this hot impetuosity, we shall not be deemed their enemies on this great issue. . . . I desire to notice these animated attacks of England, these burning appeals to our patriotism, these outbreaks of enthusiastic love for our country, these firm resolves to resist encroachment and insult. But I look around in vain for a point, to which to apply all this pent-up ammunition. This is, then, it seems to me, a useless waste of patriotic enthusiasm. . . . I can well imagine, however, how such a course will operate upon the public mind, how the honest farmer, on reading such furious denunciations of what he is accustomed to think his natural enemy, and of her rapacity, can have his feelings wrought up under the idea that his country is the object of English aggression and overbearance. I much fear that this is the surest way of accounting for the strong popular ferment in relation to this question. . . . The arguments of the venerable gentleman from Massachusetts (J. Q. Adams), breathe a fierce and energetic war spirit. Truly and well did he himself depict the whole character of this movement, when he illustrated it by citing a celebrated event in history, exclaiming with very great emphasis, "This is the military way of doing business." (Congressional Debates, Jan. 5, 1846.)

South Carolina was at that time represented in the Senate by her greatest statesman, the author and apostle of secession, John C. Calhoun. Mr. Calhoun was opposed to war for territorial aggrandisement whether to the northward or the southward; and no man more clearly understood the true interests of the section of which he is so pre-eminently the typical representative. But it will be observed that he deprecated war with Great Britain for higher and nobler reasons, the mere statement of which should for ever silence the malignant or ignorant reiteration of the error that Southern statesmanship in the old Union was hostile to this country:—

Having been thus brought, by a line of policy to which I was opposed, to choose between compromise and war, I without hesitation take the former. . . . I am opposed to war between the United States and Great Britain. They are the two countries the furthest in advance in this great career of improvement, and of amelioration of the condition of our race. They are, besides, diffusing by their widely extended commerce, blessings over the whole globe. We have been raised up by Providence for these great and noble purposes, and I trust we shall not fail to fulfil our high destiny. I am especially opposed to war with England at this time, because I hold that it is now to be decided, whether we are to exist in future as friends or enemies. War, at this time and for this cause, would decide supremacy. We should hereafter stand in the relation of enemies. It would give birth to a struggle, in which one or the other would have to succumb, before it terminated, and which in the end would prove ruinous to both. On the contrary, if war can be avoided, powerful causes are now in operation, calculated to cement and secure a lasting, I hope a perpetual, peace between the two countries, by breaking down the barriers which impede their commerce, and thereby uniting them more closely by a vastly enlarged commercial intercourse, equally beneficial to both. If we should now succeed in setting the example of free trade between us, it would force all other civilized countries to follow it in the end. The consequences would be to diffuse a prosperity, greater and more universal than can well be conceived, and to unite by bonds of mutual interest the people of all countries. But in advocating the cause of free trade, I am actuated not less by the political consequences likely to flow from it, than the advantages to be derived from it in an economical point of view. I regard it in the dispensation of Providence as one of the great means of ushering in the happy period foretold by inspired prophets and poets, when war shall be no more. I am finally opposed to war, because peace is pre-eminent our policy. (Congressional Debates, March 16, 1846.)

So spoke the great Southern statesman, the representative man of "fire-eating, slave-holding, secessionist South Carolina," while Northern demagogues were hounding the people into a suicidal war. The South was then still strong enough to make her voice heard. Her counsels prevailed, and a great calamity was averted. We trust that these few quotations will be sufficient to illustrate the true positions in the past of North and South toward England. They are the positions which their respective interests and aspirations rendered obligatory on each, and they are the positions which they must continue to occupy until the conditions of their existence shall be utterly changed. While leagued together into one great empire, Europe failed to distinguish their opposite tendencies, and generally held both alike responsible for the faults of one, while she was not equally impartial in crediting the virtues. Their superior genius in politics rendered Southern men conspicuous in the conduct of the foreign affairs of the whole Union, and they were thus held chargeable with much they could not prevent, without account being taken of the more serious collisions which their influence averted. In the last few years of the tottering Federation, many Southern men became less anxious to avoid foreign complications, in the desperate hope of escaping from the impending internal dangers. But these cases are too few and too recent to weigh against the traditional policy of the South, so long as it retained the numerical and electoral strength to assert its equality in the Union. Yet these isolated cases have been perverted into a significance they never possessed, just as the ebullitions of Southern anger and contempt, when Slavery is made a political engine of malignant enmity, are daily being tortured to bear the construction of deliberate defiance to humanity and civilization.

The Battles in Pennsylvania.

THE event on which the destinies of the Northern Republic depend, and on which the eager expectation of the Old and New Worlds is fixed, has taken place. A great battle, or rather a series of great battles, has been fought between the Federal and Confederate armies in Pennsylvania, and possibly by this time the crisis of the war is over. But the news is terribly meagre. It is the old story. Tremendous slaughter and doubtful results. Two great armies mingling day after day in desperate conflict, and scarcely separating at night. Thousands killed and wounded, but no decisive victory. The vanquished claiming a success, and the conquerors hardly able to assert a triumph. Such is the picture of the field of Gettysburg presented to us by the telegrams from New York. We must deal with the facts as they are given, and hope that the future, as it brings more light, will also reveal a more definite issue.

Whether General Lee in his invasion of the Northern States had any precise object in view beyond that of a gigantic raid, a temporary occupation of the rich district of the Cumberland Valley, and the appropriation of its vast stores of supplies and provisions to the service and subsistence of the Southern army, is not yet clear. It was part of his plan to strike terror into the very heart of the North, and his line of advance had the double advantage of running directly through the farm lands of Pennsylvania and Maryland, and at the same time threatening three or four of the principal cities of the North. Sweeping the Shenandoah valley of its Northern garrisons, and finding at Winchester ammunition and stores in sufficient quantities to furnish his army for two months, the Confederate General pushed on straight through Maryland into Franklin county, and there took undisputed possession of an immense tract of country, which for natural fertility and excellence of cultivation is probably unsurpassed in the world. From Shepherdstown on the Potomac to within a few miles of Harrisburg, on the Susquehanna—a distance of some eighty miles; from west to east, from the Tascorora mountains to Wrightsville and Columbia, the light troops of the Confederate army have spread themselves at their will; and from farm and city the horses, cattle, produce and stores have been swept off and hurried southwards to Winchester, where immense depots are now forming for the support of the Southern army in the impoverished and desolated districts of Virginia. What losses have been inflicted on the State of Pennsylvania by forced contributions, the destruction of its great lines of railroad and bridges, remain to be told. The New York Herald estimates at $50,000,000 the damage the Keystone State alone has incurred. If to this be added the ravages which the invasion has necessarily inflicted on Western Maryland, we shall see that the North too has had its taste of the calamities of the war; and even if a fortnight hence we hear of Lee's return without another decisive victory, we shall still think his operations have been worth the risk run and the price they have cost.

It was evidently the Confederate General's plan to menace as many points as possible simultaneously, and so distract the enemy's attention and divide his forces. From Chambersburg, an excellent position for defence, and possessing capital railway communications with Hagerstown and Williamsport, his line of retreat, he threatened Pittsburg, the great national foundry of the North, the whole line of the Susquehanna from Harrisburg southward, the Quaker city itself, and even New York; whilst his light columns operating from that base, left Baltimore and Washington only one communication with the North, and compelled the authorities at both capitals to concentrate all the available forces for purposes of defence. Thus the army of the Potomac was unaided by the levies from New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, and General Lee knew that his only antagonist in the field would be the force under General Hooker. On the last days of the month of June, it was reported that the army of the Potomac, under General Meade, Hooker's successor, was in rapid motion, and Lee drew his scattered forces together to meet him. From York and Carlisle his flying columns were called in, and a new line was formed along the Cumberland Valley Railroad, of which Chambersburg appears to have been the base, the extreme left resting upon Shippensburg, the right securing its communication with Hagerstown. The Federal army moved across the Potomac for Frederick city, Maryland; the Harper's Ferry garrison, with the remnants of Milroy's division, abandoning Maryland Heights, and swelling its strength by some 10,000 men. From Frederick City the Federals pushed on almost due North in the direction of Gettysburg, and there the battle is fought. Lee has cautiously moved his army in a south-east direction, still narrowing his line, and shortening his distance from Hagerstown; and on the 1st of July the advanced divisions of the two armies came into collision a mile or two east of Gettysburg.

The account of the battle is from Northern sources, but it admits a defeat. Despite a temporary success, the Federals were driven from their position and through Gettysburg, with very severe losses in officers; General Reynolds, their commander, being amongst the killed. The Confederates occupied Gettysburg. On the 2nd instant the action was resumed, and General Meade announces "one of the severest contests of the war," and the repulse of the enemy at all points, but admits a considerable loss in killed and wounded. At eight o'clock, A.M., on the 3rd, he reports that the Confederates attacked him all along his line at daylight, and that "thus far they have made no impression." At eight o'clock, P.M., the Federal General states that the enemy had twice assaulted his line, and were each time repulsed, leaving in his hands 3,000 prisoners. Again the Federal loss is considerable. At night the battle ceases; and General Meade is afraid the enemy is escaping. He is undecieved. The enemy is still in force. The drawn battle has yet to be fought; the final act of that bloody drama has yet to be played out. But the curtain falls, so far as the Old World is concerned, with a proclamation from President Lincoln, in which he claims high honours for the Federal army, and promises "great success for the Union cause on the morrow." Into the dim and terrible uncertainty of that morrow we will not attempt to penetrate. The news we have, coming from Northern sources, and issued from Washington at such a crisis, must be partial to the Federals. It is not likely that at this juncture the Federal authorities would learn honesty. As no victory is claimed, as the utmost that can be said by General Meade is that he has maintained his position, with forces considerably superior in numbers to those opposed to him, we have good reason to believe that victory has once more rested with the Confederates. But the gallantry on both sides has been great—the struggle has been obstinate—the carnage frightful. We trust that all these successes and disasters have not been without decisive results. Certainly, the absence of news at New York on the evening of the 4th is not unsuggestive of disaster to the Federal army. Had there been a success to report on Independence Day, General Meade would have found means to despatch it.

The Discharged Order.

IT is an understood rule of Parliamentary courtesy, that when a Minister of the Crown takes upon himself to declare that the discussion of a question—especially a question of foreign policy—at a particular moment would be detrimental to the public service, the members interested in the subject defer to his wishes, and withdraw any motions of which they may have given notice. But for this practice the House of Commons, with its restless anxiety to supervise every proceeding of the Executive, and its well-grounded fear that the Government may be committing the country, without its knowledge, to measures involving the most serious consequences, would be apt to go into discussions that would paralyse the diplomacy of the Government, and make negotiation with foreign Powers absolutely impossible. Government cannot be carried on in public, however necessary it may be that its every act should, ere long, be liable to public criticism; and a Legislature sitting with open doors must be content to forego the privilege of controlling the foreign policy of the Administration otherwise than by informal expressions of feeling, from which the Administration may judge what course is most likely to meet with Parliamentary approval. Indeed, if any member so far doubts the word of the Minister as to hold that discussion is less inconvenient than silence, it must be on the ground that the Minister is so little to be trusted that he is not fit to have the conduct of the foreign policy of the country without direct interference on the part of Parliament; and if such distrust be really felt, the proper remedy is not to advise the Government, but to change it; not to persevere with the motion pronounced by the Executive to be unsafe and unseasonable, but move a vote of want of confidence. Now it is probable that Mr. Roebuck does not disbelieve the personal assertion of Lord Palmerston; it is more than probable that he would not be willing to concur in a vote of want of confidence in the noble Lord; it is almost certain that such a vote would be rejected by a large majority, even in a House which is almost evenly divided between Liberals and Conservatives, and in which at least one-fourth of the Liberals are not staunch supporters of the Liberal Government. When the motion was first brought forward, we expressed our fear that, if opposed by Lord Palmerston, it would be rejected not on its own merits, but on his; not because the House desires to withhold recognition, but because it does not choose to quarrel with the present Prime Minister. And from the moment that the Premier expressed his objection not merely to the motion, but to its further discussion, it became obviously the duty of Mr. Roebuck as a member of Parliament, and his policy as a friend of the Confederacy, to yield to the request of the responsible chief of her Majesty's Administration, and withdraw a motion which threatened to embarrass a Cabinet which he did not desire to overthrow. And therefore, though somewhat disappointed by the issue of a debate by which much good might have been done—which might have ended in giving peace to America and restoring prosperity to England—we are not disposed to quarrel with Mr. Roebuck's motion of Monday night, that the order for the continuance of that debate be read and discharged.

The ostensible reason for Lord Palmerston's objection to proceed with the discussion, was the manner in which the name of the Emperor of the French had been mixed up therewith; and we incline to think that this reason may have been the true one. It does not follow that Mr. Roebuck was in any degree to blame for introducing that name in the way and for the purpose for which he employed it. Those who charged him with using the Imperial authority to influence the House of Commons, and with making himself the organ and mouthpiece of French dictation, said not only what was not true, but what they must have known not to be true. We except from this reproach Lord Robert Montagu, whose rapid, random, reckless style of talking may naturally lead him to say many things which he does not mean, and who is quite silly enough to be capable of meaning what he said. It matters to no one, except the noble Lord himself, what he says or what he believes; for nothing that falls from his lips can affect for a moment the opinions of any rational being; but we are willing to give him the credit of sincerity. We cannot do as much for Mr. Forster, who hinted rather than stated this accusation; or for Mr. Bright, who stated it boldly and in the coarsest form. These gentlemen understand plain English, as they speak it, admirably well. They knew that Mr. Roebuck had not attempted to persuade the House of Commons that they ought to follow the policy of France. They had heard the Emperor's words quoted; and they knew, as we know, that those words declared that he would follow the policy of England whatever it might be, but that, for his part, he wished that it should be a policy of recognition or of mediation. They knew that there was not in this the semblance of French dictation, or of an attempt to bias the House; and they knew therefore that the charge they pressed against their colleague and quondam friend was not only not true, but was the very reverse of the truth. There had, however, been an attempt to influence, or rather to coerce the House by means of the alleged opinions of the Emperor. A rumour had been circulated, with great diligence, by some party or parties unknown but not unsuspected, that the Emperor's mind had changed; that he had become a convert to Lord Russell's policy of servile complaisance and cowardly inaction. The object of this falsehood was, of course, to defeat Mr. Roebuck's motion by persuading the House that it would be useless; that the Emperor if addressed as he proposed, would refuse to listen to us. This disgraceful intrigue was defeated by Mr. Roebuck's prompt and vigorous measures; and its origin may be confidently attributed to those who turned round on him who had baffled it, and accused him of trying to do by a true statement of the Emperor's views that which they had tried to prevent by a false one. The second falsehood was worthy of the first; and both were worthy of the friends of General Butler and of Abraham Lincoln.

If Mr. Roebuck could have relied on the good faith of the Government, he might have allowed this rumour to circulate, and appealed to them to contradict it. And this would have been the regular proceeding. Or he might have suggested to the Emperor that the contradiction should be administered by the Moniteur, which would have been the most effective and satisfactory method of accomplishing the purpose; but it is possible that His Majesty had reasons of his own for avoiding this course. It was clearly impossible for Mr. Roebuck to depend on the honesty of the English Cabinet. Their recent conduct has shown them capable of worse treachery than would have been involved in an ambiguous speech from Mr. Layard, stating that he did not know whether the Emperor's mind had changed, but suggesting that it probably had. This justified, in his opinion and in ours, his "irregular" appeal to Paris, and his citation of the Emperor's words in the House of Commons. "Irregular and inconvenient" such a course may be; but there is worse inconvenience in the circulation of false rumours on questions of foreign policy under the tacit sanction of the Government, and more serious irregularity in the communication of the private notes of an ally to the very Government for whose perusal they were not intended, and whose hostility they were certain to excite.

In regard to this last matter, it is certain that a gross falsehood has been told, wilfully or not, by one of three persons. No one believes that Mr. Roebuck has wilfully lied; of that he is incapable; and that he neither lied nor was mistaken may be inferred from the fact that this statement was not contradicted or modified in the paragraph in which the Moniteur referred to his audience. It is impossible to suppose that the Emperor said, either voluntarily or not, that which was not the case;—he must have known the fact; and he could not tell a falsehood with the certainty of having it published or contradicted within a fortnight. It is, of course, impossible, likewise, that Lord Russell should have kept his under-secretary in ignorance of the receipt of the communication in question; impossible that he should have betrayed it to Mr. Seward; impossible that he should have allowed Mr. Layard to get up in the House of Commons and deny the existence of such a communication, if it had really existed. These things are impossible—but we are by no means sure that the impossible has not occurred. We remember Lord Russell's prevarications about the Vienna negotiations; and we feel that there is scarcely any equivocation of which he may not be guilty. And Mr. Layard's conduct on Friday night proved either that he has a very imperfect knowledge of the business of his department, or a very extraordinary notion of the license to which Ministers are entitled. He sneered at Mr. Lindsay as an amateur diplomatist; he reminded him that on one occasion he had come over from Paris after an interview with the Emperor, fancying himself a special envoy, and had been repudiated by telegraph. On Monday Mr. Lindsay replied to this charge. It then came out that for three years he has been employed unofficially, but with the aid, sanction, and full knowledge of the Ministry, in trying to supplement the work so blunderingly done by Mr. Cobden. In the course of a long series of conversations with the Emperor he was asked to make a certain communication to the Foreign-office here, and he did so. On his return to Paris he was received as usual, and heard nothing of any telegraphic or other "repudiation." Passing strange he called Mr. Layard's story; remarking very sensibly that if he had exceeded his instructions in such a manner as to provoke a repudiatory telegram, he would, on his next call at the Tuileries, have found the Emperor "not at home." From this story it is plain that either Mr. Layard is ignorant of a matter so important as Mr. Lindsay's relations with his department, or thinks himself entitled to misrepresent such a matter in the grossest way; and that he is, for some reason or other, liable to tell stories "passing strange" to the detriment of those who oppose him in debate.

As it is granted on all hands that the account given by Mr. Roebuck, and confirmed in the most absolute manner by Mr. Lindsay, of their audiences is perfectly accurate, the continuance of the debate must have brought out in painful distinctness the obvious fact that a lie has been told, and that it has been told either by his Imperial Majesty or by the British Foreign-office. Unless Lord Palmerston was prepared to dismiss his colleague and apologise for his conduct, he could not allow a discussion to proceed in which such an issue was involved. But the necessity of withdrawal arose not from the painful truths told by the member for Sheffield, but from the extraordinary contradiction given to them by the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs. Mr. Layard, not Mr. Roebuck, is answerable for the necessity which induced Lord Palmerston to close the debate.

Independently of this diplomatic reason for a withdrawal of the motion, there was the obvious parliamentary reason that it could not have been carried, and that its defeat would have done great harm. On Friday night it was well observed by Lord Robert Cecil—than whom no man in the House of Commons takes a juster or bolder view of our American policy—that the well-wishers of the South all desired the withdrawal of the motion, while the avowed devotees of the Northern democracy were eager to have it pressed to a division, Mr. Forster, the self-styled fanatic who sits for Bradford, and Mr. Peter Taylor, whom Leicester has sent to Parliament in order to show that neither sense, eloquence, nor manners are necessary qualifications for a seat in the House of Commons, were strongly opposed to the withdrawal of the motion. They knew that the resistance of the Ministry, several of whom are supposed to be friendly to the Confederate cause, would deprive it of a large number of votes; that many more would vote against it for fear of war; and that the silence of the Conservative leaders would make their party reluctant to run the risk of ousting the Government on a question on which the chiefs of Opposition do not seem to have made up their minds. The result of an unfavourable division would have been to strengthen the Northern faction in the House and in the Cabinet; to mortify the Emperor of the French; to gratify Mr. Lincoln; to insult the South; and to fetter the discretion of the Government for the future. It is well, therefore, that a division has been avoided. We know, as every one knows, that four-fifths of the House of Commons rejoice to see the Confederate States independent, and believe that they ought to be recognised; and we are glad that the minority have not been able to snatch a division which would have utterly misrepresented the real views of Parliament and of the country.

The Administration is now left free to act as it pleases; and its chief has taken upon himself the whole responsibility of action or inaction, by declining to receive from Parliament either advice or absolution. He is at liberty to avail himself of the opportunity now opening to him, and to recognise the Confederacy under circumstances which will afford a triumphant answer to all cavillers. He has it in his power to receive the Ambassador of a Government whose armies are actually overrunning the enemy's territory; to send an ambassador to a capital which, no longer threatened by a hostile force, echoes with thanksgiving for victories which have transferred the war beyond the Southern frontiers. Who can say that he has not the right to recognise the independence of a Power which seems able, if she were willing, to subjugate her rival? or that he would not do wisely to secure the friendship of a people who will probably, before many weeks are over, impose terms of peace on those who have pretended to treat them as rebels, and threatened them now with conquest and now with extermination? And how can he excuse himself if he throw away such an opportunity, if he renounce so glorious a title to the goodwill of our nearest kinsmen, and the confidence of our most valuable commercial ally, if, for fear of quarrel with the conquered, he sacrifice the friendship of the conquerors; if he persist in an injustice in order to avert an unspeakable blessing?

British Interests in Secession.

UNTIL lately it might have been supposed that Englishmen were unanimous in believing that the disruption of the late United States was a great gain to their country. The friends of the Confederacy have unhesitatingly avowed that their sympathies originate, not only in a sense of justice to a kindred people nobly and triumphantly defending their precious heritage of freedom, but also in the firm conviction that the peace of the world, the security of British commerce, and the inviolability of our North American territory are severally promoted and assured by the Secession of the South. The partisans of the North have incidentally but emphatically admitted the reasonableness of this assumption. They have incessantly reproached the advocates of recognition with being instigated by a policy of extreme selfishness. Over and over again the Anglo-Federal press and the loquacious leaders of the Anglo-Federal faction have denounced the States as the unworthy rejoicing of a narrow-minded aristocracy at the failure of republican institutions, or as a craven satisfaction at the weakening of a dreaded rival. But no attempt has been made by them to disprove the allegation that the progress of the most arrogant Power on earth was a thorn in our side, for it is too manifest to be denied or even modified. All Englishmen, except the Anglo-Federal faction, have been painfully conscious that we have openly condoned insults, and meekly submitted to acts of injustice from the United States, that we would not have tolerated from any European Government, and that the concessions we have made have involved our loss of national prestige. Frankly, we have been terrified by the most distant prospect of war with the United States. Nor was the fear unjustifiable or dishonourable. Our army and navy were superior to the army and navy of the Union, and, confiding in our pluck and resources, we felt assured of coming out of the struggle with our glory untarnished and with the integrity of our empire vindicated. Yet, under the most favourable auspices, we must have paid a terrible price for victory. The United States could have starved our cotton operatives, crippled our cotton trade, and, in the midst of war, fostered her own manufactures at our expense. Formerly, when she threatened to cut off the supply of the raw material of our staple industry, we used to boast that we could with our fleet open the cotton ports to our merchantmen and help ourselves. This war has taught us that that boast was idle. The Southerner will not sell his cotton to an enemy. The anxiety to avert a cotton famine was amply sufficient to make us shrink from an American war, under provocations that would undoubtedly have led to hostilities in Europe. Then there was Canada, so easy to invade and so costly to defend, that it was a hostage that we should keep peace at almost any price. No marvel that our relations with the Washington Government were always critical and unpleasant. We were, despite our imperial strength, placed at a telling disadvantage. In the separation of the South from the North our people see that the United States lose the whip hand over us, and naturally are glad that England is relieved from a humiliating and harassing position.

Mr. Gladstone dissents from these views. He told the House of Commons, in the course of the remarkable speech which he delivered on the 30th June, that, in his opinion, the aggressive spirit of the North was more restrained by union than it will be by disunion. He said, "I never have agreed with those who thought it was a matter of high British interest that the old American Union should be torn in pieces. . . . I do not think that territorial extension necessarily adds to the vigour of a State. . . . The balanced state of the old American Union, which caused the whole of American politics to turn upon the relative strength of the slavery and Northern interests, was more favourable to us, more likely to ensure the continuance of peaceful relations in America, as well as the avoidance of all political complications arising from the connexion between this country and its colonies, than the state of things which would exist if the old American Union were to be divided into a cluster of Northern and a cluster of Southern States, the cluster of Northern States having lost all connexion with the slavery interests that were formerly adverse to extension northwards, and having, of course, every motive—I do not say by violent or illegitimate measures—to endeavour to re-establish their territorial grandeur by uniting themselves with the British colonies of North America." Seeing that there is the same conflict of interests now as there was before Secession, the conclusion we are forced to if we adopt this statement, is that so long as the North and South were politically and nationally one they were more likely to oppose each other than now, when they form distinct nationalities. Mr. Gladstone does not dispute, but inferentially asserts, that the United States did menace the peace and prosperity of the North, only he contends that the aggressive strength is increased by the loss of the South. If he can persuade the North to accept his theory, then the war will soon be ended. It is, however, an ingenious paradox that cannot stand the test of even a cursory examination. It is as curious as the complex attitude of Mr. Gladstone, when, as Lord Russell's ministerial colleague, he had to advocate inaction, that is, practically, a policy of aiding and abetting the Federals, and yet when with manly and generous frankness he confessed his admiration for the Confederacy, and his persuasion that the independence, of which he defended the continued non-recognition by the British Government, was manifestly and lastingly established.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer is a brilliant rhetorician, and ingeniously supported his paradox by an appeal to a truism with which we are all familiar. It is the fashion to protest that the British Empire is big enough, and that its further extension would be unwise, and this protest is always backed up with the argument that territorial extension does not add to the vigour of a State. But when does the increase of dominion become a source of weakness? Not while the process of increase is going on, or whilst that which has been acquired is maintained. According to the teaching of history, a power ceases to be formidable when disintegration has once set in. So it has been with Rome, with Spain, and with the Sultan Empire. As to the suggestion of the differences between the North and South being a guarantee of peace, it is first to be observed that political feuds do not hamper a Government in a foreign war. Russia, for example, found no impediment from Poland in 1854. It is a political axiom, a rule without an exception, that the nations which disturb the peace of the world are not those enjoying internal concord, but rather those which are torn with internal dissensions. Foreign war is the recognised remedy for discontent and disagreement at home. It was peculiarly so with America. It was those very political differences in the United States that made a foreign war always popular and imminent. Whenever there appeared some slight danger of the beloved Union being dissolved, a war with England was always spoken of as a means of saving it. It follows that the argument of the Chancellor of the Exchequer is altogether at fault, and that Secession has taken away one of the strongest motives for breaking the peace between England and the United States.

It is true that so long as the two sections were balanced, or, if Mr. Bright prefers it, so long as the South was dominant in the Government of the whole Union, there was very little danger of hostilities. The Southern planter did not want to quarrel with his best customer. The exporting part of the Union did not desire blockaded ports. The South naturally opposed the scheme of Northern aggrandisement, which contemplated the annexation of Canada. The interests of the South were adverse to a war with England, and to her we owe a peace of half a century. Then is not Mr. Gladstone right? No; and for two reasons. Whatever were the sectional differences and jealousies, they were little or nothing compared to the international differences and jealousies that will hereafter prevail. Besides, the balance of power within the Union had actually ceased to exist. The position of the North and South has been altogether changed in the last few years, not so much by creation of States as by immigration. The North at every decennial census, when the representation in Congress is adjusted by the ratio of population, had become more powerful, and at length dominant. If the South had remained in the Union, she must have henceforth followed the lead of the North in fostering the cotton manufacture of New England by imposing restrictions on the export of the raw material, and in essaying to conquer Canada. It is only as a separate power that the South could continue to balance the North—to be the ally and not the enemy of England.

It needs not, however, an elaborate argument to disprove the clever sophistry with which Mr. Gladstone compromises the issue between his ministerial obligations and his personal convictions. Our political advantages from the secession of the South are as evident as our commercial advantages. Henceforth we may resist the insolence and aggressiveness of the United States without jeopardising the prosperity of Lancashire. Our supply of the precious material will not depend upon the New England manufacturers, but upon the goodwill of the South, which is as much interested in selling as we are in buying cotton. Canada is still vulnerable, but the United States will not be able to enlist the manhood of the South in the enterprise, and will have to think of defending as well as of enlarging her border. Nay, the prime motive for annexing Canada is taken away by secession. The North has not wanted, and does not want room. She has enormous tracts of unpeopled territory, consisting of richer land than can be found in Canada. She wanted our possessions to give effect to the Monroe doctrine, and to add to the number of the Northern States in order to swamp the political representation of the South. The Monroe doctrine has become a thing of the past, for the independence of the Confederate States forbids its realization. There is no longer the incentive to acquire new States to politically overwhelm the South.

Without adding general to special arguments, it is apparent that Mr. Gladstone has no warrant for the startling assertion that disunion is strength. It is a curious parody on the legend of the Sybilline books when we are told that the Union is more to be dreaded as an antagonist, because many of her States have been—not swept away—but erected into a rival nationality. It is abundantly clear that the British friends of the South are the true friends of their country. They can treat with contempt the charge of selfishness, for in this case duty and interest are wedded. When Mr. Canning declared that he had called the New World into existence to redress the balance of the Old World, he only exaggerated his own share in the work. The New World was ordained for and has redressed the balance of the Old World; but assuredly, if a balance were not established in the New World itself, if the South had sacrificed her freedom rather than the Union, the continent of America might have become the China of the West, and England have had to mourn for the decadence of her commerce; for modern commerce, of which England is the chief representative, owes its existence to the New World, and, cut off from intercourse with the parent stem, must and would dwindle and decay. Vast, indeed, is the debt of gratitude England owes to the Secession of the South; and woe would it have been unto her if by the apathy of her Government the Southern people had been crushed by the Northern foe. Although we do not imagine that a reconstitution of the Union is possible on any basis, yet it is impossible for Mr. Roebuck to exaggerate the disaster to England that would ensue from that event.

A VETERAN OF SOCIETY. *

If a man desire hereafter—in three or four years, when a new succession of guests appears in the saloons and a new generation of looks on the tables of London—to achieve a reputation as a raconteur, able to amuse a dinner table or fill up the dreary void which always occurs between the appearance of the first guest in the drawing-room and the welcome summons of the butler, we cannot advise him to do better than deeply to study Captain Gronow's little volume, and carefully to commit to memory its most salient passages. There can be no better anecdotes; and no anecdotes can be better told. The first series of the gallant veteran's recollections was admirable; but this is, by general consent, an improvement on its predecessor. The "recollections" range over a period of some forty years, and are of all kinds, from small but not uninteresting contributions to the history of the Battle of Waterloo, to tittle tattle concerning such small deer as Beau Brummell, and illustrative sketches of the lives of French actresses and adventurers. The vast majority of the stories it contains are such as do not require the absence of ladies to give full effect to their point; and there is not one which comes under the description applicable to a good many historiettes of the same period, as exacting also the absence of gentlemen. This is no small merit in a veteran of the days of the Regency, and no trifling recommendation to a book whose character and appearance are certain to claim for it a place rather in the drawing-room than in the study.

* "Recollections and Anecdotes, being a second series of Reminiscences of the Court, the Camp, and the Clubs." By Capt. R. H. Gronow. London: Smith, Elder, and Co. 1863.

We do not pretend to know that all the sparkling phrases recorded by Captain Gronow are given exactly as they were spoken, or that every one of his anecdotes is literally accurate and altogether unembellished. One or two he is accused of spoiling; it is, therefore, only fair to give him the credit of having improved a good many others. About one-third of the little volume is filled with personal observations concerning the battle of Waterloo, at which the author was present as a subaltern with his regiment; and this is not the least interesting portion of the book, though not that which will be longest remembered, or most frequently quoted. The following description is certainly worthy of remembrance, and gives a striking picture of the terrible earnestness of the French attack, and the desperate heroism of the British resistance:—

During the battle our squares presented a shocking sight. Inside we were nearly suffocated by the smoke and smell from burnt cartridges. It was impossible to move a yard without treading upon a wounded comrade, or upon the bodies of the dead; and the loud groans of the wounded and dying were most appalling.

At four o'clock our square was a perfect hospital, being full of dead, dying, and mutilated soldiers. The charges of cavalry were in appearance very formidable, but in reality a great relief, as the artillery could no longer fire on us; the very earth shook under the enormous mass of men and horses. I shall never forget the strange noise our bullets made against the breastplates of Kellerman's and Millhaid's cuirassiers six or seven thousand in number, who attacked us with great fury. I can only compare it with a somewhat homely simile, to the noise of a violent hail-storm beating against panes of glass.

The artillery did great execution; but our musketry did not at first seem to kill many men, though it brought down a large number of horses, and created indescribable confusion. The horses of the first rank of cuirassiers, in spite of all the efforts of their riders, came to a stand-still, shaking and covered with foam, at about twenty yards' distance from our squares, and generally resisted all attempts to force them to charge the line of serried steel. On one occasion, two gallant French officers forced their way into a gap momentarily created by the discharge of artillery: one was killed by Staples, the other by Adair. Nothing could be more gallant than the behaviour of those veterans, many of whom had distinguished themselves on half the battle-fields of Europe.

In the midst of our terrible fire, their officers were seen as if on parade, keeping order in their ranks, and encouraging them. Unable to renew the charge, but unwilling to retreat, they brandished their swords with loud cries of "Vive l'Empereur!" and allowed themselves to be mowed down by hundreds rather than yield. Our men, who shot them down, could not help admiring the gallant bearing and heroic resignation of their enemies.

The Duke's comment on the battle also is worth recording. What it meant seems clear enough—that the battle was really won by the 12,000 Peninsula veterans:—

The late Mr. Creevey, the well-known Whig M.P., stated in my presence, at a dinner at Lord Darnley's in Berkeley-square, in 1816, that he was at the Duke of Wellington's quarters at Brussels, the night of the battle of Waterloo. It was late when the Duke entered, and, perceiving Mr. Creevey, shook him by the hand, and said, "I have won the greatest battle of modern times, with 12,000 of my old Peninsula troops." Creevey remarked that he was astonished at that, and asked, "What, sir, with 12,000 only?" "Yes, Creevey," replied the Duke, "with 12,000 of my old Spanish infantry. I knew I could depend upon them. They fought the battle, without flinching, against immense odds; but nearly all my staff, and some of my best friends, are killed. Good night! I want rest, and must go to bed." Creevey called at an early hour on the following morning, in the hope of again seeing the Duke, but he had left Brussels before daylight, to join the army.

Sir Thomas Picton's opinion of the British officer has been often echoed by foreigners; but we can hardly think it wholly just:—

He greatly praised the soldier-like qualities and military talents of the French officers, and said, "If I had 50,000 such men as I commanded in Spain, with French officers at their head, I'm d—d if I wouldn't march from one end of Europe to the other." We were all astounded at this praise of the French; and Chambers, very much piqued, observed, "This is the first time we have heard, Sir Thomas, that French officers were superior to ours." "What!" said Picton, "never heard they were superior to ours? Why, d—n it, where is our military education? Where our military schools and colleges? We have none; absolutely none. Our greatest generals, Marlborough and Wellington, learnt the art of war in France. Nine French officers out of ten can command an army, whilst our fellows, though brave as lions, are totally and utterly ignorant of their profession. D—n it, sir, they know nothing. We are saved by our non-commissioned officers, who are the best in the world."

There are one or two social anecdotes of the Great Duke, of which, perhaps, the following is the most characteristic and amusing:—

The Duke of Wellington, then residing at Walmer Castle, had walked one Sunday evening into Deal, and entered Trinity Church. After wandering about for some time in search of the sexton (who, as a matter of course, was engaged elsewhere), the Duke ensconced himself in a roomy-looking pew, in front of the pulpit. After a short time a lady of portly and pompous appearance, the owner of the pew, entered. After muttering a prayer, she cast a scowl at the intruder, which was intended to drive him out of the place he had taken. She had not the least idea who he was, and probably have given her eyes, had she known him, to have touched the hem of the great Duke's cloth cloak, or asked for his autograph. Seeing that the stranger bore the brunt of her indignant glance without moving, the lady bluntly told the Duke, as she did not know him, that she must request he would immediately leave her pew. His Grace obeyed and chose another seat. When he was leaving the church, at the end of the service, and had at last found the sexton, who received him with many bows and salutations, he said: "Tell that lady she has turned the Duke of Wellington out of her pew this evening."

Captain Gronow spent a considerable time, after this, in Paris, with the society of which he is as familiar as with that of London. He complains greatly of the degeneracy of manners and lack of gallantry in men, and reticence in women both in England and France at the present day; and speaks very severely of what, in opposition to the "jeunesse dorée" of old, he calls "la jeunesse Ruoltz"—the pinchbeck youth—of this generation. Among his many anecdotes of their want of earnestness in the sole business of their lives—lovmaking—the following is about the best:—

A lady of certain virtue and uncertain age had been courted by a young fashionable in a moment of désaveuement, in a country house. The lady was flattered, and at last fell in love, but held out for a time, when one fine day, as the gentleman was languidly pressing his suit, she exclaimed, throwing herself on his neck in an agony of tears, "Eh bien, Raoul, je me damne pour toi!" "Et moi, je me sauve!" responded the terrified Lovelace; and seizing his hat, he rushed to the stable, mounted his horse, and was never seen or heard of again.

There are several very characteristic stories of French literature in these pages. The following anecdote of Dumas is perhaps the most amusing, and certainly the least spiteful:—

Dumas, who is the most generous and kind-hearted man in the world, had been away from his house in Paris on one of his many trips to foreign lands; and, with his usual munificence, had allowed his friends the run of his house and cellar during his absence. On his return home he gave a great breakfast to celebrate the event. His numerous guests, towards the end of the repast, expressed a wish to drink his health in champagne, and the servant went down stairs, as if to look for some, but soon returned with the dismal intelligence that it had all been drunk. Dumas slipped a few napoleons into the valet's hand, and ordered him to buy some at the neighbouring "restaurateur's"; but having some suspicion, he followed the servant, when, to his great surprise, he beheld the fellow emerging from his own cellar, from whence he had brought up his own champagne. Dumas, though the soul of good nature, was about to turn the rascal off on the spot, when the man fell at his kind master's feet, reminded him that he had a wife and family, and implored his mercy.

"Well, I will forgive you this time," said the great writer; "mais au moins une autre fois faites-moi crédit."

Captain Gronow's anecdotes of the humorists of the reign of George IV. are equally good, and some of his political stories are racy enough. He knew and hated Hunt, whom he narrowly missed a chance of shooting; but had a more favourable opinion of O'Connell. The latter having insulted the famous Lord Alvanley, and refused to fight him, Morgan, his son, consented to be shot at in his stead. Shots were exchanged without result:—

On their way home in a Hackney coach, Alvanley said, "What a clumsy fellow O'Connell must be, to miss such a fat fellow as I am; he ought to practise at a haystack to get his hand in." When the carriage drove up to Alvanley's door, he gave the coachman a sovereign. Jarvey was profuse in his thanks, and said, "It's a great deal for only having taken your lordship to Wimbledon." "No, my good man," said Alvanley, "I give it you, not for taking me, but for bringing me back." Everybody knows the story of Gunter, the pastrycook. He was mounted on a runaway horse with the king's hounds, and excused himself for riding against Alvanley, by saying, "Oh, my lord, I can't hold him, he's so hot!" "Ice him, Gunter—ice him!" was the consoling rejoinder.

Very good, too, in its way, is this anecdote of Twisleton Fiennes, the late Lord Saye and Sele:—

Twisleton Fiennes was a very eccentric man, and the greatest epicure of his day. His dinners were worthy of the days of Vitellius or Heliogabalus. Every country, every sea, was searched and ransacked to find some new delicacy for our British Sybarite. I remember, at one of his breakfasts, an omelette being served which was composed entirely of golden pheasants' eggs. He had a very strong constitution, and would drink absynthe and curaçoa in quantities which were perfectly awful to behold. These stimulants produced no effect upon his brain: but his health gradually gave way under the excesses of all kinds in which he indulged. He was a kind, liberal, and good-natured man, but a very odd fellow. I never shall forget the astonishment of a servant I had recommended to him. On entering his service, John made his appearance as Fiennes was going out to dinner, and asked his new master if he had any orders. He received the following answer,—"Place two bottles of sherry by my bed-side, and call me the day after to-morrow."

Since the date of even the more recent of Captain Gronow's anecdotes, a new generation has grown up, which knows the heroes and writers, the wits and the vauriens of his day only by report and by tradition. To this younger generation, even in his own class, Captain Gronow's book will afford much pleasure and amusement, as well as some knowledge, which from report and tradition only they might have failed to receive. But it will also be acceptable and delightful to multitudes who seldom hear anything of the social traditions floating in "the great world." That world forms but a very small proportion even of the educated classes of London; and London. Heaven be praised—is only a small fraction of fugitive anecdotes for having the gallant collector of harmless taste of the middle-classes for the gossip of the upper; for the indulgence he has offered to the most innocent forms of that curiosity which, whether it be snobbish or merely loyal, is deeply rooted in the minds of Englishmen—to say nothing of Englishwomen—and more seriously, for having preserved to us a few interesting traits of character in men who deserve to be remembered, and are remembered, by millions who never heard of Count d'Orsay, and who have no knowledge of the Court of the Regency beyond a dim and vague idea of vice, extravagance, heartlessness, and folly.

LETTER FROM RICHMOND.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

[Affairs at Vicksburg—The Campaign in Virginia: Signs of an Advance—Mr. Vallandigham—Lord Campbell's Speech—The Virginia Elections—Disastrous Fire at Richmond—The Weather.]

RICHMOND, May 30.

FOR more than a fortnight we have been looking with intense interest and solicitude to the operations in the neighbourhood of Vicksburg. The advance of the enemy was made down the west bank of the Mississippi from Milliken's Bend to a point opposite Grand Gulf, which position having been carried by their fleet, the transports which had succeeded in passing the Vicksburg batteries were made available as ferry-boats, and the whole army of Grant, probably 50,000 strong, was brought across the river. Pushing forward in the direction of Jackson, the capital of Mississippi, Grant encountered near Raymond a small Confederate force, which he compelled, after a hard fight, to fall back before him, and soon afterwards entered Jackson, General Johnston evacuating the town on his approach. Here the Yankees committed their usual atrocities, pillaging shops and private dwellings, and desecrating the temples of God. On the morning of the 15th inst., Grant attacked Pemberton near Edward's depot, on the line of the railroad from Jackson to Vicksburg, and by force of superior numbers compelled him to retire behind the Big Black River. Full details of this day's fighting have not yet been received in this city, but it is conceded that our loss was heavy, and that twenty or more pieces of artillery were spiked and abandoned by our troops. Pemberton withdrew the next day into Vicksburg, which was then invested by Grant, since which time a series of obstinate engagements have been fought, the advantage remaining with us. On Saturday the 23rd, the enemy made six successive attacks on our works, and were repulsed each time with immense loss. So great was the slaughter that the effluvia arising from the decomposition of the dead bodies rendered it necessary to burn tar in the streets of Vicksburg as a disinfectant. Notwithstanding these facts, the fall of Vicksburg was announced in large capitals in the New York papers. "Victory! Victory! Victory!" was the cry throughout the United States; and the veracious editors, who shouted over the imaginary triumph, were kind enough to give the number of cannon (60), and prisoners (9,200), that were taken by the invincible army of Grant. The account of the capture of Vicksburg was made with so much of certainty and circumstance, that, in the absence of any official information from General Johnson to the War Department, many of our citizens were inclined to credit it; but all who remembered the easy assurance with which the Yankees asserted that Admiral Dupont was in Charleston, and, more recently, the delightful aplomb with which they declared General Keyes to be in possession of Richmond, withheld their belief, and were at last cheered by a telegram from brave "Old Joe" announcing, on the 27th, that hard fighting had been going on at Vicksburg for nine days, with uninterrupted success on the Confederate side, and that our troops were full of confidence and in the highest spirits. To-day we have learned by telegram to the Associated Press that Grant has withdrawn from the investment of the town, and is entrenching himself on the Big Black River.

Such is an outline of what has been done before Vicksburg up to the present writing. It will be seen that thus far, the enemy has been completely foiled in his attack, and that the key of the Mississippi still remains in our hands. That it will be wrested from us I do not believe. This is possible, certainly, but it is far more likely that the enemy will be forced to fly across the river, to avoid being caught by Joe Johnstone. After all, if Vicksburg should fall, damaging as the blow would be to the Confederate cause, in severing the new republic into two portions, and separating us from the rich districts of Texas, it would not secure for the Yankees what they have been fighting for in that region—the commercial possession, free from disturbance, of the Mississippi. Partisan and guerilla warfare carried on at various points of eight hundred or a thousand miles of river navigation, would always imperil transportation along its waters, and every steamer filled with merchandise,—nay, every flat-boat, for perfect security, would have to float down under convoy of a fleet of iron-clads. But, granting that the occupation of Vicksburg would enable the enemy to make the Mississippi as safe a highway as it ever was in time of peace, with only snags and sand-bars to endanger the craft upon its bosom, the cause does not perish through such a disaster. The Confederate States contain within the circumscribed limits to which the loss of the Mississippi would reduce them, all the materials for an indefinite prolongation of the war. As Mr. Davis has so well said, the Confederate Government might be maintained for years in the mountainous districts of the South, whose rich valleys would afford sustenance for the brave men, whom the enemy would never attack without damage in the impregnable fastnesses of the Blue Ridge and the Alleghany. You remember what Washington said of West Augusta, in Virginia, when the cause of the American colonies seemed most hopeless. The freemen of West Augusta in his day were the ancestors of Jackson's men, the builders of the Stone Wall Brigade of our own—and whatever advantages the Yankees may gain, we will never despair of the State, nerved to the last extremity by — the indomitable will

And courage never to submit or yield.

But little change has occurred in the disposition of the two armies upon the Rappahannock since the "inglorious fight" of "Fighting Joe Hooker" to the northern bank of the stream, after the battle of Chancellorsville. The month of June will hardly pass by without another shock of arms in that quarter, for which, I need scarcely say, our troops are prepared—nay, eager. The rank of Lieut.-General has been conferred on Major-Generals A. P. Hill and Ewell, and the main body of General Lee's army has been divided into three corps d'armée, under the respective commands of Hill, Ewell, and Longstreet. The spirit of such a man as Ewell is like the blast of that wild "on Fontarabian echoes borne," and will act upon the veterans of Jackson almost like a visitation of the dead warrior to his former comrades, from the realm of spirits. The brave old soldier is minus a leg, and walks with great difficulty upon crutches, but in the saddle he is all that he was before the enemy struck him down, and he will make them pay dearly for that leg before the summer campaign is over. The North has lost all confidence in the army of Hooker. So little is it regarded as offering any obstacle to the movements of General Lee, that Governor Curtin, of Pennsylvania, has come to Washington in great alarm, to implore Lincoln to provide other means for the protection of his State. Whether the invasion of Pennsylvania has been determined upon we cannot know with certainty, but the cavalry arm, under General Stuart, has been greatly strengthened, and every man, horse, and mule in Lee's army has been newly shod, within the last few days, which latter fact, unimportant as it might seem in other military organizations, is taken here to indicate the expectation of an immediate march.

The arrest, trial, and condemnation of Vallandigham, and his expulsion from the United States into our lines, have given rise to much discussion in the Confederate journals. It is not supposed for a moment that the arbitrary conduct of Burnside, endorsed as it has been by the Government at Washington, will arouse any determined spirit of armed opposition in the North. There have been popular meetings in New York, and Mr. Brooks and others have made speeches of violent denunciation of the Lincoln tyranny. Governor Seymour has also written a strong letter, but there the matter will end. The masses of the Northern people have been effectually enslaved. If Mr. Brooks's head should be taken from his shoulders by the United States' District Marshal, and stuck upon a pole in Union Square—if Governor Seymour himself should be arrested at midnight in his magisterial bed, and spirited away, no one should know whither, the people would have no resolution to resist. The only regret Seward indulges concerning the Vallandigham business is, that he did not make way with Seymour in the same manner before that obnoxious person was placed in executive authority at Albany; for it is manifest that the Ohio statesman underwent martyrdom, only that he should not be made Governor of Ohio. The people of that State seemed anxiously disposed to vote for him in opposition to the Lincoln candidate, and mischief might ensue from his election. Thus will it be with all aspiring gentlemen who shall seek to be chosen Governors of the Northern States in contravention of the will of the Federal chief magistrate. What to do with Vallandigham is the question which now remains for us to consider. He avows himself an enemy. He frankly declares that he would wage war upon us to the bitter end, under the forms of the Constitution. He is undoubtedly entitled to no hospitality at our hands. Moreover, we cannot admit the right of Lincoln to make a penal colony of the Confederate States. Vallandigham is a gentleman, and would probably conduct himself with propriety while he remained within our lines, but if Lincoln can compel us to receive his political prisoners, he can compel us to receive his gaol-birds, his robbers and murderers as well. For the present, Vallandigham remains in Tennessee, but he expresses the purpose of coming to Virginia, where he modestly hopes to remain in seclusion and quiet till the war is over. The attitude of a martyr is always interesting, and the philosophic composure of Bolingbroke is becoming to a persecuted statesman; but it is doubtful, at least, whether this Constitutional war-maker will be permitted to write here his "Reflections on Exile," and it is certain that, if this permission is extended to him, he will not be disturbed by any excessive demonstrations of hospitality.

The speech of Lord Campbell given in The Index for March 29 has been widely copied here, and is considered far the ablest review of the question of secession and coercion which has yet been made by a foreigner. It is difficult to see how the English people, who are at heart lovers of truth and fair play, can resist the arguments of his Lordship. That the so-called neutrality of Great Britain has been no neutrality at all, but a state of far niente the most advantageous to the Yankees and the most damaging to us, is clear in Lord Campbell's demonstration. Equally clear is it that the Confederate States have been long-suffering towards England in allowing her consular agents to reside under a Government which she does not recognise, for the protection of British interests. We might long ago have insisted that her Majesty's representatives, holding their exequaturs from the Government of the United States, should leave the Confederacy, and in this case the property and persons of her Majesty's subjects here would have been open to impressment and conscription. But we have magnanimously accorded to England the fullest security for all her interests, personal and proprietary, within the limits of the country, all the while that Earl Russell, with cold-blooded indifference, was speculating on the probable waste of blood and treasure by the prolongation of the war for another year; and that meek and mild disciple, Mr. John Bright, advocate of universal peace, lover of the human race in general, was crying out for the extermination of eight millions of men and women of the same complexion and speaking the same language with himself. Were it not for humanity's sake, I could wish that there might never be interference of any kind, by acknowledgment of independence or in any other manner in this quarrel with the low, brutal, savage, cowardly race that holds sway at the present moment in the United States;—for sooner or later we shall succeed in our unaided struggle for independence, and when we enter the family of nations it were a sweeter, prouder privilege to come in as of right, upon our own merits, than under the patronage and by the favour of the mightiest nation of them all. But when I think of the wide-spread desolations of this war, the pillage and wanton destruction of private dwellings, of seminaries of learning, of churches, and charitable institutions; when I look at the mournful per-centage of maimed and mutilated men in our streets, and think of the thousands who, now whole and sound, are yet to wear empty sleeves or hobble on crutches through life; when I consider what melancholy sacrifices of noble spirits we must endure in two years more of such terrible conflict; more than that, when I think of civilization itself imperilled in eighteen or twenty States of what was once my country, I long for the armed intervention of the great Powers of Europe to put an end to the hopeless struggle and restore to us the blessings of peace. There is every reason to believe that Lincoln designs continuing the war "for the restoration of the Union," as long as men and money can be obtained for carrying it on. An intelligent gentleman of Loudoun county, Virginia, who was held for some time as a political prisoner in Washington city, and has but recently been permitted to return home, was sent for by Lincoln, just before his exchange, and asked how long the people of Virginia thought the war would last. "As long as you are at the head of the United States Government," was the reply. "Then they are likely to have a good time of it," said old Abe, "for the end of my term of office is very uncertain." Nothing is more probable than that Lincoln intends postponing indefinitely the presidential election of 1864. He will declare the perpetuity of the Union paramount to every other consideration, proclaim himself President en permanence, and threaten to put down all opposition with the bayonets of Rosecranz and Burnside. But, in such an event, there would be no opposition. The people that can tamely submit to the expulsion of Vallandigham would submit to anything. Freedom of speech is quite as sacred a right as the right of suffrage.

The Virginia elections took place, throughout all portions of the State not in possession of the enemy, yesterday. As yet the returns are insufficient to enable us to speak with anything like certainty of the result. William Smith, of Fauquier, an ex-Governor, and colonel of one of the Virginia regiments in the field during the first year of the war, and until a very late date, member of the Confederate House of Representatives, is probably elected as our next Governor. The Honourable William C. Rivers has been chosen to the House from the Albemarle district. Charles F. Collier has been re-elected in the Petersburg district. James Lyons, the recent member for the Richmond district, has been beaten by W. C. Wickham, a cavalry colonel. Generally speaking, military men have been preferred to civilians in these elections. Toga cedit armis. Among the defeated Congressional aspirants two may claim some sympathy—John Letcher, the present Governor of the State, and Alexander R. Boteler, of Jefferson county, the friend of Stonewall Jackson, who worked in Congress for the interests of Jackson's corps d'armée with indefatigable energy.

Many standards and other trophies of the battles of the Wilderness and Chancellorsville have been brought to this city. One of them, which hangs from the upper gallery of the State Library, is worthy of notice as indicating the gaudiness of the Yankee character. It is a beautiful copy of the Stars and Stripes, of heavy English silk, and bears the name of the Irish Rifles, a company belonging to the 37th Regiment of New York Volunteers. A year ago, in one of the battles before Richmond, this regiment lost its regimental colours, which were sent to the State Library, where they have ever since been displayed, and where they have attracted great attention. The device was the coat of arms of the State of New York, with its motto of Excelsior; the mountings were of silver, and across the flag was the inscription, "Presented by the City of New York." Now it will hardly be credited, and yet the fact is so, that the Irish Rifles had the audacity to inscribe upon their company's colours the name of that very battle claiming it as a victory, in which their regiment lost its regimental standard! The two flags ornament the same room, and all who enter it may see them in patriotic juxtaposition.

A disastrous fire broke out in this city on the morning of the 15th inst., which destroyed the Crenshaw woollen mill and a large portion of the machine shops of the Tredegar Iron Works,—two most valuable and important manufacturing establishments, in which much of the cloth for the clothing of the Virginia troops was made, and the greater part of the guns were cast which drove off the iron-clad fleet from Charleston. The machinery of the woollen mill cannot be readily replaced, but workmen are already engaged in rebuilding the Tredegar Works, and it is thought that in two or three months it will be in full working order again.

A long drought seems to have set in. For weeks we have been without rain, and the crops in Virginia are seriously threatened for want of moisture; but in other States of the Confederacy the quantity of grain and forage produced will, probably, largely exceed the supply of any former year.

CAMPAIGN ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

[State of affairs at Port Hudson—Federal defeats—They prepare for a final assault—Their force of 20,000 dwindles down to 12,000 through losses—The Confederate garrisons are invincible and defy all assaults—Advance of Magruder on the enemy's rear with a heavy, well-disciplined force—Great destruction of steamboats and other Federal property by the Confederates—Magruder but a few miles from New Orleans—Northern rule and the "freedom" of it—Long list of prominent citizens who fled from the Crescent City to Mobile—Interesting general items.]

NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA, JUNE 21.

SIR,—You have already received an account of the unsuccessful attempt of Banks to carry the works at Port Hudson last Sunday. Tuesday following an order, which has not yet been published, was read to every company in the army corps in front of Port Hudson. It congratulates the soldiers upon their steady advance, thinks that but one more assault will be necessary to carry the position of the enemy, calls for a column of one thousand volunteers to make the attempt, and promises promotion to the officers, and honourable mention and a medal to all who shall volunteer in the forlorn hope.

It is understood that the column has been raised. Grierson, late Colonel, and now Brigadier-General, flushed with the success of his recent raid through Lower Mississippi, and anxious to air his new laurels, has volunteered to lead the assault—his men dismounted, and acting as infantry, are also "in," the support will be Weitzel and Grover's divisions. The attack will be made on the enemy's right (the point in the works already the scene of two unsuccessful attempts), and the assault is to be made to-day.

It is scarcely probable that this morning's steamer will carry the news of to-day's Port Hudson operations. Let me give you the situation of affairs in the State. I wrote you that Magruder had left Texas with his troops. He has been joined by the small forces under Generals Dick Taylor, Mouton, and Sibley, and the aggregate force is supposed to be about 10,000 men. They are everywhere in the Attakapas country, so lately "added to the Federal lines"—in the rear of Plaquemine, Bayou Goula, and Donaldsonville on the Mississippi—and yesterday, three thousand of them were concentrated at Bute station, on the Bayou des Allemandes, not twenty-five miles from this city. At Plaquemine they have burned, not two boats, as first reported, but four—the Sequin, Anglo-American, Sykes, and Southern Merchant. This was Thursday morning. The Anglo-American was going up the river, and saw the Sykes on fire at the mouth of Plaquemine Bayou. She went to her relief, was boarded by twenty or more men, her officers were taken prisoners, and she, too, was burned subsequently. The Southern Merchant and Sequin were destroyed on the same day and at the same place. The boat Anyone was up the bayou collecting cotton, was not discovered, and came down yesterday with the men belonging to the destroyed boats, who were taken prisoners and afterwards paroled. The other boats engaged in cotton-collecting were not so fortunate. There is a generally received proverb that God helps those who help themselves—it hardly applies to those who "help themselves" to cotton.

The occupation at Bute station renders the position of the 176th New York and 23rd Connecticut regiments, with the 21st Indiana battery and half a regiment of sick soldiers at Brashear city, anything but pleasant. They may escape the impending "gobble." Last evening the 26th Massachusetts was sent from this city by special train to their reinforcement and relief. Perhaps they will pass Bute station—we shall know to-day.

When it was known at Port Hudson that the boats were burned at Plaquemine, gunboat No. 2 was sent down, and it vigorously shelled the woods for some time, doing, no doubt, some damage to the trees;—but the boat-burners were by that time at Bute station.

The boldness of the recent movements of the Confederates in such close proximity to the Federal lines is not especially encouraging to the Federal hopes. While a certain class of men are engaged in founding public libraries in this city for private benefit, and are clamorous for a new constitution, new legislature, and new civil government generally, a glance at the situation shows that the Federal lines by no means cover the surface of territory that they did one month ago. The Confederates actually have possession to-day of all the country west of the Mississippi, and north of the Opelousas railroad—including the lately "subdued" Teche, the Attakapas, the line of Red River for some distance down, the Grand River to the rear of Plaquemine, the Grosse Tête, the important position at Brashear so lately held by the Federals, but which now holds fast two Federal regiments and a battery, and Fort Buchanan and the line of defences at Bayou Beuf. To those who expect to restore Louisiana to the Union, the immediate prospect is by no means cheering.

Banks has strengthened his lines by mounting, since last Sunday's assault, twelve more siege guns at the point below nearest to Springfield Landing.

His actual force, fit for duty, in front of Port Hudson is said to be 12,000 men, against Frank Gardner's 5,500 Confederates inside the works. There is some disaffection among both officers and men in Banks's army. It is difficult to convince them (so unreasonable are they) that a position which nearly 20,000 men in two desperate assaults have failed to carry, must yield now to an attacking column of 1,000 men. The Confederates in Port Hudson, with unaccountable obstinacy, refuse to be starved out. They decline to come out. There is no accounting for this, but they seem to prefer the security of their defences to the charms and chances of an open field.

The assault is set down for to-day. If it ends in another repulse, Banks has collected at Springfield Landing shot, shell, and powder enough to keep up a warm fire upon Port Hudson from to-morrow till next Christmas morning—provided it is for his interest to remain in that position so long. It is reasonable to suppose, however, that the Confederates are concentrating in Louisiana for some purpose, and we may hear of more boat-burning, cotton-burning, and similar "outrages by guerillas"—while the fact that on the other side of the Mississippi, in Banks's rear, forces are concentrating at Clinton, indicates that Baton Rouge, even, may not be a safe "base" for many weeks. The wounded in that place are coming here as rapidly as boats can bring them, and it is not now a favourable position for accumulating military supplies.

This is the condition of affairs to-day—the Confederates strengthening; the Federals hopeful—a grand and final assault to be made on Port Hudson. You shall have the result by the next steamer.

The Mobile papers publish the following additional arrivals of refugees from New Orleans since June 2:—

A. Archinard, Mrs. W. Austin and child, Madame Felice Alvado, Sarah A. Andress, Frank Andress, R. De Armas, E. Angout, A. H. Bernard, A. D. Bernudez, J. F. Barthélemy, John Bruquien, A. P. E. Combel, Charles Chapotin and wife, J. Charbonnet, L. E. Clairain, J. E. Conlon, Joseph Carew, H. Chapotin, Justin Casbergue and wife, Joseph Casbergue, F. L. Clayton, James Coulson and family, F. S. Coiron and wife, H. Canon, John Coakley, P. Cannon, A. P. Cleveland and family, Armand Castanede, Henry Chaillet, P. E. Crozat, S. E. Crozat, Edward Drouet, Mrs. Drouet, B. H. Dykers, M. Dodart, J. A. Duchaufout, Alfred Damarin, Thomas M. Dykers, wife and three daughters, R. De Armas, Julien Dufard, A. D. Doricourt, Antoine Doricourt, J. Doricourt, S. E. Du Buisson and wife, Miss M. A. Dudley, Kate Donalin, O. De Armas and family, A. De Armas and family, L. C. Desforges, J. A. Fagot, P. A. Fortier, R. Fisher, Fr. A. Foygnet, J. Fecce, O. Foco, C. L. Flinn and wife, V. D. Flinn, S. Frederick, Mrs. E. Guilloite and family, A. D. Guesnon, John G. Guerin, Edgar Guesnon, S. Garidee, Joseph Garidee, A. Grandpre, F. Guilloite, J. E. Guilloite, F. N. Gonzales and Son, J. Y. Guerin, Josephine Guerin, Louise Guerin, Adele Guerin, Elizabeth Guerin, Jules Guerin, Mrs. Germain and two children, Charles F. Gronberg, L. Golding, C. Harris, E. D. Hyde, Mrs. A. M. Hyde, Miss Laura Hyde, P. E. Hatree and family, S. W. Hammond, Charles Hurley, Thomas Hepp, Octave Hopkins, C. W. Hotchkiss and wife, V. Hernandez, A. F. Hattler, Miss Jane Hiezey, Victor Itattier, Miss E. Hyde, Mrs. C. W. Jorr, Miss E. E. Jorr, Miss M. P. Jorr, P. H. Jorr, P. H. Jorr, junior, L. L. Jacobs, Mrs. Jackson and two children, Mrs. Jaykes and two children, Otto Kinsejo, A. P. Kohler, August Leefe, O. Lequier, John S. Ludlow, C. A. Le Page, Mrs. Lenhardt and child, A. G. Lobdell, P. Lulia, A. Laurent, Mrs. John S. Ludlow and four children, James H. Low, wife, and six children, Mrs. Ann Moore, John S. Mioton, E. Mazent and wife, R. Mayer, Mrs. McKeon, W. C. Micou and family, John Munch, Mrs. Massett and three children, H. Marks, Miss Grace Marks, Miss Minna Marks, J. Marks, Mrs. McGregor and child, Madame Victoria Nunez, Elijah Price, Mrs. A. E. Palmer, H. C. Petty, G. Peitz, F. Poursine, Clara Poursine, Amenaide Poursine, Amelia Poursine, Melanie Poursine, Henry Poursine, Puicherle Poursine, Mrs. Mary A. Powell, George W. Robinson, Octave Rousseau, J. A. A. Rousseau, A. Roquet, L. Roquet, William Reige, M. Rauch, Mrs. H. W. Ray and three children, John P. Rondeau, Jules Sougeron, William H. Steele, P. Salanne, G. A. Sykes, H. Samuels, F. St. Arnaud and family, Mrs. E. Salomon and son, P. J. Spear, Eugene Staes, William Sevey, Joseph Stinson, H. Starr, A. W. Sewell, John C. Sinnott, James Sharron, L. Soraparu, H. H. Smith, Eugene H. Shinn, Troisville E. Sykes, Pierre P. Solet, Frederick Stringer, Mrs. M. P. Stringer, A. J. Steele and wife, Mrs. J. Toledano, Thomas Y. P. Tureman, Edward Treondle, Richard Trott, Charles Tower, Mrs. L. L. Tower and servant, C. Ussler and wife, T. G. Uulhorn and two sisters, J. D. Van Horn, wife and three children, Justus Vairin, Miss Cecilia Violo, Dominique Vautier, Thomas H. J. Walker, D. S. Wasson, Albert Weaver, Simon Wyma and wife.

THE FOREIGN ENLISTMENT ACT.

The following copy of a memorial from certain Shipowners of Liverpool to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, suggesting an alteration in the Foreign Enlistment Act, was published on Saturday:—

To the Right Honourable the Earl Russell, her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Foreign Department.

The memorial of the undersigned Shipowners of Liverpool sheweth,—

That your memorialists, who are deeply interested in British shipping, view with dismay the probable future consequences of a state of affairs which permits a foreign belligerent to construct in and send to sea from British ports vessels of war, in contravention of the provisions of the existing law.

That the immediate effect of placing at the disposal of that foreign belligerent a very small number of steam cruisers has been to paralyse the mercantile marine of a powerful maritime and naval nation, inflicting within a few months losses, direct and indirect, on its shipowning and mercantile interests which years of peace may prove inadequate to retrieve.

That your memorialists cannot shut their eyes to the probability that in any future war between England and a foreign Power, however insignificant in naval strength, the example now set by subjects of her Majesty, while England is neutral, may be followed by citizens of other countries, neutral when England is belligerent; and that the attitude of helplessness in which her Majesty's Government have declared their inability to detect and punish breaches of the law notoriously committed by certain of her Majesty's subjects may hereafter be successfully imitated by the Governments of those other countries in answer to English remonstrances.

That the experience of late events has proved to the conviction of your memorialists that the possession by a belligerent of swift steam cruisers, under no necessity, actual or conventional, to visit the possibly blockaded home ports of that belligerent, but able to obtain all requisite supplies from neutrals, will become a weapon of offence against which no preponderance of naval strength can effectually guard, and the severity of which will be felt in the ratio of the shipping and mercantile wealth of the nation against whose mercantile marine the efforts of those steam cruisers may be directed.

That the effect of future war with any Power thus enabled to purchase, prepare, and refit vessels of war in neutral ports will inevitably be to transfer to neutral flags that portion of the sea-carrying trade of the world which is now enjoyed by your memorialists and by other British shipowners.

That over and above the chances of pecuniary loss to themselves, your memorialists share in the regret with which a law regarding community must naturally look on successful attempts to evade the provisions of an Act of Parliament passed for a single and simple purpose, but which has been found not to give the Executive all the powers needed for its effective execution.

That your memorialists would accordingly respectfully urge upon your Lordship the expediency of proposing to Parliament to sanction the introduction of such amendments into the Foreign Enlistment Act as may have the effect of giving greater power to the Executive to prevent the construction in British ports of ships destined for the use of belligerents.

And your memorialists would further suggest to your Lordship the importance of endeavouring to secure the assent of the Governments of the United States of America and of other foreign countries to the adoption of similar regulations in those countries also.

All which your memorialists respectfully submit.

Lampont and Holt.	Rathbone, Brothers, and Co.
J. Baines and Co.	J. Brown and Co.
R. Nicholson and Son.	J. Poole and Co.
W. B. Boadle.	W. Jacob and Co.
J. Prowse and Co.	W. Moore and Co.
Currie, Newton, and Co.	Imrie and Tomlinson.
Nelson, Alexander, and Co.	T. Chilton.
Kendall Brown.	Jones, Palmer, and Co.
G. S. H. Fletcher and Co.	Farnworth and Jardine.
J. Aikin.	T. and J. Harrison.
Finlay, Campbell, and Co.	L. H. Mackintyre.
Cropper, Ferguson, and Co.	Potter Brothers.
J. Campbell.	C. G. Cowie and Co.
S. R. Graves.	W. J. Sealy.
Rankin, Gilmour, and Co.	R. Girvin and Co.
C. T. Bowring and Co.

Liverpool, June 9, 1863.

Mr. Hammond replies as follows:—

Foreign-office, July 6, 1863.

Gentlemen,—I am directed by Earl Russell to acknowledge the receipt of the memorial dated the 9th of June, signed by you and others of the merchants at Liverpool, in which you urge upon his lordship the expediency of proposing to Parliament such amendments to the Foreign Enlistment Act as shall enable the Government to prevent the construction in British ports of ships destined for the use of belligerents.

I am to state to you in reply that, in Lord Russell's opinion the Foreign Enlistment Act is effectual for all reasonable purposes, and to the full extent to which international law or comity can require, provided proof can be obtained of any act done with the intent to violate it.

Even if the provisions of the Act were extended, it would still be necessary that such proof should be obtained, because no law could or should be passed to punish upon suspicion instead of upon proof.

I am, &c.,

E. HAMMOND.

AFFAIRS, FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

MONEY AND DISCOUNT MARKET.

WEDNESDAY EVENING,

The supply of money, both in the general discount market and the Stock Exchange, has become more abundant, though the rates on the average are not sensibly lower. The principal bankers and brokers in Lombard-street have, however, been working their resources one-eighth to a quarter per cent. below the official minimum, and consequently they have secured the chief of the business. At the Bank the last two days the applications have been exceedingly moderate, but, although the directors at 4 per cent. will not be able to compete with the large financial institutions, they are scarcely in a situation at present to go to 3½ per cent. The dividends have now, in a great degree, been distributed, and a considerable portion been returned in the shape of the repayment of advances, so that no large influx into the open market is expected, save the remittances coming forward from Australia and America. The brilliant weather for the harvest, the hope that political affairs in Poland may assume a more tranquil aspect, and the impression that the recent speculative mania has almost become exhausted, will give increased confidence to the public, and if no fresh causes for uneasiness shall arise, things in general will progress quietly, at least until the end of the autumn. In the winter months a little more stringency may be looked for, but this change will chiefly depend upon the accumulation of the calls of the various companies, and the pressure they are destined to exercise. The rate this afternoon for first-class paper was 3¼ to 4 per cent.; some of the dealers made a wider price, viz., 3¼ to 4, and the Joint Stock Banks, for their advances, charged 3¼. The terms for short loans on Government securities have varied from 1½ to 2½ per cent.; the heaviest quotation late this evening, owing to an exceptional inquiry, was 2 to 2½ per cent. The next two weekly Bank statements will show whether there is a prospect of a reduction taking place in the official rate of discount.

BULLION AND SPECIE MOVEMENTS.

The amount of gold sent into the Bank of England this week has been unusually small, only £103,000, but on the other hand, there have not been any withdrawals. The arrivals of specie have likewise been limited, comprising only £295,454, of which £240,180 was brought by the West India packet, the remainder being chiefly from America. In addition to the gold previously announced on its way from Australia, £510,000, it is stated, has since been shipped from Melbourne. The Mexican dollars brought a fortnight ago by the Shannon have been disposed of at 62½ p. oz., being the same price as the previous parcel was sold at. Bar silver is a fraction higher, a considerable purchase having been made at 61½ p. oz., previous sales having realised 61 p. oz.

TENDERS FOR BILLS ON INDIA.

The biddings for 30,00,000 rupees in bills on India took place to-day, at the Bank of England. The proportions allotted were:—to Calcutta, 16,50,000 rupees; to Bombay, 12,00,000 rupees, and to Madras, 1,50,000 rupees. The declared minimum price was as before, i.e., 11½ p. rupee on Calcutta, and 1s. 11½ d. on Bombay and Madras. The applications within the limits amounted to 91 lacs. Tenders on Calcutta, at 1s. 11½ d. received about 26 per cent.; on Bombay at 1s. 11½ d. about 24 per cent., and all above these prices in full. On Madras all in full.

THE WELLINGTON (NEW ZEALAND) LOAN.

The tenders for the Wellington loan for £25,000, 8 per cent. debentures, and having 14 years to run, were opened at the Union Bank of Australia on Friday last. The total amount tendered for was £90,700. The minimum price fixed was £110. Above this price the tenders were £30,500; those ranging between £115 1s. and £110 7s. 6d. were accepted in full, and £1,900 allotted to the tender of £110 5s.

CONVERSION OF INDIA DEBENTURES.

The Secretary of State for India has just issued a notice of his intention to raise a sum not exceeding £8,000,000 sterling upon the security of India Four per cent. stock, for the purpose of redeeming £4,824,500 India Four per cent. debentures falling due on the 8th October next, and £3,172,500 India Four per cent. debentures falling due on the 8th April next; the stock to be created on the 8th October next, and is to bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly at the Bank of England, but is not to be redeemable until October, 1888, but may be redeemed at and after that time upon one year's notice being given. In order to facilitate the arrangement for the creation of the stock, India Four per cent. stock, at par, will be granted in exchange for corresponding amounts of India Four per cent. debentures. Holders of the four per cent. debentures, who do not signify their assent to accept stock in exchange for the same before the 3rd of August next, will receive payment for their debentures at maturity, upon presentation at the Bank of England, from which time all interest will cease.

HOME AND FOREIGN SECURITIES.

The market for English Securities, although it has not exhibited much animation as regards the amount of business transacted, is characterised by great firmness as respects prices, a considerable rise having taken place, through the more favourable aspect of political affairs on the continent, and the very satisfactory state of the weather for the crops. Consols left off this evening at 93½ to ½ for money, and 93½ to ¾ for the account. Exchequer Bills have gradually improved to par to 3s premium. There has been less fluctuation in the foreign stock market than for some time past, but on the whole, prices are in a satisfactory position. Turkish securities have been in fair request, and quotations have slightly improved. Mexican are also rather finer, closing at 37½ to ¾. Spanish have varied but little, the certificates being marked at 12½ to ¾, and the Passives 33½. Greek is flat, but without any positive decline in value, being 35½ to ¾. Egyptians are rather better, the first issue being at 103½ to 104½, and the second issue 103½.

THE CONFEDERATE COTTON LOAN.

Since our last issue the Confederate Loan has been largely dealt in. In anticipation of the Scotia's news an advance took place, purchases having been made at ½ premium. The Scotia's accounts not realizing the sanguine expectations of the Stock Exchange, the market became flat at ¼ discount, and remained dull until Wednesday, when there was good demand, buyers for large amounts, the closing price being ½ to ¾ premium. The stock appears to be strongly held—and large purchases cannot be effected except at an advance.

AMERICAN SECURITIES.

A rather improved business has been transacted in American Securities. Virginia 6 per cent. bonds were first dealt in at 44½, and have improved to 45½. Atlantic and Great Western (New York Section) are also better at 71½ to ¾ ex. div., but those of the Pennsylvania Section are not quite so good, having receded to 70½. Illinois Central 7 per cents. have advanced to 78½; do. $100 shares, $90 paid, 28½ dis.; do. all paid, 62. And New York Central $100 shares, 73 for money, and 74 for the account.

RAILWAY SECURITIES.

Although business in the market for railway shares has not been particularly active, the absence of animation is to be attributed to the general dullness usual at this period, and not to any depressive influences, as prices in most instances exhibit a gradual improvement, and the market this evening closed with an upward tendency. Foreign shares have been even less active, but prices remain very steady. Colonial descriptions have been rather more looked after, and are better supported.

BANK MEETINGS.

At the half-yearly meeting of the London and Westminster Bank, held to-day, a dividend at the rate of six per cent. per annum, for the half-year, with a bonus of seven per cent. on the paid-up capital, was declared. The net profits of the bank for the past half-year amounted to £129,921. A meeting of the Metropolitan and Provincial Bank was also held to-day, when it appeared from the report that for the first six months of the year, the profits, after paying interest on deposit and current accounts, amounted to £8,430; being £2,303 in excess of the realization at the corresponding period of last year, and making, with the balance brought forward from the previous half-year, a total of £9,281 for distribution; out of which a dividend of five per cent. was declared. There has likewise been a meeting of the proprietors of the Standard Bank of British South Africa, when a resolution was passed to increase the capital from £1,500,000 to £2,000,000. It was stated that the bank was progressing favourably, that arrangements have been made for the transfer of the business of the Commercial and Colesburg Banks; and that negotiations are pending for the purchase of numerous other local establishments. At a meeting of the Agra and United Service Bank it was announced that the committee of bankers have refused to admit the bank to the clearing-house; and although application had been made for the cause of such refusal, no answer had been returned.

THE WESTERN BANK OF LONDON.

The liquidation of the affairs of this bank is, it appears, proceeding in a very satisfactory manner. Mr. Maynard, the accountant engaged in the case, has just issued a statement of accounts, which shows that at the commencement of the winding up, the amount of assets standing on the books was £448,894, of which £431,921 has been realised, leaving as a loss on the realization, only £12,936, or a fraction under 3 per cent.

PROGRESS OF ENTERPRISE.

During the past week, the number of new Joint Stock undertakings announced has been fewer than for some time past, and the total amount sought to be raised is comparatively trifling, being only £910,000. One only, the Oil Seed Crushing Company, asks for half a million sterling, but the others vary from £30,000 to £100,000, and comprise the Hayling Railway Company, the Metropolitan Zinc Rolling Company, the New Mansfield Copper and Silver Mining Company, the St. Thomas Floating Dock Company, the New Concord Silver, Lead, and Copper Company, and the East Great Work Tin Mining Company.

THE COURSE OF THE PRODUCE MARKETS.

In the American produce markets the long-prevailing suspense has, this week, been rendered more intense by the Scotia's news, in reference to the progress of the campaign in Maryland and Virginia. The impression is, that the next mail may bring the result of an engagement which, should the advantage be with the South, will do more than anything that has yet occurred to bring the war to an end. The effect has been to cause increased hesitation in entering upon transactions, except in the immediate produce of the invaded States, where production must have suffered to an extent which, at the best, can only be partially recovered. In cotton and cotton manufactures the dealings have been upon the smallest possible scale, at prices favouring the buyer. American wheat and flour have maintained their value, the demand at the moment being supplied chiefly by our foreign imports. Oilcake sells slowly, but is not notably lower. American oil of peppermint is still held for 16s., but buyers operate with increased reserve. In tobacco extremely little is doing; meantime holders show no disposition to force sales until something more is known as to the fate of the crops in certain districts. Petroleum, with some rather extensive operations, has further advanced to 2s. 4d. per gallon for refined, and £20 per ton for crude, in consequence of the diminution in supply which is likely to arise from the events now passing in Pennsylvania. The small stock of American spirits of turpentine is held for 100s. per cwt., and is purchased in limited quantities exclusively for export, the home demand being supplied by French, which offers at 85s. per cwt. Scotch pig iron has advanced perceptibly; on a rumour that Baltimore had been taken the price went up to 55s to 55s. 3d., receded to 54s. 9d. on the publication of the last mails, but is now again at its highest point, the market being influenced by the expectation of news favourable to peace by the packet now due. Camphor has become extremely uncertain in value. Buyers have shown rather more disposition to come upon the market, but have been met by a disinclination on the part of holders to sell upon the reduced terms lately established, and offers at £5 17s. 6d. to £6 have been refused. Arrivals are, however, expected, which may at any moment produce a reaction. In other drugs, as also in gums and dysaltries, no new feature has occurred. Our quarterly sales of indigo have opened at a decline of 2d to 8d. per lb., low qualities being the most depressed.

COTTON AND DRY GOODS MARKET.

LIVERPOOL, Wednesday, July 15.

The controlling influence in our cotton market has again been the nature of the American news.

On Thursday, the publication of the Times' New York letter, wherein the writer spoke of a marked change in the feelings of the Northern people, and their apparent indifference as to the result of this invasion, produced a quiet tone in our market and increased the desire to realise, the sales reaching 5,000 bales. On Friday a like amount were sold without change.

The Scotia's news were to hand on Saturday, but these were not reassuring to cotton-holders. A great battle was impending between the Confederate and Federal armies in Pennsylvania, and the people of the Northern States, still imperfectly aroused to the nature of the crisis, were strangely apathetic. The desire to sell was accordingly increased, and 1s. 4d. was generally conceded.

On Monday the business reached 4,000, with a dull flagging market, and yesterday 3,000, at rather easier prices. To-day 4,000 bales have been sold, and the market closes very flat; further news is anxiously expected. We quote Middling Bowed, 20½; Fair Egyptian, 20½; Fair Dolarah, 18; and Fair Omrawuttee, 17½.

MANCHESTER, Tuesday, July 14.

We have again had a very quiet market during the past week, produced to a great extent by a great and general anxiety to know the result of General Lee's incursion into Maryland and Pennsylvania. The eventualities which may shortly arise from this movement of the Confederate army, are of so serious a character, as to cause all parties to hold aloof from entering into any transactions, except of a retail description.

Telegraphic advices received on Monday from Calcutta and Bombay, reported an improving market at both places, but they failed to impart any amount of buoyancy to the kind of goods suitable to those places, the arrival of further news from America just now being of much greater moment to shippers than anything else.

Among the Contents of THE INDEX of July 9, are—

THE EVENTS OF THE WEEK AT HOME AND ABROAD.

LETTER FROM NEW ORLEANS: FEDERAL REFUGEE AT PORT HUDSON.

PARIS TOPICS.

THE EMPEROR AND MR. ROEBUCK.

THE NORTH ON ITS DEFENCE.

A CONCEIVABLE CALAMITY.

DRAMATIC TOPICS.

TWO WRITERS ON THE WAR.

AN ENGLISH CLERGYMAN ON THE SOUTH.

REVIEWS FOR JULY.

EXTRACTS FROM SOUTHERN PAPERS.

LIST OF REFUGEES FROM NEW ORLEANS.

SHIRTS—International Exhibition, Class 27 C, No. 4572. Prize Medal and honourable mentions 1861 and 1862. Shirts, Collars, Flannels, and every description of underclothing manufactured on the premises.

J. BRIE AND CO.,

43, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

The only Shirtmakers admitted as Exhibitors at the International Exhibition of 1862.

VALUES OF GOLD.—WATER-STON and BROGREN, for the information of the public and their numerous patrons beg to make the following announcement regarding the VALUE OF GOLD, feeling persuaded that the interests of the fair trader and public will be alike protected by the wide circulation of knowledge on the subject. Gold being divided into 24 parts or carats, it follows that gold of

Per oz.	Per oz.
24 carats fine is worth.....£1 4 11	18 carats.....£2 6 0
23 ditto.....£1 4 11	12 ditto.....£2 2 5½
22 ditto (British standard).....£1 3 10½	11 ditto.....£1 18 11
21 carats.....£1 3 10½	10 ditto.....£1 15 4½
20 ditto.....£1 3 10½	9 ditto.....£1 11 10
19 ditto.....£1 3 7 3	8 ditto.....£1 8 10
18 ditto.....£1 3 3 8½	7 ditto.....£1 4 9
17 ditto.....£1 3 0 2	6 ditto.....£1 1 24
16 ditto.....£1 2 16 7½	5 ditto.....£1 0 17 8
15 ditto.....£1 2 13 1	4 ditto.....£1 0 14 2
14 ditto.....£1 2 9 6½	3 ditto.....£1 0 7 1
	2 ditto.....£1 0 3 6½

Manufactory, 16, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London, W.C.

N.B.—Assays made of Chains and Jewellery for 1s. each.

NOTICE.—This Establishment is closed at six o'clock in the evening, and on Saturdays at one o'clock.

TWO PRIZE MEDALS awarded "For General Excellence" in DRESSING CASES, BAGS, DESPATCH BOXES, &c. Gentlemen's Travelling Bags, Useful Size, 14s. 6d.; Full Size, 18s. 6d.; Large Size, 21s. Courier Bags, with Shoulder Strap, from 10s. 6d. Morocco Ladies' Bags, 10s. 6d.; 12s. 6d.; 14s. 6d.; 16s. 6d.; and 21s. Tourists' Writing Cases, 8s. 6d.; 10s. 6d.; and 21s. Finest Cutlery in Razors, Scissors, Needles, &c.

JENNIFER and KNEWSTUB, Manufacturers to the Royal Family, 33, St. James's-street, and 66, Jermyn-street.

A. G. MILWAINE, AND CO., Commission Merchants, Tobacco, Cotton, Grain, and other produce, PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA.

McDOWELL, WITHERS, AND CO., MOBILE ALABAMA, C.S.A., Commission Merchants.

GEORGE CHAMBERS, & CO.,

Shipping and Commission Merchants,

NASSAU, N.P.

BAHAMAS.

J. PFEIFFER & MULLER,

Commission Merchants,

53, Rue du Chateau d'Eau,

PARIS.

SAMUEL SMITH,

COTTON BROKER,

11, Manchester Buildings,

LIVERPOOL.

HENRY ADDERLEY & CO.,

Shipping and Commission Merchants,

NASSAU, N.P.

BAHAMAS.

FRANCIS PRESTON,

ENGINEER AND CONTRACTOR TO HER

MAJESTY'S WAR DEPARTMENT,

35, Loveday Street,

BIRMINGHAM.

And Ancoats' Bridge Works,

MANCHESTER.

Established 1816.

J. H. ASHBRIDGE & CO.,

Shipping and Commission Merchants,

NEW ORLEANS.

Office—56, Brown's-buildings, Liverpool.

Agents—Liverpool and New Orleans Mail Steam Navigation Company.

BEACH & ROOT,

Commission Merchants,

CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA

and

ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

BEACH, ROOT, & CO.,

APSLEY BUILDINGS, OLD HALL STREET,

LIVERPOOL.

S. ISAAC, CAMPBELL, & Co.

CONTRACTORS & MERCHANTS.

71, Jermyn-street,

LONDON.

Sherbro: West Coast of Africa.

Represented by

W. B. HART,

Nassau, New Providence,

WIGGINS, TEAPE, & Co.,

WHOLESALE AND EXPORT STATIONERS,

10, ALDGATE, LONDON.

Special Papers suited to Foreign Markets.

ROWLAND & BROTHERS,

Commission Merchants,

NORFOLK,

VIRGINIA.

JOHN FRASER & CO.,

CHARLESTON,

South Carolina.

FRASER, TRENHOLM, & CO.,

Liverpool,

Commission Merchants.

SEARING AND CO.,

Commission Merchants,

MOBILE AND NEW ORLEANS, C.S.A.

Represented by

R. G. BEESLEY, Cotton Broker,

No. 2, Byron's-court, Royal-exchange,

Manchester.

J. E. HERTZ,

(Of the late Firm of MORDECAI and CO.),

Commission Merchant,

CHARLESTON,

SOUTH CAROLINA.

References to

M. C. MORDECAI, Esq.,

Charleston, South Carolina.

Messrs. COREN and HERTZ,

Savannah, Georgia.

LAMB, BALL, & CO.,

Ship and General Commission Agents,

ST. THOMAS,

WEST INDIES.

WEBER BROTHERS,

Commission Merchants,

SAVANNAH,

GEORGIA, C.S.A.

FRANCIS FORD, MANCHESTER,

Manufacturer of Three and Six Cord Spool

Thread, Cotton Balls, Knitting and Embroidering

Cottons, &c. Imported by F. RIMAILHO and

NEYREY, New Orleans, and GEORGE CHAM-

BERS and CO., Nassau, N.P.

R. D. RUSDEN, MANCHESTER,

ENGLAND, American Drills of all kinds,

Denims, Stripes, Shirtings, and all sorts of Manchester Goods.

ANDREW LOW AND CO.,

Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH

GEORGIA.

HAMILTON AND GRAHAM,

Importers, Wholesale Dealers in Dry

Goods, &c., PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA.

H. LEVY AND SON,

Commission Merchants, MOBILE.

GARLAND GOODE, MOBILE,

Cotton Factor and Commission Merchant.

BOYKIN AND McRAE, Cotton

Factors and Commission Merchants,

MOBILE, ALABAMA, C.S.A.

J. W. ANDERSON AND CO.,

Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH,

GEORGIA.

JAMES CHAPMAN,

Commission Merchant, CHARLESTON.

N. A. HARDEE AND CO.,

Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH,

GEORGIA.

R. N. GOUDINE AND CO.,

Commission Merchants, Charleston.

DUNLOP, MONCURE, & CO.,

General Commission Merchants,

RICHMOND.

WARWICK AND BARKSDALE,

GALLEGOS FLOUR MILLS.

This immense establishment of capacity to manufacture 1000 barrels of Flour per day, purely for

South American Market. RICHMOND.

MILLER AND BATRE, Exchange

Brokers, MOBILE, ALABAMA, C.S.A.

R. AND D. G. MILLS, Cotton

Factors and Commission Merchants,

GALVESTON, TEXAS, C.S.A.

GENERAL THOMAS J. (STONEWALL) JACKSON.

Two Continents, both friend and foe, combine to mourn the premature death of General JACKSON, hero and Christian. Two years have been sufficient to create a fame which has won the kindly respect of enemies and the admiration of the Old World, which twenty-four months since was ignorant of his existence.

It has been suggested that some general recognition from Great Britain of the worth of such a man, by name, by race, and by character related to us, although the citizen of another land, would be a graceful token of friendly feeling from the old country to our kinsmen across the Atlantic.

The eminent sculptor, J. H. FOLEY, Esq., R.A., has undertaken to execute a marble Statue, heroic size, of the General for £1,000, while £500 may be required for pedestal, inscription, and other extras. Accordingly, for £1,500 a complete Statue of "Stonewall" JACKSON, by one of our most distinguished sculptors, may be prepared for transmission to his native country when the unhappy war shall have ceased. Towards raising this sum, the Subscriptions of our countrymen and countrywomen are earnestly solicited. Central and Local Committees, with auxiliary Ladies' Committees, are being formed to collect the necessary funds.

The undersigned will gladly receive Subscriptions until the final arrangements are made, and an account has been opened for "General JACKSON'S Statue," at Messrs. COURTTS and Co.'s, Strand, London, W.C.

N.B.—It is not at all intended that Subscriptions to the Statue should imply any opinion on the merits of the American struggle. They will be taken solely and simply as a recognition of the rare personal merit of General Jackson.

COMMITTEE.

EDWARD AKROYD, Esq.
HON. EVELYN ASHLEY.
LORD CAMPBELL.
LORD EUSTACE CECIL.
EARL OF DONOUGHMORE.
HON. ERNEST DUNCOMBE, M.P.
SIR EARDLEY EARDLEY, BART.

SIR ARTHUR H. ELTON, BART.
SIR JAMES FERGUSSON, BART., M.P.
HON. C. FITZWILLIAM, M.P.
J. S. GILLIAT, Esq.
W. H. GREGORY, Esq., M.P.
COL. GREVILLE, M.P.
A. J. B. BERESFORD HOPE, Esq.

SIR E. KERRISON, BART., M.P.
J. LAIRD, Esq., M.P.
SIR COURTTS LINDSAY, BART.
W. S. LINDSAY, Esq., M.P.
G. PEACOCKE, Esq., M.P.
G. E. SEYMOUR, Esq.
J. SPENCE, Esq.

A. J. B. BERESFORD HOPE, Esq., 1, CONNAUGHT PLACE,
Hon. Treasurer,
W. H. GREGORY, Esq., M.P., 19, GROSVENOR STREET WEST.
Hon. Secretary.

MANCHESTER SOUTHERN CLUB.—Gentlemen desirous of Enrolling themselves as members of the above Club can obtain their cards on application at the office, 71A, Market-street, from nine to six daily, or by letter directed as above.—By order of the Committee,
W. E. STUTTER, Hon. Sec.

JAMES J. BENNETT & WAKE,
Steam-Ship Insurance and General Commission Agents,
77, Cornhill, London,
and JAMES J. BENNETT,
Matamoras.

NEW LINE OF STEAM PACKETS BETWEEN

LIVERPOOL, ST. THOMAS, LA GUAYRA, PTO. CABELLO, CURACAO, SANTA MARTHA, CARTHAGENA TO COLON, RETURNING FROM THAT PORT BY KINGSTON (JAMAICA), PORT-AU-PRINCE, CAPE HAITIEN TO LIVERPOOL.

The Liverpool, Western and Spanish-American Steam Packet Company

WILL commence running powerful A 1 Screw Steamboats from this port on the 26th June next, to be at Colon in time to take the Goods and Passengers brought to Panama by the Steamers, from the North and South Pacific, and to Colon, about the 21st July, continuing the same dates monthly. The Steamboats are:—

The CHRISTOPHER COLON, 1,572 tons, W. Baker, Commander, to sail from Liverpool, 20th June.
The SAINT THOMAS, 1,210 tons, W. Gilberry, Commander, 20th July.
The BOLIVAR, 1,239 tons, W. W. Kiddler, 20th Aug.
The HUMBERT (building), 1,400 tons

Goods and Passengers will be taken, if required, at through rates from the Continent, via Liverpool, over the Panama Railway to Ports in the Pacific, and also back from those Ports by same route.

The CHRISTOPHER COLON has very spacious and well-ventilated berths and saloon, which will afford every comfort to Passengers. The Rates for First and Second-class Passage will be moderate.

MIRIE & TOMLINSON,
ALEXANDER DURANTY & Co.
Liverpool, May 1, 1863.

WEST INDIES.—LIVERPOOL, WEST INDIAN, AND CENTRAL AMERICAN STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.

For SAINT THOMAS, PORT-AU-PRINCE (HAYTI), KINGSTON (JAMAICA), SANTA MARTHA, CARTHAGENA, AND COLON OR ASPINWALL.

Taking Goods at through rates for Panama and Ports in the North and South Pacific (in connection with the Panama Railroad, the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company).

The following fine new A 1 full powered Steamers will sail from LIVERPOOL on the 21st of each month, receiving goods up to the 19th of each month.

DARWIN .. .. 1,172 tons.
VENEZUELAN .. .. 1,000 "
GRANADIAN .. .. 1,100 "
MEXICAN (now building), 1,100 "

In consequence of the VENEZUELAN not being quite completed, the first-class Screw-steamer SHATESBURY, Captain VICKERMAN,

Will be despatched for the above Ports on the 21st May, taking goods until the 19th May.

Goods taken at through freights from the Continent.

For rates of freights or passage, having superior accommodation for passengers, applied to M<sup>r</sup> Clerk, Paria & Havre; GLAYKE and HENNING, Hamburg; LAURE and VANDERCRUYE, Bordeaux; W. D. ROBERTS and Co., Glasgow; or to LEITCH, HARRISON, & A FORWOOD, Agents, Liverpool.

THE PATENT FILE MACHINE.
AND THE MANUFACTURING COMPANY, LIMITED. Makers of every description of Patent and File Machine for Locks, Machine, and Agricultural Implement Makers, and for the general trade. Works:—Ashton Old-road, Manchester.

AMERICAN WINES AND SPIRITS, &c.

W. R. S. MARKWELL,

WINE MERCHANT TO HER MAJESTY AND THE IMPERIAL COURTS,
35, 40, & 45, ALBEMARLE STREET,

AND

4, STAFFORD STREET, PICCADILLY, LONDON, W.

Monagahela, Bourbon, and Old Dominion Whiskies; Peach Brandy; Staughton, Sickles, and other Bitters; Fruit Spirits; Sparkling and dry Catawba; Californian Champagne; all kinds of Continental Wines, including the original importations from Hungary.

The Stock of Wines, Spirits, and Liqueurs are of the oldest, most extensive, and best selected in England.

TERMS, CASH!

ACCOUNT BOOKS, &c.,

Of all Rules, ready in Stock, or made to any Pattern on the Premises.

LITHOGRAPHIC AND COPPER-PLATE.—Circulars printed on the Shortest Notice; all kinds of Copper-Plate Printing with economy and despatch.

CARD-PLATES.—Engraved in various styles with despatch. 2s. each.

LETTER-PRESS.—Letter-Press work of every description: Circulars, Catalogues, Share-Plates, &c.

NOTE-PAPER.—Embossed die, Plain, and Colours, with Crest and Initials, and Printed Address, without charging for Dies or Plates.

All Articles being prepared on the Premises can be ensured with despatch and economy at Wholesale and Shipping Prices.

F. ARNOLD, MANUFACTURING STATIONER, ETC., 86, FLEET STREET, E.C.
(CORNER OF ST. BRIDE'S AVENUE.)

VINS SUPERIEURS DE CHAMPAGNE.

DINET-PEUVREL ET FILS,

PROPRIETAIRES ET NEGOCIANTS,

A. A. VIZE, MARNE,

EXECUTE ORDERS FOR ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.
Please send References with Order.

PARIS EXHIBITION, 1855.

LA GRANDE MEDAILLE D'HONNEUR

WAS AWARDED TO

THOMAS DE LA RUE & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

PATENT PLAYING CARDS. PATENT METALLIC BOOKS; WITH

HARD ELECTRO-GILT PENCILS WHICH NEVER THICKEN AT THE POINT.

INDIA INLAND NOTE OR CHIT PAPERS, for Half Anna Postage Rate.

WATER-LINED OVERLAND NOTE PAPERS, in great variety.

MACHINE-FOLDED ENVELOPES. PATENT METAL SLATES.

POCKET TOURISTS' CASES.—Size, 5½ in. by 3½ in. by 1½ in. with every requisite for Correspondence.

ALLIANCE DESPATCH DESKS.—The most perfect Despatch Desk yet made.

DE LA RUE & CO.'S INDELIBLE DIARIES.—Published annually for exportation in August.

WALLETS, ALBUMS, SCRAP BOOKS, &c., &c.

The above can be obtained through any Stationer or Merchant.

REID AND STEWART,
Commission Merchants,
SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

Represented by
ANDREW STEWART, 1, RIMFORD-PLACE,
Liverpool.

C. W. WHITE,
Ship and General Commission Agent.
ST. THOMAS, WEST INDIES.

HARPER AND CAUGHEY,
Commission Merchants,
SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

Represented by
J. and A. CAUGHEY, Tempest Chambers,
Liverpool.

H. O. BREWER & CO.,
MOBILE, ALABAMA,
General Commission and Shipping Merchants.

MRS. KEMBLE'S AMERICAN JOURNAL.

Just published, in 1 vol. post 8vo. price 10s. 6d.

JOURNAL OF A RESIDENCE

IN A

GEORGIAN PLANTATION

IN 1838 AND 1839.

By FRANCES ANNE KEMBLE.

"A more startling and fearful narrative on a well-worn subject was never laid before readers, and the story does not lose in effect from the fact that its teller is well known to her countrywomen, and honoured by all who honour genius."—Athenæum.
LONDON: LONGMAN, GREEN, and Co., Paternoster-row.

ADDRESS TO CHRISTIANS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

By the
CLERGY OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA
London: James Nisbet and Co., 21, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

Price 6s., Quarterly (Annual Subscription, prepaid, 21s.), post-free.

THE HOME AND FOREIGN REVIEW. No. V. (July, 1863).

CONTENTS:—
1. BELLIGERENT RIGHTS AT SEA.
2. AUSTRIA AND GERMANY.
3. ALBANIA.
4. IRON-CLAD SHIPS.
5. EPIGRAMS.
6. ORIENTALISM AND EARLY CHRISTIANITY.
7. ULTIMONTANISM.
8. CONTEMPORARY LITERATURE.
9. CURRENT EVENTS.
Williams and Norgate, London and Edinburgh.

18mo., cloth, extra gilt edges, price 1s.

BEN RHYDDING, THE ASCLEPION OF ENGLAND: its Beauties, its Ways, and its Water Cure. By the Rev. E. W. THOMSON. With Map of the Railway Routes to Ben Rhydding. Third Edition.

T. Nelson and Sons, London and Edinburgh. To be had free by post for 13 stamps, of SHUTTLEWORTH, Bookseller, Ilkley.

The Index,

A WEEKLY JOURNAL OF POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND NEWS.

Devoted to the Exposition of the Mutual Interests, Political and Commercial, of Great Britain and the Confederate States of America.

Published every Thursday Afternoon.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

Subscription, Twenty-six Shillings per annum. Stamped, Thirty Shillings per annum.

Nos. I. to LXIV. NOW READY.

THE INDEX has already obtained an extensive and still rapidly increasing circulation in Great Britain, the Continent, the West Indies, and the Northern and Southern States of America. It goes into the hands of all who, through business interests, political pursuits, or personal sympathy, are concerned in the great Transatlantic questions now in process of solution.

The Second Half-Yearly Volume

OF

THE INDEX,

Is Now Ready, Price £1 1s.

Subscriptions and Advertisements to be sent, and Post-office Orders made payable to
J. B. HOPKINS, 13, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Printed for the Proprietor by HENRY FLORENCE MACKINTOSH, of 11, Cranworth, Fleet-street, in the Parish of St. Dunstan, in the City of London, and published by him at THE INDEX Office, 13, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London,—Thursday, July 16th, 1863.

THE INDEX

A WEEKLY JOURNAL OF POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND NEWS.

VOL. III—No. 65.]

LONDON—THURSDAY EVENING, JULY 23, 1863.

[PRICE 6D.

CONTENTS.

PENNSYLVANIA AND MISSISSIPPI.
CONSISTENCY AT THE FOREIGN-OFFICE.
THE PROSPECT.
NORTHERN THREAT OF WAR WITH ENGLAND.
VICTOR HUGO.
NATURAL HISTORY OF MAN.
THE EDINBURGH AND QUARTERLY.
CHARLES SUMNER.
THE RICHMOND ENQUIRER.
LETTER FROM NEW ORLEANS.
PARIS TOPICS.
LIST OF KILLED AND WOUNDED IN THE THIRD ALABAMA AT CHANCELLORSVILLE.

NOTES ON EVENTS OF THE WEEK.

AMERICA.

THE news brought by the Canada was highly important; for it informed us that the North was rejoicing over the fall of Vicksburg, the retreat of General Lee, and the certain and speedy ending of the rebellion. Mr. Lincoln told a band of serenaders that the Confederates had turned tail and run; General Halleck claimed the glory of the triumph at Vicksburg; Mr. Seward spiced a maudlin speech with sensational blasphemy; gold dropped to 31½ prem.; and the Federal press announced that within a few months the arms of the Union would be hurled against England and France to drive the one from Canada, and the other from Mexico. The mail that came in late last night does not inform us that the excitement in the North has abated; but it gives us intelligence that would have checked a disposition to indulge in boastful prophecies in any people but the Yankees.

General Lee had fallen back, but he had not recrossed the Potomac. He has taken up a strong position at Emmetsburg, and from thence during ten days he was engaged in sending his wounded, trains, supplies, and a vast booty into Virginia. But at the latest dates—the 13th July—he had not parted with one effective soldier, and his army was so placed that Northern accounts imply, if they do not so state, that Meade could only attack at a disadvantage. General Lee has thus secured all his booty, and not lost a gun. Without desiring to detract from the Northern victory, seeing that we have only the Northern version of the affair, we may, at least, tell the Federals that triumphs such as they claim in Pennsylvania do not crush an enemy. In Europe, an invader who carries off an enormous booty unmolested, is thought to have rather the best of it, although he does not achieve all that was expected of him. It is also worthy of remark that we do not yet know how far General Lee has succeeded in the object of his enterprise. It is not from the South that we were told he intended to take Philadelphia or Washington.

Does General Halleck edit the Baltimore American? That journal says, "10,000 prisoners have been captured from Lee's army, in addition to numerous prisoners gathered up by the Federal cavalry." Who does not remember Generals Halleck and Pope's memorable pen and ink capture of 10,000 prisoners from Beauregard's army?

The town of Gettysburg lies in a valley almost entirely surrounded by hills, at which point numerous important roads converge. The Federal advance guard, under General Reynolds, passed through the town (July 1st) and had proceeded beyond the hills, when the Confederates were discovered advancing in line of battle. An action immediately ensued, resulting in the repulse of Reynolds's divisions, which rapidly retreated through the town, and took up a second line of defence on the opposite hills. The whole of the Federal army, under General Meade, arrived towards evening, and every disposition was made to receive the Confederates should they advance on the following day. On Thursday, (July 2nd) it was confidently expected that the great conflict would be ushered in at dawn. Nothing was attempted, however, until late in the afternoon, when General Sickles was sent forward to reconnoitre the Confederate lines, which instantly brought on a fierce engagement. The Northern forces were driven forward through the valley, and up and over the hills; and this movement seemed to have decided the day, when fresh divisions were hurled against them in rapid succession, which compelled them to retire, and with loss, from a well-concentrated fire of numerous artillery. Northern accounts state that the Confederates retained possession of Gettysburg during the night, almost undisturbed, and that heavy reinforcements were constantly arriving to General Meade's succour.

On Friday (July 3rd) the Confederates opened the engagement at an early hour with artillery, and desperate attempts were successively made to turn the Federal right and left wings, which are said to have been repulsed. The centre was also attacked, but unsuccessfully, as was also a general assault by the whole line. At 5 p.m. the battle is said to have ended by the Confederates slowly retiring, unpursued, under cover of artillery. The morning following (Saturday 4th) General Meade telegraphed that General Lee's forces had retreated during the night, and were rapidly pushing forward towards the Potomac. The casualties in these three days' battles are placed by Northern authorities at 50,000—Confederates 30,000, Federals 20,000. The loss in officers on either side is said to have been great, but we cannot hear of more than two Confederate generals, viz., Barksdale and Garnett.

On the 7th July it was announced in Washington on the authority of an official despatch from Admiral Porter that Vicksburg surrendered on the 4th of July. It is curious that on the 10th there should still have been doubts about the correctness of the report. Certainly the detailed history of the surrender as published in the World is not calculated to inspire confidence. According to that journal General Pemberton may be a strict Quaker, but assuredly an eccentric soldier. This is the first time we ever heard of a commander surrendering, not that his circumstances were bad, but that he disliked further bloodshed! He is said to have written to Grant, "Although I feel confident of my ability to resist your arms indefinitely, in order to stop the further effusion of blood, I propose," &c. This remarkable narrative concludes by stating that the immediate cause of the surrender was the exhaustion of supplies and ammunition. We shall, in a few days, receive some reliable particulars of the affair. It may be interesting to recall a few important items in the history of this memorable siege:—May 12th, 1862, Commodore Farragut demands a surrender of the town, which is refused; June 11th, passes Vicksburg with his fleet under a terrific cannonade; June 23rd, the upper and lower fleets make a combined attack, which fails; June 24th, naval siege abandoned; December 28th, after a series of operations by land and water, General Sherman is defeated, and withdraws; January 22nd, 1863, General McClelland prepares for the siege; February 18th, General Grant arrives and bombards; March 21st, Admiral Farragut arrives with his fleet; April 29th, many gun-boats pass and re-pass; Admiral Porter arrives from New Orleans with his fleet, and joins the naval attack; April 30th, General Grant commences his march upon the place from the interior, and moves on Port Gibson; May 12th, engagement at Raymond; Pemberton retires; May 13th, engagement at Mississippi Springs; May 14th, occupation of Jackson; May 18th, Grant evacuates Jackson, and invests Vicksburg; after a series of desperate assaults, in which he loses frightfully, General Grant determines to approach the place by parallels; and on July 4th, according to private intelligence, the garrison surrendered.

The position of Banks is considered somewhat critical. Port Hudson holds out; the Confederates have destroyed Banks's depot of Springford Landing; and steamers are fired upon from the banks of the river between New Orleans and that place. No wonder that New Orleans is not thought to be very secure from attack; and that an attempt should be made to raise troops to defend the city. There is internal, as well as external difficulty, for Banks has succeeded no better than Butler in inspiring union feeling. No one is allowed in the streets after 9 o'clock, all clubs are closed, and all public-houses must shut up at 9 o'clock. No doubt the alarm has been increased by the capture of General Neal Dow and staff, just outside the Federal lines, near New Orleans. It was reported in Richmond on the 6th that the Confederates had captured 7,000 Federals.

The Confederates under General Morgan have made an incursion into Indiana. They have taken Corydon, and are supposed to threaten New Albany and Jeffersonville, where there are large stores of supplies. Business was entirely suspended in Indianapolis, and Governor Morton called for 50,000 men to repel the invaders, who, according to the same account, number 8,000.

The iron-clad Roanoke, which the Federals boasted could go anywhere and do anything, is found to be unfitted for sea-going, and is retained for the defence of New York harbour. Meantime the Confederate cruisers are continuing to capture Yankee vessels, which they either burn or ransom.

General Bragg has made Bridgeport his headquarters, and it is said the Tennessee River will be the future line of defence. General Dix, who was, according to Northern reports, to capture Richmond, has returned to Fortress Monroe.

The object of the reported mission of Vice-President Stephens, accompanied by Mr. Ould, the Confederate Commissioner for the exchange of prisoners, is still in doubt. If, indeed, this mission have the importance ascribed to it, we consider it probable that the Confederate Government, in its confident anticipation of Lee's victorious advance, wished to seize the opportunity of proffering terms of peace. The speculation of the New York press, that Mr. Stephens was authorized to propose a sort of re-union with a duality of Presidents—a dream of Mr. Calhoun's younger days—is manifestly absurd.

Despite the excitement of "glorious victories," the war fever cannot be revived in the North. On the 13th instant, there was serious rioting in New York in consequence of the enforcement of the conscription. Troops and artillery were ordered from Governor's Island to quell the disturbance.

It is rumoured that the question of peace has been discussed in the Federal Cabinet. The New York Herald says that "a Cabinet crisis has been caused by a proposition of Mr. Seward to issue a presidential proclamation offering an amnesty to the Southern people, withdrawing the Emancipation Proclamation, suspending the Confiscation Act, and offering protection to the personal property and rights of the Southern people, except the leaders." As the Times of to-day justly observed in view of the riot at New York, "if the North can only obtain recruits at the cannon's mouth, it is time indeed to discuss peace in the Cabinet." But vain as it is to discuss any other peace than peace found on Southern independence, it is worth remarking, how obstinate in their blindness all classes of the North still continue. In striking down the leaders they imagine that they can "crush rebellion," ignoring the fact which all the events of this war have proved, that these leaders are only the representatives of a universal popular feeling, stronger than and superior to themselves.

A fleet of steamers has arrived at Nassau—the Ohio, Racoon, Kate, Antonica, Elizabeth, Ellen, and Beauregard, from Charleston; and the Banshee, Charleston, Lizzy, Flora, and Fanny, from Wilmington. Several of these had previously been reported sunk or captured in the Northern papers.

General Barksdale, who fell in the second day's fight at Gettysburg, was in command of a Mississippi brigade, composed of the 17th, 18th, 21st, and 13th regiments from that State. He was originally a planter, but being elected by large majorities, represented a congressional district of Mississippi in the United States' House of Representatives for many years, with satisfaction and applause to his constituents. When war ensued, he raised a company, was elected colonel of the 13th Mississippi Volunteers, and upon the sudden death of General Griffith at Savage Station, near Richmond, June 29, 1862, succeeded to his command. He was an impetuous soldier, brave to rashness, and it has frequently surprised many that his headlong valour had not even sooner resulted, as now, in his untimely and much regretted fall.

General Walker, whose death is recorded in connection with the recent storming and capture of Brashear City, Louisiana, by a small Confederate force, was formerly a medical man of El Paso, Arizona Territory, on the frontier of Mexico. He served as captain of cavalry under Colonel Baylor in Arizona, and distinguished himself in many encounters with Indian and Federal forces in that distant region. He subsequently distinguished himself under General Sibley at the battle of Val Verde, in which the Federal General Canby was routed. His character was that of a fiery soldier, who saw nothing but duty and honour before him even when rushing at the cannon's mouth. His death at Brashear City was characteristic of the man;—acting as brigadier of his brigade, though ranking as colonel only, he was the first to lead the way, and cut a path for others to follow.

Late Northern papers inform us of a continuation of the negro riots, so frequent of late in the river cities. It appears that great antipathy is manifested towards the coloured population, on account of their working for wages objected to by the whites, and so bitter has the feeling of both parties become, that shots have been frequently exchanged, resulting in the death of many.

ENGLAND.

The National Rifle Association brought its annual meeting at Wimbledon to a close on Saturday last. On Wednesday, the 15th of July, the Albert prize, at 1,000 yards' range, was won by a member of the Victoria regiment, who, in seven shots, obtained no less than three centres and three bulls'-eyes. On Thursday and Friday the International match between eight English and eight Scottish volunteers was shot off, and resulted in a decided victory for England. The evenings of both days were delightfully at variance with the stern business of the mornings, and Madame Otto Goldschmidt, aided by M. Goldschmidt and Mr. Blagrove, on the one day charmed the Volunteers by a voluntary series of brilliant performances at a soirée musicale, and on the other day the camp-fire meeting was as gay, festive, and crowded, as a final effort could render it. On Saturday afternoon, according to the established custom, the doings of the fortnight were wound up by a review of the Metropolitan Volunteers. The force arrived on the ground at 6.30 p.m., and consisted of about 10,000 men. This force was divided into eight brigades, five of which, under Major-General Sir J. Y. Scarlett, K.C.B., formed the attacking division, while the defence was intrusted to Major-General Lord E. Paulet, C.B., at the head of three brigades. The last-named officer returned from Canada about a month since, whither he had gone to take the command at the time of the Trent affair. The sham-fight was necessarily but of short duration, owing to the lateness of the hour at which it commenced, and the attacking force won the day with somewhat unpractical facility. Perhaps the most noteworthy feature of the fight was the admirable skill and activity of the Volunteer artillery. After the action the whole force marched past his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief in quick time. The number of spectators was great, the weather fine, and the dust terrific. On the following Monday the prizes won during the fortnight were distributed to the victors at the Crystal Palace at Sydenham by the Commander-in-Chief, in the presence of a large and important assembly. It was an interesting sight to behold Captain Horatio Ross, with his four successful sons, receiving a perfect avalanche of prizes. The representatives of Cambridge University and Eton School were also conspicuous, and objects of applause. The Duke of Cambridge addressed the assembly on the subject of the Volunteer movement and the Rifle Association, and paid a high compliment to Eton, to the Council of the Association, and to Lord Elcho. After the ceremony the Volunteers adjourned to the gardens and cricket-ground, and finished the afternoon with athletic sports.

The Channel Fleet has left Yarmouth Roads for a cruise along the north-east coast. The squadron, under the command of Rear-Admiral Dacres, consists of the ships Edgar, 71 guns, Emerald, 35, Liverpool, 39, and the magnificent iron vessels, the Warrior, 40, the Black Prince, 40, the Resistance, 16, the Defence, 16, and the Royal Oak, 35. The number of men in the fleet is 4,800. The Royal Oak, in her first cruise, has realized the most sanguine expectations both in point of speed and sea-going qualities. Enormous numbers of people visited the fleet in Yarmouth Roads.

The Royal Agricultural Society of England is celebrating its vast annual exhibition at the city of Worcester. The machinery department, as is only to be expected, displays an advance in quantity and effectiveness, which leads the observer to imagine that the skill of English engineers increases at a rate hardly short of geometrical progression. Last year, mowing and reaping machines, drills, and hoes monopolized prizes and attention; this year, thrashing machines, steam ploughs, and farm steam-engines are the great attraction. The contests for the large rewards offered in these classes of machinery have occupied a week with the most gratifying results. As a specimen of the great success achieved by agricultural engineering, it will be sufficient to note that one firm produced a steam plough capable not only of turning up two acres of the hardest and driest soil in 1 hour and 40 minutes, but even of moving itself out of one field into another, half-a-mile off, in 25 minutes, while another firm displayed a combined cultivator and corn-drill, driven by a double-cylinder 10-horse stationary engine, and formed to crush the soil into a suitable seed-bed for the reception of no less than nine rows of seed at the same time. The show of animals is equally encouraging, and consists of 195 horses, 449 pens of sheep, 161 pigs, and 423 cattle. The Herefords and beautiful Devons are admirable as ever; the short-horn bulls scarcely up to the mark, but bull-calves and heifers of that breed are superb, Lady Pigott, the Duke of Montrose, and Colonel Towneley being as successful as usual. Lord Walsingham is unapproached in South-down sheep, and Mr. Garne's Cotswolds are marvellous. The thorough-bred horses are indifferent, but hunters and hackneys, Clydesdales and Suffolks, exhibit no deterioration in quality or power.

The Bishop of London's Fund, the scheme of which was originated by his Lordship but a few weeks ago, and for the purposes of which it is desired to raise a million of money in ten years, has already experienced considerable success. The amount subscribed within this short space of time is £70,000, and among the remarkable sums and names appearing on the list of contributors may be mentioned the Marquis of Westminster £10,000, Mr. Charles Morrison £5,000, the Bishop of London £2,000, Lords Derby, Ebury, Egerton, and the Duke of Devonshire £1,000 each; the like sum being given by Baring Brothers, and Jones Lloyd, and also by Truman, Hanbury, and Buxton, the great brewers, and by Marshall and Snelgrove, the great drapers in Oxford-street. The object of the fund is to extend the parochial system throughout the diocese of London.

We have passed a bill to suppress "garotters," by awarding the possible punishment of penal servitude for life, or imprisonment with flogging even to the number of three times. Twenty-five strokes with a birch rod are the maximum allowance for a juvenile offender, and fifty strokes for the more aged criminals. We have printed the act, it is now in force, and consequently we have prepared ourselves for the distant terrors of next November. In addition to this we have now got the report of the Commission appointed to inquire into the system of secondary punishments and prison discipline. The statistics, moreover, for the past year of the prisons and their inhabitants are published, and the knowledge that 141,742 persons, in some way or other, came under the latter category during the year, coupled with the ascertained fact of a steady rise at the rate of 12,000 a year in their number, gives considerable zest to the report of the Commissioners. These gentlemen recommend that penal servitude shall never be inflicted for less than seven years; that, generally, the rate of punishment shall be raised; that penal servitude shall be preceded by nine months' separate imprisonment; that all male convicts shall be sent to Western Australia during the latter part of their punishment, and that if "tickets-of-leave" are ever granted strict supervision shall be exercised over the holders. The Lord Chief Justice, who was one of the Commissioners, dissented so entirely from their views, as to draw up a separate memorandum of his own opinions. He rejects "tickets-of-leave" in England altogether, he repudiates all remissions of sentences, marks of merit, and gratuities for labour. Penal servitude of a rigorous kind, but not prolonged, is approved by him, only as a supplement to eighteen months imprisonment, and transportation, where possible, is considered desirable. The pleasant days of English convicts are evidently drawing to a close.

The much-abused game-laws have been transgressed to rather an alarming extent during the past year, the increase in offences of this description being at the rate of 19 per cent. over the previous year. The number of charges of trespassing in pursuit of game in the day-time was 9,144, while the charges for night-poaching amounted to 888, and for illegally selling game to fifty-two. The figures in these items in the preceding year were 7,629, 823, and thirty-one respectively. The increase may be accounted for by the high price of game during the years 1861-2, the unfavourable seasons having diminished the stock of old birds, and destroyed the young to an unparalleled extent. The present year promises a very decided change for the better; the accounts of the numbers and strength of young partridges in England, and of grouse on the Scotch moors, being most encouraging. Two good results may therefore be expected—an increase of the enjoyment of legitimate sportsmen, and a decrease of unlawful attempts to take game, resulting from the plenty and cheapness of the commodity.

It seems that there are persons in the world who are perverse enough to distort their skill to the most perilous enterprises, without the smallest prospect of an adequate remuneration. It is difficult to conceive that even persons on the spot, with every facility for the conversion of the fabricated article into the necessities of life should think the forgery of Federal "green-backs" a promising speculation; but what is to be said of two men of Sheffield possessing the art of engraving, deliberately setting to work to make money by manufacturing representations of $5 and $10 notes of the "United States" of America? Any rational being would feel somewhat uncomfortable at the thought of his desk being full of genuine "green-backs," in a country where sovereigns and convertible notes of the Bank of England are within reach; but these men, Edwin Hides and Henry Light, had actually caused to be printed 3,175 of the $10 notes, not for their own benefit, but as employed by another man, who never paid them one farthing for their work. However, as it turned out on the evidence of Mr. Shannon, of the Federal Treasury, that such notes, or rather the genuine specimens of them being payable on demand, are readily exchangeable for coin at a certain premium in New York, possibly the prisoners might have conceived prospects of gain sufficient to counterbalance the risk of the conviction, which in their cases ensued. The evidence produced went to show that Light being in Dublin, was introduced by one Lament to a man named Clifford Webster, a Yankee, who induced Light to undertake the work. The latter individual returned to Sheffield, enlisted Hides also, and succeeded in sending 3000 of these notes to Clifford Webster, who, with the natural shrewdness of his race, set sail at once for New York with his bundle of counterfeits, to exchange them, doubtless, at the premium already alluded to, leaving his unfortunate accomplices unpaid. Hides was unfortunate enough to have an inquisitive apprentice, who not only discovered the plates, but made impressions of them, which impressions he at once handed to the police. Just before the arrest of the prisoners an attempt had been made to sell 1000 dollars worth of these notes to Mr. Jonas Reece, a money-changer in Liverpool, who was ready to do the exchange at 3s. the dollar, but as he expressed some doubt as to the genuineness of the paper, the vendor ran off, leaving him a present of 100 notes. The prisoners seem to have accomplished the whole work themselves till it came to the "ornamental" part of the note. Light visited Wakefield to find a man capable of accomplishing the task, and there he implored one Gascoign to "touch up the head of Lincoln." This he declined "in spite of an assurance from Light that English laws were not made to protect foreigners." But Gascoign was right; and now, while Clifford Webster is studiously helping Chase to improve the currency of New York,

Light and Hides are enjoying a rest from their labours in an English prison.

From the early part of the present century up to the year 1856, a person named Richard Palmer Roupell carried on, first with his father, and after the father's decease, then alone, the business of a lead-smelter in the Borough of Lambeth. About the year 1820 he formed an intimacy with one Sarah Crane, the result of which was the birth of children four in number, namely, John (now dead), a daughter Sarah, a son William, and another daughter. About the year 1835 R. P. Roupell married this Sarah Crane, and after the marriage, one son, Richard Roupell, was born. This Richard, therefore, was the heir-at-law of R. P. Roupell. Connected with this family was one Watts, an attorney, who married the sister of Sarah Crane, and who had been articled to a firm in which a man named Whitaker was subsequently a partner. William Roupell, having grown almost to manhood, was articled to an attorney, and, therefore, was enabled to render himself useful to his father, R. P. Roupell, from the legal knowledge acquired during his articles. Now this R. P. Roupell had, by great economy and care, succeeded in amassing an enormous property, the real estate in his possession being of the value of £200,000; his habits and ideas, however, prevented him from allowing his son, William Roupell, more than 25s. a week; and mysterious and inexplicable as the fact may be, it seems that in the year 1853, William Roupell owed Watts nearly £1,000; and that he was compelled to find some means of raising money. In order to do this, he committed what he calls his first forgery of a deed of gift to himself from R. P. Roupell, of the Roupell Park Estate; and on this estate, then supposed to be the property of William Roupell, an advance of £10,000 was obtained in the year 1854, through Whitaker, from a lady, a client of this same Whitaker. From that time up to 1856, William Roupell was, as he alleges, employed in forging deeds of gift from his father to himself of various landed estates, on all of which he raised money by mortgage, which money he appears to have disbursed with a rapidity quite unintelligible, in a manner wholly unexplained, and to an extent far beyond even the enormous supplies which he raised by forgery and mortgage. These transactions continued through 1855 and 1856, and the total amount of money raised during that time was £100,000. Now, before and during that time, R. P. Roupell had, from time to time, executed various wills, but it is not necessary to refer to any one previously to that made in the year 1850, by which it is alleged that he left his property equally among his family. To that will a codicil was added, appointing new executors on 30th August, 1856. Enough has been already stated to show that if this will and codicil had remained intact, the forgeries of William Roupell would at once have been brought to light. Things being in this state, R. P. Roupell died on the 12th September, 1856. Immediately after his death William Roupell—we are assuming his evidence to be correct—went to his father's house and found the will of 1850. It was not sufficient to destroy the will, because the codicil was in draught in the proctor's hands. It was necessary to supersede it. William Roupell accordingly obtained a common form of a will, and made a copy, the effect of which was to give all the testator's property to Mrs. Roupell, the Sarah Crane above-mentioned, the testator's widow. A will must be executed by the testator and attested by two witnesses. William Roupell forged the testator's name to the will, and signed the attestation in his own name; but another witness being essential, he betook himself to an old man named Muggeridge, more than 80 years of age, and obtained his signature to a receipt for £5. That signature William Roupell copied, against the attestation clause of the forged will, which bore date the 2nd September, 1856. He being executor under the will in due course proved it. He swore the personalty under £120,000, and then proceeded to deal with realty and personalty as he pleased, acting in all things as his mother's agent, exercising over her absolute control, and obtaining her signature to deeds of gift to himself and to family settlements containing powers to him. By these means he raised and spent vast sums of money. He contested the Borough of Lambeth, and was elected a member of the House of Commons. In March, 1862, his money difficulties overcame him, and he absconded from England. Shortly afterwards he returned to this country, and in an action tried a year ago in which his brother, Richard Roupell, was plaintiff, and sought to eject the mortgagees who claimed under William Roupell, the latter came forward as a witness, and swore to a full detail of the forgeries of various deeds, and of the will; and also explained that he had charged the estates for £180,000. But that action was compromised, and no explanation was given how he had spent the money. After this evidence he was ordered into custody by the judge, and was subsequently tried for forgery and convicted, and sentenced to penal servitude for life. Such is a succinct account of the doings of William Roupell up to the present time. Last week, however, this drama was commenced anew in the shape of another action (doubtless one of a long series), in which Richard Roupell, as heir-at-law, sought to eject the mortgagees from an estate claimed under deeds from William Roupell. The title of the mortgagees, the defendants to the estate, the name of which is the Great Warley Estate, rested on a deed of gift by which R. P. Roupell, the father, conveyed the estate to William Roupell, his son. That deed was dated 9th January, 1856, and the mortgage was made by William Roupell to the defendants for the sum of £12,000, by a deed executed in July, 1857. The title of the plaintiff rested on his heirship-at-law, and if he could prove that the deed of 9th January, 1856, and the will of September, 1856, were both forgeries, his title would, of course, be upheld. The method, however, by which William Roupell accomplished the forgery of the deed of 9th January, and the skill with which he surmounted the difficulties in his path are well worthy of remark. It was clearly necessary that the solicitor who was to prepare such a deed should have the authority or direction of the donor to do so. This first difficulty was got over by a letter which William caused his sister Sarah to write, to which he then forged his father's signature, and which was addressed to Whitaker, and contained an authority to prepare the required deed. But, of course, this deed did not complete the title for any useful purpose, and it was also necessary to gain possession of the title-deeds to the estate. Now it happened that part of the lands were copyhold, and a surrender was made by the father to William Roupell as a young life for certain purposes of enfranchisement, and to effect these objects the old man was induced to give William access to the strong box, from which not only the copyhold, but also the freshhold title-deeds were, of course, at once abstracted by the latter. But even this vast scheme of fraud was not enough to satisfy William Roupell. He thought that the apparent value of the estate might easily be raised to £18,000, and to that end he took from his father's strong-box the counterparts of the leases of these estates, copied them, changing the rentals from £250 to £360, and from £78 to £170 per annum, and adding 21 years to the term of the genuine leases, and having got copies of these draughts engrossed at the law stationer's, and forged the necessary signatures, he was ready armed for all possible eventualities. In the result, however, he did not effect a legal charge on this estate till the year 1857, and then to the present defendants. It should also be mentioned that he destroyed his father's genuine will and the codicil on the night of his departure from England; that a draught of the codicil, added only thirteen days before R. P. Roupell's death, was in the hands of the proctors and is now in existence, but that, strangely enough, the draught of the will made in 1850 cannot be found. It is supposed to have been destroyed at the time of the removal of Messrs. Ring, the proctors, who made it, from Doctors' Commons, and consequently there seems no probability of any future production of such a draught for the purpose of setting up the provisions of that will. This extraordinary trial, then, to eject the mortgagees from the Great Warley estate by the heir-at-law of R. P. Roupell commenced last Friday, and has occupied the court ever since. It is quite impossible to convey any idea of the evidence adduced, of the tenacity of the contending counsel to every advantage to be seized for their own or obstacle to be put in the way of the opposite party, of the severity of the cross examination of the relations and connections of the forger, the struggle to compel and evade the calling of inconvenient witnesses such as Whitaker, or the intense dramatic effect produced by the appearance and examination of the convicted forger brought up from gaol by habeas corpus for the trial. Seven witnesses were called to prove the marriage of R. P. Roupell and Sarah Crane, and the birth of the plaintiff in wedlock. Then William Roupell gave a full detail of his crimes and adventures. Two men, Truman and Dove, deposed to attesting the deed of gift of the 9th of January, 1856, which bore the signature of R. P. Roupell, and both swore that the old man was not present at the time, and that they supposed they were attesting the signature of William Roupell, and they even seemed to imagine that the forgery was committed under their eyes. Then ensued an examination to prove the forgery of the name of Muggeridge to the attestation of the will, and to show that on the 2nd of September, 1856, Muggeridge did not visit old Roupell. Then a number of witnesses were examined as to the forged signatures; the first of whom to the amazement of the plaintiff's counsel, positively swore that the signature to the will was genuine. Two banker's clerks, a lawyer's clerk, a bank manager, two tenants, three lithographers, famous also as "experts and facsimilists," however, annulled the boldness of that witness by their unanimity in asserting that all the signatures in question were forgeries. The case for the plaintiffs occupied four entire days. The line of argument adopted by the counsel for the defendants is, that the counterpart leases are admitted forgeries, that the will of 1856 may or may not be a forgery, but that the deed of gift of January 1856 is genuine, and bears the genuine signature of R. P. Roupell. The witnesses for the defence vie in number with those for the plaintiffs, and the collection of signatures for comparison is hourly swelled by additions. The case is not yet concluded.

Two gentlemen have been assaulted in a railway carriage by a maniac, and by their united efforts barely prevented murder. They had to travel for a considerable distance, contending for their lives; there being no means of communicating with the guard before the train stopped. These things are managed better on the other side of the Atlantic, and it would be well for us to adopt a system of communication between the passengers and the guard.

EUROPE.

THE reply of Prince Gortschakoff to the English despatch has been published. It is dated the 1st of July—Old Style—and is a very long and elaborate state paper, requiring, for its complete analysis, more space than we have at our disposal. Prince Gortschakoff has no particular objection to offer to the six points; the greater part of the measures suggested in them "have already been either decreed or prepared upon the initiative of our august master;" but the Prince does not share Lord Russell's hope that these measures would lead to the complete and permanent pacification of the country. Reorganization of the kingdom must be preceded by the re-establishment of order. Could they be put at once into execution they would not pacify the country. The insurgents, he points out, do not demand an amnesty or autonomy; even the absolute independence of the kingdom is only a means to their final object—dominion over provinces where the immense majority are Russian by race or religion—a Poland extended to the two seas, and claiming the provinces belonging to other Powers. A conference to deliberate upon the measures to be taken for the better rule of Poland would, he says, be a direct interference of foreign Powers in the details of administration calculated to deprive the Government of its prestige and authority, by further increasing the pretensions and illusions of the Polish agitators. Russia, however, has no objection to discuss these details with Austria and Prussia as she did in 1815. The amnesty is not to be thought of. "Desirable as it may be speedily to place a term to the effusion of blood, this object can only be obtained by the insurgents throwing down their arms and surrendering themselves to the clemency of the Emperor. Every other arrangement would be incompatible with the dignity of our august master, and with the sentiments of the Russian nation." Prince Gortschakoff rebukes Earl Russell for his belief in the stories invented by the Poles of Russian cruelty, and his ignorance of the character of the revolution, and charges the Great Powers with prolonging it by allowing the instigators and guides of the movement to cherish hopes of their active intervention. The despatch is substantively a declaration that Russia will make no concession to the Poles. She will subdue them, and then the Emperor will put into execution the liberal measures he has already resolved upon; but he will not treat with the Poles, and he is resolved at all risks to reject foreign interference.

The reply to the French despatch agrees in substance with that addressed to England. It makes the French Government directly responsible for the continuance of the insurrection. Prince Gortschakoff says:—"One of the principal focuses of the agitation which exists is Paris itself; the Polish emigrants have organised a vast conspiracy, destined to mislead public opinion in France by a system of misrepresentation and calumny; they keep alive disorder in the kingdom of Poland by assisting it with material, by the terror of a secret committee, and above all, by propagating the conviction that active foreign intervention will take place in favour of the most senseless aspirations of the insurrection;" and he has "pleasure in believing that the French Government will not permit its name to be abused for the advantage of the revolution in Poland and in Europe."

The situation is thus rendered extremely difficult and dangerous. The Great Powers will have either to content themselves with answering the despatch, and then leaving the Poles to settle as best they can with Russia, or they must make up their minds for war. We may still hope that this latter course will not be taken. The English Government is at least convinced that war for Poland would lead to no good results. Still the danger is great. Although the answer to France is conciliatory enough in tone, the reproaches addressed to the Government for the liberality, nay favour, it has shown the insurgents cannot fail to cause some irritation, and the Emperor may find the evils of submission to this language too great, and for all the certain danger, let the popular passion have its way.

The telegraph still reports skirmishes. Be the reports true or false, their importance is the same. As long as the hope of intervention can be indulged in, the insurrection in some shape will be kept up: as soon as that hope ceases to be possible, it will die out.

The ecclesiastic whom the banishment of Archbishop Felinski left the administrator of Warsaw ordered that all the churches should be put in mourning. The order was generally executed, and in the following night some thirty priests were arrested.

The revolutionary Government has decreed the suppression of the clandestine journal which disregarded its warnings. It has established an official organ, called The Independence. The Russian Government has ordered a new levy of troops. Great preparations are still being made for war. The Diet of Finland, which has not met for many years, is convoked for the 15th of September.

A party of Poles and Englishmen, which attempted to penetrate into Russia, from the Danubian principalities, has come to grief. Pursued by the Moldo-Wallachian troops they refused to lay down their arms. A combat ensued, which lasted five hours, ending in the retreat of the Poles; between 50 and 60 being killed and wounded on each side. The Poles were pursued and reached upon the Pruth, made no resistance, and laid down their arms.

Langiewicz has presented a petition to the Austrian Chamber of Deputies, for its intervention with the Government to allow him to retire to Switzerland.

The Austrian police having discovered a clandestine cartridge manufactory, of which a Frenchman was the manager, at Cracow, arrested five persons. As the materials and the prisoners were being removed, the crowd hissed the military escort, and flung stones, upon which the soldiers fired, and wounded several persons seriously.

The budget for 1864 has been laid before the lower house of the Austrian Reichsrath. It embraces a period of fourteen months, from November 1, 1863, to December 31, 1864, the Government having resolved that in future the financial year shall be coterminous with the solar year. The ordinary expenditure is estimated at 512 millions of florins—the Austrian florin is two shillings—the extraordinary at 102 millions, of which 52 millions are for the redemption of the debt. The revenue is estimated at 564 millions, including 43 millions of extraordinary receipts, leaving a deficit of 49 millions, 16 millions of which are to be covered by new taxes, and the balance by "credit operations." The war budget is 106 millions, a reduction of 6 millions upon the current year. This statement is another satisfactory sign of the progress Austria is making. For several years her budgets showed a deficit of at least ten millions sterling; that now estimated is little more than three, a result not unsatisfactory, when it is remembered that five millions are applied to the repayment of debt, and that the alteration in the financial year entails some heavy charges upon this particular budget.

No doubt is now entertained of the substantial accuracy of the published version of the correspondence between the Crown Prince of Prussia and his father. The official newspapers are unable to deny its genuineness; some of them practically admit its genuineness by denouncing with the utmost bitterness those who published it.

The treaty between Belgium and Holland, by which the latter Power consented to the perpetual renunciation of the Scheldt dues for a sum of 17,141,640 florins, or, at the exchange agreed upon, of 36,278,566 francs—about £1,450,000 sterling—was signed on the 12th of May. The treaty by which the maritime Powers have undertaken to contribute in certain proportions to this capital, was signed at Brussels on the 10th. Belgium undertakes as her contribution somewhat more than the third part; she pays 13,328,000 francs, and 22,950,000 francs are apportioned amongst the maritime Powers. England and the United States head the list, paying 8,782,320 and 2,779,200 francs; Brazil and Ecuador are at the bottom, with 1,680 and 1,440 francs respectively. Inasmuch as these payments are not made to relieve the commerce of the respective countries of any burden, for Belgium, in the interest of the commerce of the Scheldt, has always paid the dues, the Belgian Government could not well avoid making some concessions itself. The tonnage dues are to be entirely abolished, and the pilotage dues are to be reduced. These concessions are not confined to the Scheldt, but extend over the whole Belgian coast; and finally, the taxes levied by the local authorities of Antwerp are to be simplified and reduced. The treaty comes into operation on the 1st of August.

It will be seen that the English Government has undertaken to pay more than £350,000. This will be a very large slice out of Mr. Gladstone's surplus, and we may doubt whether the English taxpayers will approve the romantic liberality of Earl Russell in undertaking so large an expenditure to get rid of a tax which did not fall, and which Belgium in her own interest could never have allowed to fall, upon English commerce.

The arrest of brigands on board the French packet-ship, the Aunis, in the harbour of Genoa, to which we briefly referred last week, has created a great deal of excitement in Italy. Although the Italian Government was clearly in the wrong, the general feeling of the country was decidedly against giving up of the captives, and the French Government has been vehemently abused by the Italian press for demanding their surrender. The Aunis, a packet-boat, belonging to the Messageries Impériales, was on her way from Naples to Marseilles; she had touched, as usual, at Civita Vecchia, and had there received, with other passengers, the five brigands duly furnished with passports of the Roman Government, visé by the Embassies of France and Spain, for Marseilles and Barcelona, their ultimate destination. Upon her arrival in the harbour of Genoa, the police agents presented themselves, and demanded the surrender of the five persons—a demand which, after some objection and under protest, was complied with. As the proceeding of the Italian authorities was not only a breach of international law, but a direct and offensive violation of special conventions subsisting between France and Italy, the French Government, however willing it may be to assist the Italian Government to repress the brigandage, could not do otherwise than demand the restitution of these five men; and the Italians have betrayed a childish irritability in treating the demand as an unfriendly act, and heaping invectives upon the Emperor, and even the Empress. The Italian Government, of course, had no option but to surrender the prisoners and apologise for the outrage offered the French flag. And in that way the affair has been settled. It will now, it is said, do what it should have done at first, demand the extradition of the brigand chiefs as ordinary criminals under its extradition treaties with France.

The Chamber of Deputies has passed the income tax bill by 130 to 70 votes.

The elections to the Hanoverian second chamber which have just terminated, have resulted in the complete triumph of the Liberals. The reactionary party, which had so long governed, and only recently succumbed to a more liberal, although essentially moderate Ministry, has but five representatives in place of the fifty whom it numbered in the previous chamber.

The Schleswig Estates have met only to adjourn. The German members contested the validity of an election by which their majority had been diminished. The Royal Commissioner refused to allow a vote upon the point, and the Germans withdrew from the Assembly, leaving it, for want of the requisite quorum, incompetent for business.

MEXICO.

General Forey announces, in his despatch to the Minister of War, that the army was received by the population of the city of Mexico with an enthusiasm which partook of delirium. The soldiers of France were literally crushed beneath crowns and bouquets. "The population of Mexico," he adds, "is greedy for order, justice, and true liberty. In my answer to its representatives, I have promised them tout cela in the name of the Emperor."

Juarez has retired to San Luis Potosi, and the French advance is said to be following him. Several provinces are said to have pronounced in favour of French intervention.

PARLIAMENTARY NOTES.

THURSDAY, JULY 16.—HOUSE OF LORDS.
The Irish Fisheries Bill was read a second time.

THURSDAY, JULY 16.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.
In reply to Mr. Fitzgerald, Mr. Layard said that no further information had been received in the case of the Margaret and Jessie.

On the order for going into Committee of Supply, Mr. Seymour Fitzgerald called attention to the recent rupture of diplomatic relations with Brazil. He said that the honour and reputation of England had been compromised, and the political and commercial interests of both countries seriously affected, by the course which her Majesty's Government had thought fit to pursue. He censured the Government for not having recourse to the arbitration in the first instance, and for the violent manner in which reprisals had been made, calculated to insult as grossly as possible a respectable and friendly Power. He proceeded to criticise in detail the assessment of damages by the Queen's Advocate, and animadverted on the conduct of the Government in seizing Brazilian vessels, inflicting great injury on commerce, and irritating a friendly people without knowing whether they were asking too much or too little. They had put in a claim for £3,360, as a rough estimate for the cargo of the Prince of Wales; but the manifest of that vessel showed that of her cargo not more than £800 worth was of such a nature that it could possibly come ashore. Again, £840 was demanded for "possible murders," a most extraordinary item in itself, and which might be for murders that had never occurred. This requisition was so ridiculous that, whilst it did no credit to the Government, it reflected disgrace and dishonour upon the British nation. He should like to know then what Ministers were doing in the extraordinary position in which they found themselves, and whether they were prepared to follow the course they had pursued in the case of Paraguay, and restore friendly relations with Brazil by expressing their regret. As it was clear we were in the wrong, he thought it would be more honourable to this country if, putting aside all sentiments of false pride, we took the initiative towards a reconciliation, and not leave the matter to be settled by the interposition of the King of Portugal or any other Power. In conclusion the hon. gentleman moved for a copy of the manifest of the Prince of Wales.—Mr. Layard said he did not clearly understand the object of Mr. Fitzgerald in bringing forward again a subject that had been already so much ventilated in that House and in another place. According to Mr. Fitzgerald, this country had been dishonoured and disgraced by the course taken by her Majesty's Government; according to him, if a British ship was wrecked on the coast of a country, its cargo plundered, its crew murdered, the authorities on the spot conniving at these acts, and the Government of the country refusing redress, her Majesty's Government were to remain idle and indifferent. If the object of Mr. Fitzgerald was to embarrass her Majesty's Government in dealing with the South American States, he had succeeded, for he (Mr. Layard) had already seen the consequences of these accusations against the Government in the altered feeling of the South American States. Mr. Layard went over the leading incidents of the dispute between the two countries, contending that Mr. Fitzgerald had not correctly represented the conduct of Mr. Christie in relation to the reprisals, an act which was executed, he said, in the least offensive manner possible. Mr. Fitzgerald had professed a desire for the re-establishment of amicable relations with Brazil. The mediation offered by the King of Portugal for this object had been accepted by her Majesty's Government, and if anything could prevent the amicable adjustment of the differences, and which he most earnestly desired, it would be the course pursued by Mr. Fitzgerald.—Sir H. Cairns said, although the conduct of the Brazilian Government in the matter of the wreck of the Prince of Wales laid a strong ground for remonstrance on the part of our Government, it had been conducted in a temper on the part of our representative which must have excited a feeling of alienation in the Brazilian Government, his correspondence being in its tone contemptuous and rude. He looked with shame and regret at the mode in which our negotiations with Brazil had been conducted, which would not, he said, have been adopted towards a strong Power. He declared that, although he held the Brazilian Government in the matter of the wreck to have been in the first instance in the wrong, he still regarded with sorrow the tone of our proceeding, and the ridiculous and absurd demand for compensation.—The Solicitor-General defended the conduct of the Government, and Mr. Monckton Milnes endeavoured to vindicate the character of Mr. Christie. After some further debate the motion was withdrawn.

Mr. Lawson moved a resolution condemning the system under which public-houses were at present licensed.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer opposed the resolution. He remarked that the present system was assailed by two classes of theorists—those who desired to throw the trade open, and those who wished to prohibit it entirely. These parties agreed in attacking the present system, but in nothing further. After some discussion the motion was negatived—Ayes 21, Noes 87. The House soon afterwards adjourned.

FRIDAY, JULY 17.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

No business of interest was discussed.

FRIDAY, JULY 17.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

A variety of desultory discussions took place on the order for going into Committee of Supply, Mr. Hennessy raising one on competitive examination for junior appointments in the Civil Service, and Mr. Bass another on the street nuisances, vulgarly called street music—neither of which led to any result, or elicited any remarks worth recording.—Lord R. Cecil inquired whether the Chancellor of the Exchequer was prepared to propose the grant of any compensation to Captain Blakeley for the loss occasioned to him by the detention, without cause, of the vessel Gibraltar, on suspicion of being in the service of the Confederate States; and whether the Government would lay upon the table the depositions or informations upon which they had acted in that case. The noble lord said that he had been informed by Captain Blakeley that the losses he had incurred by the erroneous action of Ministers in this matter amounted to between £20,000 and £30,000; and he complained that he was an especial object of aversion on the part of Mr. Adams, in whose hands Her Majesty's Government were mere tools.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer replied that he had no official knowledge of the case, and it would be absurd in a Finance Minister to propose the grant of compensation to a person from whom he had heard nothing, on whose behalf no application had been made to him, and who he had no idea had suffered wrong. He had nothing to do with the papers, but he imagined it was not usual to produce them. In the name of the Government he entirely repudiated the charges insinuated against them by the noble lord.

Mr. G. Duff drew attention to the case of Matamoras and the other Spaniards lately sentenced to banishment on account of their religious opinions.—Sir G. Bowyer deprecated the discussion of the question as calculated to irritate the feelings of the Spanish people against this country, and said that Matamoras and his companions were paid agents of the Protestant propaganda at Malta, whilst Matamoras himself had formerly been a political conspirator, and obliged to fly from his country in consequence of the transactions in which he had been engaged. The hon. baronet then adverted to a statement made by Lord Palmerston some months ago, to the effect that a Father Curci had preached a sermon before the ex-King of Naples and his Court in the Church of Santo Spirito at Rome, in the course of which the lecturer addressed reproaches to his audience for encouraging the practice of brigandage in Neapolitan territory. In reply to this statement the hon. baronet read a communication signed by several ecclesiastics and members of the aristocracy of Southern Italy, denying that Father Curci had preached a sermon on the occasion containing any political allusions whatever.—Lord Palmerston said that great allowance must be made for the Spaniards in cases of the sort referred to by Mr. Grant Duff, on account of their limited intercourse with the rest of Europe. The Spanish Government were most anxious that the laws of Spain should be administered with all the lenity and indulgence that the prerogative of the Crown would admit of; but in Spain, as in other countries, public opinion had some force, and the Government could not go in opposition to it. In the present case, however, Queen Isabella had, in consequence of the representations made to her, both by Governments and private individuals from almost all parts of Europe, exercised her prerogative of pardon and remitted the sentence on those persons, upon condition that they should remove to some other country, as no doubt they would be most happy to do. At present the Spanish law on this subject was adverse to treaties; for by treaty English subjects were entitled to hold private worship in their own houses, but this was interdicted by the laws of the country. The question of reconciling the laws with treaties was, however, still pending. With regard to the sermon of Father Curci at Rome he had received a letter from Italy, the writer of which he was not prepared to name, which stated that the sermon of Father Curci drew a distinction between the true and the false emigration, fulminated against the second, and accused the first of pride and of little faith in God, from whom alone could come the restoration of the Bourbonic dynasty. The preacher also spoke of their braggart impotency, and the emigration were, in consequence of what he said, greatly moved and highly indignant. The father, it was true, did not reproach them with sending brigands into Neapolitan territory; but it was quite clear, if this statement were correct, that the sermon had a very strong political bearing, and reproached the emigration with the course they were pursuing. He believed the French garrison at Rome were now engaged in putting a stop to the proceedings of the loyal subjects of the ex-King of Naples, and that the Bourbonic rendezvous established at Marseilles would shortly be broken up.

Several other subjects having been disposed of, the House adjourned at a quarter to two.

MONDAY, JULY 20.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

In reply to Lord Lyveden, Earl Granville stated that the Governor did not consider the defences of Canada in a satisfactory state. The Canadian Parliament and Administration had failed to provide effectually for the defence of the colony. The people had been more active. Twenty-five thousand volunteers had been enrolled, and as many more refused through a short-sighted economy.

MONDAY, JULY 20.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. Forster asked a question concerning the alleged "indiscriminate flogging" of the negro "rioters" at St. Vincent; who, our readers will remember, proposed to massacre the white men, and divide the women and other spoil among themselves.—Mr. Porteus explained that three of Mr. Forster's estimable protégés had been flogged by martial law, and others sentenced to punishment, of which flogging formed a part. The Colonial Secretary had entered into communications with a view to the mitigation of these sentences.

The orders of the day being postponed at Lord Palmerston's instance, Mr. Horsman moved that in the opinion of this House the arrangements made with regard to Poland by the treaty of Vienna have failed to secure the good government of Poland or the peace of Europe; and any further attempt to replace Poland under the conditions of that treaty must cause calamities to Poland and embarrassment and danger to Europe. He showed that the subjection of Poland to Russia in 1815 had been forced upon England; that it had never been compensated by the promised concessions to the Poles; that the scheme of a Polish Constitution under the Czar had proved unworkable; that since 1831 the Czar had claimed to rule absolutely by right of conquest; and that at that period Lord Palmerston, after protesting and remonstrating in vain, withdrew from diplomatic action avowedly because he would not go to war. Diplomatic action had now been resumed, and in a tone which, as he argued, implied a threat of war. After reading the despatches on the subject the restoration of Poland must now be regarded as the adopted policy of the Cabinet. The only question was could it be peaceably accomplished. The answer to that depended entirely upon Austria, who had the peaceful solution of the difficulty in her sole keeping. If Austria were alive to her own interests she would make restitution of Galicia. Prussia must then relinquish Posen; and thus the kingdom of Poland would be established without a blow. If Austria refused, and England faltered beside her, what would France do? No one could say; but let it be remembered that the Polish question was one that united all parties in that country, and already it was rumoured that the Emperor of the French had sounded the Italian Government, and been offered an army of 60,000 men. Would not Hungary and Galicia send a similar response? Was our future policy, then, to be left to chance? He looked to the noble lord at the head of the Government to save us from the consequences of such a state of things, for he was convinced that the restoration of an independent Poland was about to become the great political event of our day. This speech was listened to with great attention, but without much cheering, by a rather thin House, which did not fill even when Mr. Gladstone rose to reply.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, on behalf of the Government, that, with one exception, he had no reason to complain of the spirit in which Mr. Horsman had discussed this question. There were parts of his speech, however, which did not cohere with others. The present position of the Emperor of Russia, he observed, had some claim upon our consideration, recollecting the nature of the inheritance to which he had succeeded, the great things he had achieved, and the success which had attended his wise efforts. He then proceeded to discuss the policy which it behoved the Government to pursue upon this question, and the argument of Mr. Horsman, which amounted to this,—that their choice was between war and doing nothing. After disposing of the former alternative, he demurred to the proposition that the Government should have remained idle, which, he said, would have been highly inexpedient, considering the state of feeling, not only in this country, but on the Continent, and especially in France. He remarked upon the inference drawn by Mr. Horsman from a particular despatch of Lord Russell, as indicating a change in the policy of the Government, and as containing a menace of war; and he contended that such a conclusion could not be maintained. Mr. Horsman had argued that the Poles had been encouraged by hopes of aid from without, and that the British Government had kindled the flame; but he had adduced no proof of this allegation. As to the position in which matters now stood, Mr. Horsman had not sought for any declaration from the Government, and the present was not the moment when a development of our future policy would be expedient. As to the motion, which called for a solemn condemnation of the Treaty of Vienna—a motion which fell short of the opinions and language of the mover—he urged various reasons why it was not desirable that it should be adopted by the House.—Mr. Hennessy, advertising to the interest taken in this question by the people of England, showed, from the petitions presented to the House, what they wanted. They declared that Russia had forfeited, by her gross and barbarous outrages upon the people of Poland, all right to the kingdom; that her conduct tended to disturb the peace of Europe, and that Poland was entitled to independence. The House was justified, therefore, in asking what were the intentions of the Government. He defended Austria, whose position, he observed, was a difficult one. There existed in Austria a strong feeling in favour of the Poles, even in the army. He believed that the Emperor of Austria himself was in favour of Poland; in fact, the whole of Europe participated in that feeling, and the Emperor of the French would gain an immense moral advantage by establishing the independence of Poland. He denied the assertion of Prince Gortschakoff that the Polish movement originated in foreign influence, and he showed the provocations which had driven the landholders and moderate party to join the insurrection, which was aided and fostered, according to Russian witnesses, by the whole population. Poland had a national Government, which preserved order, made laws, and levied taxes. He denied in like manner the denial of Prince Gortschakoff of the barbarities charged against the Russian troops. On the one hand, therefore, was found a national Government in Poland, supported by the whole population; on the other was found the Russian Government, openly ignoring legality.—Mr. Kinglake thought the time was most inapt for the adoption of the proposed resolution.

Lord Palmerston said it appeared to him that the speech of Mr. Horsman was not consistent with itself or with his motion. He had told the House that there was no alternative between our remaining passive or insisting upon the establishment of Poland in its ancient state. If all the Powers of Europe were prepared to go to war to force Russia to relinquish her possession, this might be done; but it was clear that it could not be accomplished by persuasion. The only ground that could justify our remonstrance with Russia was the Treaty of Vienna; if that was abandoned, we should deliver the Poles, bound hand and foot, to Russia. He hoped, therefore, the House would not agree to the motion, or would press the Government to declare the course they should pursue. It would be their duty to communicate with the Governments of Austria and France.

The motion was withdrawn; and the remaining business having been disposed of, the House adjourned at half-past two.

TUESDAY, JULY 21.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

A great many bills were disposed of, but no discussion of general interest occurred.

TUESDAY, JULY 21.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

In reply to Lord J. Manners, Lord Palmerston stated that the Ionians were still under the diplomatic protection of Great Britain, and that the Porte was not entitled to be consulted in reference to the cession of the Seven Islands.

In reply to Mr. S. Fitzgerald, Lord Palmerston stated that this Government had more than once remonstrated with the Government of the United States on its practice of taking bonds from exporters that their goods should not find their way into the hands of Confederate citizens, which was a violation of treaty engagements; and he hoped that the practice would be abandoned.

Mr. Berkeley demanded compensation for Mr. Bewicke, who had been convicted of felony, and whose property had been sold below its value. Having convicted the witnesses of perjury, he had received a pardon, and the price of his property. He now claimed the difference between that price and the value of the property. The Government resisted the claim, and on a division Mr. Berkeley was defeated by 22 to 20.

Mr. B. Cochrane drew attention to the present state of our relations with Japan, and, observing that the session ought not to terminate until some declaration had been made on the subject by her Majesty's Government, with the view of eliciting such a declaration, moved for the production of papers.—Mr. Liddell seconded the motion, and attributed the difficulties we had encountered in Japan to the Elgin treaty, which was a revolution in itself, and had been obtained from the Japanese by fear.—Mr. Layard defended the policy of the Government in concluding that treaty, insisting upon the fulfilment of its conditions, and protecting the lives and property of British subjects in Japan. He lamented the necessity we were under of making demands which might possibly lead to hostilities; but we were placed in that position against our own desires, and in what we were now doing we were only performing an absolute duty. The Tycoon had, no doubt, authority to enter into treaties with foreigners, and he had admitted the Elgin treaty to be legal and valid. It was unfortunately too true that the conduct of many British merchants in Japan had been discreditable and unworthy of their name and character as British merchants. He hoped, however, that hereafter there would be a better class of traders there, and that the country would be relieved from the presence of such disreputable persons. So far as the outrages committed upon foreigners were concerned, they had not been confined to English subjects. Every consideration had been shown by her Majesty's Government towards the Japanese, and when a mission came here from the Tycoon to ask some concessions respecting the opening of the treaty ports the request was at once acceded to. The attack upon and murder of Mr. Richardson and his companions on the high road by the followers of the Prince of Satsuma was altogether unprovoked; the demands which had been made on the Tycoon for reparation were not unreasonable, and he believed there would be no difficulty in making the Prince of Satsuma responsible, though whether the task of doing so would devolve upon the Tycoon or upon the English Government he was not then prepared to say. The motion was then withdrawn.

The remaining business was disposed of, and the House adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 22.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Several bills passed; but no discussion of any interest took place.

The Raleigh Register says, the wheat harvest is in active progress, and that "such a wheat crop as will be garnered this season has not been seen in the last twenty years."

THE "RICHMOND ENQUIRER."

(To the Editor of THE INDEX.)

SIR,—The papers in the Federal interest have for some time past habitually represented the Richmond Enquirer as the "personal organ" of President Davis, for the purpose of making the latter responsible for certain violent expressions and extreme views that have appeared in the columns of the Enquirer. With characteristic audacity they have ventured upon this deception, although the very articles they quote were assaults upon the Administration, and the most careless reader must perceive the absurdity of the Confederate President abusing himself and his ministers. But as impudent assertion is apt to impose upon many persons who do not take the trouble to inquire for themselves, and as the Enquirer formerly had the credit—whether rightly or no, I cannot say—of expressing the policy of Mr. Davis's Administration, it may be proper to state briefly the facts. Some months since the Enquirer underwent a radical change in all except its name; its staff and a portion of the goodwill, including the public advertising, were transferred to a new paper, the Sentinel; and the editorship of the Enquirer went into the hands of John Mitchell, of Irish rebellion notoriety. Since that period the Enquirer has distinguished itself by repeated violent onslaughts on the Government, and more especially its foreign policy, of which it is an avowed enemy. So far, then, from the sentiments which the Anglo-American press quotes with so much gusto, being the sentiments of the President of the Confederate States, they are those of a political opponent, a foreigner by birth and, comparatively speaking, a new convert to Southern views of Southern institutions. The impudence of partisan malignity has seldom gone further than in this bald-faced attempt at making the one responsible for the philippics of the other.

Yours, &c.,

A CONFEDERATE.

THE FORLORN HOPE A FAILURE.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA, JUNE 24.

My last letter conveyed to your readers the information that General Banks—after his failure to take Port Hudson, March 14; his second repulse, May 27; and his last disastrous defeat, June 14, had issued an order for a volunteer column to make a grand "final" assault which was to result in the first success of the campaign of 1863, for the freedom of the Mississippi.

The column was raised. Since Sunday last—the day announced for the final assault—the public has impatiently waited for the accomplishment by a column of 1,000 men, with a support of two divisions, of a work which the whole Nineteenth Army Corps has not succeeded in effecting. The officers, who possessed more military ability (if not so much obstinacy and perseverance) than General Banks, failed to see the feasibility of attempting to carry a position where there had already been so many failures. The men, weakened and disheartened, were not over anxious to precipitate themselves into the jaws of death. To be sure, the volunteer column was raised, but that "final assault" has not yet been made, unless the attack of June 14 is so known in the history of this war. It has not even been ordered. The accounts from the field record no fighting this week, excepting some desultory skirmishing, which was in the rear, and not in front of Banks's army. Thus the forlorn hope is only an utterly forlorn failure.

Moreover, yesterday, Banks sent out a foraging train of waggons comprising from sixty to seventy teams, and within a short distance of the Federal lines the whole train—men, mules, and waggons—fell into the hands of the Confederates.

These things, in a military view, are not regarded as successes. It is not surprising that General Banks should at last be convinced that Port Hudson is impregnable—that unless he is at once and largely reinforced—his position is far less safe than Gardner's—that there are but few more negroes to offer upon this particular altar—that his white regiments are weakened, dissatisfied, and to some extent demoralised by recent and frequent defeats—to sum up in one simple whole—that he can not take Port Hudson.

Certainly, the belief which a month since obtained so extensively in the army and in this city, that Port Hudson was weak, starving, and nearly, if not wholly evacuated, has given place to a widely different opinion. The almost universal opinion now is that Banks will raise the siege within a week, and give up all attempts to reduce a position which, so far, has only resulted in an enormous reduction of the Nineteenth army corps.

It is an undoubted failure. Banks can call in a few regiments—a very few—which are not now before Port Hudson; but he would leave equally important places, this city for example, exposed; and a moving of pieces does not always indicate an immediate "check" to your opponent.

Nothing of all this is permitted to be published in this city, but the "official" organ gives, with much flourish, the following account of a skirmish, which my last letter indicated was likely to occur speedily, on the line of the Opelousas railroad. It occurred on Sunday night, and the official organ says that its information is from official sources:—

General Emery, not knowing the precise point the enemy were going to select for the attack, found it necessary to divide its forces. A portion, under Colonel Stickney, less than a thousand strong, was halted at Lafourche Crossing, as that appeared to be the point upon which the forces of Colonel Major, the rebel commander, were to be thrown. The rebel force consisted of three regiments of cavalry and one of infantry. The enemy charged our troops, and actually got their hands upon our guns, but were gallantly repulsed, leaving fifty-three dead upon the field, and sixteen prisoners in our hands. Among his slain was Lieut.-Colonel Walker, of the 2nd Texas infantry, whom they were allowed to take off and bury, under a flag of truce. Our forces are uniting to give pursuit. Our own loss was eight killed and sixteen wounded. The enemy's wounded were carried off.

This is the account published last evening, yet the whole happened within fifty miles of this city, last Sunday. The official organ fails to state that a regiment brought by steamer from Pensacola and arriving here on Monday, was sent at once to Lafourche, where its services are so much needed in front of Port Hudson; and it is silent as to the condition of the two Federal regiments, the Federal battery, and the half regiment of sick soldiers who are at Brashear, cut off from all hope of present succour, and liable to capture any hour, if they are not prisoners already. I shall have more to say than has yet been "officially" communicated about these things in my next letter.

Admiral Farragut has arrived here from Port Hudson, and has transferred his flag to the Tennessee.

Mobile papers to the 16th inst. have been received in this city. The little news they contained not "contraband" was given in the city papers. Among the forbidden paragraphs are those stating the efforts made by the people of Mobile, Charleston, and other places, for the relief of the refugees from New Orleans. The mayor (R. H. Slough) of Mobile has appointed a committee consisting of Messrs. Wm. L. Smith, D. W. Goodman, John Reid, C. L. Baron, and J. M. Muldon; and there is a Louisiana Relief Committee, of which Hon. Charles J. Villere is president, and Messrs. J. D. B. De Bow, A. J. Guirot, Moses Greenwood, Thomas Murray, Dr. J. Bensadon, Dr. E. D. Fenner, Colonel J. C. Davis, and Captain Eugene Lanoue are members. Mr. Wm. M. Semple is secretary, and there are sub-committees on subsistence and transportation, on accommodations and on relief. They have been friends, indeed, to the poor among the exiles from New Orleans. The break in the Mobile and Great Northern railway has been repaired, travel resumed, and an increase in supplies from the country has decidedly improved the markets. The elections occur in August, and Hon. James S. Dickinson, of Clarke county, is announced as a candidate to represent Mobile district in the next Congress. The news of the capture of the tug Boston and subsequent burning of the barks Lennox and Texana has reached Mobile (carried by the Boston itself), and the editors are duly delighted. The theatre is doing well; and concerts and other amusements are advertised to take place nightly. The city is comparatively free from sickness, and only eighty deaths were reported for the week.

Last Sunday the steamer Planter, running out of Mobile with six hundred bales of cotton, and the steamer Neptune, from Havana, bound in with a miscellaneous cargo, were both captured by the United States sloop-of-war Lackawana. The Crescent, from Pensacola, brought the news to Farragut on Monday.

The Secretary of the Confederate States' Treasury, C. G. Memminger, publishes the following notice as to funding treasury notes:—

Treasury Department, C. S. A.,
Richmond, June 1st, 1863.

All holders of Treasury Notes, issued prior to 6th of April, 1863, are notified that until the 1st of August ensuing inclusive they can be funded in Seven per cent. Bonds; after that date the notes bearing date prior to 1st of December, 1862, can no longer be funded. Those which bear date between the 1st of December, 1862, and 6th of April, 1863, can be funded in Seven per cents. at any time on or before the 1st of August, 1863, after which date they are fundable only in Four per cents.

Notes bearing date on or after 6th of April, 1863, are fundable in Six per cent. Bonds, if presented within one year from the first day of the month printed across their face—after the year they are fundable only in Four per cents.

(Signed) C. G. MEMMINGER, Secretary of Treasury.

In New Orleans we are having warm, June-like weather; but the city, as yet, is comparatively healthy. The deaths for the week are reported to be 165; in the previous week there were 190 deaths, fifty-one of which were negroes—an enormous proportion. But negroes, who live happily as slaves in the field, die like dogs when they are packed in the close and sweltering cotton presses by their so-called "deliverers."

PARIS TOPICS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, July 21.

You may remember that in April last some shipowners of Havre obtained a decree from the French Law Courts, embargoing the funds of the Confederate Government, then in the hands of Messrs. Erlanger, the negotiators of the loan. Their claim was for the value of a ship, the Lemuel Dyer, loaded with cotton, which was destroyed in April, 1862, in the river near New Orleans, by order of a Confederate officer. Having in vain sought the aid of the Foreign Minister here to recover compensation, they brought this action to arrest the funds produced by the loan, and obtained a decree to this effect. The case came on for hearing on appeal last week, when the sequestration was removed, and the plaintiffs in the case were non-suited. Their names are Dupasseur, Lecoq Brothers, and Co. This law proceeding has passed unremarked, although sufficiently against all public policy to ensure its rejection by the Court of Appeal, even though French interests were here, apparently at least, opposed to those of foreigners. Not so the Schröder case, of which the Times gave an account in its city article. The Nation expresses itself as follows:—"It seems that the States, once United, set up the pretension to extend the law of suspicion beyond its ordinary limits. Up to the present time the extralegal eccentricities of the Federal agents were confined to the high seas, and were performed with some sort of military solemnity. Now, Mr. Lincoln and his servants are trying their hands on terra firma, and spread consternation in the most peaceable of all spheres, the commercial world." After relating the well-known facts of the case he comes to the fate of Mr. Smith, the unhappy holder of the excommunicated bonds. "Strong in the vigorous protection of Lord Palmerston, as every good Englishman must be, Mr. Smith ventured to pass through New York, on his way to Havannah. This act of courage was destined to cost him dear. At the Custom-house his trunks were opened and properly ransacked. The bills were discovered, and on them the ill-omened signature Schröder and Co. It produced its usual effect. The bills were seized, and Mr. Smith was treated no better than the bills. In the end a fair division of the booty was made; the bills were locked up, and Mr. Smith set free. The English Consul at New York complained to Lord Lyons, and there the affair rests. It is not, however, improbable that this little affair may have grave consequences, for England is an ugly customer when her commercial interests are at stake. It is bad enough to arrest an Englishman, but to touch an English bill of Exchange is absolutely unpardonable." For the sake of British commerce, we will hope that the French estimate of the value of English protection is not exaggerated.

The last news from the seat of war, on the whole so unfavourable to the cause of the South, has met with two different appreciations, in addition to the natural doubt which experience of the fallacy of exclusively Northern news dictates. Some regard with dismay the prospect of another year of war with the consequent injury to the commercial interests of France, which are even more dependent upon their American customers than those of England. Others argue that the campaign in Maryland and Pennsylvania, which they regard as closed, has only added a fresh incentive to European mediation in some shape. According to this view the non-success of either army on the enemy's soil is a proof that the quarrel can only be settled by diplomacy, and is beyond the arbitrament of the sword. Both agree in lauding the Emperor's policy of mediation, which both think the only means of saving the interests they see at stake those of Europe and of humanity. These opinions are very generally expressed, but, strange to say, the press is silent on events which must exercise so serious an influence on the world at large. Another subject is paramount to this.

The question of Poland has again assumed, in public opinion, not the first place which it has always held, but so threatening an aspect that the Bourse, which has shown itself hitherto so incredulous, not only gives way, but does so with all the symptoms of a panic. If the Emperor resist: the present clamour for war he will show himself the greatest ruler, in the true sense of the word, that France has ever had. His position is a most difficult one, and it is not rendered, perhaps, more pleasant by the reflection that he owes it to the Italian war, which has already caused him so many disappointments. He then acted against the feeling of Europe; and public feeling, when it opposes movements, is generally correct. If he be now quiescent he will again have public feeling against him, and it may not be the less strong that it is formed on very debatable grounds. Its unanimity, which cannot be denied, only makes it more questionable. When we see the ringleaders of revolution, the partisans of Legitimacy, the foremost men of Protestantism, and the heads of the Catholic Church, all alike urging on to war, we may well ask what can be their common object? The first and last we can understand; the intermediate links in this strange galvanic chain which is to resuscitate a nation condemned a hundred years ago, both by the votes of its own magnates and representatives, and by the common voice of Europe, are unintelligible. In judging thus, we have before us the votes of the Diets, and the letters of the Papal nuncio of the Kings of England and France, and of the great lord of the Revolution, Voltaire. The first saw in the partition the finger of God, the last welcomed it as a stroke of genius. The considerations which the sentence of the past, or the advocates of the present might give rise to, are ignored by the French public. On this occasion the press is the faithful representative of opinion. When I wrote my last, the Constitutionnel was preparing an article in favour of intervention in Poland, which the cautious time-serving of the paper rendered doubly impressive. Since then every newspaper, including even the France (the Nord is a Russian organ, and cannot be counted among French papers), has had article after article, to urge that the rejection of the armistice should be made a casus belli. It is the certainty of the refusal of Russia on this head which, after these articles, has caused the panic on the Bourse. General Mouravieff's atrocities furnish columns in every paper, spiced in the Government press by references to General Butler at New Orleans. But all are silent on the provocations offered by the Poles, to which reference has been made in public, only in the House of Commons. On a less sad subject than the perpetration of cruelty, by whomsoever committed, it would be amusing to see how the Radical press in Paris has systematically ignored the well-proved atrocities of the Federal commanders in the South, and how greedily it accepts and indorses every accusation against the Russian Government. Russia has been the steady, the unreasoning, or ill-reasoning supporter of the Northern States in the present war. She may now contemplate the attitude towards herself of the allies she found in the French press on that question. Had she joined France nine months ago in the peaceful intervention proposed at that time, she might not now have been threatened with an iron-clad intervention on her own coasts. Disorder begets disorder, even at the opposite extremity of the globe. Blind to this, it has been her policy for a hundred years to pander to revolution abroad, never suspecting that it could find a footing in holy Russia. She now is assailed within her own doors, and Governments and Liberals are alike ready to attack her.

The Patrie of Saturday published a strongly-worded petition to the Emperor in favour of Poland, which is being signed in the Paris workshops. No such petition could be carried round, or printed by any newspaper, without the consent of the Government. This morning's Siccle, in its zeal for the cause, under cover of which everything seems to pass current, proposes a radical revolution in France—nothing less than an appeal to universal suffrage on the question of war for Poland. To punish the barbarity of Russia, it is ready to make a step backwards towards barbarism, and abolish the representative principle, which is the greatest conquest of modern civilization. In such a cause no sacrifice can be too great. "A sole thought engrosses France, that of saving Poland. It is no longer a question of the respect of treaties, or establishing the six points; it is the saving a people from death, and checkmating the Machievellian plans for its destruction." "Interpreters of public opinion, the newspapers devote themselves almost exclusively to Poland, and hardly occupy a few lines with the expedition to Mexico."

The Constitutionnel has an article to explain the delay of the publication of the Russian answer in the Moniteur, which is most impatiently looked for. "We may remark that in a weighty affair treated in common, the answer to each of the parties interested is, in some sort, the property of all, and cannot be made public till all have come to some agreement." "Moreover, how important soever the Russian answer may be, what is still more important is the determination of the three Powers to unite in examining and deciding upon it. It is the firm intention of the Cabinets of Vienna, London, and Paris to come to an understanding so as to find means to resolve in a satisfactory manner, and definitively, the question which preoccupies at this moment Europe and the world. As to this understanding of the Cabinets, we have said, and we repeat, that it is certain—of this there cannot be the smallest doubt."

The Russian note is said to fill seventeen pages of despatch paper. Its length alone would seem to prove that it cannot be of a satisfactory nature. The hopes of a peaceful solution are, on this side, mainly built on Earl Russell's declaration in the House of Lords. The speech which was expected from Lord Palmerston last night will confirm or destroy this impression, but such is the slowness of the Paris papers, that not one of them has a telegram this morning even to say whether the debate took place.

The London papers will have given an account of the extraordinary honours with which the remains of the late Duke of Hamilton were received at Cherbourg. What is more touching is the conduct of the Empress, who, on the first news of the accident, hastened to Paris to see him, and when she learned the danger he was in, established herself by his sick-bed, and, on the arrival of the Duchess and her children, herself communicated to them the sad intelligence.

The France of this evening announces that the delay in the publication of the Russian answer to France, is to enable the three notes to the great Powers to be published simultaneously. It will probably, therefore, appear on Thursday. There is only a fall of 5 cents (1-20th per cent.) on the 3 per cents. to-day, but the Russian despatch to England had not then been received, or had time to influence the Bourse.

(From another Correspondent.)

PARIS, July 22.

THE Times was not distributed last night, probably to prevent the Russian answer to England being known to the public before that to France, which appears in today's Moniteur. It is published without a word of comment or notice, even in the bulletin, which gives the résumé of the news. It cannot seem more satisfactory than the answer to England to those who urge a reconstruction of Poland. It is much to be feared that we are again drifting into a war, as in 1854, and very much in the same way. The Emperor will not act without England, but he may draw England into the necessity for action before she knows where she is. There is more than the warlike tone of the French papers to justify this suspicion. Active preparations for a campaign are already in progress, and the secrecy with which they are pursued, only renders them more menacing. A part of the garrison of Paris has already received its campaign outfit, a circumstance more significant than decrees of the Minister of War regarding supernumerary horses, or the employment of soldiers in getting in the harvest, decrees generally published at this season, and which can be at any time revoked. The review at Cherbourg of the ironclad ships, so often announced and contradicted, is not to take place, but a certain number of these vessels will be assembled there in a short time, for experimental manœuvres. A war for Poland will be very popular with the masses, and those who watch the workings of the Government think that it is resolved on as a counterpoise to the failure, for such it is considered, in the elections. I shall be sorry to see the most sagacious sovereign in Europe taking the worst leaf out of the political rules of the old American Union, and I am, therefore, unwilling to believe the report. The impression of its truth, however, has greatly gained ground in the last few days.

The evening papers are unanimous in condemning the answers of Russia. The Paris states that in a few days the three Powers will communicate to Prince Gortschakoff their opinion on the reception he has given to their advice. "No new proposals will be made, the three Courts contenting themselves with reducing to their proper value the arguments put forward by the Russian chancery, and appealing to the sentiments of a conciliation which the Government of Alexander II. professes. It is believed that this step of the three Powers will form a decisive phase in the negotiations,"—in other words, will be followed by war. The Bourse views the matter in this light. There is a fresh fall of 60 cents, the price of French 3 per cents. being now 67½.

CASUALTIES IN THE THIRD ALABAMA REGIMENT AT CHANCELLORSVILLE.

This regiment, Captain M. F. Bonham commanding, went into action 410 strong, captured three batteries and two stand of colours.

Company A—(Mobile Cadets)—Captain Witherspoon. May 2nd.—Killed: None. Wounded: Lieut. S. B. Woodcock, Lieut. Dan Wheeler, Corporal R. W. Mathews; Privates James Turner (?), J. I. McGee, John McLaulin, William Neville, J. A. Roberts, T. J. Smith, J. P. Walker, William Waters. May 3rd.—Killed: None. Wounded: Sergeants Oscar Jones, James Hudson (mortally), Privates J. M. Chapman (mortally), C. Carter, J. N. Watkins. Missing: Privates Joseph Mickle and W. G. Toomer.

Company B—(Gulf City Guards)—Lieut. H. C. Johnston commanding. May 2.—Killed: None. Wounded: Corporal H. K. Hawthorne (mortally), Privates J. H. Turner, G. H. Rea, Willis Morrill, S. T. Wilkins, P. Weaver. May 3rd.—Killed: None. Wounded: Lieut. H. C. Johnston (mortally), Privates J. McLauton (mortally), W. F. Weaver, A. K. Alvares.

Company C—(Tuskegee Light Infantry)—Lieut. W. T.

Bilbao commanding. May 2nd.—Killed: None. Wounded: Lieut. John Howard (mortally), Sergeant Walter Ransome; Privates C. R. Fighnor (leg amputated), T. B. Jones, J. S. Pace, G. W. Segrist. May 3rd.—Killed: Private W. B. Holt. Wounded: Sergeant Charles Gachet, Privates J. N. Dawkins (mortally), Hope Hodnett, W. M. Penn. Missing: Privates J. H. Smith, J. W. Taylor.

Company D—(Southern Rifles)—Lieutenant E. Troup Randle, commanding. May 2nd.—Killed: Private John Hagney. Wounded: Lieutenant E. T. Randle, arm amputated, Privates A. M. Lamim, M. S. Cargill, W. C. Beverly, D. D. Taylor. May 3rd.—Lieutenant Johnston, commanding. Killed: None. Wounded: Privates C. J. Smith, J. T. Clark, hand amputated, Sergeant John Davis, severely; Privates A. J. Clark, severely, W. O. Farior, T. A. Henderson, W. A. McNair, S. A. Stinson, T. M. Thompson, W. C. Raleigh. Missing: Private J. T. Bagby.

Company E—(Washington Light Infantry)—Capt. Chester. May 2nd.—Killed: None. Wounded: Corp. W. Hemster; Privates W. C. East, N. Russell. May 3rd.—Killed: Corporal J. Watts. Wounded: Sergeants G. E. Steen, severely, J. J. Crawley, Private J. M. Perry. Missing: Privates J. Corwell, Sydney Bancroft.

Company F—(Metropolitan Guards)—Captain Phelan, May 2nd.—Killed: Private James M. Bobbett. Wounded: Captain Watkins Phelan, Lieutenant W. B. Jones, Sergeant Thomas Caney, Corporal M. W. Gue, Privates Wm. Collins, D. Rarold, J. S. Parr. May 3rd.—Lieutenant W. A. McBryde, commanding. Killed: None. Wounded: Sergeant W. A. Taylor; Privates R. C. Billenger, Patrick Diggins, Samuel S. Harvey, C. V. Sayre. Missing: Private F. G. Hay.

Company G—(Lomax Sharpshooters)—Lieut. W. H. May, commanding. May 2nd.—Killed: Private Jonathan Kinney. Wounded: Privates G. W. Beers, C. M. Sturges, A. B. Walker. Missing: Private W. J. Deas. May 2nd.—Killed: Private N. Brown. Wounded: Lieut. J. J. Cook, mortally; Colour Sergeant H. A. Hardy, Corporal J. Stewart; Privates W. W. Crimm, John de Bordenablan, Daniel Johnson, W. Little, P. F. Reid, James Ruff, dangerously, E. W. Williamson, J. N. Woods, dangerously, G. B. Hill, J. L. Miller.

Company H—(Lowndes Beauregards)—Captain Robinson, commanding. May 2nd.—Killed: Private W. J. Agerton. Wounded: Lieut. W. R. Hall, arm amputated; Privates C. F. Black, W. H. Childers, Lee Davidson, C. Miller. May 3rd.—Killed: Private J. M. Fleming. Wounded: Captain C. Robinson, slightly, Sergeant W. J. Dunklin, Corporal N. A. Graham, Privates H. P. Coffey, H. W. Hardy, J. M. Howard, W. A. Nunneale, dangerously, P. J. Kant, C. L. Stone, W. L. Wilson. Missing: Privates G. L. Hadley, W. H. Dunklin.

Company I—(Wetumpka Light Guards)—Lieut. B. F. K. Melton, commanding. May 2.—Killed: Privates I. C. Anderson, M. W. Rogers, A. A. Wall. Wounded: Privates P. J. Hagerly, mortally, S. M. Jeter, J. D. Jeffries, J. B. Sandlin, Richard Speaks, J. Thompson. May 3.—Killed: Corporal H. C. Brown. Wounded: Corporal J. E. McCane; Privates J. L. Dixon, J. T. Mossingale, C. A. Ready, N. F. Sheppard, Richard Wright. Missing: Private O. Heard.

Company K—(Mobile Rifles)—Lieutenant W. H. Gardner, commanding. May 2nd.—Killed: None. Wounded: Lieut. W. H. Gardner, slightly, Lieutenant George H. Dunlop, slightly, Privates Michael Brown, arm amputated, and J. J. Yates. May 3rd. Killed: Private W. T. Atkins. Wounded: Lieutenant Thomas Lesene, severely, Corporal W. H. Powers, mortally, Privates W. E. Blocker, M. E. Crenshaw, James Ramacie, D. J. Perkins, A. S. Thompson. Missing: Privates John Kidd and Daniel Getty.

Company L—(Dixie Eagles)—Lieutenant Rutherford, commanding. May 2nd. Killed: Private John Bexley. Wounded: Privates S. A. Cooper, dangerously, S. J. Latimer, leg amputated, J. W. MacLeod, J. A. Malloy, J. Slaughter, J. B. (Tillery), Sergeant N. O. Glover, very severely. May 3rd.—Killed: None. Wounded: Sergeant B. Ely, severely, Corporal R. W. Ivy; Privates M. N. Ely, L. J. Ellison, H. Harrison, S. C. Knowles, J. B. O'Ferrill, W. Rotten. Missing: Privates W. Bush, W. C. Capps, D. W. Gore, B. B. Milton. Killed 14; wounded 135; missing 13. Total 170.

THE RECORD OF INFAMY.

A correspondent of the New York News furnishes the following brief record of the vandalism of the Northern troops, sent South to "fight for the Union":—

April 25.—Colonel Straight's raid through Alabama, &c., destroying iron works, factories, &c., to the amount of $500,000.

April 25.—Village of Webber's Falls, Cherokee Nation, burned by Colonel Phillips.

April and May.—Colonel Grierson, of the Illinois Cavalry, ravages the southern part of Mississippi, destroying and carrying off an immense amount of private property.

May 12.—Raid of Colonel Davis, at Tickfaw, Louisiana capture of bacon, lumber, cotton, and sugar, destruction of tanneries, car shops, factories, &c.

May.—Cavalry raid from Corinth, Mississippi, under command of Colonel Corwyn (or Corwyn) destroys several millions worth of private property, including seven cotton factories, steam flouring mills, dwelling houses, crops, &c., and brings in some hundreds of slaves.

May.—Lieut. John G. Walker, United States' Navy, with gunboat De Kalb, and others, destroys saw mills, corn, &c., on the Yazoo River, burns steamers, flat-boats, dug-outs, &c.

May.—Admiral Porter utterly destroys Grand Gulf.

May 13.—Colonel Hatch makes a raid from Corinth, Mississippi, seizing 600 horses and much plunder.

May 14 and 15.—An expedition under Lieut. Babcock, destroys and carries off immense quantities of grain and stock belonging to farmers near West Point, Virginia.

May.—Colonel Clayton, of Kansas, destroys 200,000 bushels of corn, with buildings, grist mills, &c., near Cotton Plant, Arkansas.

May 14 to 20.—General Stoneman's cavalry expedition destroys more than $2,000,000 of private property in Virginia, and carries off 650 horses and 200 farmers' waggons and carts.

May 18.—General Grant burns the city of Jackson, capital of Mississippi, driving out the inhabitants to the woods. Loss estimated at $5,000,000. Also burns Edward's Station, Rankin, Brandon, and other neighbouring villages.

May 20.—Village of Greenville, Mississippi, burned by naval forces.

May 22.—Colonel Glendenning, with 8th Illinois Cavalry harasses King George County, Virginia, and carries off 1,500 negroes, 800 horses, and enormous quantities of other plunder.

May 23.—General Ellet, with the iron-clad ram fleet, lays in ashes the village of Austin, Mississippi.

May 25.—Village of Trenton, Jones County, North Carolina, destroyed by the Federal troops by fire.

May 26.—General Blair, by General Grant's order, devastates the country for fifty miles between the Yazoo and Big Black Rivers, driving off the white inhabitants and burning grist mills, cotton gins, granaries, and growing crops.

June 1.—Village of Tappahannock, Virginia, shelled, and 200,000 bushels of grain burned.

June 1.—Colonel Kilpatrick makes a raid from Yorktown, Virginia, captures immense numbers of farmers' mules, carriages, &c., and brings in 300 horses and 1,000 negroes.

June 2.—Expedition of Colonel Montgomery's negro forces up the Coomabee river, South Carolina; 1,000 negroes carried off, and $1,000,000 of property devastated.

June.—General Banks allows the indiscriminate plunder of the houses of planters in the vicinity of Port Hudson, Louisiana.

June 4.—Village of Bluffton, South Carolina, burned by Lieut. Commander Bacon, United States' Navy, and over 100 women and children killed by shells.

June 5.—Raid in King William County, Virginia; Colonel Tavis burns mills, founderies, lumber, &c., to the value of $120,000, carries off 150 horses, &c.

June 6.—Major Stratton, 11th Pennsylvania Cavalry, plunders the village of Gatesville, North Carolina, of goods and movables.

June 7.—Jefferson Davis's and Joseph Davis's plantations on the Mississippi, plundered and laid waste.

June 9.—Monticello, a village in Tennessee, destroyed by Captain Carter.

June.—Lenoir's Station, Tennessee, burned by Captain Carter.

June 10.—Rear Admiral Lee, U. S. N., shells the private residences on James River, Virginia.

June 11.—City of Darien, Georgia, reduced to ashes, and negroes carried off by Colonel Higginson's regiment, the whites being driven to the woods. Only three buildings were left standing.

June 13.—Village of Eunice, Mississippi, destroyed by the United States gunboat Marmora.

June 15.—Village of Gaines' Landing, Arkansas, destroyed by gunboat Marmora; the women and children allowed two hours to get out of range.

June.—Village of Richmond, Louisiana, burned to the ground; women and children captured and taken prisoners to Milliken's Bend, by General Ellet and Colonel Mower.

Hitherto, both in numbers and courage, the Irish have been our principal antagonists. We have had to fight men of all nations, colours and tongues, mongrels and mercenaries of every land, banded together and hounded on by every variety of motive and feeling—and all of them stimulated by the assurance of easy triumph and abundant booty. The experience of two years seems to have cured the crazy Irish. The alleged failure of the Germans, too, to fight at Chancellorsville gives reason to believe that they have had enough of "crushing the rebellion." We have a right to infer the same of the Poles, Italians, French, Scotch and English more thinly scattered through their ranks. If it were possible for all these Dalgetty allies to withdraw and leave the native Yankee to fight alone the war that he alone produced, the armies of the South would have about the same difficulties to encounter that wolves have among sheep. Could Southern manhood be once fairly matched against Yankee imposture, sham and counterfeit, the world would get some new ideas about the two races, which are only legitimate parties to this quarrel. But this can never be, for when their cut-throat allies from other lands fail them, and their reliance on the negro break down, they will seek a shelter for their cowardice in peace.—Richmond Whig.

THE NAME OF THE GREAT BATTLE.—We stated briefly a few days ago some moral and fanciful reasons why the great battle in which Jackson fell should be called the Battle of the Wilderness. The matter of fact, however, is stronger than anything else in behalf of the name. The great battle was really fought in the Wilderness—a country of gravelly clay soil, and a black-jack growth, presenting in many places an almost impenetrable thicket. There were occasionally small openings of cleared and cultivated fields, in which the enemy had his works for defence. The position was one of great strength, and was very probably alluded to by Hooker a short time since as one he knew of, from which the whole Confederate army could not dislodge him. If he thought he knew such an one he would certainly go to it, and no doubt did, in preference to all others accessible to him. It was indeed a strong one. Yet Jackson's impetuous charge in the very jaws of death, as it were, could not be resisted by the Yankees, and they were driven from it. The name "Wilderness" will perpetuate the nature of the position thus heroically stormed and carried—it will commemorate the last great fight of that Hero of many bloody fields whose last achievement was his greatest.

On the other hand, "Chancellorsville" is the name of a place with only one dwelling house situated several miles from the great fight of the two days' combat; and unsuggestive as it is at best, it could not therefore be applied with the topographical truthfulness to designate the bloody struggle with the ruthless invader.

THE two great guns of the Keokuk (11-inch Dahlgrens) have been removed from their salt water bed, and are safely landed in Charleston. They were fished up and removed under the superintendence of Mr. Adolphus Lacoste, of Charleston, styled by the Courier "our young hard-working fellow citizen." A subscription has been opened in Charleston for a testimonial to him.—Mobile Register and Advertiser.

IT may correct a misapprehension to state that General W. H. F. Lee is the son, and General Fitzhugh Lee the nephew of General R. E. Lee.—Richmond Sentinel.

Martial law has been declared in Louisville. All citizens have been ordered to enrol themselves or to go North.

EMIGRATION.—Since 1814, down to Midsummer, 1863, no less than 5,383,812 emigrants have left the United Kingdom to seek their fortunes in other lands. 1,234,506 went to our North American colonies, 805,128 to Australia and New Zealand, 3,238,579 to the United States; 105,599 to other parts. In the great emigration time, the eight years 1847-1854, there were no less than 2,444,802 emigrants, an average of more than 300,000 a year, and in the year 1852 they averaged more than 1,000 a day.

TO OUR FRIENDS AND SUBSCRIBERS.

Our friends in the United Kingdom and on the Continent are earnestly requested to forward to us, at their earliest convenience, such information relative to the military movements and condition of affairs in America as they may receive through private letters, either from the United States, or from the Confederate States. They may rely upon the most scrupulous precautions being observed; that no names or facts leading to identification will, under any circumstances, be revealed. No communications, however, will be noticed unless authenticated by a responsible name. Southern newspapers, of any date, will be useful and acceptable presents.

For the convenience of our distant subscribers, all the receipts for subscriptions signed by any of the official representatives, or commissioned officers of the Confederate States, will be recognized at this office.

Our subscribers in the South will have their paper supplied through HENRY HOLTZE, Esq., the Confederate States' Commercial Agent at London, who has kindly tendered us his services in this respect during the continuance of the blockade.

Subscription, 26s. per annum—post paid, 30s., payable in advance. All communications on business to be addressed, and Post-Office Orders made payable to, J. B. HOPKINS, 13, Boulevard-street, Fleet-street, London E.C.

The INDEX may be obtained, and payments for subscriptions or other dues to the paper made:—

At Liverpool, to WM. KNOX, Secretary Southern Club, 55, Brown's-buildings.

At Paris, to Messrs. PFEIFFER and MÜLLER, 52, Rue du Château d'Eau, Paris.

At Turin, to Sr. FILIPPO MANETTA, 4, Borgo Nuovo.

THE INDEX.

THURSDAY, JULY 23, 1863.

BRITISH JACKSON MONUMENTAL FUND.

The Honorary Treasurer of the Jackson Statue Fund acknowledges the receipt of the following additional subscriptions—

Rev. C. C. Domville .. .. .	£1 0
Sir Arthur H. Elton, Bart. .. .	3 3
Mrs. Blake Dartfield .. .. .	5 0
Major Bridson .. .. .	2 0
J. W. Cowell, Esq. .. .. .	1 0
G. Gamble, Esq. .. .. .	3 0
Captain L. Heyworth .. .. .	1 0
Earl of Coventry .. .. .	1 0
Lord Farnham .. .. .	1 0
Lord Lifford .. .. .	1 0
Lord Wynford .. .. .	1 0
Hon. Colonel Hely Hutchinson .. .	1 0
Edmund Staples, Esq. .. .. .	1 0
Hon. Richard Hely Hutchinson .. .	1 0
H. A. Merewether, Esq., D.C. .. .	1 0
George Whately, Esq. .. .. .	1 0
Countess of Donoughmore .. .. .	1 0
James Magee, Esq. .. .. .	5 0
David Salomons, Esq., M.P. .. .	2 2
Rev. J. Wallen Moore .. .. .	2 2
E. Akroyd, Esq. .. .. .	5 0

Pennsylvania and Mississippi.

In the absence of any news from Confederate sources, it must be no slight consolation to those who sympathize with the South in her gallant struggle for national rights, that in almost every engagement throughout the war the Federals have claimed a decisive victory. The accounts hitherto received of the battles of Gettysburg are an exact counterpart of the earliest information received of the action of Antietam Creek. Again the "rebel" army is beaten, demoralized, and routed; its hope of escape gone; the victorious Federals pressing in upon its line of retreat; the bridges across the Potomac destroyed; and the end of the "rebellion" at hand. Again there are enormous captures of prisoners, colours, and supplies; and the usual embellishments with which the Washington Administration adorns the reports of its generals. The advantage gained by the exaggeration is temporary, but it is an advantage. Northern recruits come more readily into the field. The draft is less odious; the end of the war seems nearer. First impressions are the strongest, and by the time the North obtains a glimmering of the truth, the conviction that a substantial victory has been gained has taken a deep and abiding hold upon the minds of the Northern mob. McClellan's report of the battle of Antietam Creek will one day be an historical document. Future generations will appeal to it as the indisputable record of a great national triumph. Few Northerners will take the trouble to prove that for a day or two after this tremendous fight the Confederate army held its lines unmolested, completed at its leisure its plans for transporting its sick and wounded across the Potomac, and finally retired, at its own time, into Virginia, without an effort being made to stop its retreat or even harass its rear. Fewer still will care to relate how this demoralized army within a week fell upon a division of the Federal army which had ventured across the Potomac, and all but annihilated it; and how for months the Federal army of 120,000 was held in check, afraid to advance and risk a general engagement, by a force alleged to be incapable of another fight. When the mist has cleared away from the field of battle at Gettysburg, there will be, we are convinced, the same insignificance of results, and it will be proved once more, notwithstanding the eagerness of the Federals to discount a triumph, that they have barely escaped a great disaster.

The battle of Gettysburg has been compared to that of Antietam Creek. It was fought on Northern soil by an inferior Confederate force; but there the parallel ceases. The Federals in this instance had the choice of ground, and they selected it well; the Confederates were the assailants. The object of General Lee was, doubtless, to strike a blow at the Federal army before it was dangerously strengthened by the militia reserves from New York and Pennsylvania. General Meade's rapid march from Frederickstown was as obviously designed to reach the invading army before its commander had time to concentrate his forces, scattered about the Cumberland Valley. It had become known, towards the close of the month of June, to General Lee that the enemy was advancing in numbers, and he at once called in his flying columns from York, Carlisle, and the Susquehanna; started off long trains of supplies and stores, the produce of his raid, for Virginia, and took measures to secure his line of retreat by his bridges across the Potomac. This done, he faced south-east from Chambersburg, and pushed on rapidly to meet the enemy. He had not long to wait. The advance of General Meade's army had, on the 1st of July, reached Gettysburg, and a mile or two to the west of this small town on the road to Chambersburg, the first engagement took place. Two Federal corps took part in the action. According to Northern accounts, they encountered Generals Hill and Ewell. General Reynolds, the Federal commander, thinking he had but a small force to contend with, appears to have advanced with some impetuosity, and to have gained some trifling advantage at first. He was, however, speedily out-flanked by General Ewell, and after a smart engagement his corps was driven back with heavy loss in officers and men, leaving in the hands of the Confederates some 3,000 or 4,000 prisoners, Generals Reynolds and Paul being amongst the killed. The Confederates followed them up through the streets of Gettysburg, and pressed them until they reached the main army, which by this time had taken up its position on the hills east of Gettysburg, commanding the Emmetsburg, Taneytown, and Baltimore roads. There the Confederates fell back, and both armies prepared for the decisive action of the morrow. Of the forces engaged we cannot speak with any certainty. Lee's army consisted of three corps d'armée—Hill's, Longstreet's, and Ewell's,—with a powerful artillery, and a great force of cavalry. But if we allow for detachments, stragglers, guards of the line of retreat, etc., they cannot at the outside have mustered 70,000 strong. To these were opposed the 1st and 11th Corps under Generals Newton and Howard; the 2nd Corps, General Hancock; 3rd Corps, General Sickles; the 5th Corps, General Sykes, 6th Corps, General Sedgwick; the 12th Corps, General Stoneman; altogether seven strong corps d'armée, in addition to the militia from Pennsylvania and New York, militia which arrived on the 3rd, and saved the Federal army from defeat. The numbers of a Federal corps have varied so constantly during the war, that it is impossible to compute them with any degree of accuracy, but taking them at little less than 20,000 men each, cavalry and artillery included, we have a total force of 120,000, which is probably not an exaggerated estimate of the numbers which the Federal general brought into the field during the three days' engagements.

The battle of the 2nd inst. took place east of Gettysburg. The town itself stands in a valley, a semicircle of hills sloping down towards it, north, west and south; whilst due east two ranges of hills form with Cemetery hill just outside the town, a sort of horseshoe. West of Gettysburg the crests of the hills were planted with Confederate artillery, and from their slopes and from the town of Gettysburg, the Confederate columns poured forward to the attack. East of Gettysburg the Federals lined every ridge along the horseshoe with swarms of infantry, redoubts, and batteries. General Meade's position was admirably chosen for defence. The different corps were drawn up in line of battle at all the most available points. Two or three corps in reserve were at hand to sustain any portion of the line that was shaken, and between the two flanks in the broad plateau were posted the ammunition waggons, supplies, and ambulances. The great advantage, however, was that when any portion of the line was much pressed, it would be promptly reinforced from another, and that the great extension of line which has so frequently ruined the Federal armies was avoided. The first assault took place about 5 p.m., on the left flank of the Federals; it was only partially successful. It penetrated the Federal lines, captured several redoubts, and for a time threatened a disastrous defeat; but the disposition of the Federal troops enabled General Meade to bring up his reserves quickly. They were thrown in large masses upon the Confederates, and the latter were compelled to give way. After sunset another attack was made upon the right flank of the Federals, with a smaller force. This, too, was unsuccessful. Both armies then prepared for the third day's struggle. The position was now altered. The Confederates had gained on the left, and held some of the ground occupied by the Federals in the morning; but the Federals' centre and right held their own. At sunrise the battle began again. This time the right flank was selected for attack, and again the Confederate infantry, in spite of the fresh manoeuvres and obstructions raised during the night, carried all before them, gained the crests of the hills, and drove the enemy before them on to the plateau. But by this time reinforcements had come up. Fresh troops were brought against them exhausted by their two days' struggle, and after a desperate hand-to-hand struggle they were forced back again. The battle lapsed into an artillery duel, and then again the assault was renewed on the centre and the left, but more feebly. Again, the Confederates were compelled to give way, and at 5 p.m. the fighting ceased. The Federal position was too strong, and Lee had to select a point where he could give battle under more favourable conditions. It is significant of the crippled state of the enemy, that all the night of the 3rd they were making additional preparations for defence, and that only by noon of the 4th did they observe that Lee's army was retiring. All the reports of immense captures of prisoners and stores, of demoralization and rout, are mere inventions. Lee retired leisurely, his rear guard ready for battle, and on the only two occasions when his cavalry came into collision with the enemy, drove them back with heavy loss. How utterly unfounded are the statements of the Northern press is proved by the fact that on the 10th Lee's whole force was offering battle in the vicinity of Hagerstown, Maryland; that he had transported all his wounded across the Potomac, paroled his prisoners, received fresh supplies of ammunition, if not reinforcements, and was quietly awaiting the Federal attack. We must wait for Southern news before we can judge of the results of Lee's campaign. He has been fighting for a great stake, and he has not yet lost. At one time, even according to Northern reports, the prize was in his grasp, and but for the rapidity with which reinforcements were pushed forward to Meade, Lee might by this time have dictated peace to President Lincoln on Northern soil. No doubt his losses have been severe, but those of the Federals have been far heavier. The lists of killed and wounded that have already appeared in Northern papers tell a fearful tale; and the long inactivity of Meade's army is another proof of the tremendous sacrifices by which Baltimore and Washington have been preserved. The next mail will probably bring us the news of another great battle. And we have no fear of the result. Lee carried off all his artillery. His army is in a magnificent position. He has to deal with a force numerically superior, but composed in large part of raw levies, ill-fitted to attack the veterans whom Hill and Longstreet and Ewell have so often led to victory. The issue of that contest is in the hands of the God of Battles. We await it, if not with the presumptuous vaunting of the North, at least with a welljustified confidence in the skill and devotion of the Confederate Generals and their men.

The saddest news which has reached us since the fall of New Orleans is the account of the surrender of Vicksburg. The very day on which the capitulation took place renders the blow heavier. But it is a satisfaction to know that everything that brave men could do and suffer, has been done and borne by the garrison under Pemberton, and that at the last they succumbed to the pangs of hunger and prostration, not to Federal arms. The loss of Vicksburg in itself is not irreparable. The powerful artillery may be replaced, the prisoners may be exchanged; but the serious evil is that it sets Grant's army free for further operations in the southwest. We yet hope that this misfortune may be counterbalanced by a great victory in another quarter. But if not, we have the satisfaction of knowing that the South is prepared to accept the reverses, as it has known how to support worthily the triumphs, of this tremendous struggle; and that, as in days when its prospects seemed brightest it never indulged in the vain-glorious boastings or wretched blasphemies that fall from the lips of a Lincoln or a Seward, so now, in its hour of trial, it will not give way to the abject fears and miserable helplessness which have disgraced the Northern mob.

Consistency at the Foreign-office.

LORD RUSSELL'S administration of the Foreign-office presents a series of contrasts more violent than are generally to be found in the policies of contending parties. Now he is more bellicose than Mr. Roebuck; anon he outdoes Mr. Bright himself in abject devotion to the cause of peace at any price. In one quarter of the globe he is the zealous, vigilant, exacting guardian of British interests and British honour. In another he receives a diplomatic slap in the face with more than the meekness of a Quaker, or eats his leek with the exemplary submission of Ancient Pistol. Here he is the champion of constitutional government; there, of despotic aggression. Now he fosters rebellion; now he encourages the excesses of tyranny. In Brazil he took up with passionate eagerness the cause of a shipowner whose vessel had been wrecked on an inhospitable coast, and her cargo plundered after the Cornish fashion. The said shipowner was as unworthy a specimen of the British merchant as we could desire to see. He was ready to bring charges and withdraw them; to compromise an accusation of murder,—to do anything agreeable to the Minister if the Minister would get him a reimbursement which he ought to have secured from an insurance office. Lord Russell took up the case; directed the Minister at Rio to reiterate the charge of murder; impeached the honesty of Brazilian magistrates and the good faith of the Brazilian Government, all on the authority of the shipowner aforesaid, of a Consul who was fast lapsing into insanity, and of an Envoy whose infirmity of temper almost amounts to mental aberration. The Brazilian Government did its best. It had an inquest held on all the bodies that could be found; at which inquest the British Consul was requested to be present; and the verdict was one which negated the idea of murder in the most conclusive manner. It hunted down the wreckers so diligently that some fled the country and others were brought to justice. But Lord Russell was not satisfied; he required the Brazilian Government to pay the value of ship and cargo, and an indemnity for the murders which had not been committed; and he actually caused war to be made upon Brazil—for reprisals in the territorial waters of an independent Power constitute war—in order to extort the satisfaction he demanded. Some time afterwards a British ship was—not wrecked by the winds and waves, but—fired by an American cruiser in Spanish waters. There had been an attempt at murder, and an actual destruction of property. But Lord Russell asked for no indemnity. Again, repeatedly have British ships been chased and fired upon in British waters; but Lord Russell has always considered the bare denial of the Federal officer, charged with the offence, as satisfactory proof of his innocence. British ships have been seized on lawful voyages and carried into American ports; and Lord Russell, so utterly contemptuous of the courts of Brazil that their decision, after solemn trial, does not weigh with him a jot, informs remonstrants that they must rest satisfied with the sentence of Prize Courts constituted ad hoc by Abraham Lincoln.

Three British officers in plain clothes went ashore at Rio, and went into the country to dine. On their return they were taken up on a charge of being drunk and disorderly, and assaulting the police. As soon as their character of British officers was ascertained, they were set at liberty. But Lord Russell demanded the punishment of all the officials concerned in their arrest; enforced attention to his demand by reprisals; and finally submitted the question to King Leopold, who emphatically decided against his preposterous claim. Numerous British subjects, and at least one British officer, have been arrested in the United States on no charge whatever. They have been detained in prison for months; they have been threatened with death; they have been released only on terms insulting alike to themselves and to their Sovereign—terms which the Federal Government had not the shadow of a right to exact. And Lord Russell has never once demanded the punishment of the offenders, or the least satisfaction for the sufferers. There would seem to be only one assignable motive for his conduct, and that is one which it is not agreeable to impute to a British Minister. Brazil is a respectable monarchy, with an honourable sovereign, and an honest Government. The United States are an anarchical republic, with a buffoon for President and political swindlers for a Cabinet. Brazil is a friendly Power; the United States are eminently the reverse. It cannot then be the different character of the two Powers which has led Lord Russell so passionately to resent imaginary affronts from the one, and so patiently to endure every form of insult and outrage put upon him by the other. Brazil cannot help herself; while the United States have an army and a navy of respectable dimensions: are we really to believe that Lord Russell has dared, in the face of England and of Europe, to insult the weak, and submit to insult from the strong? Is a mean and bullying cowardice really the ruling principle of his foreign policy?

But even this wretched explanation will not avail us when we come to consider another of the strange contradictions which characterise his whole conduct. The Confederate States of America stand in a very peculiar relation to the diplomatic world. According to the assertion of the Federal Government, the war now raging in America is simply a domestic rebellion, of which foreign Powers have no right to take any cognizance whatever. But at the same time the Federal Government has found it necessary or convenient to admit the existence of "rebellious States," one of which, on the plea of rebellion, it has thought proper to dismember—and five of these States have been formally and severally recognised by the European Powers as sovereign and independent. Also, the Federal commanders are forced to deal with the "rebellion," both by sea and land, as with a belligerent Power. By the admission, therefore, of its enemy, the Confederacy has a real existence as a political unity, and as a belligerent nation. By the universal admission of foreign Powers it is not an ordinary "province," or collection of provinces, in a state of revolt. In the first place, the States of which it was composed have for eighty years enjoyed internal sovereignty, and independence in every sense except a diplomatic one; they are, therefore, in a much more favourable position, as claimants for European consideration, than any previous "insurgent" Power. Secondly, they enjoy a de facto Government, ruling with undisputed authority over five-sixths of the territory to which it lays claim; a Government as constitutional, as regularly organized, as truly national as that of England. Thirdly, they have a regular army, as strong in numbers, discipline, bravery, and organization as almost any in the world. Fourthly, they have for two years sustained their independence in a series of desperate struggles, growing stronger by each success. Fifthly, few pretend to doubt the final achievement of their perfect independence. And finally, the case is one in which a settlement is easy, simple, and intelligible. All that is asked by one party is independence; and that is precisely all that the other party refuses: and it is only by the concession of independence that any rational statesman expects the war to end.

But in this case Lord Russell refuses to act. He grants that the interests of England are deeply involved; that the war is ruinous to her trade, dangerous to her peace, menacing to her shipping interests. He grants every reason we have urged to show that the case of the Confederate States is not one of simple and ordinary rebellion. But when France urges him to join her in mediation, interposition, advice, recognition, anything that will close the fratricidal strife, he shrinks back. He will not even recommend an armistice; he will not even offer a friendly remonstrance; so bent is he upon preserving inviolate the principle of what he calls non-intervention, and avoiding any act which may hurt the pride of the Northern States.

A struggle, similar in some respects, is raging in Europe. The Poles have no sort of diplomatic status; they are simply subjects in revolt against their king—a king enthroned by European consent, as well as the sword of his ancestors. They have been serfs of Russia for eighty years. They have no Government. They have no army—only a multitude of independent guerilla bands, under chiefs who own no common allegiance. They cannot sustain their independence; they have not yet established in any corner of the country a Polish authority. Every one admits the certainty that Russia can crush them; that they are only sustained by the hope of French assistance. Finally, a settlement by foreign mediation seems simply impossible. We cannot, without a violation of common decency, ask independence for Poland; we could not win it for her except by a terrible war, which would convulse Europe from end to end: even then we probably should fail. And nothing less than independence will avail the Poles. They ask for nothing less; knowing that everything else was given them by Alexander I., and that they could not keep the gift nor he endure the use they made of it. A diplomatic intervention can produce nothing but confusion and disappointment—misery for Poland, and peril and disgust for her patrons.

But this is the case in which Lord Russell interposes with all his might. He will not go to war; though if he perseveres with his present policy it is not impossible that war may seek him out, and surround him at unawares. But he will do everything short of war. He will advise, remonstrate, lecture, almost threaten. He asks of the Czar more than the insurgents could hope to extort if they were masters of Warsaw and of half Poland. And above all, he demands of the Czar an armistice with rebels; a truce with guerillas, who can neither make a truce nor keep it; a military negotiation with a force which has no General, and a cause which has no Government. He demands all this on behalf of insurgents who are repudiated by one-half of the people of Poland, and feebly supported by the other half; he manifests all this zeal in a case in which he does not pretend that any English interest is concerned. Of a surety, the policy of the Foreign-office under its present chief is one of those things "which no fellow can be expected to understand."

We know that Lord Russell may plead, as obliging him to say something on behalf of the Polish insurgents, the alleged atrocities of the Russians, and the Treaty of Vienna. Well! have there been no atrocities perpetrated in the Southern States? Have no Confederate soldiers been shot in cold blood by order of Northern commanders? Have no defenceless citizens been slaughtered deliberately on their own thresholds, in presence of their families, by Federal troops? Have there been no outrages on women and young girls? Have no plantations been laid waste, no open towns fired, no homesteads burnt? Has not the track of the invaders been everywhere marked by blazing homes, plundered farms, theft, arson, and murder? And in America all these outrages are on one side, while in Poland the insurgents are at least as savage as the Cossacks. It is the North only that boasts a Milroy, a Pope, a McNeil, a Turchin, and a Butler. The last name alone would be warranty for European intervention. And for treaties—let us ask Lord Russell what the Treaty of Vienna is worth, now that a Bonaparte is once more on the throne of France, now that the Pope has lost the Legations, Austria Milan, and Piedmont Savoy? If the treaty did not bind him to interfere in these cases, how can it bind him to interfere in Poland? Besides, treaties bind Governments not merely to speak, but to act. If we have really promised anything to Poland, we are bound to keep our promise not by remonstrances only, but if need be by war; and when Lord Russell declares that he does not mean war, he repudiates entirely the dogma of treaty-obligation. And finally, let us remind him of another treaty, by which England recognised the States of Virginia, North and South Carolina, and Georgia as sovereign and independent States; and still the more recent treaty which so recognised Texas. Those States have never resigned their sovereign character; and if Lord Russell really thinks so much of the letter of treaties, he is bound by these. But the truth is, that treaties and principles, obligations of faith and rules of public law, have value for him only when they coincide with the dictates of his own caprice; and that, while the present Administration remains in power, we must look for no other rule of conduct in the foreign policy of England than may be supplied, in each isolated case, by the personal idiosyncrasy or individual predilections of John Earl Russell. We wish that in that idiosyncrasy there had ever been discerned a spark of manly or generous spirit; that among those predilections there were discoverable a love of honour and consistency, in place of that taste for clumsy intrigue and perverse ingenuity which has brought so much trouble on the Foreign Secretary, so much embarrassment on the Ministry, and so much disgrace and obloquy on England.

The Prospect.

THE war in America has been, from the first, a series of startling surprises and sudden changes of scene, but in no former instance has the natural sequence of events appeared so violently interrupted as in the unexpected episode which commences on the blood-stained fields of Gettysburg. That an unknown division general, capriciously raised from obscurity to the command of a dispirited and repeatedly defeated army, should within a few days afterwards check the victorious advance of an enemy led by the greatest military genius the war has produced, was a contingency so improbable that the boldest romancer would scarcely have ventured to weave it into the plot of a fiction. The event has taken all the world by surprise, but doubtless none more than the miserable faction at Washington, whose lease of misused power has thus unfortunately been renewed. The same character of surprise attaches to the news from the Mississippi. A month, even a fortnight earlier, the fall of Vicksburg was anticipated; it is announced only when the conviction had gained ground that this stronghold was impregnable to the Federal forces. Events so completely at variance with settled expectations are apt to be judged by an erroneous estimate. We are prone, under such circumstances, to account as positive losses the hoped-for advantages which we fail to gain. In the successful defence of Vicksburg and the onward march of Lee's army, Europe and the South saw a promise of speedy peace. The disappointment is necessarily great, but it leaves the solid foundations of Confederate independence unshaken. These foundations lie deep in the unalterable determination of a unanimous people, resolved to defend their homes and liberties at every sacrifice of blood and treasure. Though we may think the booty gathered in Pennsylvania dearly purchased, the strength of the Confederacy for resistance on its own soil is not less now than it was, when to the astonishment of its most sanguine friends, it boldly attempted to conquer peace on the soil of the enemy. The loss of Vicksburg is a serious blow, but in a war for the subjugation of half a continent, the occupation of no point, or even series of points, however important, can be decisive of the contest. When New Orleans fell, the navigation of the Mississippi was thought to be open to Federal commerce. Port Hudson had then never even been heard of; Vicksburg was a second-rate, open town, which no one expected to see converted into a fortress. The invader has spent a twelvemonth of unremitting and herculean efforts to remove the obstacles which during that time were improvised in his path, and is no nearer his object than when those obstacles not yet existed. Along 1,500 miles of river bank, there must be many other points where the same obstinate resistance can be renewed over and over again ad infinitum, so long as the Confederates have guns to train, and stout arms to direct them. The experience of two years has shown that the possessions of the invader are always confined to the limits of his camp. He may overrun and devastate, but cannot hold and retain; and the enemy who has fallen back before him rises again in his rear. If the worst happened to the Confederates, the North, though its military power were thrice as great, could not maintain six millions of people and eight hundred thousand square miles of territory under military subjection.

We are not disposed to underrate the importance of the reverse that has befallen the South. On the contrary, we appreciate the full magnitude of the fact, that while the fate of battles or of fortified places cannot affect the ultimate issue, yet every fair hope of peace is blasted. The recent events are a melancholy confirmation of the views which have been consistently expressed in these columns. We have always held that so long as Europe tacitly encouraged the North to persevere, it would not, and could not, spontaneously acknowledge its own failure. The peace party, besides labouring under the disadvantage of having to contend against those who control the machinery of Government, would expose themselves to the charge of having less faith in the national destinies than the most unfriendly neutrals. While the ravages of the war were spent upon the enemy's country, the immense sums necessary to conduct it being disbursed at home would for a long time present the semblance of an equivalent, albeit a fictitious one, for the genuine profits of peace, and the dangers and burdens of the future would be forgotten, amid the unreal prosperity of the present. The process of exhaustion would therefore be slow, and the pressure of necessity distant. These facts are now demonstrated beyond dispute. It is clear that the North will not be forced to make peace by lack of money, or rather domestic credit. It is equally clear that the lack of men will not, for some time to come, operate as a cause, for the teeming human hives of Europe are still open to the recruiting officer, and the exaggerated joy over unlooked-for successes will go far towards making even conscription more popular at home. There was, indeed, for a brief season, a hope that the tide of prosperous fortune might carry the Confederates into the heart of the North, there to extort that peace which was not to be expected from any return to reason. No one doubted the use which the South would make of its victory. Unlike the North, it had no mad visions of conquest. It disdained even the gratification of mere revenge, as is shown by the admirable discipline of the Confederate troops, contrasting so forcibly with the conduct of the Federal soldiery under similar circumstances. When the success of Lee's invasion seemed most secured, when the metropolitan cities of the North seemed within his grasp, the Confederate Government proffered peace, and had Lee been in possession of half the Northern States, the terms of that peace would still have been the same. "Abandon your vain attempts upon our homes and liberties," the South has always said, "yours are in no danger from us." This hope has now vanished, and there is nothing before us save the gloomy vista of an interminable war, laying waste one of the most productive regions of the globe, paralysing the commerce of the world, and drowning the civilization of a continent in an ocean of human blood.

When Europe sickens of this horrid spectacle, it will end. But it is idle to repeat this to those who are wedded to the cruel and heartless policy of Earl Russell's "masterly inactivity." It is idle to tell them that the passive attitude of England is not neutrality; that this attitude is, in fact, the strongest motive power in the war; that by refusing to consider the Confederacy as an independent State, she invites, and in a measure justifies the North in assailing that independence. It is idle to prove that the withdrawal of sovereign States from a voluntary federation cannot be a rebellion of subjects against their lawful sovereign; that a Union based upon mutual consent cannot, when once broken, be restored by force; that the people of the Confederate States fight for rights which are deemed inherent in every other people, even the most degraded; that they have shown the moral qualities and the physical energies which prove them worthy of the enjoyment of their rights, in a pre-eminent degree; that the crime of attempting to subjugate a free people, worthy of their freedom, is not less monstrous because committed by a republic in the name of constitution and liberty, than if it were committed by a crowned monarch in the name of Divine Right. The partisans of "masterly inactivity" are as deaf to reason as they are blind to facts. When victory crowns the Southern arms, they say, "Let the South alone; she does not need even the moral aid of our recognition; our interference will only do harm." Or else the generous instincts of the British nation are appealed to, that it would be unfair and cowardly to add to the deep distress of the North. On the other hand, when, as at present, the North is in a glow of triumph, when it is in a position to make peace without disgrace or humiliation, the friends of peace are met with the plea that the moment is now inopportune, that the North is now too much elated to listen to sober counsels. At this very moment there are hundreds of thousands at the North who await with anxiety those words of peace which England has heretofore persuaded herself and others it would not be "a friendly act" to speak. It is this feeling of utter weariness of the war that such men as the two Seymours represent, and it is an encouraging sign that on the day of greatest exultation, on the 4th of July, these men had the courage and patriotic virtue to speak words of peace. Despite the blasphemous self-gratulation of members of the Washington Cabinet, the confidence of the masses in their ability to conduct the war to a successful issue is too much shaken to be easily restored. Confronted now with a firm protest against the further prosecution of the war from the principal Powers of Europe, we believe that the Northern people would yield to the dictates of their own sobered judgment and the lessons of experience.

But as we are not sanguine enough to hope that those who have lost so many opportunities will seize this, we are prepared for the worst consequences of the events of June—an indefinite prolongation of the struggle. The people of the South are prepared for this; indeed, it is doubtful whether they ever shared the buoyant expectations entertained here of Lee's movements. They are confident, however, in the knowledge that a great and brave people, thoroughly in earnest, with arms in their hands, cannot be subjugated, no matter what the odds are against them. Their sufferings will be protracted, but they cannot be intensified, for they have long since known the worst that can befall them. Above all, they have learned at an early stage of the struggle to rely upon themselves and the protection of the Almighty, which has never at any critical moment forsaken them.

The Northern Threat of War with England.

IN the Litany of the Church of England we are taught to pray, "In all time of our wealth, Good Lord, deliver us," and assuredly the supplication is seasonable. Prosperity, not less than adversity, is an ordeal that tests our endurance and virtue. Of this a forcible illustration is furnished in the conduct of the Federal Government on the receipt of the news of the late successes in Pennsylvania and at Vicksburg. Since the surrender of New Orleans, in May, 1862, the almost uninterrupted good fortune of the Confederate arms has been marvellous. At length, when it seemed that another victory would be the prelude of peace, it has pleased God in His inscrutable wisdom to check the triumphant progress of the South. Vicksburg has fallen after a protracted defence, but not until it has taught the South how many similar positions on the banks of the Mississippi may be fortified and held, so as to prevent that river passing under the control of the enemy, and dividing the Confederacy. General Lee, after a series of bloody battles, in which he at least inflicted as much loss as he sustained, has retreated southward unmolested, carrying with him all his military stores and an enormous booty. These are the triumphs that induced the Chief Magistrate of the United States to utter the most vulgar blatant speech ever reported, in which he said the Confederates turned tail and ran. A Billingsgate rough would have been more truthful, and have displayed better taste. General Halleck tries to steal whatever laurels Grant has gained, by dubbing himself the conqueror of Vicksburg. Mr. Seward, with hideous blasphemy, compares his own sentiments with those of our Saviour on the eve of the Crucifixion! It needed a gleam of sunshine to reveal the utter depths of scandalous contempt in which the Lincoln Cabinet revels.

There is not a whisper of seizing upon success as an opportunity for putting an end to the war. For this, we can scarcely blame the North. It appears that as soon as General Lee was in Northern territory, and the hearts of the Lincolnites were evidently failing them, the Confederate Government hastened to propose terms of adjustment. This proceeding was natural as well as commendable, for the South is fighting to be let alone, and only looks to victory as a means of securing her independence. The Federals, on the contrary, are fighting for empire and for vengeance, and ever so slight a triumph encourages them to persevere in the unholy contest. Peace will bring the South all she seeks; peace will be to the North the confession of failure. But, besides rejecting the overtures of the South, the North, intoxicated with an unexpected and, as we believe, momentary and unsubstantial triumph, loudly threatens Europe with war. This is not in one sense mere braggadocio, for a foreign war is the inevitable sequence of the subjugation of the Confederate States.

The New York Herald, of the 7th July, in three several editorials printed on the same page, reviles England and France, and declares that the suppression of the "rebellion" will be promptly followed by war against those countries. The following passages are extracted from these articles:—

"Finally, in anticipation of peace between our loyal and rebellious States, under the common banner of the Union, the question recurs, what shall we then do with our immense warlike establishment of full a million of veteran soldiers, and a navy of five hundred fighting ships? We answer, that this army and navy can be profitably employed in the good work of removing Louis Napoleon's imperial establishment from Mexico, and in a settlement with England for her perfidious conduct towards the country since the outbreak of this rebellion, and for thirty years before it. With the overthrow of the spurious despotism of Jefferson Davis, the Monroe doctrine of European non-intervention in the affairs of this continent will loom up in the foreground, and it will become the mission and the duty of the United States to make it the law of North America, excepting the possessions of Russia."

"In six months at the furthest, this unhappy rebellion will be brought to a close. We shall then have an account to settle with the Governments that have either outraged us by a recognition of what they call 'the belligerent rights' of the rebels, or by the active sympathy and aid which they have afforded them. Let France and England beware how they swell up this catalogue of wrongs. By the time specified we shall have unemployed a veteran army of close upon a million of the finest troops in the world, with whom we shall be in a position not only to drive the French out of Mexico and to annex Canada, but, by the aid of our powerful navy, even to return the compliment of intervention in European affairs."

"From the commencement of his career up to the present time, Louis Napoleon's actions have been of that nature that naught save success relieved them of the stigma which should have been attached to them. Of all his undertakings none have been more barefaced than this seizure of the Mexican republic. But his triumph shall be short-lived in this instance. The people of this country are, thank Heaven, almost at the termination of the awful crisis which has deluged the land with blood, and will soon be enabled, in all the integrity of union and power, to stay the progress of foreign usurpation on this continent. Our first step shall be to free Mexico from the French. That this is no vain boast Napoleon shall ere long find out to his cost. The Powers of Europe will find that the Monroe doctrine, which they have lately so derided, is a far more respectable idea than they supposed, and that, when backed by some thirty odd millions of sturdy Americans, the whole affair is of vast importance. Intrusion on this continent is a step which no sane European Government would ever dare attempt. Adventurers will find out to their cost that in this case precaution is the better part of valour. The Yankees are not to be counted out on this side of the Atlantic."

Unless this war policy were popular it would not be so emphatically proclaimed in the most widely-circulated and influential journal in the North; and such a policy is popular, not so much from enmity to England and France, as from the deep-rooted and reasonable conviction that if the Union can be restored by force, it can only be cemented and kept together by a foreign war.

The Edinburgh, in an able article which we have elsewhere noticed, observes—and no one can dispute the fact—that Federal Governments are formed for the purpose of resisting foreign aggression:—"The Achaean League was the result of the pressure of the Macedonian Kings on Greece. The Swiss Cantons united against their feudal neighbours, and against the power of Burgundy. Their Union would have perished long ago, were it not that they were hooped together by the interests and mutual jealousies of European nations. The United Provinces became a Power for the purpose of resisting Spain and the House of Austria. The United States were driven to form their federal tie for the purpose of securing their freedom against George III. Moreover, as foreign aggression and foreign wars have created all federal Governments, so the fear of foreign aggression and foreign wars is, we fear, essential to their long-continued existence in their original shape." The Reviewer then takes America as an illustration, and it is impossible to deny that a failing sense of union has often been revived by "declining against the perfidy and insolence of England." The conclusion is inevitable,—that if foreign war had been impossible the discordant elements of the Union would not have been so long held together, that for the purpose of reunion, a foreign war is indispensable, and that the threats of the New York Herald are only idle on the supposition that the South will not be conquered.

We know the people of the South will endure unto the end; and that their just cause will triumph, though it may be through further and dreadful tribulation. We have, therefore, no fear of a war with the United States; yet it is well that it should be understood, that the South is not only fighting for her independence, but indirectly for the welfare and peace of Europe, and especially of England. The establishment of a second federation in America constitutes a balance that would render a foreign war destructive to, instead of conservative of, the respective Unions. This, then, is the position of England. The independence of the South secures to us our cotton trade, is a guarantee of our peaceful possession of Canada, and makes the chances of war with the United States remote. Could the Confederate States be forced back into the Union, what are our prospects? The whole of the Southern population could not be slaughtered, and we cannot suppose that those which remain would feel any compunction in warring against a country that coolly witnessed their subjugation. Even if the South had the will, she could not stem the torrent. Besides, all sections of the restored Union would then feel a foreign war necessary for the internal peace of the country, for large armies cannot immediately be disbanded, nor kept unemployed without the greatest danger. And war with the reconstructed Union would involve what war with the present United States cannot—the starvation of Lancashire and the ruin of our cotton trade. We repeat that the threats of the New York Herald are only idle, because, happily for England and for Europe, there is no prospect of the gallant South being subjugated.

VICTOR HUGO.*

THIS work is ascribed to Madame Hugo,—on what authority we do not know. To our ideas it seems to bear the sign-manual of her husband in every page. It has all the vivacity and all the vanity, the delightful unrestraint and the intolerable egotism, the brilliancy and the levity, the absence alike of dulness and of good sense, of reticence and of gratitude, which might be expected from the Coryphæus of the modern school of French literature. At all events, if the work be not written by M. Hugo, it has received from him, in the fullest sense, a plenary inspiration; it is full of stories which only he could have told, and which have no interest for any one but himself; of anecdotes and sayings which would not be worth recording even of a Byron or a Shelley, or any other of the very few extraordinary beings every trait and title of whose character is of interest to the world; and it seems pervaded by the idea that nothing which concerns the author of "Les Misérables" can be uninteresting to any educated man. And yet there are certain peculiarities which seem to indicate the hand of a woman, or a man possessed by a feminine love of insignificant details and a feminine inability to appreciate the idea of proportion. We have in these two volumes more than 700 pages, half of which are occupied with irrelevant matter. We have the history of Victor's papa and mamma—the former a brave, skilful, and estimable soldier; the latter a clever woman, a bad wife, but a devoted mother—which occupy half the first volume, and leave us with a strong impression that M. Hugo père was a far truer gentleman and far nobler man than M. Hugofils. We have a mass of M. Victor's childish poetry—les bêtises que je faisais avant ma naissance, as he himself called them—and a series of anecdotes concerning his school-boy pranks and studies, of no value to any one but himself, his wife, and his publishers, which fill up the remainder. The second volume contains the history of his first literary successes, and leaves him at the door of the Academy. Altogether, the performance is strongly suggestive of bookmaking, and by no means worthy of a literary man whose pretensions are of more than ordinary exaltation, and who looks on himself, in his capacity of poet and novelist, as a creature very much above the level of average mankind, and almost on a footing of equality with heroes and with prophets. It is only fair to add that it is readable throughout—excepting always the childish effusions of the poet, which, like all childish performances, however promising of better things when the performer shall reach maturity, are in any other aspect simply an impertinence when forced on the attention of grown men and women. A child who should write at thirteen as Victor Hugo wrote at that age would, no doubt, interest us all. If we had no interest in its welfare, we might admire and caress the prodigy; if we had, we should tremble for its future, and study to counteract the effect of the spoiling and praise to be expected from indifferent strangers. But when an old gentleman of sixty comes to us with a bundle of copy-books in his hand, and says—"Gentlemen, see; these are the verses which I wrote in my innocent boyhood, when George the Third was King," we are bored and disgusted. He is no longer a child, but an old man, who ought to have put away childish things, and burned his childish copy-books. Et nos ergo—all of us have done things when we were young which attracted the admiration of our nurses, and for which our mothers—if they were so foolish—claimed the wonder of strangers. And it is by no means those who in after-life rise to the highest eminence whose childish achievements are most wonderful. Byron, at eighteen, wrote miserable twaddle; Victor Hugo, at fifteen, obtained an honourable mention from the French Academy. Felicia Hemans was an authoress at fourteen; there have been writers whose reputations are tenfold greater, who never appeared in print till they were forty. In the name of common sense, therefore, and for the preservation of boyhood from the canker of inordinate vanity, we protest against this practice of publishing, when a man has won fame by the achievement of his manhood, "the follies which he committed before he was born."

Its irrelevancy apart, the history of Victor Hugo's father is about the most interesting part of the book. He was, in early youth, an officer in the Guard of Louis XVI. He chose to serve the Republic, and was employed in hunting down the Royalists of La Vendée, in which service he showed an unusual and somewhat perilous tenderness of conscience, having a great objection to murdering unarmed men, women, and children in cold blood. This seems, with him, to have been a matter of professional feeling, rather than of etiquette. He laid a notable scheme, just after the battle of Vittoria, for the assassination of Wellington; but he objected to hanging brigands in Naples, and positively refused to shoot captive guerillas in Spain. General Hugo as a friend of Moreau's incurred the displeasure of Napoleon, which was ill-atoned by the cordial friendship and constant support of Joseph Bonaparte, by whom he was appointed to high military rank in Naples, and to the Government of Madrid when Joseph was king of Spain. He was a wanderer on the face of the earth, beyond the usual wont of soldiers, and two of the chief episodes of Victor's childhood consisted in journeys made from Paris, the one to Avellino, the other to Madrid, to join the father of the family. Driven from Spain with his patron, General Hugo, as Governor of Thionville, bore his part in the resistance offered to the invaders in 1813-4, and again during the Hundred Days; and by the tenacity of his defence, seems to have excited the ill-will of the Bourbons. Madame Hugo, however, a Royalist by family, who had in the palmy days of the Empire shared her husband's good fortune, deserted him in his downfall, and brought her sons up as Royalists in Paris, seldom seeing their father, and never liable to his influence. She was a woman of masculine character, and of no common intellectual powers: and exercised, until her death, a stricter control over her adolescent sons than fathers can generally maintain. Not long after her decease, her son Victor married, on a pension of 1,000fr. (£40) a-year from the king and his chances as a writer, which were already good. He had made his mark at an early age by his academic distinction; he had won the notice of many of the first men of the day, and the personal friendship of Chateaubriand; and at twenty his way to fame and fortune was already open. Shortly after his marriage, he received from the Minister of the Interior another pension of 2,000fr. (£80), and with an income of £120 a-year considered himself already rich. His works, also, were beginning to sell. "Hans d'Islande" was written not many months after his marriage, and brought him in £40. Some friends proposed to him a tour in Switzerland. He demurred to the expense, and it was suggested that this should be defrayed by a publisher. So it was arranged. Victor Hugo, Lamartine, Nodier, and Taylor, with the wives of some of the party, started on a journey which was to furnish material for a joint-stock book, for which they received part payment beforehand at a very liberal rate. But, except Victor Hugo's, no portion of the book was ever written, the publisher failing before its completion.

* Victor Hugo: a Life related by One who has witnessed it; including a Drama in three Acts, entitled Inez de Castro, and other unpublished Works. In two volumes. Authorized Translation. London W. H. Allen and Co. 1863.

Here we may make a remark, suggested by the fact that the translator has rendered in this place éditeur—publisher—by "editor." There seems to be in his mind a strange want of knowledge of some common French idioms. For instance, par contumace is translated "for contumacy;" and he apparently imagines that a Frenchman who does not appear to answer when called upon at the bar of a Court of Justice is condemned and sentenced for his "contumacy"—i.e., for contempt of court. Now the fact is, as the French phrase implies, that he is sentenced not for, but by or in his "contempt." Not appearing, he is tried in his absence, and condemned, if need be, while "contumacious." Mistakes in so simple a matter as this, without a word to show that the translator knows the nature of a condemnation "par contumace," suggest distrust of his general competency, which is not dispelled by the style in which he has rendered certain of M. Hugo's poems, of which the original is given side by side with the translation.

M. Hugo made his fortune as a writer for the theatre. His first and second plays produced—Amy Robsart and Marion de Lorme—were interdicted by the censorship. His third, Hernani, was the object of a desperate theatrical battle; the pit being filled with friends who came, gratuitously, to applaud and support it, and the boxes with the partisans of the old school, who came to hoot and sneer at it. It was profitable to the management, inasmuch as every place was filled, and to the author, who received £250 for the copyright; but the actors complained grievously of the annoyance imposed upon them, in having to act in the midst of a constant uproar. For ten years—from 1830 to 1839—the author's time was occupied chiefly with theatrical labours; writing plays, defending them in the greenroom, carrying them safely through managerial intrigues and theatrical storms, and fighting their battles with the censorship. At last his reputation had reached so high a point that he received £10,000 for the complete copyright of his works for eleven years—a large sum for France in 1839.

In the meantime he had published two of his greatest prose works—"Notre Dame de Paris," and "Le Dernier Jour d'un Condamné." The first was written under great difficulties. He had promised it, and disappointed the purchaser; he was pressed for it, and undertook to write against time; he lost his memoranda, and was forced to lock himself up at last, in a suit of knitted wool, in which he could not appear out of doors, and spend months of close confinement at his desk in order to finish it in time. This is, perhaps, the greatest of his works, except "Les Misérables." But "Le Dernier Jour d'un Condamné," more than anything which he has ever written, betrays the author's peculiar character—his rarest talent, and his most marked deficiencies. It was the product of a sense of loathing and disgust induced by witnessing some capital executions, and was conceived as a vehement protest against capital punishment. It is in reality nothing of the kind; it is simply a record of the agonies of a condemned criminal, written with unrivalled power of imagination and expression. It is sure to haunt the dreams and torment for many days the waking reveries of an impressible reader; it is a work of wonderful genius, a masterpiece of moral terror and spiritual horror; but it has not the slightest bearing upon the question in hand. No one doubts that it is a very horrible thing to die in the full possession of youthful vitality and manly vigour, unprepared for death by that sinking of the physical energy which overpowers the fear of death, that is the strongest instinct of animal nature; no one doubts that of all forms of untimely death the most fearful is that of the criminal who, after long and dreadful expectation, amid the terrors of a guilty conscience, pays on the scaffold the penalty affixed by all law, human and divine, to the crime of murder. But this does not prove that the murderer ought not to be hanged; on the contrary, it goes far to prove that hanging is the proper penalty of murder. A wise statesman, a skilful and rational orator, may find in Victor Hugo's protests against the penalty of death, the strongest arguments in its favour. The object of legal punishment is to terrify; to deter men from committing crime; and that punishment is the best which is most terrible—provided always it be not so terrible that society shrinks from inflicting it, or holds it disproportionate to the guilt of the sufferer. But M. Hugo is no logician; he never follows out his argument to its consequences, and seems to think eloquent declamation and poetic pathos the best and most effective form of reasoning. A man who denounces the execution of a murderer as a murder, must have forgotten to ask himself what is the trade of a soldier,—a man who thinks that the law has no right to take life may well be asked what right men can have to take life on the field of battle. A writer who can seriously plead the sufferings of a convict's family as a reason why he should not be hanged, ought, if capable of logical reasoning, to contend that for the same reason he ought not to be punished at all, and to dispense with law and government altogether. But men of M. Hugo's stamp have nothing to do with logic, and ought to have nothing to do with practical politics. As poets, as novelists, we admire them heartily; as politicians or practical thinkers we are forced to rank them among the dullest and least competent of mankind. No one who reads the pages filled with Victor Hugo's diatribes against the scaffold can wonder why he failed so utterly as a politician. He wants practical common sense; and even in France this quality cannot be dispensed with in the real business of life.

The record of his political life is wisely reserved for a future work, whereof we may have more to say. In the meantime, if we cannot say that this literary biography inspires us with a high esteem for the character of the man, we can say that it is readable in itself, and not an unworthy monument to a writer who is not undeserving of the admiration of his contemporaries, and the remembrance of posterity.

THE NATURAL HISTORY OF MAN.*

THE most dangerous dogma of modern times, and that which, unconsciously to the majority of those who accept it, underlies nearly every social, political, and religious heresy which mars our civilization, is the dogma of the equality of man. Our daily experience belies it, our instinctive convictions repudiate it, our constant practice ignores it; and yet we continue to assert it, and in its various forms build upon it elaborate structures of theory. The feeblest intellect recognises a difference between self and fellow-man, between one nation and another; a careless glance suffices to convince even the vulgar of the broad distinctions between the white man and the negro, or between them and the Chinaman or the Hindoo. Yet by some strange perversion of ideas, the popular mind has come to associate the study of human races with infidelity or, at least, scepticism. Every one admits the truth of the familiar line into which Pope condensed the advice of philosophers and sages. Under every aspect except one, man has been studied assiduously, and not unsuccessfully. As an individual, in his material relations to the material world, science knows him with an accuracy which leaves comparatively little that is attainable to desire. Even in that most difficult and dangerous path, the metaphysical study of man, there are not lacking brave and earnest labourers who are willing to hew the massive quarries of thought. But so soon as science attempts to consider man as a gregarious being, classed by the Creator into certain great and distinct groups, she is stopped at the threshold of the investigation by suspicions of the lawfulness of her proceedings. To a certain extent, the students of the science of races have doubtless themselves to blame for this prejudice against them. They have, in many instances, unnecessarily brought themselves into at least apparent contradiction to Holy Writ by inquiries into the origin of man. We say unnecessarily, because even if it were permitted for human shortsightedness to fathom the mysteries of the creation, it could have no practical bearing on the legitimate subjects of inquiry, whether all mankind was descended from a single pair, or whether there had been—to borrow M. Agassiz's phrase—several distinct centres of creation. Whether the Great Architect primarily ordained the existing differences between distinct varieties of man, or whether He subsequently effected the same object by such means as He saw proper, science has to deal only with the facts as she finds them, and her duty is confined to the solution of two problems:—first, what are those differences, physical, moral, and intellectual; and secondly, are there any ascertainable means by which they can be modified or removed? If science does not transgress these bounds, it is difficult to see how she can step upon forbidden or even dangerous ground.

The second of these questions must always remain an open one, since science is compelled to prove a negative. All that can be said with any degree of absolute certainty is, that since the beginning of profane history no race of men is known to have changed its physical characteristics from any other cause than admixture; but that the moral and intellectual characteristics of all races are susceptible of development, the degree and nature of which are as yet a matter of doubt. The first question, that is, what the differences actually are, is, although not easy, certainly less difficult, because the answer depends on positive facts which research is daily increasing in number. There are those who profess apprehensions in the interests of religion, as to what the answer may be. Let them not be disquieted. The plan of salvation, as it comprises all colours, comprises also all grades of intellect. As we do not measure a man's claims to Divine mercy by the weight or texture of his brains, so neither need we those of races; and there is no reason why we may not admit the same relative difference to exist among races, that we know and feel to exist among men of the same race. To say that this or that race is distinguished by some peculiar aptitude or inaptitude, cannot be more unjust or improper than to say that one man is superior in some respects while another is deficient. The shortest road to infidelity in morals, politics, and religion, is taken by him who sets out with the idea that all men are born equal in all respects, and that the apparent differences of later life are the results of external circumstances and accident.

If, then, science shall inform us that certain races of men are distinguishable by certain moral and intellectual, as well as physical attributes, it will only have done, in a wider field and with greater accuracy, what is habitually done in assigning to different nations of the same race certain peculiarities, terming one slow, another vivacious—one prone to abstract speculations, another to practical conclusions. It will have afforded no pretext for treating any race with injustice or contempt; but it will have enabled us to facilitate and further the progress of each in the career for which the Creator of all designed it. It will have shed a light over much that is now dark and mysterious in the history of the past, and in the history we ourselves are writing by our acts in our day. Fanaticism is always the child of ignorance or imperfect knowledge; or it is, at best, the contortion of a part of the truth from its true proportion to the whole truth. Individual man is but an insignificant atom in the society of which he forms a part; it was appointed that his onward march should be not singly, but in troops; and the more we know of the mutual relations of the different societies, each of which has its appointed task, the more benevolent, because the more enlightened, our judgment will become.

We have been led into these reflections by the appearance of a new quarterly publication, the Anthropological Review, intended as the organ of an association of scientific men, who propose to themselves the range of studies we have briefly sketched out above. The Anthropological Society is, we believe, a secession, or perhaps, more properly speaking, an offspring of the Ethnological Society. At all events, it comprises many of the distinguished names of the latter, and although the youngest of our learned societies, the vigour and vitality it has already shown, and the rapidity with which it has recruited its numbers, give promise of a brilliant career of usefulness. It is proposed to make this quarterly publication a repository of all valuable information and speculation bearing upon the science of races, and the number now before the public is evidence that this will be done in a catholic spirit, without favour or prejudice for or against any preconceived theory. The general reader, who is not deterred by the somewhat repulsive title, will find much to interest him. Indeed, the subjects selected might always be termed popular ones. There are several papers, from different points of view, upon the discovery of the supposed human bones in the tool-bearing drift of Moulin-Quignon, at Abbeville, in France, which has attracted so unusual a share of public attention. There is, also, a very fair summary of the "Evidence of the Antiquity of Man;" and an interesting article on "Wild Man and Beast Children," the stories of which the author places, we think justly, among popular superstitions; a discriminating comparison between "Ethnology and Phenology;" a lively and amusing account of "A Day among the Fans," by Captain Burton, her Majesty's Consul at Fernando Po; besides a number of other original articles, reviews, and translations. The objects of the Society, the scope of its researches, and its plan of operation, are fully explained in an "Introductory Address" by Dr. James Hunt, the President, with which the present number opens. As the Review is open to all painstaking inquirers, and advocates no exclusive set of scientific tenets, each reader will find much to object to and criticise; but we venture to say that he will find nothing that is not at least suggestive, and much that cannot be otherwise than instructive.

* "The Anthropological Review and Journal of the Anthropological Society of London." No. I. May, 1863, Trubner and Co., London.

THE EDINBURGH AND QUARTERLY FOR JULY.

THE Edinburgh, in a brief notice of Sir G. C. Lewis's last work, "A Dialogue on the Best Form of Government," introduces some observations on Secession, which are worthy of attention from their intrinsic merit, but especially because they are the means of placing on record the true opinions of the late lamented statesman on the American contest. It will be seen that he was not the pro-Federal fanatic that the Anglo-Federal press would have us believe.

The Edinburgh defines accurately and boldly the essential difference between rebellion from a State authority and secession from a Federation. We are reminded that Federal Governments are formed for the purpose of resisting foreign aggression or external violence, and that the sole remedy for Federal discontent is foreign war. Whenever in the United States there has been weakness or discord at home, the statesmen of the Union "have always restored the tone of the Constitution, by the stimulating action of a foreign quarrel, actual or impending," and it may be added that until the establishment of the Southern Confederacy, England was the only convenient enemy. Whatever dispute there may be as to the technical character of Secession, it palpably differs in its moral aspect from rebellion against a national Government:—

Each State is an organized community, with its own laws, its own administration, and its own courts. If the Federal capital, the President, Congress, and the Federal army, were to be swallowed up by an earthquake, each State of the Union might transact its own business and carry on its own industry just as if nothing had happened. Secession, whether it be technically "rebellion" or not, implies in itself none of those internal dangers and risks which necessarily attend on rebellion in a centralized State. It does not involve anarchy, because each State possesses in itself all the machinery of government, which has in fact regulated the daily life of its citizens while it remained a member of the Federation. The safeguards of life and property will, so far as internal danger is concerned, be neither less nor more after secession than they were before it. We do not say that these considerations as to the real origin and principle of federal government, and the consequences of "rebellion," justify the secession of the South; they may do so, or they may not, but they appear to us to account for many phenomena, and morally they place the separation of a State from a federation in a very different light from the insurrection of a province against a national Government.

After an exceedingly able and lucid discussion of the abstract right of Secession, the Edinburgh adverts to the Confederate States by quoting from the private correspondence of Sir George C. Lewis. The following is an extract from a letter written by him in July, 1856:—

Dana's lecture on Sumner is very interesting. It illustrates the relations of the South and North, and their feelings to one another. People here speak of the outrage on Sumner as a proof of the brutal manners of the Americans, and their low morality. To me it seems the first blow in a civil war. It betokens the advent of a state of things in which political differences cannot be settled by argument, and can only be settled by force. If half England was in favour of a measure which involved the confiscation of the property of the other half, my belief is that an English Brooks would be equally applauded. If Peel had proposed a law which, instead of reducing rents had annihilated them, instead of being attacked by a man of words such as Disraeli, he would probably have been attacked with physical arguments by some man of blows. I see no solution of the political differences of the United States, but the separation of the Slave and Free States into distinct political communities. If I was a citizen of a Northern State I should wish it. I should equally wish it if I was a citizen of a Southern State. In the Northern States the English race would remain unimpaired; but I cannot help suspecting that it degenerates under a warmer sun, and that a community formed of Anglo-Saxon masters within the tropics and of negro slaves would degenerate. I see no reason why the pure English breed should not be kept up in the Northern Provinces and the Northern States. It may also be kept up in Australia, which has a climate suited to our race, and has fortunately been kept untainted by the curse of coloured slavery.

In November of the same year he wrote:—

The United States seem to me to have come nearer to a separation of North and South than they ever were before. I take for granted that Buchanan will win. The Southern States are thoroughly in earnest. They are fighting for their property. The Northern States have only a principle at stake; they will be less united and less eager. At the same time it is not at all clear that they can continue to form one State, or rather one political body; and they may reach a point when, like a married couple who cannot agree, they may part by common consent. Each may find his account in a separation.

In our first quotation he exhibits in its true light the so-called outrage upon Sumner, and concedes that if the violence of Mr. Brooks was impolitic, it was at all events so far justifiable, that an English gentleman would have been applauded for acting in a similar manner under a like provocation. Even in 1856 Sir George thought that separation was good for the North and for the South, and every year must have strengthened that conviction. Like the rest of Europe he had been deceived by the Abolitionists, but before he died he must have learnt that the English race remained unimpaired in the Southern States, and though his views upon the institution of Slavery were unchanged, he could not fail to perceive, that so far from it demoralising the white race, Edmund Burke was right in saying that it ennobled the slave-owners; and if he had visited the Southern States, all the mists of prejudice evolved by the pertinaacious and unscrupulous lying of New England would have been cleared away, and whilst he might still have deprecated slavery, he would honestly have confessed that its effects in the Southern States of America have been not to degenerate the white people, but to change the savage negro and heathen into the docile labourer and Christian. The opinions of Sir George Lewis were not modified, but rather intensified, by the realization of that contingency which he had the political sagacity to foresee. On May 18, 1861, he wrote as follows:—

The Northern States have drifted or rather plunged into war without having any intelligible aim or policy. The South fight for independence, but what do the North fight for, except to gratify passions and pride? — in his curious letter talks of averting anarchy, but if the North had remained quiet they had nothing to fear from anarchy.

What can we have more emphatic than this? Lord Russell, who is the warmest friend the Federal Government has amongst professing neutrals, has publicly declared that the struggle on the other side the Atlantic is, on the part of the North for supremacy, and on the part of the South for independence. Mr. Gladstone has quoted and endorsed this opinion. And now we find that Sir George Lewis, claimed by the Anglo-Federal faction as an authority and a supporter, testified, not in casual conversation, but by correspondence, that the South is fighting for independence and the North to gratify passions and pride. This must be bitter enough for those who have cited Sir George Lewis as their advocate; but worse for them remains to be told. The late Secretary at War was persuaded that a reconstruction of the Union was impossible. In the early part of 1861, Sir George Lewis wrote:—

The refusal of Tennessee and Arkansas to join the new confederacy may give some hopes of a compromise, but I cannot see how it can be expected that men who have committed themselves so far as the leaders of the Secession movement can be expected to come back, except upon such terms as they themselves would dictate. They would not only lose their present position, but they would scarcely be safe from proscription, if they acquiesced in the re-establishment of the old Union, and thus to a certain extent put themselves in the power of a republican Executive.

We have quoted at length the correspondence of Sir G. C. Lewis upon the American question as given in the Edinburgh, and our readers will not think we give it undue prominence, since it shows that the one eminent statesman, quoted by the Anglo-Federal faction as an authority, was so far a Southern sympathizer, that he thought the cause of the South just, the disruption inevitable, and a re-union by force impossible.

The first article in the Edinburgh is a scathing review of Mr. Mark Napier's memoir and defence of Claverhouse, Viscount Dundee. Mr. Napier proceeds upon a plan once in vogue at the Old Bailey. He discovers here and there a flaw in the indictment, and then jumps to the conclusion that his client ought to be acquitted. Now it is possible, and even probable, that Dundee was not so utterly depraved, so satanically cruel, as the victims of his oppression have represented him; and on the other hand, we concede that the Cove-nanters were a troublesome sect to deal with, that they provoked Government interference, and by their conduct justified some measure of severity. What then? We cannot conclude that Dundee was a pattern of Christian virtue, or that the Covenanters were only fit to be hunted like wild beasts. Cruel persecution developed their fanaticism, and is a disgrace not only to the name of Dundee, but to the Government, of which he was the ready and well-paid tool.

The other articles, though severally excellent, do not call for any lengthened comment. The essay on "Druids and Bards" displays considerable research, but the conclusion arrived at, that the Druids exercised very little influence upon their own and succeeding generations—that they are, in fact, almost as mythical as King Arthur's knights of the round table—will be very displeasing to those who take Stonehenge as a text for a very pretty romance, upon the manners and customs of the ancient Britons. However, no amount of scepticism will make us regard all our Druidical traditions as mere fables; and when, at the season of Christmas, our houses are decorated with the holly and the mistletoe, we shall recall to mind and believe in the forest ceremonials of the priesthood of the ancient Britons. A review of "Louis Blanc's History of the French Revolution," whilst crediting the author for his conscientious research, and the fairness with which he states and deals with adverse facts, points out several errors into which he has been led by his prejudices. An article on the well-worn but not exhausted subject of the navies of France and England; a clever paper on "The Scots in France and the French in Scotland;" as well as contributions on the "Sources of the Nile," on "Architecture," and on "Lyell's Antiquity of Man," make up an instructive and altogether excellent number.

The Quarterly opens with the discussion of a subject that just now engages the serious attention of European statesmen, and in which the peace of Europe is very much involved, that is, "The Resources and Future of Austria." So far as the resources of Austria are concerned, they justify the most sanguine expectations. In 1862, it was estimated that the population of the Empire was 35,795,000, and the number of inhabitants per square mile was 130, whilst in France it was 165, and in Great Britain and Ireland, 220. The natural wealth of the country is very great, and she only requires peace at home to ensure a rapid development of her commerce. Although the Empire consists of an agglomeration of diverse nationalities, they are bound together by geographical affinity, and two-thirds of her inhabitants are of one faith—the Roman Catholic. Much, nay all, depends upon Austria granting her subjects a full and fair representation, and treating them politically as a kind of Imperial federation. This seems to be her present policy, which if persevered in will ensure the future welfare of Austria.

A paper entitled "Natural History of the Bible" is happily free from the odium theologicum. "Our Colonial System" is a very temperate refutation of the ridiculous theories of Mr. Goldwin Smith, who is weak enough to believe that our colonies do not pay, and counsels us to get rid of them. The Quarterly points out their true commercial and other value, and our bounden duty to retain them until they have grown into prosperous nations, and demand the severance of the political tie. The Quarterly also deals with another set of visionaries, who have crept into notoriety by means of what we can only designate the imposture of modern spiritualism. Whether Mr. Home is self-deceived we are not called upon to determine, but that he is the agent in deceiving those who place faith in the spiritual manifestations that are exhibited at his séances we do not hesitate to declare. Even if spirits could be recalled to earth, they surely would not be under the control of every mountebank who learns the art of spirittrapping, nor would they employ themselves in performing tricks too ridiculous to amuse babies. The Quarterly very well observes:—

If the spirits of the departed can interfere in earthly things, on such occasions and in such modes as these, assuredly there is no occasion, however trivial, and no mode, however ludicrous, in which they may not be supposed capable of interfering. If the laws of material nature can be tampered with in the manner here described, assuredly we have no security for their permanence in any of the ordinary affairs of life. No chemist performing a delicate experiment can be sure that some tricky spirit may not alter the proportions of his ingredients and vitiate the entire result. No cook, preparing some chef-d'œuvre of his art, is safe from the danger of unseen hands substituting salt for sugar, or assafetida for spice. No plain man can buy groceries by weight without the danger of some roguish defunct tradesman aiding the frauds of his successor by "gravitating" the figs and raisins or "levitating" the weights. All this, no doubt, seems very absurd; but we submit that it is not a whit too absurd to be true, if Mr. Home's spiritual manifestations are to be taken as samples of the truth.

Two very charming contributions are "Sacred Trees and Flowers," and "Rome as it Is." The first contains a great deal of curious and suggestive lore, and the latter ought to be read by all those who are about to visit the Eternal city, or who, not having the opportunity of so doing, desire to know something of Rome as it is. Besides the articles we have named, there is a learned and lengthy dissertation on Glacial Theories, and a review of the life and letters of Washington Irving, so far as they have yet been published.

CHARLES SUMNER.
(To the Editor of THE INDEX.)

DUBLIN, 17th July.

SIR,—My attention having been drawn to certain panegyrics passed in England on Mr. Charles Sumner, the senator from Massachusetts in the Congress of the United States, I cannot allow the praise bestowed on him to pass unchallenged, for it is undeserved.

His Grace the Duke of Argyle has constituted himself the chief eulogist of the Massachusetts Senator in this country, pronouncing him "a consistent and accomplished statesman, and a truthful christian gentleman." How worthy of this public praise Charles Sumner is the following record will show.

On the 4th July, 1845, Mr. Sumner delivered an oration in Faneuil Hall, Boston, and the subject of his discourse was "peace." The address was published in America, and republished in Liverpool by the Peace Society, and copious extracts from it appeared in Chambers's Journal, 28th March, 1846.

On that anniversary of American independence Mr. Sumner commenced his oration by saying,—“He did not propose to pass judgment on the wars in which his country had been already engaged. On each occasion the people acted in accordance with the notions in which they had been educated; but now they are able to recognise the supremacy of the moral faculties, and to despise an appeal to brute force for the settlement of their quarrels.” “In our age,” he proceeds, “there can be no peace that is not honourable; there can be no war that is not dishonourable. The true honour of a nation is to be found only in deeds of justice, and in the happiness of its people, all of which are inconsistent with war.” The orator continues,—“With regard to the character of war, it is clearly an attempt on the part of two nations to overpower each other by force. Reason and the divine part of our nature, in which alone we differ from the beasts, in which alone we approach the Divinity, in which alone are the elements of justice, the professed object of war, are dethroned. It is, in short, a temporary adoption by men of the character of wild beasts, emulating their ferocity, rejoicing like them in blood, and seeking, as with a lion's paw, to hold an asserted right.”

The orator then considered the consequences of a resort to this brute force in the pursuit of justice:—“Relations of friendship and commerce were severed, each citizen or subject of the belligerents had impressed on him the character of enemy; the white doves of commerce were driven from the sea, and, instead of bearing the olive branches of peace, became the ministers of destruction. Look,” said the orator, “at the scenes of horror caused by war; read the histories that tell of Tarragona, Ciudad-Rodrigo, Badajos, Genoa, and Marenco, of murdered and outraged women, slaughtered children, ruined cities, devastated countries, and bankrupt nations.”

The orator then referred to “the selfish and exaggerated love of country which was the basis of all war.” “Among us Americans the sentiment has been active,” while it has derived new force from the point with which it has been expressed. An officer of our navy, one of the so-called heroes nurtured by war, whose name has been praised in churches, has gone beyond all Greek, all Roman example. ‘Our country, right or wrong!’ was his exclamation; ‘Our country, our whole country, and nothing but our country!’ are words which have been echoed by innumerable multitudes, sentiments dethroning God, and enthroning the devil, whose flagitious character should be rebuked by every honest heart. He,” the orator, “did not inculcate an indifference to country; but God had not placed us on earth alone; there are others, equally with us, children of His protecting care.”

“Viewing then,” said he, “the different people on the globe as all deriving their blood from a common source, and separated only by the accident of mountains, rivers, and seas, into those distinctions around which cluster the associations of country, we must regard all the children of the earth as members of the great human family. Discord in this family is treason to God; while all war is nothing else than civil war. It will be in vain that we restrain this odious term, importing so much of horror to the petty dissensions of a single State. The muse of history, in the faithful record of the future transactions of nations, inspired by a new and loftier justice, and touched to finer sensibilities, shall extend to the general sorrows of universal man the sympathy which has been profusely shed for the selfish sorrow of country, and shall pronounce all war to be civil war, and the partakers in it as traitors to God and enemies to man.”

After numerous arguments proving the unchristian character of war, with the crimes attendant on and the burdens entailed by it, the orator gives his exposition of the remedy for this “universal disease.”

“In nearly every instance war fails to secure the rights for which arms were taken up. Each party, as the war proceeds, becomes tired of the contest; and the affair generally ends by leaving the matter in dispute, where it stood at the outset. It being impossible to obtain justice by war, what is the alternative? The various modes which have been proposed for the termination of disputes between nations are negotiation, arbitration, mediation, and a congress of nations; all of them practicable, and calculated to secure peaceful justice. Let it not be said, then, that war is a necessity; and may our country aim at the true glory of taking the lead in the recognition of these, as the only proper modes of determining justice between nations.”

Sir, these were the sentiments inculcated, the lessons taught the people of Massachusetts, by Charles Sumner, on an anniversary of their independence, in Faneuil Hall, Boston. Look at him and hear him to-day.

Charles Sumner, the friend of Generals Butler, Turchin, and McNeil, hounding on mercenaries to kill, burn, and devastate, urging the extermination of those who were once his countrymen, exciting in the Southern States a servile war for the destruction of women and children, voting thousands of millions for a civil and a servile war; voting away the liberties of his country, shackling its press, and trampling its constitution under his feet, threatening war if any mediation was attempted by a foreign country, and establishing on the ruins of his once free country a hideous despotism.

This is the “consistent and accomplished statesman, the truthful Christian gentleman,” whom the Duke of Argyle is proud to call his friend. It is a clear case of colour blindness; his Grace can only see black; could he free his mind from the prejudice which oppresses it, and study the true character of the American negrophilists, he would soon behold a nation of “whited sepulchres,” and the chief one would be Charles Sumner, whom he would see standing in the “cradle of American liberty,” with the following legend in scarlet letters on his breast:—“I emulated the ferocity of a wild beast; I rejoiced in blood; I sought as with a lion's paw to hold an asserted right; I was a false teacher; I dethroned the Deity and enthroned the devil in my heart; I was a traitor to God and man; from the words of my mouth am I judged.”

W. G. O.

FEDERAL EXACTIONS IN NORFOLK.

The following military order from the petty despot who now lords it over Norfolk and Portsmouth, will show what is passing in that quarter:—

Head-quarters, Military Governor,
Norfolk, Virginia, May 5.

Whereas, a certain sum of money derived from the sale of goods seized by the military authorities in transitu for insurrectionary districts was appropriated for the use of the poor of Norfolk and Portsmouth, and to that end placed in the hands of a duly constituted committee for distribution in the way of food purchased—

And whereas, the Portsmouth Committee have reported that five out of six of the persons in destitute circumstances are the wives and children of men who have been seduced into taking up arms against their Government without shadow of cause, except the influence of those who remain at home, and coolly and deliberately see the offspring of their deluded victims starving without an effort to aid them:—Therefore, it is ordered, that M. W. Armstead, Joseph Lurke, Henry Buff, William Morris, Holt Wilson, William H. Wilson, Samuel Watts, David Bain, George M. Bain, sen., John H. Cocke, Arthur Emmerson, Bernard O'Neill, John Nash, Charles Grice, A. B. Smith, Nestor Forbes, W. A. Hodges, David Griffith, George W. Maupin, W. J. Mercer, Charles Graham, Girard Henderson, Willoughby G. Butler, Robert E. Porter, Miles Minter, Henry V. Neimeyer, John Burke, Robert Dixon, B. Dyson, Fisher Matthews, Jacob Myers, Zachariah Owens, Thomas Hobday, Joseph A. Bilisoly, John T. West, and William Ives, of the city of Portsmouth, being individuals possessed of property and resources, who have not manifested their loyalty to the United States, be, and hereby are constituted a committee whose duty it shall be to see that every one of such destitute persons in that city shall be provided with food, fuel, and clothing, the means for which will be furnished by contributions from disloyal citizens who are responsible for this deplorable condition of things.

If said means are not supplied voluntarily, these families will be billeted upon those who are able to take care of them until such time as their natural protectors, confessing the error of their conduct, shall be allowed by the Government to return to their homes.

ROBERT L. VIELE,

Brig.-Gen. and Military Governor.

AFFAIRS, FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

MONEY AND DISCOUNT MARKET.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, JULY 22.

The buoyant tone which pervaded every department of the Stock Exchange for the last two or three weeks, has entirely given way under the influence of the less satisfactory state of political affairs abroad, more particularly as regards the threatening aspect of the Polish question, and the course likely to be pursued by the Emperor of the French in face of the high tone assumed by the Russian Government in the Ministerial despatches just forwarded in answer to the joint representation of England, France, and Austria. So far as this country is concerned, the statements recently made in Parliament would tend to quiet any apprehensions that might have been entertained; but there is far less security felt as regards the Emperor Napoleon, and in commercial circles the belief is largely entertained that he contemplates war, in the event of his propositions being rejected by Russia. This was alone sufficient to cause a retrograde movement in monetary affairs, and the perturbed feeling has been greatly increased by the adverse accounts lately received from America; but although there is a general belief that these accounts are considerably exaggerated, still, till they are either confirmed or partially contradicted, the effect upon the market must be unfavourable. During the whole of this week Consols have been declining, and there are indications of a further adverse movement, and as long as the present uncertainty prevails, no material improvement can be expected. There has been no change whatever in the state of the discount market. The applications, both at the Bank and amongst the brokers, for accommodation are very moderate; but the latter do not appear at all inclined to force business, and although they have plenty of capital at command, they refuse to part with it even for first-class short-dated paper under  $\frac{3}{4}$  to  $\frac{3}{8}$  per cent.; or  $\frac{1}{4}$  per cent. below the Bank minimum. The Joint-stock banks are in the same position as the brokers, but they will not dispose of their ample resources under  $\frac{3}{4}$  per cent. Under present circumstances there does not appear any prospect of money being cheaper, particularly as the demands are not so much for legitimate commercial purposes, as to meet engagements created by the numerous joint-stock undertakings recently brought forward.

BULLION AND SPECIE MOVEMENTS.

This afternoon £4,000 in gold was sent into the Bank of England, being the only transaction of this description during the week, and there have not been any withdrawals. The great paucity of these operations lately is creating some surprise, and it is not anticipated that there will at present be any great increase in this department. The only arrivals of gold this week have been from America, amounting to £53,130. The gold ships known to be on their way from the Australian colonies will bring £508,500, but none of this is likely to be in at present. The bar silver brought by the last West India packet has been sold at 5s. 1d. per oz., being precisely the same rate as that disposed of previously, but there have been some sales at 5s. 1½d. and 5s. 1¼d., in order to supply a limited demand for India and China.

HOME AND FOREIGN SECURITIES.

The general tone of the political advices from the Continent, particularly with reference to the affairs of Poland and Russia, and the course likely to be adopted in the emergency by France, has had a very depressing influence on the English funds, and prices have been steadily retrograding; but although there has not been any further decline to-day, there has not been any improvement; the last quotation for consols this evening was 92½ to ¼ for both money and account, which is a decline during the week of about ½ per cent. Exchequer bills have varied but fractionally, the present price being par to 3s. prem. The foreign stock market has been affected by the same causes and to a proportionate extent as the market for English securities, and the dealings have been restricted. Turkish descriptions have shown great heaviness, and Greek continues to be prejudicially affected by the late military émoué at Athens; there is evidently a want of confidence amongst dealers as regards these securities, and the consequence has been forced sales, with still lower prices. Spanish have also changed hands at reduced values, but Mexican although depressed, have not fallen to so great an extent.

THE CONFEDERATE COTTON LOAN.

The cotton loan of the Confederate States has been subjected to very great fluctuations within the last few days, the advices with regard to the progress of the war being, for the moment, construed unfavourably. On Thursday last, although the accounts then to hand were not satisfactory, business was very dull, and the quotation ranged from ½ dis. to ¾ prem. On the following day there was also some depression, but without any alteration in price. On Saturday the loan was affected by the general depression in the other markets, and there was a decline to ½ dis. to par, but the final quotation was about ½ dis. sellers. On Monday a great change took place; on first reading the despatches then received, a degree of panic appeared to have seized the operators, and a fall to 5 dis. at once took place. After some little reflection, however, it was seen that the accounts proceeded entirely from Northern sources, and being regarded with some mistrust, a reaction quickly set in, and the price was called 4 dis. Subsequently purchasers came in, and a further improvement to 3 to 2½ dis. was the result, and before the close of the market much greater confidence was exhibited, a belief in some quarters being entertained that the advices would be found to have been greatly exaggerated, and which induced the dealers to take back stock. Yesterday business was again restricted, and the closing price was 4 to 3½ dis., and to-day there has been no further variation.

AMERICAN SECURITIES.

The general tenor of the latest advices from New York has caused a considerable business to be transacted in most descriptions of American securities, and in the majority of instances a large rise has taken place. To-day, however, there has been rather less doing, the dealers seeming disposed to await further news. United States, redeemable in 1874, have been dealt in at 64½ to 65. Atlantic and Great Western, New York Section, at 72 to 72½; do. Pennsylvania do., 70½ to 71; Erie Shaws $100, all paid, 64 to 64½; do. 7 per cent. preference do., 67 to 68½; do. 4th mortgage, 1833, 72. And New York Centrals, $100 shares, 76 to 77. The rise in the foregoing has varied from 3½ to 5 per cent. The following have also been dealt in at nearly the same prices as last week. Virginia State 4s. 6d., 44½ to 45. Illinois Central, 1875, 4s. 6d., 74½; do. $100 shares, $90 paid, 26½ to 28 dis. ex. c. Michigan, South and North Indiana (sinking fund) 1855, 70. Pennsylvania Central bonds, 2nd mortgage, 86½ to 86½; do. $50 shares, 40; and Michigan Central (sinking fund) 1st mortgage, 78.

RAILWAY SECURITIES.

The business transacted in English Railway Shares has been only to a moderate extent, but in sympathy with the other departments of the Stock Exchange, prices have been gradually declining, particularly in the heavier descriptions, from about ½ to ¾ per cent. each day. A rather better feeling, however, was apparent early to-day, and although there was no great improvement in the amount of business transacted, prices, in some instances, slightly advanced, but declined again before the close of the market. In colonial shares there has been rather more doing, particularly for the Indian railways, and prices have shown less fluctuation. Foreign descriptions have also been in fair request, with quotations, on the whole, moderately supported.

BANK MEETINGS.

At a meeting of the proprietors of the London Joint Stock Bank, a very satisfactory report was read, and a dividend of 12s. 6d. per share, being at the rate of £12 10s. per cent. per annum, with the addition of a bonus of 7s. per share, was declared. The net profits of the half-year were £53,689 18s. 7d., and the guarantee fund now stands at £264,505 12s. 4d.—At the Bank of London half-yearly meeting the report and statement of accounts presented were of a most encouraging character. The total profits of the half-year reached £53,867 1s. 6d., out of which a dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum was declared, and £18,000 carried to the reserve fund, which now stands at £100,000. The balance of £606 remaining was carried to the current half-year's account.—At the ordinary general meeting of the shareholders of the Alliance Bank of London and Liverpool the balance sheet presented showed the net profits for the half-year to have been £10,344 18s. 7d., out of which a dividend of 10s. per share was declared; £2000 was placed to the reserve fund; £1250 applied in part liquidation of the preliminary expenses, and £243 carried to the profit and loss account. A resolution was passed authorizing an increase of capital from £2,000,000 to £3,000,000 by the issue of 10,000 new shares, of £100 each.—The half-yearly meeting of the Bank of New Zealand was held on the 30th of April, at Auckland, when it was shown that the net profits amounted to £35,910, out of which a dividend of 10 per cent. was declared, and £24,000 was added to the reserve fund.—The half-yearly meeting of the Bank of New South Wales was held on the 29th of April, at Sydney, when a dividend was declared at the rate of 15 per cent. per annum, and a bonus of 2½ per cent. on the paid up capital, making together 20 per cent. per annum. The net profits for the half-year were £78,128, to which was added a balance of £3,253 brought from the previous half-year. After payment of the dividend there remained £3,128 to be carried to the current account.—At the half-yearly meeting of the City Bank, the usual dividend, at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, was declared, and in addition a bonus of 20s. per share, being equal to 10 per cent. for the year, out of net profits, amounting to £30,350. The sum of £10,000 was appropriated to the reserve fund, which now stands at £80,000, and £350 was carried forward to the current half-year's account. The directors of the National Bank had declared a dividend on the paid-up capital at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, and an extraordinary dividend of 16s. per share, making together £2 per share free of income tax for the half-year.—The half-yearly meeting of the National Discount Company was held this afternoon, when a dividend at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, free of income tax, was declared. The gross profit for the half-year was £56,356, and after providing for the necessary disbursements, there was left £29,457 at the disposal of the directors. The dividend would absorb £16,000, leaving a balance of £13,457 to be carried to the reserve fund, which will then amount to £28,180.

PROGRESS OF ENTERPRISE.

Joint stock undertakings continue from day to day to be brought before the public. Five have been announced during the present week, for which an aggregate capital of £1,010,000 is required: with the exception, however, of the Marine Investment Company, which asks for £500,000, and the Oriental Hotels Company, which wants £250,000, the capitals sought are not large; they comprise the Whittington Freehold Colliery Company, the Blaencennant Silver Lead Mining Company, and Storm's Breach-loading Small Arms Company.

THE COURSE OF THE PRODUCE MARKETS.

The Canada's advices have somewhat changed the aspect of our American trade since this day week. With the retreat of the Confederates in Pennsylvania the chances of peace have, it is considered, again become remote, and the extension of demand which, in some departments, was at least commencing, has now entirely disappeared. As America is one of our best customers for iron, the market for this article has been affected most, and the value of Scotch pig has declined 1s. 6d. to 2s. per ton. Bars and rails, although not notably altered, would be difficult to sell, except at easier rates; spelter has risen to £18 5s. per ton on the spot, in consequence of several purchases, partly speculative, and based upon an impression that future supplies will fall short of requirements. In gums, dyes, and chemicals suitable for the American markets, the dealings are quite of retail extent, and prices almost nominal. Some small lots of Kowrie gum have sold at 34s. Arabics, whilst dull of sale, are generally held for full terms. Shellac has slightly improved; fine orange being now worth £9 to £9 2s. 6d. and fine seconds £8 15s. per cwt. Argols of all kinds are freely offered upon late terms. Tartar is still depressed. Soda crystals are quoted £4 15s. to £4 17s. 6d., which is rather under recent prices. In the value of export spices no material change has occurred, but the tendency is, for most descriptions, in favour of buyers. A public sale has established £6 2s. 6d. to £6 5s. as the price of camphor, but the market looks unsettled. In American produce business has been restricted. Petroleum is offered upon reduced terms, as the retirement of the invading army from Pennsylvania will release supplies. Crude has fallen £2 per tun; there being sellers at £18. Refined is 2d. per gallon cheaper; 2s. 3d. was the last price paid on the spot, and 2s. 4d. for autumn delivery. American turpentine is steadily held for 98s. to 100s., in the expectation of further orders for the United States; whilst French has been depressed to 75s. by speculative sales. To-day, however, the market for the latter has recovered 1s. per cwt. Resin is extremely firm: common American, 26s. 6d. to 27s.; French, 23s. 6d. to 24s. per cwt. American provisions continue to move off steadily: butter at 68s. to 74s.; cheese at 46s. to 58s.; and bacon at 26s. to 44s. per cwt., according to quality. No quotable change has occurred in North American tallow, but the value may be favourably influenced by the increased firmness which holders of Russian are showing in consequence of political complications. American wheat and flour have remained stationary in value with a quiet demand. Oatmeal also sells slowly, without change in price. To-day the tone of the market was, if anything, firmer. The cotton trade has been rather more active, with quotations a point stronger in consequence of the last New York advices. In the tobacco market there is no new feature, and quotations are unchanged.

COTTON AND DRY GOODS MARKET.

LIVERPOOL, Wednesday, July 22.

The past week has been fraught with events of great interest to all interested in the cotton market. On Thursday the first news of the desperate battles in Pennsylvania came to hand, but the accounts were too confused to throw much light on the position of affairs. Enough, however, was known to show that the victorious progress of Lee was stopped, and our market assumed, in consequence, a better tone, for the suspicion was removed that the war would be brought to a sudden close by the collapse of the North. American cotton, which had been much depressed, attracted most attention, and prices gradually hardened to the end of last week.

On Monday the commercial community was staggered by the advices brought by the Canada. The whole aspect of American affairs was changed. Vicksburg had surrendered, and the army of Lee was apparently seeking to retire into Virginia. Since the war commenced no such sudden change of fortune has occurred. The fall of Vicksburg was wholly unexpected; and the conduct of the Federal troops at Gettysburg almost equally so.

The first impression produced by the news was that all chance of a speedy settlement of the question was done away with, but the effect of this view on our market was partially counterbalanced by the notion that the fall of Vicksburg would liberate some quantity of cotton. For some time it was quite uncertain how the market would move, but the sanguine view predominated, and an active demand sprang up, especially for American cotton. The business of the day reached 8,000 bales at ½d. to ¾d. advance in American cotton, and ¼d. to ½d. in Surats. The sales on Tuesday and Wednesday were 6,000 bales each day, and prices still continue to stiffen. The advance on American is now ¾d. to 1d. per lb. from the low sales of last week, and on Surats, ½d. to ¾d. In Surats to arrive a considerable business has been done, and Fair Dhollera May sailing, which was selling last week at 17d., is now readily saleable at 17½d. June sailing is worth 17½d.

No one conversant with American affairs can deny that the present aspect of matters in that country is most unfavourable to peace. All hope of the North giving up the war in disgust has now vanished. The fall of Vicksburg must soon be followed by that of Port Hudson, and then the Federals will have complete control of the Mississippi river—the grand object of Western policy. This great success will serve to unite and encourage the North, and give strength to Lincoln's Government; and there seems very little hope now of any change in Northern policy during the remainder of his term of office. We believe that the hopes of obtaining a supply of cotton from the Mississippi valley consequent upon the fall of Vicksburg will prove visionary. The Confederates will take good care that all the cotton liable to seizure by the Federals be either destroyed or removed into the interior. Besides, it must be remembered that the cotton stored on the plantations is half rotten in many cases, and cannot be transported till it has got fresh bagging and ropes put on, while the tributaries of the Mississippi will not be navigable for some months. And, therefore, even if seizures of cotton were made to some extent, very little of it would be available till next winter.

It may be added in conclusion that doubts are still expressed in some quarters of the accuracy of the report of the fall of Vicksburg, this appears, however, to be a case in which "the wish is father to the thought."

MANCHESTER, Tuesday, 21st July.

The dullness which pervaded our market last week, has been dissipated to some little extent, by later and better advices from the India markets, and by the tenor of the news from America.

The intelligence brought by the Canada, of Lee having been defeated, as well as Vicksburg having fallen, imparted a great amount of firmness to both spinners and manufacturers, who in most instances attempted to obtain higher prices, in which they have only succeeded for small parcels, to supply immediate requirements. Offers are being made by merchants for goods at prices of a week ago, but these are not accepted to holders, and the actual business transacted does not amount to much hitherto.

To-day the demand has been sluggish at an advance upon yarns of about ¼d. per lb. Cloth has been very quiet, and very little has changed hands.

There is a disposition to await further news from America before operating to any extent.

Among the Contents of THE INDEX of July 16, are—

NOTES ON EVENTS OF THE WEEK.
ENGLAND AND SOUTHERN STATESMANSHIP.
THE BATTLES IN PENNSYLVANIA.
THE DISCHARGED ORDER.
BRITISH INTERESTS IN SECESSION.
THE VETERAN OF SOCIETY.
LETTERS FROM RICHMOND AND NEW ORLEANS.
PARIS TOPICS.
THE WINCHESTER CAPTURE.

SHIRTS.—International Exhibition. Class 27 C. No. 4872. Prize Medal and honourable mentions 1851 and 1862. Shirts, Collars, Flannels, and every description of underclothing manufactured on the premises.

J. BRIE and Co.,
43, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.
The only Shirtmakers admitted as Exhibitors at the International Exhibition of 1862.

VALUES OF GOLD.—WATERSTON and BROGDEN, for the information of the public and their numerous patrons beg to make the following announcement regarding the VALUE OF GOLD, feeling persuaded that the interests of the fair trader and public will be alike protected by the wide circulation of knowledge on the subject. Gold being divided into 24 parts or carats, it follows that gold of

Per oz.	Per oz.
24 carats fine is worth.....£4 4 11	13 carats.....£2 6 0
23 ditto.....4 1 5	12 ditto.....2 2 5½
22 ditto (British standard).....3 17 10½	11 ditto.....1 18 11
21 carats.....3 14 4	10 ditto.....1 15 4½
20 ditto.....3 10 9½	9 ditto.....1 11 10
19 ditto.....3 7 3	8 ditto.....1 8 3½
18 ditto.....3 3 8½	7 ditto.....1 4 9
17 ditto.....3 0 2	6 ditto.....1 1 2½
16 ditto.....2 16 7½	5 ditto.....0 17 8
15 ditto.....2 13 1	4 ditto.....0 14 2
14 ditto.....2 9 6½	3 ditto.....0 10 7½
	2 ditto.....0 7 1
	1 ditto.....0 3 6½

Manufacture, 16, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London, W.C.

N.B. Assays made of Chains and Jewellery for 1s. each.

NOTICE.—This Establishment is closed at six o'clock in the evening, and on Saturdays at one o'clock.

TWO PRIZE MEDALS awarded "For General Excellence" in DRESSING CASES, BAGS, DESPATCH BOXES, &c. Gentlemen's Travelling Bags, Useful Size, 14s. 6d.; Full Size, 18s. 6d.; Large Size, 21s. Courier Bags, with Shoulder Strap, from 10s. 6d. Morocco Ladies' Bags, 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 14s. 6d., 18s. 6d., and 21s. Tourists' Writing Cases, 8s. 6d., 10s. 6d., and 12s. Finest Cutlery in Razors, Scissors, Needles, &c. JENNER and KNEWTUB, Manufacturers to the Royal Family, 35, St. James's-street, and 66, Jermy-street.

A. G. MILWAINE, AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, Tobacco, Cotton, Grain, and other produce, PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA.

FRANCIS FORD, MANCHESTER,
Manufacturer of Three and Six Cord Spool Thread, Cotton Balls, Knitting and Embroidering Cottons, &c. Imported by F. RIMAILHO and NEYREY, New Orleans, and GEORGE CHAMBERS and CO., Nassau, N.P.

GEORGE CHAMBERS, & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants,
NASSAU, N.P.
BAHAMAS.

J. PFEIFFER & MULLER,
Commission Merchants,
52, Rue du Chateau d'Eau,
PARIS.

SAMUEL SMITH,
COTTON BROKER,
11, Manchester Buildings,
LIVERPOOL.

HENRY ADDERLEY & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants,
NASSAU, N.P.,
BAHAMAS.

FRANCIS PRESTON,
ENGINEER AND CONTRACTOR TO HER
MAJESTY'S WAR DEPARTMENT,
35, Loveday Street,
BIRMINGHAM.
And Ancients' Bridge Works,
MANCHESTER.
Established 1816.

J. H. ASHBRIDGE & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants,
NEW ORLEANS.
Office—56, Brown's-buildings, Liverpool.
Agents—Liverpool and New Orleans Mail Steam Navigation Company.

BEACH & ROOT,
Commission Merchants,
CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA
and
ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

BEACH, ROOT, & CO.,
APSPLEY BUILDINGS, OLD HALL STREET,
LIVERPOOL.

S. ISAAC, CAMPBELL, & Co.
CONTRACTORS & MERCHANTS.
71, Jermy-street,
LONDON.

Sherbro: West Coast of Africa.
Represented by
W. B. HART,
Nassau, New Providence.

WIGGINS, TEAPE, & Co.,
WHOLESALE AND EXPORT STATIONERS,
10, ALDGATE, LONDON.

Special Papers suited to Foreign Markets.

ROWLAND & BROTHERS,
Commission Merchants,
NORFOLK,
VIRGINIA.

JOHN FRASER & CO.,
CHARLESTON,
South Carolina.
FRASER, TRENHOLM, & CO.,
Liverpool,
Commission Merchants.

SEARING AND CO.,
Commission Merchants,
MOBILE AND NEW ORLEANS, C.S.A.
Represented by
R. G. BEESLEY, Cotton Broker,
No. 2, Byron's-court, Royal-exchange,
Manchester.

J. E. HERTZ,
(Of the late Firm of MORDECAI and CO.),
Commission Merchant,
CHARLESTON,
SOUTH CAROLINA.

References to
M. C. MORDECAI, Esq.
Charleston, South Carolina.
Messrs. COHEN and HERTZ,
Savannah, Georgia.

LAMB, BALL, & CO.,
Ship and General Commission Agents,
ST. THOMAS,
WEST INDIES.

WEBER BROTHERS,
Commission Merchants,
SAVANNAH,
GEORGIA, C.S.A.

HOTEL DE LA LU
GRANDE BRETAGNE,
Rue de Po.
TURIN.

McDOWELL, WITHERS, AND CO., MOBILE ALABAMA, C.S.A., Commission Merchants.

R. D. RUSDEN, MANCHESTER,
ENGLAND, American Drills of all kinds,
Demics, Stripes, Shirtings, and all sorts of Manchester Goods.

ANDREW LOW AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH
GEORGIA.

HAMILTON AND GRAHAM,
Importers, Wholesale Dealers in Dry
Goods, &c., PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA.

H. LEVY AND SON,
Commission Merchants, MOBILE.

GARLAND GOODE, MOBILE,
Cotton Factor and Commission Merchant.

BOYKIN and McRAE, Cotton
Factors and Commission Merchants,
MOBILE, ALABAMA, C.S.A.

J. W. ANDERSON AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH,
GEORGIA.

JAMES CHAPMAN,
Commission Merchant, CHARLESTON.

N. A. HARDEE AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH,
GEORGIA.

R. N. GOUDINE AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, Charleston.

DUNLOP, MONCURE, & CO.,
General Commission Merchants,
RICHMOND.

WARWICK AND BARKSDALE,
GALLEGO FLOUR MILLS.
This immense establishment of capacity to manufacture 1000 barrels of Flour per day, purely for South American Market. RICHMOND.

MILLER AND BATRE, Exchange
Brokers, MOBILE, ALABAMA, C.S.A.

R. AND D. G. MILLS, Cotton
Factors and Commission Merchants,
GALVESTON, TEXAS, C.S.A.

GENERAL THOMAS J. (STONEWALL) JACKSON.

Two Continents, both friend and foe, combine to mourn the premature death of General JACKSON, hero and Christian. Two years have been sufficient to create a fame which has won the kindly respect of enemies and the admiration of the Old World, which twenty-four months since was ignorant of his existence

It has been suggested that some general recognition from Great Britain of the worth of such a man, by name, by race, and by character related to us, although the citizen of another land, would be a graceful token of friendly feeling from the old country to our kinsmen across the Atlantic.

The eminent sculptor, J. H. FOLLY, Esq., R.A., has undertaken to execute a marble Statue, heroic size, of the General for £1,000, while £500 may be required for pedestal, inscription, and other extras. Accordingly, for £1,500 a complete Statue of "Stonewall" JACKSON, by one of our most distinguished sculptors, may be prepared for transmission to his native country when the unhappy war shall have ceased. Towards raising this sum, the Subscriptions of our countrymen and countrywomen are earnestly solicited. Central and Local Committees, with auxiliary Ladies' Committees, are being formed to collect the necessary funds.

The undersigned will gladly receive Subscriptions until the final arrangements are made, and an account has been opened for "General JACKSON's Statue," at Messrs. COURTTS and Co.'s, Strand, London, W.C.

N.B.—It is not at all intended that Subscriptions to the Statue should imply any opinion on the merits of the American struggle. They will be taken solely and simply as a recognition of the rare personal merit of General Jackson.

COMMITTEE.

EDWARD AKROYD, Esq.
HON. EVELYN ASHLEY.
LORD CAMPBELL.
LORD EUSTACE CECIL.
EARL OF DONOUGHMORE.
HON. ERNEST DUNCOMBE, M.P.
SIR EARDLEY EARDLEY, BART.
SIR ARTHUR H. ELTON, BART.

SIR JAMES FERGUSSON, BART., M.P.
HON. C. FITZWILLIAM, M.P.
J. S. GILLIAT, Esq.
W. H. GREGORY, Esq., M.P.
COL. GREVILLE, M.P.
A. J. B. BERESFORD HOPE, Esq.
SIR E. KERRISON, BART., M.P.

J. LAIRD, Esq., M.P.
SIR COURTTS LINDSAY, BART.
W. S. LINDSAY, Esq., M.P.
G. PEACOCKE, Esq., M.P.
G. E. SEYMOUR, Esq.
J. SPENCE, Esq.
LIEUT.-COL. C. N. STURT, M.P.

A. J. B. BERESFORD HOPE, Esq., 1, CONNAUGHT PLACE,
W. H. GREGORY, Esq., M.P., 19, GROSVENOR STREET WEST.
Hon. Treasurer.
Hon. Secretary.

MANCHESTER SOUTHERN CLUB.—Gentlemen desirous of Enrolling themselves as members of the above Club can obtain their cards on application at the office, 71A, Market-street, from nine to six daily, or by letter directed as above.—By order of the Committee, W. E. STUTTER, Hon. Sec.

JAMES J. BENNETT & WAKE,
Steam-Ship Insurance and General Commission Agents,
77, Cornhill, London,
and JAMES J. BENNETT, Matamoros.

NEW LINE OF STEAM PACKETS

LIVERPOOL, ST. THOMAS, LA GUAYRA, PTO. CABELLO, CURACAO, SANTA MARTHA, CARTHAGENA TO COLON, RETURNING FROM THAT PORT BY KINGSTON (JAMAICA), PORT-AU-PRINCE, CAPE HAITIEN TO LIVERPOOL.

The Liverpool, Western and Spanish-American Steam Packet Company

WILL commence running powerful A 1 Screw Steamboats from this port on the 20th June next, to be at Colon in time to take the Goods and Passengers brought to Panama by the Steamers from the North and South Pacific, and to Colon, about the 21st July, continuing the same dates monthly. The Steamboats are:—

The CHRISTOBAL COLON, 1,572 tons, W. Baker, Commander, to sail from Liverpool, .. 20th June
The SAINT THOMAS, 1,210 tons, W. Gilberry, Commander .. 20th July
The BOLIVAR, 1,239 tons, W. W. Kiddler .. 20th Aug.
The HUMBOLDT (building), 1,400 tons

Goods and Passengers will be taken, if required, at through rates from the Continent, via Liverpool, over the Panama Railway to Ports in the Pacific, and also back from those Ports by same route. The CHRISTOBAL COLON has very spacious and well-ventilated berths and saloon, which will afford every comfort to Passengers. The Rates for First and Second-class Passage will be moderate.

JMRE & TOMLINSON, ALEXANDER DURANTY & Co. Liverpool, May 1, 1863.

WEST INDIES. — LIVERPOOL, WEST INDIAN, AND CENTRAL AMERICAN STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.

For SAINT THOMAS, PORT-AU-PRINCE (HAYTI), KINGSTON (JAMAICA), SANTA MARTHA, CARTHAGENA, AND COLON OR ASPINWALL.

Taking Goods at through rates for Panama and Ports in the North and South Pacific (in connection with the Panama Railroad, the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company).

The following line new A 1 full powered Steamers will sail from LIVERPOOL on the 21st of each month, receiving goods up to the 19th of each month.

DARIEN .. .. 1,172 tons.
VENEZUELAN .. .. 1,000 "
GRANADIAN .. .. 1,100 "
MEXICAN (now building), 1,100 "

In consequence of the VENEZUELAN not being quite completed, the first-class Screw-steamer SHAFESBURY, Captain VICKERMAN,

Will be despatched for the above Ports on the 21st May, taking goods until the 19th May. Goods taken at through freights from the Continent.

For rates of freights or passage, having superior accommodation for passengers, apply to M. CURRIE, Paris and Havre; GLAFCKE and HERTING, Hamburg; LAFITTE and VANDERCRUYCE, Bordeaux; W. D. ROBERTS and Co., Glasgow; or to LEECH, HARRISON, & FORWOOD, Agents, Liverpool.

THE PATENT FILE MACHINE, AND FILE MANUFACTURING COMPANY, (LIMITED). Makers of every description of Steel and Files suitable for Engineers, Machinists, Agricultural Implement Makers, and for the general and export trade. Works,—Ashton Old-road, Manchester.

AMERICAN WINES AND SPIRITS, &c.

W. R. S. MARKWELL,

WINE MERCHANT TO HER MAJESTY AND THE IMPERIAL COURTS,

35, 40, & 45, ALBEMARLE STREET,

AND

4, STAFFORD STREET, PICCADILLY, LONDON, W.

Monagahela, Bourbon, and Old Dominion Whiskies; Peach Brandy; Staughton, Sickles, and other Bitters; Fruit Spirits; Sparkling and dry Catawba; Californian Champagne; all kinds of Continental Wines, including the original importations from Hungary.

The Stock of Wines, Spirits, and Liqueurs are of the oldest, most extensive, and best selected in England.

TERMS, CASH!

ACCOUNT BOOKS, &c.,

Of all Rulings, ready in Stock, or made to any Pattern on the Premises.

LITHOGRAPHIC AND COPPER-PLATE. STATIONERY CASES AND STATION-ERY CABINETS in great variety. —Circulars printed on the Shortest Notice; all kinds of Copper-Plate Printing with economy and despatch. DRAWING AND TRACING-PAPERS.—Whatman's Superfine Quality, all sizes. Superior Tracing and India Papers.

CARD-PLATES.—Engraved in various styles with despatch. 2s. each. GOLD PENS, &c.—Gold Pens of Superfine finish, various degrees, 5s. each.

LETTER-PRESS.—Letter-Press work of every description: Circulars, Catalogues, Share-Plates, &c. NEWSPAPER ENVELOPES.—A New and Useful Article, ready for use, four dozen for 6d. SOLICITORS.—Draft, from 7s. a ream; Lined Brief, 17s. 6d. a ream.

NOTE-PAPER.—Embossed die, Plain, and Colours, with Crest and Initials, and Printed Address, without charging for Dies or Plates. ENVELOPES, &c.—Of every quality, as low as any house in the Trade.

All Articles being prepared on the Premises can be ensured with despatch and economy at Wholesale and Shipping Prices.

F. ARNOLD, MANUFACTURING STATIONER, ETC., 86, FLEET STREET, E.C. (CORNER OF ST. BRIDE'S AVENUE.)

VINS SUPERIEURS DE CHAMPAGNE.

DINET-PEUVREL ET FILS,

PROPRIETAIRES ET NEGOCIANTS,

A A V I Z E, M A R N E,

EXECUTE ORDERS FOR ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

Please send References with Order.

PARIS EXHIBITION, 1855.

LA GRANDE MEDAILLE D'HONNEUR

WAS AWARDED TO

THOMAS DE LA RUE & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

PATENT PLAYING CARDS. PATENT METALLIC BOOKS; WITH

HARD ELECTRO-GILT PENCILS which NEVER THICKEN AT THE POINT.

INDIA INLAND NOTE OR CHIT PAPERS, for Half Anna Postage Rate.

WATER-LINED OVERLAND NOTE PAPERS, in great variety.

MACHINE-FOLDED ENVELOPES. PATENT METAL SLATES.

POCKET TOURISTS' CASES.—Size, 5½ in. by 3¼ in. by 1½ in. with every requisite for Correspondence.

ALLIANCE DESPATCH DESKS.—The most perfect Despatch Desk yet made.

DE LA RUE & CO.'S INDELIBLE DIARIES.—Published annually for exportation in August.

WALLETS, ALBUMS, SCRAP BOOKS, &c., &c.

The above can be obtained through any Stationer or Merchant.

REID AND STEWART,

Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

Represented by ANDREW STEWART, 1, RUMFOLD-PLACE, Liverpool.

C. W. WHITE,

Ship and General Commission Agent, ST. THOMAS, WEST INDIES.

HARPER AND CAUGHEY,

Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

Represented by J. and A. CAUGHEY, Tempest Chambers, Liverpool.

H. O. BREWER & CO.,

MOBILE, ALABAMA, General Commission and Shipping Merchants.

ADDRESS TO CHRISTIANS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

By the CLERGY of the CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA
London: James Nisbet and Co., 21, BERNERS-STREET, Oxford-street.

18mo., cloth, extra gilt edges, price 1s.

BEN RHYDDING, THE ASCLE-PION OF ENGLAND: its Beauties, its Ways, and its Water Cure. By the Rev. R. W. THOMSON. With Map of the Railway Routes to Ben Rhydding. Third Edition.

T. NELSON and SONS, London and Edinburgh. To be had, free by post for 13 stamps, of SHUTTLE-WORTH, Bookseller, Ilkley.

The Index.

A WEEKLY JOURNAL OF POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND NEWS.

Devoted to the Exposition of the Mutual Interests, Political and Commercial, of Great Britain and the Confederate States of America.

Published every Thursday Afternoon.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

Subscription, Twenty-six Shillings per annum. Stamped, Thirty Shillings per annum.

Nos. I. to LXV. NOW READY.

THE INDEX

CONTAINS

Private Letters from the Southern and Northern States.

Latest Direct Intelligence from the South.

Leaders on Topics of Interest.

Reviews of Books. Magazine Articles.

The Cotton and Dry Goods Market.

Confederate State Papers.

Gleanings from the Northern and Southern Press.

Foreign Correspondence.

Southern Statistics, &c., &c.

THE INDEX has already obtained an extensive and still rapidly increasing circulation in Great Britain, the Continent, the West Indies, and the Northern and Southern States of America. It goes into the hands of all who, through business interests, political pursuits, or personal sympathy, are concerned in the great Transatlantic questions now in process of solution.

The Second Half-Yearly Volume

OF THE INDEX,

Is Now Ready, Price £1 1s.

Subscriptions and Advertisements to be sent, and Post-office Orders made payable to

J. B. HOPKINS, 13, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Printed for the Proprietors by HENRY FLORENCE MACKINTOSH, of 11, Crane-court, Fleet-street in the Parish of St. Dunstan, in the City of London; and published by him at THE INDEX Office, 13, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London.—Thursday, July 23rd, 1863.

THE INDEX

A WEEKLY JOURNAL OF POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND NEWS.

VOL. III—No. 66.]

LONDON—THURSDAY EVENING, JULY 30, 1863.

[PRICE 6D.

CONTENTS.

NOTES ON EVENTS OF THE WEEK AT HOME AND ABROAD.
PARIS TOPICS.

THE ENGLISH PRESS ON THE LATE FEDERAL SUCCESSES.

THE LOSSES ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

THE FRUITS OF MASTERLY INACTIVITY.

THE NEW YORK RIOTS.

THE SESSION.

MR. CORDEN ON THE ALABAMA.

NEW ORLEANS CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTES ON EVENTS OF THE WEEK.

AMERICA.

GENERAL LEE has recrossed the Potomac, and another exciting act in the great drama is concluded. Putting aside the surmises of the Federals and those of Europe, founded on Northern reports, as to the intentions of the Confederate commander, and looking only to the conduct and the results of the expedition, the inevitable verdict given on such data must be to pronounce it substantially a success. Hitherto at all events in the history of war, to invade an enemy's country, to fight a series of battles, and to return home unmolested and laden with an imperial booty, has been regarded as a genuine triumph. If General Lee was bent upon taking Philadelphia or Washington, unquestionably he failed in his main object, and it remains an inscrutable mystery why he devoted so much energy and time to collecting stores, if his plan was to capture either of those cities. On the contrary, if his purpose was a gigantic forage, then—although the Northern Government may be properly jubilant that he did not bring upon them all the disasters they dreaded, and although Europe may be justly and bitterly disappointed that he did not gain a victory which would probably have proved the Waterloo of the war,—it is absurd to say that the second invasion of the North was a failure. A glance at the three weeks' campaign in Pennsylvania, even if it does not solve the problem of General Lee's plan, will disclose the true value of Northern boastings. Unfortunately, only a few of the main incidents, and scarcely any of the circumstances connected with it, are, in the absence of Southern accounts, known in this country. It is, for example, doubtful what Confederate force invaded the North, and there is at present no means of ascertaining what portion of that army took part in the battle of Gettysburg. Sufficient, however, has transpired to enable an unbiassed person to form a lucid and satisfactory judgment.

On the 21st June General Lee issued an order to his army which, if carefully studied, throws much light on subsequent events. In the preamble of this document we read:—"While in the enemy's country, the following regulations for securing supplies will be strictly observed, and any violation of them promptly and rigorously punished." Then follow six ordinances for the protection of private property from pillage; for the levying of contributions by the chiefs of the Commissary, Quartermaster, Ordnance, and Medical departments; for payment of the goods taken, or for giving receipts to those who decline payment; and for the seizure of property necessary for the use of the army, if the owner thereof should attempt to remove or conceal it, but even in such cases, "the kind, quantity, and market price of the property so seized, and the name of the owner" were to be forthwith reported. This order, which was extensively published in Maryland and Pennsylvania, does not contain a syllable about conquest; not a word to foster or excite the martial ardour of the troops, but rather at the outset implies a brief occupation of the enemy's territory, and is altogether the most curious address ever written by a commander about to essay the capture of an hostile Capitol. If the motive of the Northward advance was to gather supplies, then it was manifestly a sagacious and, as we shall immediately observe, an eminently well-timed and effective instrument.

The contradictory telegrams transmitted to Europe; the agitation of the Washington Government, which induced it to change its general in the face of the foe, and the large area that was panic-stricken; portray very graphically the operations of the invader. So far from concentrating his strength to take one of the cities supposed to be in danger, General Lee spread out his army like a fan, and simultaneously Hooker was anxiously protecting Washington, Baltimore was rejoicing in the prospect of deliverance, and the people of Philadelphia who have got rich honestly or otherwise, were sending their valuables to New York. The most inconsistent rumours were rife as to which of the capitals would be visited by the Southern army, but all agreed that a swoop was intended to be made upon one of the three. Was this a correct assumption? What would have been the result of a complete victory at Gettysburg it would be ridiculous to discuss; but the question is, did General Lee, previous to that battle, aim at taking one of the three capitals? We learn from Northern as well as Southern sources, that from the time he set foot on Northern territory, until he met the enemy—about a week—he had gleaned a stupendous amount of stores—enough, indeed, to relieve the Confederacy for months to come of the burden of maintaining his army. The theory of an intended swoop on Washington, or Philadelphia, or on Baltimore, is utterly incompatible with this undisputed fact of the collection of supplies.

Of the battles of Gettysburg we yet know nothing, except as to the consequences. On the 1st and 2nd of July, the Confederates had the advantage, and if General Lee's force had been as large as Northern panic-mongers represented it, and if it had been nearly all available for these engagements, the South would have gained a decided victory. On the third day, the Federals claim a triumph. A Southern narrative might tell a different tale; but subsequent events prove that it was, at least, for the Federals, a drawn battle, from which their enemy reaped an important advantage. Lee retreated leisurely—if an army laden with spoils, and retiring unmolested can be said to be retreating—and finally took up a position where he could superintend and protect the transportation of his booty into Virginia. After an interval, General Meade followed, and on the 10th of the month again confronted his enemy. It is not surprising the North should have deemed a battle imminent. General Lee thought so, for on the 11th he issued an address to his troops, and told them, "Once more you are called upon to meet the enemy from whom you have won, on so many fields, a name that will never die." And if Meade had had a chance of success, the situation of the Southern commander would have been highly critical. The greater part of his immense booty was still north of the Potomac, and a defeat with that river in his rear, would have been an almost irreparable disaster. But General Meade was too prudent to jeopardise his newly won laurels on a forlorn hope. On the 13th, when the last supply trains were crossing the river, it was thought in Washington and New York that a battle was progressing; but again the Northern prophets were wrong, and the Confederate General did not elect to fight on the field chosen by the foe. General Lee speedily followed his supply trains. On the afternoon of the 14th, General Meade informed General Halleck that he had captured 1,500 infantry, and that "the enemy are all across the Potomac." The World says: "The entire rebel army have succeeded in crossing into Virginia, much to the surprise of every one in and out of the army." No doubt the surprise was great, for even on the 14th, the Tribune exulted over the rise of the Potomac, and observed: "We interpret the protracted delay of General Meade to mean that he is sure the rebels are within his grasp." The Northern exultation was unwarranted.

Very little has been said about the return of General Dix to Fortress Monroe. It will be remembered that whilst that General was in Virginia there were shoals of confident predictions that he would take Richmond in its undefended state. Dix found that the Confederate Capital was far from being undefended, and he fell back from necessity—not from choice. Despite the reticence of the Federal press, we happen to know that a large number of wounded from Dix's army has arrived at the North. As a reward for distinguished services General Dix has superseded General Wool in New York.

After a siege of forty-eight days Vicksburg surrendered. Though it will, doubtless, cause painful regrets in the South, it will not be a surprise there as it is here. For a fortnight before the event, the tone of the Southern press betrayed deep anxiety; and this was much increased by the silence of the Government. General Grant had so completely cut off communication that until the surrender, the news of the Northern invasion had not reached Vicksburg. The immediate cause of the capitulation was the exhaustion of ammunition, the want of food, and the uselessness of subjecting the citizens and soldiers, under such circumstances, to a threatened bombardment on the 4th of July. So, on the 3rd, General Pemberton proposed terms. Grant demanded an unconditional surrender, but ultimately agreed to conditions that do not detract from the completeness of his victory, while they show him to be possessed of what the Anglo-Federal faction is totally devoid of—the instincts of a gentleman. All things being arranged, Grant appointed the 4th July to take possession of the city, and when he did so he saw abundant evidence of that endurance which is the sure bulwark of a nation's freedom. The accounts that have been published forcibly recall to mind Mr. Motley's narrative of the sieges sustained by the Netherlands when they were defending their liberties against the tyrant of Spain. The houses were thoroughly riddled with shot and shell. During the whole of the siege the citizens never slept in their houses, but men, women, and children were huddled in caves dug in the bluff. The nominal price of provisions was 10 per lb. for flour; bacon 5 per lb.; and mule flesh 4 per lb.; but before the termination of the siege neither flour nor bacon could be procured, and mule flesh only in limited quantity. The Vicksburg Citizen—a small sheet printed on the blank side of wall paper—informed those who were fortunate enough to have corn, that they could grind it free of charge at the residence of Mr. Shannon; and a citizen, Mr. J. Kiser, gave a portion of his corn to families who were starving. The offer of the commissariat was eagerly devoured by the famished citizens. Nearly six thousand persons were in hospital, without proper food and without medicines. The streets were paraded by little children terrified by the scene of death and destruction, and crying for bread. Yet there was nothing like despondency. Of the spirit that animated the garrison we may form an opinion from the subjoined account, taken from the Vicksburg Citizen:—

Resolved, That we, the "Soldiers' Christian Association," of the Fifty-second Georgia Regiment, set apart all or a portion of the hour between sundown and dark, of each day, to supplicate Almighty God, that He will pardon our sins, receive us graciously, and deliver us from the hands of our cruel enemies, and that we solicit all Christians and soldiers throughout this beleaguered army to unite with us in prayer at that hour.

GEORGE T. QUILLIAN, President.
W. A. PARKS, Secretary.

To the last the citizens and garrison were opposed to surrender. But General Pemberton could do nothing by holding out any longer. By capitulating, the garrison is paroled, and as the balance of exchange of prisoners is in favour of the South, they will be available for active service.

The number of the garrison which surrendered is variously estimated at from 12,000 to 20,000. The North has had to pay a heavy price for victory. From first to last Grant has lost about 45,000 men. Altogether the siege of Vicksburg will be a conspicuous event in the great war of Independence.

As might have been anticipated, the fall of Vicksburg caused that of Port Hudson, which stronghold surrendered on the 8th or 9th inst. It is reported that there was a scarcity of provisions, but nothing like famine. According to Northern accounts, the garrison numbered 7,000, and the Federal booty consisted of 35 field-pieces, 25 siege guns, and 10,000 stand of small arms. Thus the garrisons of Vicksburg and Port Hudson were, together, not more than 20,000 or 25,000 men, and the combined forces of Grant and Banks, after their heavy losses, are more than 100,000 strong. It is not to be denied that the fall of these places is a matter of regret to the Confederacy, but it will not result in giving the Federals the free navigation of the Mississippi. Our New Orleans correspondent, writing on the 4th July, observes,—"Port Hudson may fall, Vicksburg may be reduced, but the river is not safely navigable so long as there is an opportunity to plant a battery on either shore between St. Louis and New Orleans. There is but one thing can open the Mississippi—and that is Peace."

Gold is falling, and for the first time since the commencement of the war the Federal Government is able to report and authenticate a series of successes. Yet New York is not in holiday mood. Hitherto she has escaped the horrors of the foreign war which she so largely supports; but she has had a taste of the miseries entailed by civil warfare. If the war against the South is to be carried on, the Washington Government must have more men to supply the continued and heavy drain caused by battle, disease, capture, and desertion. The most favourable moment, the moment of victory was seized for the enforcement of the draft, and the people were assured that the fight was over, that they were only conscripted for effect. This skilful management was of no avail. The draft has been resisted in various places, including Boston; and in New York there has been rioting on an insurrectionary scale.

The drafting began in New York on Saturday, the 11th. On Sunday the names of the conscripted were published; and on Monday the rioters set to work. It is impossible to give a summary of the proceedings. The New York World devotes nearly two pages of small print to an account of the riots on the 13th and 14th. The drafting office was gutted and burnt; the flames spread to the adjoining houses, and the whole block on the Third Avenue was destroyed, as the firemen refused to play on the fire. The telegraph wires were cut, and the mob then came into collision with the police and soldiers, several of whom were killed. During the 13th many buildings were destroyed, including the Armoury in Twenty-first Street, the Coloured Orphan Asylum, and the negro houses. The Provost Guard was assaulted and brutally ill-used. The Tribune office was attacked. Every negro in the streets was assaulted, and fifty killed in the course of the day. "One negro was hung, and a fire lighted under his body, burning it to a cinder." Alas for the poor negro in the North! At night the sky was illumined with the glare of incendiary fires.

The next day the riot continued, and was not confined to one part of the city. The stores were closed, and the public conveyances ceased running. A number of houses were burnt. Colonel O'Brien was hung to a lamp-post. There were many encounters between the rioters and the military, and several lives were lost on either side. The New York papers give no estimates of the casualties, but they must have been heavy. Governor Seymour declared the city and county of New York in a state of insurrection, and endeavoured to appease the people by a promise of procuring the postponement of the draft. The Common Council passed an order appropriating $2,500,000 to the payment of the $300 each for those who were not able to pay for their own exemption. Every effort was made to organize a defence for the city. Still the riots continued during the day and night, and spread to Brooklyn and Staten Island.

On the 15th, the disturbances were not over, and great excitement was caused by the announcement that some troops were expected.

The following notice was placarded about the city:—

New York, July 18, 1863.

A meeting is requested by a number of returned volunteers, and all volunteers wishing to participate in resisting the invasion of Massachusetts troops in our city and the outrages that have been committed on our wives and families. All wishing to participate will meet at 1 o'clock P.M., cor 16 street, and 1st avenue.

At the request of a committee of returned volunteers.

In the evening, although there had been fighting all day, and much loss of life and destruction of property, it was announced in time for the European mail, that "the city is generally much quieter to-day, though the riot is not yet entirely quelled."

Later news per Hibernia tells us, however, that the rioting continued with great fury on the 16th. On the evening of that day an obstinate battle took place between the rioters and the military, in which eleven of the former and fifteen of the latter were killed. About the same time the Armory in Cooper-street was attacked, and the mob was fired upon by a 6-pounder, loaded with canister. On the evening of the 17th, the depot and water station on Staten Island were destroyed, the negro shanties burnt, and 100 negroes killed. Just before the mail left, the evening of the 17th—when the rioting continued—it was officially announced that the Government will sustain the draft with military force. It remains to be seen whether this will awe or enrage the populace. Being at a safe distance from the insurrection, Mr. Lincoln and his Cabinet are not afraid to act boldly.

General Wool, who has now been succeeded by General Dix, made a call by a proclamation, in which he says, "The veterans who have recently returned from the field of battle have again an opportunity of serving not only their country, but the great emporium of New York." The veterans evidently think they have done enough for their country in the way of fighting, and decline the invitation. The veterans from the field have done much to disgust the public with the war, and to foment the opposition to the draft.

Archbishop Hughes has addressed a concourse of people. He referred to the rioting in mild terms, but abused England with all the venom of his nature. However, if it pleases His Grace, we have no objection, as it certainly does not hurt us.

Rioting and resistance to the draft is not confined to New York. At Hartford, at Newark, at Boston, as well as in the north-west, the draft has been forcibly resisted. A correspondent of the New York World writing from Rye on the 14th, says:—

The news of the riot in New York reached here yesterday P.M., and created intense excitement. The labouring classes, of whom there is a large number, were fairly mad with delight over the intelligence, and openly declared that any provost marshal or other person showing himself there for the purpose of drafting, would be quartered without mercy. Firearms were brought out and fired off during the evening, to show that the labouring classes were fully prepared for the emergency. These men are mostly Irish, and their hatred of the war and those conducting it is beyond expression. When the enrolling officer came around to enroll the names, his mission was almost a failure, as it was found impossible to get the men to furnish their names, or, in fact, to speak at all except in the way of threat. An attempt was made last week to fill out a company to go out for the defence of Maryland against Lee, but it had to be abandoned, as threats were made to blow out the brains of the officers if they dared carry off a man.

Perhaps by this time Mr. Seward has learnt the difference between a foreign war and a partial insurrection.

In the midst of the rioting, the papers are at open war with each other. The World, not by any means the most violent of the journals, referring to an article in the Evening Post, says the conductors of that paper "make a statement which, were it made of one man by another by word of mouth in private life, would simply be driven down the maker's throat." Since then we hear, per city of Washington, that "the Republic and Democratic factions are becoming more vituperative in their mutual abuse. This course is inflaming the public mind, and adding to the danger."

Charleston is again to be assailed. General Gilmer has captured Morris Island, except the strongest part, which includes Fort Wagner and the Cumming's Point battery. Five ironclads and fifteen gunboats are reported off Fort Sumter; and ten gunboats, one forty gun frigate, and the Ironsides were reported to be passing the bar on the 12th. The preparations are formidable, but so are the defences; and we can see no reason to fear that Charleston will fall into the hands of her bitter enemy.

General Morgan has taken Jackson, in Ohio, and advanced to within thirty-five miles of Cincinnati. He is reported to be hemmed in by the Federals, but he has a genius for cutting his way through an enemy's lines, which will, we trust, be effective in the present instance.

In our New Orleans correspondence will be found an interesting account of the movements in the Gulf, and of the capture of Brashear City. "The Louisville Democrat says the last official advices state that Generals Taylor, Morton, and Green surprised the Union fortifications at Brashear City on the 27th of June, and captured 1,800 prisoners, including thirty-three officers, also $3,000,000 worth of the commissary and $1,500,000 worth of quartermasters' stores, $250,000 of ordnance, and $100,000 of medical stores; also twenty-three garrison and regimental flags, 10,000 tents, 2,000 horses and mules, 7,000 negroes, 7,000 stand small arms, sixteen siege guns, and a position as important as Port Hudson or Vicksburg. Other important movements by General Taylor are progressing." The New York press is so much occupied with their own successes that they forget to chronicle those of the Confederates.

The Richmond Examiner denies that Vice-President Stephens went on a mission to the North. Another version of the affair is that he went to propose that the war should be conducted on civilized principles, so as to prevent the necessity of Southern retaliation. If so, we can well understand that the Lincoln Cabinet would not listen to the overtures of Mr. Stephens.

Amongst the stores captured at Winchester was a supply of medicines sufficient to last the army of General Lee for six months.

General Pope is again making himself notorious, and Butler must look to his laurels. Governor Ramsay, in his department, has organised a volunteer corps to serve against the Indians. In the order directing the organization occurs the following:—

A compensation of twenty-five dollars will also be given to anybody for each scalp of a male Sioux, delivered at this (the adjutant-general's) office.

On the 7th of July the Sheriff of McLeod county received twenty-five dollars for the scalp of a Sioux warrior, killed on the 4th of July, near the town of Hutchinson. The Indian shot was one of a party of fourteen, and when killed was engaged in picking berries. The winner of the first bounty, Harper by name, though pursued by the remaining Indians, made his escape, obtained the aid of his neighbours, returned, and then secured the indisputable evidence of State indebtedness. The Chicago Times publishes a despatch from St. Paul, Minnesota, which thus refers to the affair:—

An order from the adjutant-general's office is issued, calling for scouts to volunteer for sixty days, in squads of not less than five to scour the big woods and kill Indians wherever they can find them, without regard to red tape or tactics. The order says: "A compensation of twenty-five dollars will be given to any person for each scalp of a male Sioux delivered to this office." The scalp mentioned in yesterday's despatch was delivered according to order, and the twenty-five dollars paid over. Some squeamish stomachs seem disposed to revolt at this savage mode of warfare being adopted by a Christian people, but are restrained from uttering any complaints for fear of being charged as Sioux sympathizers. Whatever is wrong about it, they conclude to indorse, till the war is over, for fear of embarrassing the Administration or discouraging enlistments.

The New York World condemns these proceedings, and says:—

If, after a savage butchery by the Indians, the people should rise in their wrath and kill all the supposed culprits without the usual legal formulas, there would be some excuse for the injured Minnesotans; but the above order is a very different affair. The atrocities complained of occurred months since, and the savages considered the most guilty have suffered the extreme penalty of the law. To further punish the Indians a military expedition has been fitted out, and they will in time be conquered by legitimate means. But, pending these military movements, here is an order issued under the sanction of the authorities which would put the King of Dahomey to shame. It is unpeppably disgraceful to General Pope, and will fill to the brim the measure of contempt felt for him all over the country. Our Government is disgraced before Christendom for every hour this Sioux is kept in its service.

The Anglo-Federals will be disgusted with the World for finding fault with the conduct of General Pope, the protégé of New England.

The Richmond Sentinel says:—"The military spirit seems to have infused itself through all classes of the community, and young and old have shouldered their muskets and await the summons to the field. In accordance with the official order promulgated on Saturday, the various places of business were closed at three o'clock yesterday afternoon, and the "second class" wended their way to their several places of rendezvous, there to be instructed in the art of war. The alacrity with which the citizens have responded to the call of the authorities is worthy of all praise."

The Buffalo Commercial Advertiser of July 7, gives an account of the riots in that city, brought about by the antipathy to the negroes. The negroes were rescued from the mob after being dreadfully beaten and lodged in the gaol for safety. Some did not escape, with life. An attack was made on the negroes who were on the vessels lying at the wharf. A coloured man, named Williams, on the Mary Stuart, almost frantic with terror, endeavoured to escape by sliding down one of the fenders to the water, intending to swim across the creek. But his pursuers were too quick for him, and as the poor, doomed creature was clinging to the fender, pleading piteously for mercy, they kicked and beat him about the head and face, compelling him to loose his hold, and he sank and was drowned,

Another man was driven off the propeller Tonawanda into the creek, and is supposed to have been drowned. Two negroes were concealed by the engineer of the Mary Stuart under the boiler, and after the boat left the dock were taken ashore near the light-house by the officers, and safely lodged in the station-house. The place of their confinement was so contracted and close that when released they were well nigh suffocated.

The New York World thus comments on Mr. Lincoln's body guard:—"It is lamentably true that the President has fallen into the habit of riding about Washington under an armed escort of cavalry. His carriage is constantly preceded and followed by a force of horsemen large enough to attract attention even in a military European capital, and much larger than the average body-guard of a commanding general actually in the field. Of course the object of this escort is not pomp, but personal safety."

In the course of his 4th July speech, Mr. Seward said:—

For myself, this is my resolution. If the people of the United States have virtue enough to save the Union, I shall have their virtue. If they have not, then it shall be my reward that my virtue excelled that of my countrymen. If I fall here let no kinsman or friend remove my dust to a more hospitable grave. Let it be buried under the pavements of the avenue, and let the chariot wheels of those who have destroyed the liberties of my country rattle over my bones until a more heroic and worthy generation shall recall that country to life, liberty, and independence. This shall be my only reward, living or dying, for whatever I may be able to do for the deliverance of my country from danger, so, on the other hand, that country may visit me with whatever censure or reproach for shortcomings that may seem to it just, but the world shall never hear a word of complaint issue from my lips. This is my resolution.

If this outburst of maudlin oratory means anything, it is that Mr. Seward thinks the proper reward of his patriotism is to bury him like a dog. We dare say the majority of his countrymen will agree with him in the estimate of his deserts.

ENGLAND.

A meeting has been held at St. James's Hall pursuant to advertisement, to support the cause of Poland. The chair was taken by Sir John V. Shelley, M.P.; and Lord Raynham, M.P., was present. Some few noblemen and gentlemen preferred to send letters of apology for their absence. The chairman's speech unhesitatingly proposed an immediate war with Russia, ridiculed the feeble efforts of diplomacy displayed by the Government, and expressed a conviction that the majority of Englishmen would eagerly support Lord Palmerston in the adoption of ulterior measures. War was admitted to be a calamity, but dishonour was proclaimed a greater, and our Ministers were urged to resent the insults offered, to overlook the miseries of war, and to maintain the position of England as a first-rate Power. The whole address, the more salient and extravagant parts of which were received with loud applause, bore a singular resemblance to the articles which have appeared in the Siccle and the Opinion Nationale. The most important resolution declared that the Poles were entitled to the warm and active affection and support of every free people, while the atrocious conduct of Russia was an insult to Christendom, and an outrage on humanity. This terrific manifesto was proposed by a Mr. Beales, and seconded by a very respectable shoemaker, and was, of course, adopted. A deputation was also appointed to wait on Earl Russell, and urge upon him the duty of armed intervention. A few French mechanics were introduced by the chairman as a French deputation. These individuals bowed their respects to the meeting with national politeness, but being dumb as death they seemed to throw little light either on the general question or on the place from which they came, or the persons whom they were supposed to represent.

The deputation to Earl Russell met, however, with an unexpected and insurmountable obstacle in the refusal of the noble lord to receive them, and the refusal was rendered the more bitter by the fact that no reason was vouchsafed for the denial.

Of the aggregate population of the twenty-one Unions chiefly affected by the cotton famine, and numbering 2,060,000 persons, the number in receipt of relief in the second week of July was 156,300, and the net increase in the pauperism in the 32 weeks ending in the third week of July was 125,270 persons. At the present time, the amount of pauperism is more than double the usual amount in times of prosperity. The Mansion House Committee still has £74,174 in hand, and last week made grants amounting in all to £1,590.

Messrs. Peter Goudet and Co., the makers of the plates for the frigate La Gloire, are now delivering 200 tons of armour-plates of 4½ and 5½ inches at from £45 to £59 a ton at Portsmouth Dockyard. Those plates displayed in the trials of defensive armour a marvellous degree of resisting power to the sixty-eight lbs. solid shot at close ranges. They present a rough and unfinished exterior, contrasting remarkably with the polished surfaces supplied by English makers. The process of trimming the plates seems to result in weakening them, but the Admiralty, for inscrutable reasons, buy rough work of the French, and polished shields of the English manufacturers.

The Marquis of Normandy died on Tuesday last, at the age of sixty-six years. He was educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge, and entered the House of Commons in 1818 as an advanced Whig. He succeeded to the peerage in 1831 as Earl of Mulgrave, and successively filled the offices of Governor of Jamaica, Lord Privy Seal, and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. He was Secretary to the Colonies in 1839 under Lord Melbourne, and afterwards went to the Home-office. In 1846 he went as Ambassador to Paris, and there remained till 1852. In 1854 he was appointed to the Legation at Florence, and supported the Austrian influence in Italy. He was recalled by the Earl of Malmesbury, and since that time has been chiefly conspicuous for his unvaried efforts in favour of the expelled dynasties of Italy. For this at least disinterested course of conduct he has been most violently assailed both in Parliament and the press. He was advanced to the Marquisate in 1846, and made a Knight of the Garter a few years since. He was a man chiefly remarkable for his social qualities, and owed much of his success to the amiability of his disposition and the charm of his character.

Mr. Monckton Milnes has been raised to the Peerage, with the title of Baron Houghton, and has issued his farewell address to his constituents of Pontefract, which Borough he represented in the House of Commons for twenty-five years. He is a man of wealth, of some literary reputation, and possessed of considerable knowledge on political and social questions. He has given an independent support to Lord Palmerston's policy.

The hero of the German Legion, General Sir Hugh Halkett, C.B., G.C.H., has died, at the age of eighty years. His first commission, in the Dutch Brigade, bore date April 18, 1794. He served in India and, in 1803, entered the King's German Legion. In 1805 he served in Hanover, and next in the Baltic expedition, and afterwards was present at Corunna. He also took part in the wretched affair of Walcheren. Subsequently he went to Spain, and was with Alten's Germans at Albuera, and remained with the Duke to the close of the campaign in 1812. In May, 1813, he joined the force under Walmoden, and distinguished himself in the fight at Gohode, at the head of the First Hanoverian Brigade, and afterwards in conjunction with the Swedes under Bernadotte. He commanded the same brigade at Waterloo, and with his own hand captured Cambronne at the head of the Old Guard on the extreme left of the French position; after the war he entered the Hanoverian Service, and was made General in command of that army. He retired from the service a few years since, but continued to live in Hanover.

Another hero, General Lord Downes, G.C.B., has also died. He served as aide-de-camp to Sir John Cradock in Portugal, and was assistant military secretary to the Duke in the Peninsular War, at which time he was known as Sir Ulysses Burgh. He was present at Talavera, Busaco, Salamanca, Vittoria, Toulouse, and in many minor engagements, and also at the sieges of Badajoz, Ciudad Rodrigo, and San Sebastian, and was twice wounded. He succeeded to the peerage in 1826, and was seventy-five years of age at the time of his death. He was Colonel of the 29th Regiment.

A somewhat extraordinary appeal to public generosity has appeared in the Times, on behalf of Lieutenant James M. Goodill, formerly of the 31st Regiment, and now in somewhat straitened circumstances, with a wife to share his scanty pension. It seems that this gallant officer, now seventy-six years of age, volunteered in 1809, and joined the army in Spain under the Duke of Wellington. He was in the forlorn hope at the assault of Badajoz, where, being one of the first up the ladders he was thrust down by a bayonet wound. In the course of the campaign he won nine claps to his medal. After the war he accepted a situation in the Irish Revenue Police, and at the end of twenty-two years' service there, he was reduced to his small pension, and his earnings as a contributor to agricultural journals.

Evidently we are beginning to discover that the best portion of our population is not embraced within the criminal class. Extraordinary disclosures have been made by the report of the Lords' Committee on prison discipline, and these disclosures are accompanied with wholesome recommendations. It is found, in the first place, that the great object of the authorities of each gaol in England has been to set up a system as widely different as possible from that pursued in any other gaol. Here the old tread-wheel and oakum-picking exist as at the commencement of the century; elsewhere industrial occupations, whatever they may be, prevail; in another prison "self-instruction" is used as the great instrument of discipline, labour being considered, we suppose, an operation tending to lower the tastes of the convict mind. We hear of prisons where ten hours a night is thought a reasonable quantity of sleep, and where even a popular novel may be discovered in a cell. The same absurdities exist in the matter of diet, for the quantities of food vary in the ratio of three to one. The humanitarians, with the help of the novelists, have done us grievous wrong; we are no longer willing to be told by Mr. Perry and the official inspectors, that moral reformation is everything, and that punishment is a mistake. The committee recommend uniformity, which, at least, on the principle of fair-play is desirable, and wish to develop the penal element of prison discipline. The separate system is to be largely practised, and hard labour is to precede industrial employment in the career of each prisoner. Corporal punishment is evidently looking up after its heavy fall; and great value is attributed to it by the Committee as a method of disciplinary correction. Our appreciation of these salutary changes is quickened by the fact that, to the knowledge of the police, there are 4,379 discharged convicts residing in England; and many more unknown to the police. In fact, no less than 11,000 convicts have been discharged within the last six years.

A short time since the House of Commons in their zeal for Reform bethought themselves that the kitchen and refreshment rooms attached to the House were unequal to the situation, and were a fit subject for the inquiring labours of a select committee. The report of this body has now appeared, and the particulars thereof are somewhat curious. The first impression that strikes the reader is the great advance in luxurious exigencies made by the Reformed Parliament. Previously to 1832 cold meat and salad, with the alternative of hot steaks and chops, cooked in the room, were considered sufficient; but we are naively told by the report that the then contractor derived his chief profits from the sale of wines and spirits; and, indeed, considering that the number of members dining there seldom exceeded twelve, the privilege of supplying the viands without the liquor would not have been very desirable. In 1848 a standing committee was first appointed, and with this committee came in also soup and fish; but inasmuch as the members of that body were impartially chosen from the two sides of the House, it is difficult to define the exact tendency of the change. The reforms now proposed in view of the very general complaints are that the wines and spirits be provided by wine-merchants approved by the committee; that the tariff for cold meat be 2s. 6d., and for hot meat 3s. each; and that persons expecting to be supplied with such accessories as fish and entrées are to give half-an-hour's notice, and pay according to a printed list of prices. Peace or war or any other momentous question may depend on the temper of the House at any particular moment; the temper is regulated in a large degree by the digestive organs; it is consequently of great importance that the state of those organs in the members of the House should be by the proper regulation of the culinary department rendered as perfect as possible.

On Saturday evening last the Ministers partook of their annual whitebait dinner at Greenwich, the accustomed prelude to and unerring sign of the close of the Parliamentary session. The principal portion of the company, including Lord Palmerston, travelled by water from Westminster Bridge in a gaily decorated steamboat. Covers were laid for thirty. Sir G. Grey, the Duke of Newcastle, and Earl de Grey and Ripon were unable to attend. Parliament was prorogued on Tuesday.

The Crystal Palace at Sydenham presented a most animated scene on Saturday and Monday last. The attractions consisted of an immense fancy bazaar, presided over by the most celebrated actresses of the metropolis, with the addition of a Richardsonian theatre, a mock menagerie, Aunt Sally's, under the care of renowned comedians; scientific lectures, by the masters of farce; and a thousand other oddities. Enormous crowds were present. The object of the bazaar and exhibition was to raise a sum of money in aid of the Dramatic College, a valuable institution, the scheme of which was originated a few years since for the reception and care of decayed theatrical artists, and the maintenance and education of the orphans of actors.

The great American steam fire-engine "Manhattan," having been patched up after the break-down at the Crystal Palace, was again tried last Saturday at the London Docks, in the presence of the "American Delegation," Van Tine, Jones, Evans, and Collins, and of several distinguished persons, officials of insurance companies, and others. She succeeded in throwing the water horizontally, through an inch and a-quarter nozzle, to a distance of 189 feet. However, the mighty engine of the New York Fire Brigade quickly sprang a leak in her boiler, and, as at the Crystal Palace, could only work sufficiently to prove her own rotten condition,—a result, in all probability, of a successful Yankee contract.

The total sum of money expended on the maintenance of the British Museum and the purchases for the collections contained in it, from the time of its foundation, in 1753 to last March, is £3,339,177. In the year 1805 the number of visitors to the Museum was 11,989, in last year they had increased to 895,077.

The Pneumatic Despatch Company, in view of the success already realized, are contemplating a large extension of operations. At present the tube in work is in length 600 yards, and connects the Euston station with the district office in Eversholt-street. The company commenced to transmit the mails in February last. Thirty trains run on every day, and no impediment has yet occurred; the time occupied in traversing the distance is seventy seconds, while the daily cost of working has averaged £1 4s. 5d. It is now intended to form a tube two inches and a-half in length, and fifty-four inches in diameter, from the Euston station to the General Post-office, at a cost of £65,000.

An inquest was held, last week, on the body of a woman calling herself the "Female Blondin," who was killed by falling from a rope at Aston Hall, near Birmingham, in the presence of 14,000 spectators. The unfortunate creature was the wife of a man named Powell, and had been accustomed to perform on the tight-rope from the age of three years. The immediate cause of the accident was the snapping of the rope, which was thoroughly rotten. It is scarcely credible that the poor woman was eight months advanced in pregnancy and had six children living. The husband gave evidence that the net value of the payment which he received for the performance was about £8 or £9. The rope was suspended at the height of thirty feet from the ground. Taken altogether, the affair was as degrading to all parties concerned as can well be conceived. The death of the woman did not in any way check the festivities of the "Foresters," and the rest of the programme was carried out, the people not abating their fun and frolic in the least degree. A few weeks ago a person was killed in the same way at Cremorne Gardens, and unless the Legislature or public feeling intervenes, we shall soon gain little by comparison with the ancient spectators at the Roman amphitheatres. We elsewhere publish a letter, written by command of the Queen, in which such exhibitions are emphatically condemned.

Last year, with all the pomp of his august office, aided by the assumed character of an ardent law reformer, the Lord Chancellor carried a Bill for the Registration of Landed Estates, and for the granting Certificates of Title. Up to the present time there have been thirty-four applications to the office of the Land Registry, and the value of the estates registered amounts to half a million sterling, while only three certificates have been granted. The fees hitherto received amount to only £70. The office is conducted by a registrar, assistant registrar, and two clerks, whose collective salaries amount to £4,650 a-year. No doubt these four officials are comfortably provided for, and are not overworked; but beyond this rather common-place result, it is hard to see the benefit arising from this great reform of our real-property law.

The House of Lords, assembled as a Committee for Privileges, has heard a portion of a petition, by which Viscount Ockham claims the honour and dignity of Lord Wentworth. The Barony was created by writ of summons in the 21st year of Henry VIII., in which year the King created four peerages by special writs of summons. The Barony fell into abeyance on the death, without issue, of Thomas, who succeeded Edward Viscount Wentworth, the latter of whom died in October, 1774, between Judith Noel, the only surviving sister of Thomas and his nephew the Hon. Nathaniel Curzon. Judith Noel died on the 22nd of January, 1822, leaving her daughter Anne Isabella Noel her sole heir, and on the death of the Hon. Nathaniel Curzon, without issue in November, 1856, the abeyance of the peerage was determined, the dignity vesting in Anne Isabella Noel, who in January, 1815, had married George Gordon, the sixth Lord Byron. Of that marriage the sole issue was Augusta Ada Byron, who was born on the 10th of December, 1815. She married, in July, 1855, William the eighth Lord King, now Earl of Lovelace, and had by him Hon. Byron Noel King Viscount Ockham, who died in September, 1862, and also Ralph Gordon Noel King, the present petitioner.

The learned Blackstone, at page 295 of his "Commentaries," speaking of treasure-trove, says that it is "where any money or coin, gold, silver, plate, or bullion is found hidden in the earth, in which case the treasure belongs to the king." The punishment of persons concealing treasure-trove from the king was formerly death, it is now fine and imprisonment. To this punishment two men are now liable, having been convicted a few days ago, of concealing the finding of ancient gold treasure of the value of £500. The articles found were Celtic ornaments and portions of armour worn by the early Britons, such as golden circlets for the waist, necklaces, bracelets, rings, and armour-plates. These were dug up in a field about six miles from Battle, in Sussex, by a labourer, who sold them as old brass at 6d. a pound to two men, one of whom had been in California, and thought to profit by his experience. The purchasers took the ornaments to a refiner's in Cheapside, where they were melted down, and the lump bought for £529. Various technical objections were taken in the course of the trial, and consequently sentence was deferred, the parties being bound over to appear. The prisoners were doubtless ignorant of the law of treasure-trove, but their vandalism in melting down such valuable relics, and the fraud which they practised on the finder, make them fully deserving of any penalty that may be inflicted on them.

The trial of one of the series of the Roupell forgery cases, of the history and details of which a complete account appeared in our columns last week, was brought to a conclusion on Saturday, July 25, after a hearing of eight days' duration. It will be remembered that the action was one of ejectment, in which Richard Roupell, the heir-at-law of R. P. Roupell, sought to eject from an estate, called the Great Warley Estate, certain mortgagees who claimed, under a mortgage made by William Roupell; the title of the latter to the estate being derived from a deed of gift, said to have been executed by R. P. Roupell, in favour of the same William Roupell, his illegitimate son. It will also be borne in mind that a will had been proved by William Roupell, as the will of R. P. Roupell, bearing date September 2, 1856, by which this property with all the real and personal estate of the testator had been devised to his widow, Sarah Roupell. The heir-at-law having proved his title, and having brought evidence of the forgery of the will of September 2nd, 1856, it was for the mortgagees to prove the validity of the deed of gift, dated January 9, 1856, by which R. P. Roupell purported to give the estate in question to William Roupell. Just as the heir-at-law had called many witnesses to upset the will and deed, and to condemn the signatures as forgeries, so also the mortgagees brought a vast mass of evidence to prove the contrary proposition. However, it was clear that all parties were tolerably well agreed that the will, as well as certain leases which incidentally intervened in the case, were forgeries, and the real issue was as to the deed of gift. After the conflict of evidence on the part of witnesses who swore to or against the signatures as "experts," or as persons familiar with the writing of R. P. Roupell, the jury were in effect compelled to fall back on the amount of evidence to be attached to the statements of William Roupell, who, as will be remembered, had, on the strength of his title by this and the like deeds of gift from his father, raised enormous sums of money, spent those sums with reckless profusion, and after absconding from England, and resigning a seat in Parliament had returned to confess all his forgeries, and on his own confession had been sentenced to penal servitude for life. Of course there were circumstances in the case which might aid the jury in coming to a conclusion, but their chief reliance was on the evidence of a man who had confessed to perjury and numberless forgeries. In this difficulty the jury found the will to be a forgery by William Roupell, as was to be expected, but as to the deed of gift they failed to arrive at a verdict. Some thought it a forgery, others thought it the deed of the old man, R. P. Roupell, but even these believed the signature to have been obtained by fraud. It was quite in vain that the jury more than once consulted together, in vain that the judge explained that the heir-at-law having made out his title the onus of proving the deed lay with the mortgagees, and if they failed in their proof the verdict must be for the heir-at-law, for the foreman loudly asserted that if they were locked up till Doomsday they should never agree. Eventually the jury were discharged, and some thousands of pounds having been spent on the trial without result, it only remains to await the issue of the next trial of the series. The convict William Roupell was in court throughout the proceedings.

The subscriptions to the Jackson Statue Fund, which are acknowledged through our columns, are larger for this, than for any preceding week, amounting to upwards of £300. This is especially gratifying at the moment when the cloud which overhangs the Confederate arms makes the loss of the heroic "Stonewall" doubly regretted. The Committee are sanguine of raising within a week or two more, an amount which will warrant them in giving the order for the statue to the distinguished artist to whom the execution of the design is to be intrusted.

Intelligence has reached this country from Africa of the failure of the Universities' Mission. In another part of our impression we quote an article on this affair from the Times. In connection with this subject, the success of the African mission in the Confederate States is worthy of attention. In a note appended to the "Address of the Southern Clergy to Christians throughout the World" we are informed, that "The number of coloured communicants is about five hundred thousand. Assuming the coloured population to be four millions, there would be, upon the same method of computation, one-fourth of the adult population in communion with the Church of Christ. Thus has God blessed us in gathering into His Church from the children of Africa more than twice as many as are reported from all the converts in the Protestant Missions throughout the heathen world."

EUROPE.

THE despatch which Prince Gortschakoff addressed to Vienna is fully as clever and irritating as those sent to London and Paris. The Russian statesman identifies the interests of Austria in the pacification of Poland with those of Russia, and assumes that in proposing a conference Count Rechberg knew that it was impossible, and pronounced in advance his approval of the inevitable refusal. The substance of the answer is the same, its peculiarities consist in this cordial recognition of the right of Austria to interfere, not as a great Power, but as specially interested, by her possession of Galicia, in the peace of Poland and the insinuation that the Austrian minister thoroughly approved of the rejection of the principal demand made by himself and his allies. The sarcasm, or the attempt to separate Austria from France and England, created much resentment at Vienna, which found its expression with an undiplomatic celerity. Almost immediately upon the receipt of the Russian despatch, Count Rechberg addressed a note to the Austrian minister in London, declaring that some passages of Prince Gortschakoff's despatches tended to throw a false light on the intentions of Austria, to place her in a position which she cannot accept; denying most emphatically that Austria approved the refusal of a conference—a proposition which might very properly have been accepted by Russia—categorically rejecting every insinuation of a similarity between Galicia and the kingdom of Poland, and most important statement of all, declaring that the concert between the three Cabinets of Vienna, London, and Paris constitutes a connection between them from which Austria cannot now disengage herself in order to negotiate separately with Russia.

Earl Russell laid a copy of this despatch upon the table of the House of Lords the very day it was communicated to him by Count Apponyi, together with a despatch from Lord Napier, describing a conversation which he and the French Ambassador had with Prince Gortschakoff after the answers had been placed in their hands. Lord Napier had foreseen that the armistice would be rejected. He had apprehended that the conferences would be declined, but he had not expected that the intervention of France and England would be set aside by the proposal to discuss the question with Austria and Prussia alone, an overture which the French minister thought would be regarded by his Government "not only as unsatisfactory, but as almost insulting, and as tending to an immediate and positive rupture." The object of the two Ministers was to obtain from Prince Gortschakoff some explanation of his views which might set his intentions in a more favourable light, and mitigate the first impression which the perusal of his despatches would create. Although the two diplomatists took care to let the Russian Minister know that his answer would be considered unsatisfactory and offensive, they could obtain no modification of his views. They sought to induce him to allow that the results of the restricted conference should be embodied in a general convention, to which all the Powers signatories of the treaties of 1815 should be parties. He refused, however, that concession, repeatedly asserting that he would accede to nothing which would give the Western Powers any right whatever of interfering in the internal affairs of the Russian empire, in which he seemed to include the kingdom of Poland." All that he would allow was, that "England and France should be enabled by an official communication of the acts resulting from the deliberation of the restricted conference, which would contain the practical adaptation of the six points, to appreciate the conformity of those acts with the spirit and text of the treaty of Vienna." With what end has Earl Russell published this despatch? To force France, by this record of the language of her Minister, to the adoption of some violent course? To prove to the world the stubborn determination of Russia to allow no interference between her and the Poles? We must confess that the publication seems to us in the highest degree indiscreet. It can serve no good purpose; it can only provoke irritation and recrimination, which may force on the war which, a few days since, Earl Russell went out of his way to characterise as the greatest calamity that could befall Europe.

The public anxiety has, during the last few days, been extreme, and the general apprehension has been strikingly marked by that barometer of political hopes and fears the money market. The most contradictory rumours have been circulating. At one time it was announced that the Russian Ambassadors at all three courts had been ordered to prepare for their departure, and the most exaggerated stories about the military preparations of France have found greedy believers. It seems to have been forgotten that the alliance between the three Powers is a guarantee that war cannot take place for some months, and that this respite is in some sense a guarantee against war at all. It might be easy for the French Government to declare war in the name of "humanity" if it were acting by itself, but it cannot for all its assumed readiness to anticipate the wishes of the nation, break loose from England and Austria, who will certainly not go to war if at all without much clearer grounds for it than they now have, and without making a further appeal to St. Petersburg. It is said that Prince Gortschakoff has been deceived by the report of the Russian Minister at Vienna, M. de Balabine, as to the views of the Austrian Government, and that the recall of that Minister—one of the events which has been made much use of by the alarmists—is attributable to the despatch of Count Rechberg to London, the communication of which by the telegraph at St. Petersburg, caused a most disagreeable surprise.

The Poles who surrendered to the Moldo-Wallachian troops have been treated with great kindness. The expedition started from Tultscha, in Bulgaria, where it had been allowed to assemble by the Turkish Government, which seems, so far from throwing difficulties in its way, to have lent it every assistance. Indeed, the attitude of the Porte would give Russia a good excuse for war, if Russia were in a position to make it. The Sultan seems to hope that war will give him a chance of re-establishing his sovereignty over the dependencies which now are pretty well released from his rule. He is getting ready for war, which may, however, come upon him from quite the other side of his empire. The notorious Namyk Pasha, governor of Bagdad, has violently seized a salt work on the Turco-Persian frontier, the possession of which, although contested by Turkey, had long been in the hands of the Shah. The Persian Ambassador is said to have categorically demanded either the dismissal of Namyk Pasha and the surrender of the saline within four days, or his passports. We do not guarantee the truth of the story, but it is not at all improbable.

The Morning Post publishes what it calls a despatch from the Polish National Government to Prince Ladislaus Czartoryski, who would seem to be its Ambassador Extraordinary to all the Courts of Europe. This strange document, which is dated, "Foreign Office, Warsaw," and has no signature, a seal being employed in its place, declares that the National Government is disposed to accept a suspension of hostilities upon condition that it shall embrace all the Polish provinces in which the insurrection has broken out, the Russians to retain possession of certain nominated localities in order to prevent conflicts with the population; all persons under arrest on political grounds to be at once liberated, and all exiles to return; a permanent international commission being established for the purpose of seeing the armistice rigorously put in execution. The National Government threatens, it is said, if England and France do not actively intervene to publish a sort of "blue book," which will show that if the outbreak was not actually produced by promises and exhortations from Paris and London, it was certainly hastened and has been kept alive by them.

This invisible Government has its Chancellor of the Exchequer, as well as its Foreign Minister. This functionary has published the accounts of his stewardship, for the six months. Ordinary revenues reached fourteen millions silver roubles; the extraordinary twenty-three millions. It is not explained in which category the proceeds of the robberies which the National Government has organised with so much success are entered. The army has cost eighteen millions; the civil service 1,280,000, whilst the central committee has expended upon itself only 100,000 roubles. This account shows a large surplus, but a forced loan is nevertheless ordered, and the commissaries of the Government have begun to levy its taxes in Galicia, the possession of which they pretend to leave to Austria, but which they doubtless find a much more convenient field of operations than Congress Poland.

It is said that the non-success of the efforts of the Russian police to discover the members of the secret Government arises from the fact that, the work of the Government is carried on, and its members are concealed in the convents both of monks and nuns. This suggestion is probably enough correct. It continues its dastardly system of assassination. A certain Colonel Leichte, commander of the fortress of Warsaw in the late reign, and now a member of the Commission of Inquiry, has been stabbed by its order, and it not only avows, it boasts, of the foul deed.

Wysocki, who commanded the unsuccessful expedition into Volhynia, has, it is said, been arrested at Lemberg. Several agents of the National Government have also been arrested, with large sums of money upon their persons, and a large store of arms has been seized. The wonder is that Wysocki was not arrested before. He has been in Galicia since the discomfiture of Langiewicz, and the Austrian Government must have been very careless of its obligations to Russia, or very ill-served by its agents, to allow him to use its territory as a basis for expeditions into the Russian provinces for so long a time.

The committee to which the Lower House of the Austrian Reichsrath referred the petition of Langiewicz has made a report, earnestly recommending the Government to take the petition into consideration.

In reply to an interpellation, Count Rechberg stated that the satisfaction given by the Archduke Constantine for the violation of Austrian territory by Russian troops was considered sufficient. The Minister of Police said that the troops fired upon the people in the streets of Cracow because they were insulted; and that in sending into the interior the insurgents arrested upon entering Austrian territory, the Government only fulfilled its international obligations.

The King of Prussia has arrived at Gastein. He travels as Count Von Zollern, exciting very little notice, the curiosity of the public being all turned to Herr Von Bismarck, who, together with General Von Roon, the Minister of War, are with the King at Gastein. It is rumoured that Herr Von Bismarck is afraid to leave the King, lest other and better influences should be brought to bear upon his Majesty. Meanwhile press processes seem to monopolize the attention of the Prussian courts, and warnings are scattered about in profusion. The Prussian press will soon have to close its columns to all home intelligence. And now, of all seasons, the Russian and Prussian Governments are seeking to bind the two countries closer together by a commercial treaty.

The Italian Minister has presented to the Chambers the papers relating to the affair of the Aunis. The five prisoners were conveyed to Mont Cenis, and there delivered to the French gendarmes, by whom they were conducted to Chambery, where, safely lodged in prison, they await the decision of the French Government upon the formal demand of the Italian Government for their extradition.

The German members of the Schleswig Estates not only withdrew from the Assembly in consequence of the refusal of the Royal Commissioner to allow them to annul an unfavourable election, they resigned their seats. New elections have, consequently, been ordered for 24 out of the 43 seats in the Assembly. The same men will probably be returned, and the same farce gone through when they meet.

The King of Sweden, accompanied by his brothers, the Princes Oscar and August, have paid the King of Denmark a visit. The meeting of the two kings has, of course, given rise to fresh stories of an alliance, defensive and offensive, between the two kingdoms. It may not be long before both States need all the means they can muster. The young King of Greece has been confirmed.—Why, when he is to embrace the Greek religion—does not seem at all clear.

At the latest advices Athens was quiet. The same cannot be said for the rest of the country. The brigade of artillery which commenced the disturbance, and left with the troops faithful to the Government, when, in virtue of the compromise arrived at by the National Assembly, all troops were ordered from the capital, has taken possession of the citadel of Nauplia.

PARLIAMENTARY NOTES.

THURSDAY, JULY 23.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

Lord Malmesbury called attention to the accidents resulting from feats on the tight-rope; a practice which, he thought, should be put down by legislation.—Lord Granville preferred to trust to the action of public opinion.—Lord Shaftesbury strongly condemned these spectacles; and the subject dropped.

The Irish Fisheries Bill was read a third time, after some discussion.

Several other bills having been disposed of, their Lordships adjourned.

THURSDAY, JULY 23.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

At the morning sitting, on the order for the third reading of the Appropriation Bill, by which the supplies for the year are formally assigned, Mr. Seymour Fitzgerald called attention to the existing relations between Denmark and Germany, and the threat of a Federal execution in Holstein.—Lord Palmerston said that the Germanic Confederation had no right over Schleswig, but they had a right to interfere in Holstein, if anything contrary to Federal law were done. At the same time he hoped there would be no Federal execution, as that might lead to a general war. Everything would be done to persuade the disputants to keep their quarrel within the limits of diplomatic intercourse; and he hoped that war would be avoided.

Mr. Cobden called attention to a memorial from certain shipowners of Liverpool, complaining of the inadequacy of the Foreign Enlistment Act, and pointing out that, if this country were engaged in war with a foreign power which had no navy, our commerce might still be plundered by ships built in neutral ports. He condemned the conduct of the Government in allowing the escape of the Florida and the Alabama. The Federal Government was taking steps to ascertain the value of every ship and cargo destroyed by those vessels, with a view to demand damages from us; and that demand would probably be made, when it would leave us no choice but between humiliation and war. At present iron-clad vessels were actually building in this country for the Confederate States; and if they got to sea, the probable consequence would be a rupture with the North. We had treated the United States ill in this matter; whereas they had always strictly observed their neutral obligations. He did not believe that there would ever be two nations established within the late boundaries of the United States; and he hoped that England would remain "silent and sorrowful" till the end of the present contest.—Mr. Laird vindicated his own conduct as the builder of the Alabama, and complained of Mr. Cobden's efforts to fetter legitimate British industry. He reminded the House that during the Crimean War the America was built in a port of the United States for Russia; that she left that port with an American captain and crew; that she was protected, on leaving Brazil, by a United States' man of war, from French and British cruisers; and that it was stated by her captain that she was only the precursor of a fleet which would have sailed, had the war continued.

Lord J. Manners inquired if Turkey had made any demand to be admitted to the proposed conference on the cession of the Ionian Islands to Greece, which would be one of the most impolitic, uncalculated, and prejudicial acts ever committed.

Mr. C. Bentinck said he should like to know whether the opinion of the conference would be taken before the Ionian Parliament assembled.

Lord Palmerston, in replying to the observations of Mr. Cobden, said he looked upon the two hostile parties in America as belligerents, and therefore entitled to all the rights and privileges of belligerents; whereas the hon. member regarded them, not as two belligerents, but as a legitimate Government, and a rebel movement against its authority. According to the doctrine of the United States' Government itself, a neutral power might supply a belligerent with ships, arms, ammunition, or anything else, although they might be important ingredients in naval and military operations. Neither the American Government nor the hon. member was entitled to say that Ministers had omitted to do anything that by law they could do in the matter. With reference to the question of Lord J. Manners, as the Sultan had not been an acceding party to the establishment of the British protectorate of the Ionian Islands, he would not be invited to send a representative to the conference. A treaty would be signed by the Great Powers before the meeting of the Ionian States.

The bill was then read a third time and passed.

At the evening sitting Mr. C. Fortescue (Colonial Under Secretary), in reply to Mr. W. E. Forster, said that Sir G. Grey, the governor of New Zealand, apprehending the renewal of war and a formidable attack by the natives on the English settlements, had applied for an increase of the military force in that colony by the addition of one European regiment and three regiments of Sikh troops, and her Majesty's Government had decided that the request ought to be complied with.

The House having gone into committee on East India Revenue Accounts, Sir C. Wood made his annual statement of India finance, and in doing so expressed the gratification he felt at the accounts for the year 1861-62 exhibiting a great increase in the prosperity of our Indian empire, the revenue and expenditure having been brought as nearly as possible to balance each other. The actual revenue for 1862-63 amounting to £45,105,000 as against the Budget estimate of £42,971,000, thus showing an excess of £2,134,000 over the estimate. Of this increase, £1,550,000 was upon opium, £280,000 on salt, and £300,000 on land sayer abkarry. On the other hand, the expenditure in India had exceeded the estimate by £440,000; but in England it was £395,000 less. The general result was, that the total revenue, being £45,105,000, and the expenditure £43,823,000, there was a surplus of revenue over expenditure of £1,280,000, and he was happy to add that from accounts lately received, there was reason to believe that the result of the current year's operations would exceed the most sanguine hopes. The right hon. gentleman also entered into minute and elaborate details relating to the construction of railways and other public works, the Indian debt, the army, the state of industry and employment, and the general condition of the country. In alluding to the military expenditure, he mentioned the important fact that since the year 1858-59, it had been reduced from £25,500,000 to £14,500,000, at which sum it now stood. In conclusion, he submitted a series of resolutions declaring the revenue and expenditure for the year ending April, 1862, of the Bengal, Bombay, and Madras Presidencies, and the Punjab and North-Western Provinces respectively, and the interest on the registered debt of India. After a brief discussion the resolutions were agreed to; and some further business having been disposed of the House adjourned.

FRIDAY, JULY 24.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

Lord Clanricarde, in moving for any reports received from our diplomatic or consular agents on the Continent of atrocities committed or threatened by Russians or Poles since the 1st of May, inquired whether her Majesty's Government had reason to hope that the civil war now raging in Poland would henceforth be conducted according to the usages of civilized warfare. Having expatiated on the various atrocities committed by General Mouravieff, he insisted that it was the duty of England, France, and Austria to urge that the war be carried on in a civilized manner, or to say that in that war they would take a part.—Lord Russell thought it was not advisable to produce the papers, as both those from St. Petersburg and those from Warsaw, being probably founded on ex parte statements, might mislead Parliament and also preclude our diplomatic agents in those parts from obtaining information hereafter. He entered on the general question of Poland, and explained certain misapprehensions which had arisen from a previous speech of his on the same subject in regard to the non-interference of England in Poland. The present state of the negotiation was that Austria had refused to accede to the Russian proposal of a conference between herself, Prussia, and Russia, and had signified her adherence to the policy adopted by France and England.—Lord Stratford de Redcliffe eulogized Austria for the liberal course on which she had entered. The reply of Russia, although remarkable as a composition, was utterly destitute of everything that could afford a hope of a satisfactory settlement.—Lord Ellenborough considered the answer of Prince Gortschakoff put an end to all hope from diplomacy, but it had this value—that we now knew where we were, and that diplomacy was henceforth valueless. He asked for no papers to confirm the atrocities, as the proclamations of General Mouravieff were in themselves atrocities hitherto unknown in Europe. The prosperity of Posen and Galicia showed that the present outbreak in Russian Poland was due to bad government, and to the brutal contempt of those whom Russia considered as her subjects—a contempt which revolted human nature. The bad government of Poland was costly in blood and treasure to Russia, and disastrous to her power. As to the revolutionary tendencies complained of by Russia, the Emperor was himself the first revolutionist of Europe in setting the serfs against their masters. Having condemned in eloquent terms the treatment of women by General Mouravieff, he entreated her Majesty's Government to consider well what their next step should be, but warned them that if it were a diplomatic one it would certainly fail.—Lord Malmesbury hoped their lordships would not allow their reason to be conquered by their feelings. In entering into this Polish question we had allowed our feelings to overpower our judgment, had interfered in an improper manner, and our interference had already led us to the verge of a war, which would be neither to the interest nor advantage of this country. A war would end by conferring on France a material advantage, as recent wars had done before.—Lord Granville denied that her Majesty's Government had departed from the principle of non-intervention, and asserted that in conjunction with Austria and France, we had only employed our moral influence to ameliorate the condition of the Poles.—Lord Clanricarde, after a few remarks in reply, withdrew his motion. Their lordships adjourned at a quarter to 8 o'clock.

FRIDAY, JULY 24.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

At the morning sitting a good deal of formal business was disposed of.

In the evening Mr. Dodson called attention to the petition from members of the University of Oxford, for the abolition of the requirement of subscription to formularies of faith, as a qualification for the M.A. degree. He observed that, although the petition emanated from a minority, it was signed by some of the most distinguished members of the University, and if its prayer were granted it could work no possible evil, nor impair the connection between the University and the Church of England or the religious character of her education. He earnestly recommended those who took any interest in the prosperity of the University seriously to consider the subject.—Mr. Henley, after some remarks upon the history of the petition, and upon the new theological school, professed his inability to discover what good could result from bringing the subject of the petition forward, and entered his protest against it.—Lord R. Cecil remarked that Masters of Arts constituted the governing body to decide what should be the religious education of the University.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer observed that most of the remarks in the debate had taken a wider range than the speech of Mr. Dodson. The question of tests in the University was connected with the usual training of the young. The parents of England would not be satisfied to intrust their children to the University without some definite religious sanction.

A long and miscellaneous conversation followed on all sorts of topics; after which the House adjourned.

Both Houses sat for a short time on Saturday, being the last Saturday during the session; but no business of interest came under discussion. The Ministers went down to Greenwich in the evening for their annual whitebait dinner, the date fixed for which marks the approaching close of the session.

MONDAY, JULY 27.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

Lord Stratford de Redcliffe directed attention to the proposed guarantee of the Ionian Islands when transferred to Greece, as appearing from the first article of the fourth protocol of the conference held at the Foreign-office relating to Greek affairs, and recently presented to the House by command of her Majesty. The noble lord expressed a strong opinion that the Government and the protecting Powers had acted unwisely in ceding the islands to Greece, and observed that the principle of guarantee had been extended too far of late years by this country.—Earl Russell said that the transfer of the Ionian Islands to Greece met the general approval of the people of this country, and that there was no opposition to the measure on the part of either Austria or Turkey. If the course pursued by Government had not met the approval of the noble viscount or of noble lords on the opposite side of the House, the subject ought to have been mooted at an earlier period of the session, when the sense of the House might have been taken upon it.—The Earl of Derby agreed with Lord Stratford that the proposed guarantee might lead to very inconvenient results. The cession of the Ionian Islands to Greece was one of the most gratuitous weakenings of this country for the purpose of strengthening the power of other states he ever remembered. He admired the courage of the young prince who had accepted the crown of Greece, but he believed that he had an extremely arduous task before him in attempting to establish a constitutional monarchy and in reconciling the discordant elements into which that country was at present split up. After a few words from Earl Russell the subject dropped.

Some business was disposed of, and the House adjourned.

TUESDAY, JULY 28.—HOUSE OF LORDS.

The Commons having been summoned to the bar, the royal assent was given by commission to several bills. The Lord Chancellor, as the head of the commission appointed for the purpose, then read the Queen's speech, of which the following are the most important passages:

"Her Majesty has seen with deep regret the present condition of Poland. Her Majesty has been engaged, in concert with the Emperor of the French and the Emperor of Austria, in negotiations, the object of which has been to obtain the fulfilment of the stipulations of the Treaty of Vienna of 1815, in behalf of the Poles. Her Majesty trusts that those stipulations will be carried into execution, and that thus a conflict distressing to humanity and dangerous to the tranquillity of Europe may be brought to a close.

"The civil war between the Northern and Southern States of the North American Union still unfortunately continues, and is necessarily attended with much evil, not only to the contending parties, but also to nations which have taken no part in the contest. Her Majesty, however, has seen no reason to depart from that strict neutrality which her Majesty has observed from the beginning of the contest.

"The Greek nation having chosen Prince William of Denmark for their King, her Majesty is taking steps with a view to the union of the Ionian Islands to the kingdom of Greece. For this purpose her Majesty is in communication with the Powers who were parties to the Treaty of 1815 by which those islands were placed under the protection of the British Crown; and the wishes of the Ionians on the subject of such union will be duly ascertained.

"Several barbarous outrages committed in Japan upon British subjects have rendered it necessary for her Majesty to demand reparation; and her Majesty hopes that her demands will be conceded by the Japanese Government without its being necessary to resort to coercive measures to enforce them.

"The Emperor of Brazil has thought fit to break off his diplomatic relations with her Majesty, in consequence of her Majesty not having complied with demands which she did not deem it possible to accede to. Her Majesty has no wish that this estrangement should continue, and would be glad to see her relations with Brazil re-established.

"The distress which the civil war in North America has inflicted upon a portion of her Majesty's subjects in the manufacturing districts, and towards the relief of which such generous and munificent contributions have been made, has in some degree diminished, and her Majesty has given her cordial assent to measures calculated to have a beneficial influence upon that unfortunate state of things."

Parliament was then prorogued until the 14th of October.

TUESDAY, JULY 28.—HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Some desultory conversation took place while the House awaited the summons from the Lords. After the Speaker's return he read the Royal Speech, and then took leave of the members as usual.

PARIS TOPICS.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

PARIS, July 28.

The last despatches from America are, for your readers—for Europe, if it knew it—the most interesting topics of the day, although far from occupying the place they should fill in the Paris press. Still they have attracted attention, and I shall proceed to give you some of the more remarkable passages of the comments they have elicited. The same mail brought news of reported Confederate reverses and of the riots in New York. The last only are noticed at any length by the press. The ultra-liberal papers have in general mentioned them, along with the other news in their summary; but that of the Moniteur gives them the first place and reproduces the sense of the despatches with greater proximity than usual. It was Sunday when the news arrived, a day which even by the press is so far kept holy, that the writers generally go off early to amuse themselves for the afternoon. The France, alone, commented in a serious manner on the news:—

It is not without profound emotion that Europe in the midst of its own anxieties will learn the events which have stained New York with blood, and fix upon the revolution, of which America has been for two years the theatre, its true meaning.

In its very commencement the civil war, among this people of workers and freemen, has come up to all that history tells of our darkest days; America of 1863 has nothing to envy or reproach France of '93.

These events cannot surprise us. It is not the first time that we have called attention to the revolutionary,—that is, the illogical, unreasonable, and violent character of the American movement. We long ago predicted these evil days, which strikingly recall the revolts of the Faubourg St. Antoine, the burning of the exercise offices, and the murders of Flesselles, Poulon, and Berthier.

But how criminal soever the French Revolution may have been in its excesses, we should feel that we insulted it if we compared it to a movement whose secret cause is interest, and which is inspired by none of those noble and patriotic sentiments which honoured our fathers.

Now it is that the wrong-headedness and rudeness of the Yankee mind gives itself full play. What urges the Northern populations is neither enthusiasm nor patriotism. Far from dying for their fatherland, they seek to shirk the duties their Government imposes on them: they will none of the Conscription, which would expose them to combat the South, and the liberty they demand is certainly not that of going to be shot down by Confederate bullets.

It seems to us impossible that in present circumstances Mr. Lincoln should remain at the head of affairs for the term prescribed by the Constitution. We see to what extremities the violent policy of his Cabinet has reduced America. The Government of the North, instead of appeasing passions, has sought only to inflame them. It has taken those passions as its supports; it has called in the aid of Revolution, and thought itself strong, because it was violent.

But the events of to-day change its position entirely. Mr. Lincoln must feel this, and must perceive that his departure from the White-house is the only means of producing a change in a situation which must bring upon all America disasters and calamities threatening to the greatness and even to the existence of the New World.

So wrote the France, so thought all Paris, on the receipt of the last news. Its next number contained a short article in very different terms, though still pointing to the same evil. It alleges that Mr. Lincoln is the candidate for the next term of the presidency who will be put forward by the Abolition party, and that this intrigue was the cause of General Meade's appointment to the chief command. This must be a mistake, because it cannot be that the American law, however strictly interpreted, can exclude an American citizen born of American parents, wherever his birth may have taken place. The article goes on to say that the real opponent of Mr. Lincoln in his pretensions to re-election will not be a soldier, but a man of his own making—Mr. Valandigham.

The Patrie has a most interesting letter from its old correspondent in New York, who is now in Paris, of which I send you a long extract. After calling attention to his long residence in this capacity in the United States, and to the general correctness of his past appreciation of the events which have marked the struggle, he goes on to say:—

When Mr. Seward, in a grandiloquent circular, invited the working classes of Europe to the mock Republic of America, the Patrie, which knew what his offers were worth, did not, like some other journals, blow the trumpet for the scheme. Some of our contemporaries hailed the measure "as the most important ever taken by a Government in the application of the principle of the universal fraternity of nations." They prudently concealed from the emigrants that on their arrival in this land of promise they would find a harder than European despotism, no work or nominal wages. That want would force them to enlist to obtain bread for their families, and that when once enlisted they would not receive the promised pay, or if they got a part of it, it would be in paper, on which as much as 70 per cent. has been lost.

That is what the emigrants found. Misery and oppression have driven them and other foreigners, long settled in America, to a revolt, which, we are told, was directed exclusively against the free blacks.

No doubt, hatred of the blacks, who are considered one of the causes of this war, so ruinous above all to the poor—the anger of the white workmen at seeing the negroes underbid them in the labour market, may have had something to do with the riots, but these were only secondary causes.

In towns of the west, in Detroit, in New York itself, there have been attacks on the negroes before this. The whites were unmolested, and the riots quickly appeased when the murder of a few negroes had satisfied popular fury.

In the same way there have been conscription riots, but the burning of the Provost's office, the hanging a recruiting officer, were sufficient to restore order.

Is it thus that things have gone this time in New York? If not, why not?

Because the conscription was, indeed, the pretext for a riot, but directed not against the blacks. It is the first essay of the Social Revolution which menaces the North.

Whoever has lived any time in New York will find the confirmation of this in the last despatches. The focus of the insurrection is the upper part of the city, where the palaces of Fifth Avenue and the abodes of the plutocracy of New York are situated. The space occupied by these is bounded on either side by immense avenues running along either shore of Manhattan Island, the site of the great foundries and workshops, and the dwellings of the working population. It is needless to add, that especially since the war this part of the town is also the abode of misery.

Of the population of these avenues, not more than about one-twentieth is American. The rest are Irish, Germans, with a few French. There are at least 300,000 souls in this quarter, all united by the same interest, and well aware that they are the prey of Yankee speculators, whose flaunting luxury seems to insult the wretchedness of their dwellings, which are hardly better than the cellars of Manchester and Liverpool.

If the conscription is so unpopular, it is not as a conscription, but as an emblem of the oppression of the poor by the rich. Exemption can be purchased for $300, a sum equal to about 300 francs in France. Every Yankee can raise this sum, but not so the petty retail dealers, for the greatest part Irish and Germans. The rich can exempt themselves for a trifle, and the poor are taken to fill the ranks.

The refusal of the firemen to muster is a fresh proof of this, for they are exempt from the conscription, but they belong to the class on which it falls so heavily. In this opposition to the conscription and the negroes, a more subsidiary manifestation, they have taken part with the social revolution.

The offices of the Tribune were attacked, not certainly because negroes were employed in them, for no Yankee journal would thus disgrace itself, but because it has been the advocate of military despotism, the upholder of the commercial and financial oligarchy.

If it be true that the riots have reached Staten Island, where there are neither negroes nor recruiting officers, the mob could have no other object of attack than the country houses of the wealthy New Yorkers with which it is covered.

All these things are proofs that this revolt of three days' duration was aimed neither at the negroes nor the conscription. It is the sad beginning of a revolution produced by the oppression of the working classes, and which sooner or later will burst forth.

It is not now for the first time that the revolutionary nature of the American struggle has been denounced, but the last events prove it so distinctly, that all the non-revolutionary press has joined in recognising their tendency. One has ceased to speculate on the results of events in America, for they seem to follow no rule of Old World experience, and whatever effect they might in ordinary times have had on the French Government, things nearer home absorb its attention.

No one here doubts that war for Poland is decided on. Everything is ready for its declaration in a fortnight, and by the middle of August, unless some sudden change occurs, you may calculate on a war in which, at least, France and Austria will be engaged with Russia. As popular as this war is with the masses, so unpopular is it with the wealthier classes; but this will not prevent it. Neither will the lateness of the season; for the French and Austrian troops will march together, and a combined force may be in the heart of Poland before the 1st of September. It is understood that the French army will disembark at Trieste, whence the railway will transport it and its allies to Cracow, whence the expedition for the new partition, or the reunion to Galicia of the other parts of Poland, will proceed to the scene of action. This plan of campaign avoids the dangers of the autumnal Baltic, at the same time that it explains the alacrity with which Austria rejected the Russian proposals.

The only French newspaper which still opposes the projected war is the Presse; all the others have joined the war cry. Even assassination, when committed by Poles, finds apologists in the more respectable organs of French publicity. The Patrie excuses the murder of Colonel Leichte in the following way:—"We learn also that the National Government gives an answer to the arbitrary sentences pronounced by Generals Berg, Monravie, and others, by condemnations pronounced in secrecy, and at once executed. It is thus that one of the heroes of the Russian regimen at Warsaw, condemned in the course of the 21st, was stabbed the same evening by an unknown hand. No doubt such executions are repugnant to those who order them. However merited, such punishments might be reproved by public opinion, but Russian violence has filled the hearts of Poles with despair, and the blood nobly shed by the insurgents on the field of battle during the last six months may redeem such acts of vengeance performed in the dark, and which strike only the most cruel of the tyrants of Poland." While I state my conviction that war is determined upon, and that even the results have been discounted, as they say here on the Bourse, I must add that the Siecle has been visited with a second warning for an article proposing to put war for Poland to the popular vote; and a funeral service for the "victims of July," which was to have furnished occasion for a Polish manifestation, has been forbidden. On the other hand, for there is always a lining to the cloak, in the canzetta for the 15th of August some allusion to Poland has been permitted to the poet laureate of the year.

In this all-absorbing topic of Poland everything else is neglected. The captured flags from Mexico have been presented to the Emperor by the gallant and gallant Marquis de Galiffet, but they have excited no enthusiasm in Paris. Even the notice of the vote for its future government, which Marshal Forey is said to have authorised throughout the territory which has submitted to France, has not stimulated public curiosity.

The Empress's sudden visit to Vichy passed in fiets such as the family mourning allowed, and she is again at St. Cloud, where the Emperor is expected in ten days.

Poor Emma Livry, the purest of danseuses, has died of the terrible accident which she met with eight months ago, when her dress caught fire at a general rehearsal of the "Muette de Portice." As an artist she was admirable, and the eight months of terrible suffering which she bore with the most edifying resignation, added to her faultless life, perhaps entitle us to hail in her the first saint that the opera has contributed to the choir of Heaven. She was only eighteen.

THE ENGLISH PRESS ON THE RECENT FEDERAL SUCCESSES.

(From the Times, July 27.)

The state of affairs in America as represented in the intelligence we publish this morning, is full of such confusion and complexity that it is almost impossible to estimate its real character. On each side there is an unaccountable mixture of strength and weakness, success and failure, confidence and despair. With that strange concurrence which is so often observed in history, important events crowd together at once, and from nearly every side of the vast Confederate territory we have news of important operations by land or sea. In Maryland, on the Peninsula, at Charleston, at Port Hudson, at Vicksburg, and in Tennessee large and powerful armies are actively engaged, and the Confederacy is being pierced at half-a-dozen points at once by attacks each of which requires an army for adequate resistance.

In such a position it is not surprising that there is hardly one point at which the South has been able to concentrate a sufficient force to overpower its assailants. It can no longer be doubted now that Vicksburg has fallen, and it is clear that its capture was due to a want of Confederate troops to reinforce sufficiently the army of General Johnston. As was to be expected, its fall has been followed by that of Port Hudson. We do not know yet whether the fall of the latter place was caused directly by the result of the capture of Vicksburg; but it is obvious that the same reasons which made the defence of the one impossible would necessitate sooner or later the surrender of the other. The simple truth is that the Confederates were outnumbered, and had not the vast reserves of the North to reinforce their gallant but hard-pressed garrisons. It is impossible to speculate with any great probability on the policy or necessity of the Confederate Government, and it cannot be known how far General Lee's recent invasion may have been absolutely necessary to recruit the supplies of the Southern army; but it is difficult to avoid a suspicion that if he could have persisted in a purely defensive policy the Confederate outposts might not have been found so denuded of troops in their hour of need. The news from Charleston seems to point out a similar danger. We hear of a fresh attack by the Federals; and this time, instead of trying to force a passage with their ships, they have landed troops on Morris Island, on the south side of the entrance to the harbour, and seem pushing forward towards the city by land in the rear of the batteries. In the absence of fuller news we cannot interpret with any confidence their progress in this operation; but if there was any truth in the rumour which stated that General Lee had been reinforced by a large part of General Beauregard's army it is difficult not to connect the two facts.

Whether, however, such a reinforcement was seriously contemplated or effected, it has been probably felt that it would be impossible, while so many points were threatened, to support General Lee with a force sufficient to enable him to convert his rapid invasion of Pennsylvania into a permanent and successful occupation. His retreat may be due rather to the Confederate necessities elsewhere than to the consequences of his repulse at Gettysburg. The Northern press has ceased to claim those terrible three days' fighting as anything but a drawn battle, and it is obvious from the extreme ease with which Lee has effected his retreat, that he was far too strong for Meade's army to be able to meet him except in a defensive position. On the 13th of July all his wounded, trains, and supplies had been quietly passed over the Potomac at Williamsport, under cover of his army, and we hear to-day that on the 14th the whole army itself crossed the river, so unmolested by General Meade that only one brigade, two guns, two caissons, and a number of small arms remain in the hands of the Federals. It is difficult to see that such a result can be very satisfactory to the Northern press or the Washington Government. Washington, Baltimore, and Philadelphia, it is true, are "safe;" but a large army has succeeded in maintaining itself on their soil for three weeks; has collected stores and provisions to its heart's content from one of the wealthiest States in the Union; has surrounded the capital, and cut all the lines of railway that connect it with the Northern States but one; has been able all through the invasion to take its own course; has only been prevented by three days' bloody fighting from important military successes; and has at last safely retreated with all its booty. General Lee, besides, has at least succeeded in compelling the Federal army to retire to its own soil. Instead of being the army of invasion of Virginia, it has become only the army of defence for Maryland and Pennsylvania.

Still, it must be acknowledged that on the whole it is seldom we have received intelligence so gloomy for the Confederate cause. Though the North places an extravagant value on the reduction of Vicksburg and Port Hudson, yet it is evident from the letters of our correspondent at Richmond that the fall of their two strongholds on the Mississippi will be a heavy blow to the Confederates. The navigation of the river, indeed, for any purpose of commerce is impossible so long as a gun can be planted on any cliff or bluff of its eastern or western banks, but the Federal gunboats are likely to command the river between New Orleans and Memphis, and they ought to be able to prevent the construction of any other such formidable strongholds. General Banks, too, will be relieved from any fear for New Orleans, and the greater part of General Grant's large army will be available for service elsewhere. Vicksburg and Port Hudson have hitherto absorbed the services of some 100,000 of the best soldiers in the Northern army, and though it will be absolutely necessary for General Grant to leave a strong garrison in each, lest his work should be undone, it is clear that a considerable force will be at his disposal for fresh operations. It is said that a Federal force has occupied Jackson, and the important line of railway which runs parallel to the Mississippi from Memphis to New Orleans is therefore more or less in Federal hands. There is nothing improbable in the reports that General Johnston has been already attacked and defeated with considerable loss, though it is said to require confirmation; and General Bragg's rapid retreat from Tennessee to Atlanta, in Georgia, may be connected with the same calamity. This last movement, indeed, if it is not intended to draw General Rosecrans too far forward a position, is almost more ominous than the others. Atlanta is at the centre of the Western Confederate States. It is nearer to the Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic than to the Ohio and the Mississippi, and if the Federal army follows General Bragg it will be encamped in the very heart of the Confederate territory.

But at this very time, when the hosts of Mr. Lincoln have achieved something of the success which the mere force of overpowering numbers must ultimately command, when the Northern press is most triumphant, and the Washington politicians most elated, the people are expressing their disgust at the war in a way which, if persisted in, must be fatal to its further prosecution on the same scale. The riots in New York, of which we received hasty intelligence last mail, are evidently little less than an insurrection. A mob of many thousand men, armed with muskets, bludgeons, pikes, brickbats, and railroad iron, who are "in possession of the city," are not to be considered a mere band of rioters. Nothing but the most indignant discontent with the proceedings of the Government could have roused such a storm of resistance. Even the obstinacy of Mr. Lincoln seems to have felt the necessity for giving way, and it is said he has telegraphed to New York to suspend the draft. If that be true, it will be hopeless to enforce it, for such an example is infectious, and other cities in the North are not likely to submit to a conscription which they have only to resist forcibly to escape. It would have been strange indeed if the American people had submitted to a measure which is a distinctive mark of the most despotic Governments of the Continent. But if Mr. Lincoln can only recruit his armies by conscription, and the conscription fails, his Government will have collapsed at the very crisis of its policy. The hopelessness of the enterprise is never more evident than at a time when it seems most promising. The war fails to unite the jarring factions of the bewildered people, and they seem roused at the last extremity only to the determination that it promises no results worth the price they are asked to pay. Indeed, in spite of all the Confederate misfortunes, there is one item in to-day's intelligence which alone shows what an endless and hopeless task the North have before them. Although General Bragg is retreating before General Rosecrans far into Georgia, yet the country behind the Federal General is so far from being conquered, that two or three hundred miles in his rear a Confederate General is invading Ohio and threatening Cincinnati and Indianapolis. If the Federal Cabinet cannot protect their own country, what chance can they see of raising a sufficient force to hold the South by military occupation?

(From the Morning Herald, July 27.)

General Lee has withdrawn from Maryland, and the second invasion of Northern territory is at an end. It has not been more successful than the first. We have yet to learn the truth about the battle of Gettysburg. It is certain that the fight on the second day was far more favourable to the Confederates than the Northern reports describe it, and that the Federals lost guns, considerable numbers in killed and wounded, and several of their positions; and although on the third day Lee's army was unable to crush the enemy, it cannot be said to have suffered a defeat. At the worst it retired after an indecisive action. It is easy to judge by results, and they are, after all, the only sure tests of a campaign. But, speaking after the event, we must confess that Lee's movement was from the first, in our opinion, attended with risks by no means commensurate with the good he was likely to effect, and that when once upon the enemy's territory he failed to evince that superiority in strategy which has hitherto been the strong arm of the South. Meade was allowed time to concentrate his forces without interruption, whilst the Confederate army was scattered over the Cumberland Valley. As it was, the militia reserves from Pennsylvania and New York, which arrived on the third day of the battle, saved the North a great disaster. What would have been the effect if Lee had pushed forward his troops to Fredericktown and fought two days earlier? At least he would have had a smaller force to encounter, and he could hardly have had a stronger position to attack. No doubt Lee was justified in his confidence in the prowess of his troops. But there are things which flesh and blood cannot accomplish. According to the Federal accounts the Southern soldiers charged up the slopes of Gettysburg in heavy columns, torn with grape, and canister, and deadly shell, as the Russians did at Inkermann. Is it a wonder that when their thinned ranks reached the crests they were unable to withstand the onset? Lee relied too much on the superiority of his soldiers, and underrated his opponents. Many a commander has made the same mistake and paid a heavier penalty. The Confederates, of course, had a great object in invading Northern territory. One victory would probably have given them peace, and certainly have secured their recognition. A permanent occupation of portions of Maryland and Pennsylvania would have balanced the loss of Vicksburg and Port Hudson, and would have materially contributed toicken the North of its lust of conquest. Meade's army destroyed, there was no hope of raising another. All these considerations justified Lee's bold movement. It is a misfortune to the North, to the South, and to humanity, that it has not been more successful. His retreat across the Potomac is well advised. Nothing could have been gained by an indecisive victory over Meade's army at Hagerstown. Everything would have been lost by a reverse. Richmond itself, Lee's army destroyed, would have been open to the invader. As it is, if Meade has the daring to follow him up, he can fight when he will and where he will, in a friendly country; and on the soil of Virginia the Confederate army will always give a good account of the enemy.

The earliest consequence of the Confederate invasion has been the new conscription and the reign of terror in New York. General Lee, in his retreat, could not have anticipated such results. When he withdrew his army from the sickening spectacle of the last battle field, his congratulations could have gone no further than that a terrible lesson of Confederate power had been taught the enemy. There he must have stopped. Familiar as he is with the mixed races to which he is opposed, the tame submission of New York to every new stretch of power could have held out no hope to him that there the semblance of order was about to snap asunder. Had he known that within a few days he would have a powerful ally in New York, there is no saying what he might have accomplished. For without the passive acquiescence of New York the Federal Government, and East, and West, and North are nothing. When its citizens are outraged and its negroes murdered—when the lamp-post is resorted to for speedy execution, and a life and death struggle is waged between power and the masses of the people—it is time for the Federal Administration to ponder well "the situation." New York is worse than Paris when in the hands of the mob, as the excesses of 1837 prove, and the exciting causes were then less powerful than those now operating. For some weeks past the condition of New York has been represented as most alarming, although no mention of the fact has appeared in the letters of newspaper correspondents. Not only have the whole population carried concealed weapons, but robberies and brutal outrages and murders have taken place in Broadway and the other more public thoroughfares. This general arming originated in the wantonness and brutality of the discharged soldiers, who gradually increased in number and daring. These ruffians began by waylaying people at night, in much the same manner as the London burglars last winter; but the knife was freely used when resistance or alarm was attempted. Attacks were even made in the daytime, so that it became unsafe for any one to be about unless well provided for defence. Latterly the prospect of the conscription has added to the uneasiness of all classes, and armed such as were previously unarmed. Collisions, consequently, whether between individuals or mobs, and the police or military, are desperate and deadly. In fact, in the present armed state of the inhabitants of New York, collisions assume the character of regular street fighting. That, under such circumstances, business should be suspended is not remarkable. Nor would it be remarkable if the suspension of business at the great commercial centre of the Northern States, and the example of armed resistance to the Federal Government in such a place, were to occasion counter-revolution. At all events, the produce trade from Chicago and the Western States will inevitably be checked, and the idleness that must follow will, of course, enable the malcontents of the many large and not well-affected lake and interior towns to consider the relation in which they stand to the Federal Government. In a word the situation in the Northern States is at the moment very grave. And apart from the collision between the authorities and the people, the resistance to the draft is a serious blow to the Administration. The example of New York is likely to be followed every by great city of the North, and whence, then, will Mr. Seward obtain his recruits? The new conscription was in itself a confession of the inadequacy of the forces now in the field for the object the Administration has in view. The war in America, what with the want of knowledge in officers, the deficient organization, the climate of the South, and the exposures of the campaign, is using up the Northern army at an unprecedented rate. The two years' men have served their term; the nine months' men are not to be tempted back into the ranks. There is no resource but the draft; if that fails the North, the war must speedily end. In the meantime the North is enjoying in its own cities the horrors it has ruthlessly inflicted on the cities and homesteads of the South, and the South has a set-off for the disasters it has encountered on the Mississippi.

TO OUR FRIENDS AND SUBSCRIBERS.

Our friends in the United Kingdom and on the Continent are earnestly requested to forward to us, at their earliest convenience, such information relative to the military movements and condition of affairs in America as they may receive through private letters, either from the United States, or from the Confederate States. They may rely upon the most scrupulous precautions being observed; that no names or facts leading to identification will, under any circumstances, be revealed. No communications, however, will be noticed unless authenticated by a responsible name. Southern newspapers, of any date, will be useful and acceptable presents.

For the convenience of our distant subscribers, all the receipts for subscriptions signed by any of the official representatives, or commissioned officers of the Confederate States, will be recognized at this office.

Our subscribers in the South will have their paper supplied through HENRY HOTZE, Esq., the Confederate States' Commercial Agent at London, who has kindly tendered us his services in this respect during the continuance of the blockade.

Subscription, 26s. per annum—post paid, 30s., payable in advance. All communications on business to be addressed, and Post-Office Orders made payable to, J. B. HOPKINS, 13, Boulevard-street, Fleet-street, London E.C.

The INDEX may be obtained, and payments for subscriptions or other dues to the paper made:—

At Liverpool, to WM. KNOX, Secretary Southern Club, 55, Brown's-buildings.

At Paris, to Messrs. PFEIFFER and MULLER, 52, Rue du Château d'Eau, Paris.

At Turin, to Sr. FILIPPO MANETTA, 4, Borgo Nuovo.

THE INDEX.

THURSDAY, JULY 30, 1863.

BRITISH JACKSON MONUMENTAL FUND.

The Honorary Treasurer of the Jackson Statue Fund acknowledges the receipt of the following additional subscriptions—

Alexander Collie, Esq.	..	..	£50	0
James Spence, Esq.	..	..	50	0
Sir Henry de Houghton, Bart.	..	..	25	0
G. E. Seymour, Esq.	..	..	20	0
T. B. Horsfall, Esq., M.P.	..	..	10	0
William J. Mason, Esq.	..	..	10	0
M. J. Armour, Esq.	..	..	10	0
Edward Lawrence, Esq.	..	..	10	0
James Wilson, Esq.	..	..	10	0
Joseph Cunard, Esq.	..	..	10	0
A. B. Farnood Esq.	..	..	10	0
W. B. Farnood, Esq.	..	..	10	0
G. A. Finley, Esq.	..	..	10	0
R. J. Finley, Esq.	..	..	10	0
M. E. Klingender, Esq.	..	..	10	0
Robert Wright, Esq.	..	..	10	0
Thomas Buttsworth, Esq.	..	..	10	0
R. S. Moran, Esq.	..	..	10	0
"A Sympa hizer with the South"	..	..	10	0
George Martin, Esq.	..	..	10	0
Edwin Haigh, Esq.	..	..	10	0
Richard Bell, Esq.	..	..	5	0
P. W. Curry, Esq.	..	..	5	0
"New York"	..	..	5	0
R. E. Bushby, Esq.	..	..	5	0
G. E. Taunton, Esq.	..	..	5	0
Richard Shaw, Esq.	..	..	2	2
Thomas Dodge, Esq.	..	..	1	1
John Craig, Esq.	..	..	1	1
A. J. Senior, Esq.	..	..	1	1
Alexander Sparrow, Esq.	..	..	1	1
Edwin Nolan, Esq.	..	..	1	1
Edwin Latham, Esq.	..	..	1	1
A. C. Brown, Esq.	..	..	1	1
Thomas Bold, Esq.	..	..	1	1
Major Bridson	..	..	2	2
Mrs. Blake	..	..	5	0
G. Brown Westhead, Esq., M.P.	..	..	2	0
M. Harrison, Esq.	..	..	1	1
Captain W. E. A. Gordon, R.N.	..	..	0	10
Captain W. Wood, R.N.	..	..	0	10
Rev. G. R. Portal	..	..	1	0

The Losses on the Mississippi.

It is not surprising that the recent reverses of the Confederates should have excited something like consternation amongst many of their warmest friends in this country, or that those journals which write in the interest of the Lincoln Government should, on receipt of the news of the fall of Vicksburg, have announced for the hundredth time that the end of the rebellion was near. Since the fall of Fort Donnellson, the armies of the Southern Confederacy have been so uniformly successful, that to speculate on disaster seemed almost the negation of Southern superiority; whilst, with the North, the tide of ill-success has been so constant and even that a victory comes upon them as a surprise, and is hailed with the extravagant elation incidental to unexpected good luck. Neither side, perhaps, has, as yet, realized the true character of the struggle in which it is engaged, or compared the varied phases of the conflict with the vicissitudes which have invariably attended every great war between two powerful and determined peoples. It would be an unprecedented fact, that an isolated population striving for its freedom against an invading power with more than double its numerical strength, with the arsenals and workshops of the world open to it, with gunboats that command every navigable river, and fleets that block up every outlet, should yet not experience the checks which never fail to attend upon the most successfully conducted operations between equal powers. The South has done wonders in its two years' struggle. It has built up a military history second to none by the gallantry of its soldiers and the skill of its leaders. And it has met hitherto with unparalleled successes, considering the resources of its adversary. But it must take its turn of trial, of disappointment, and of disaster. The question is one of endurance. Both sides are evidently at their best, and the process of exhaustion is telling its tale North and South. Here it is shown by contracted lines of defence, abandonment of strong positions and desperate ventures; there by street massacres, and angry risings of excited multitudes, pillage and incendiarism, and civil war in its direst forms. At Vicksburg a brave garrison surrenders; but at New York a terrible mob resists the conscription and defies the Federal authority. The loss of Vicksburg is a calamity to the South, but it is nothing in comparison with the commencement of that strife between Republican and Democrat, which has so long been predicted, and which has now drawn blood in the streets of the Empire City. The exhaustion is as apparent, we repeat, in the enforced conscription in the cities of the North, and the merciless slaughter of boys and women, as in the temporary reverses that have befallen the South, and the power which shows the greatest endurance must ultimately win. The issue is not doubtful. The South is battling for freedom, the North for conquest. A whole nation fights cheerfully on the one side. On the other side men cannot be found to fight except under coercion. The war may last months, and even years. There may be more reverses to chronicle before the Southern star is again in the ascendant. But the end will be the triumph of Southern nationality. In the war of Independence, the colonists were defeated in battle after battle, their towns were captured, their territory traversed by victorious armies. But they persevered, and they won. For the time came when the mother-country could no longer support the expense of those great offensive expeditions, and the losses consequent on operations conducted in a sparsely populated, hostile country. The recollection of that struggle, its trials, its reverses, and its final triumph, may strengthen the heart and nerve the arm of the Southern people now.

The loss of Vicksburg and Port Hudson is undoubtedly a severe blow, but to speak of "the backbone of the rebellion" being broken by their capture is simply an absurdity. These two fortresses, be it remembered, did not exist a year and a-half ago; and although of great strategical importance to the Confederates, are of no such value to the Federals. They served a two-fold purpose. They impeded the navigation of the Mississippi; and they occupied the attention of an enormous Federal army. What has been done at Port Hudson may be done at a dozen different points along the Mississippi between Baton Rouge and Memphis; and it is idle to speak of the freedom of that river for the transport of the products of the West so long as for some 400 miles along the river's bank guerillas can train a gun. Both Port Hudson and Vicksburg must now be strongly garrisoned to guard against the possibility of recapture, and their continued occupation will weaken the Federal army available for active operations by some 15,000 men. It is not indeed the actual loss of those strong positions so much as the fact that the armies of Grant and Banks are set free for further service, which constitutes the chief danger. But even this has been overrated. The two armies united cannot, when they have garrisoned Vicksburg and Port Hudson, muster 80,000 men. They have to account for Johnston in Mississippi, with an army of 40,000 or 50,000; and in the West they have the soldiers of Magruder, and Kirby Smith, and Taylor, and others to deal with. They may occupy and ravage the State of Mississippi, and some portions of Alabama, as they have devastated the Teche and Attakapas districts in Western Louisiana. But they can do little more; sooner or later their army will be called away, and the Confederates will reoccupy the country. In fact, the position of Grant's forces is by no means the formidable one it has been represented. His men, greatly enfeebled by exposure and unacclimatised, are quite unfit to undertake a new campaign in the terrible summer heat of Mississippi and Alabama. The waters are low and still falling, so that if his army moves it can no longer depend for supplies on the transport hitherto furnished by gunboats. There is no probability of high waters this year, as the fall of snow was remarkably light in the regions whence the Mississippi draws its stream. Yet the whole chance of Grant's success depends on his taking the field at once. If he delays he gives time to the South to construct new defences, to organise fresh forces, to recover from its wounds. There is the nucleus of a fine army in the paroled prisoners of Vicksburg and Port Hudson; and in a few weeks these veterans may be again in the Confederate ranks, so largely is the balance of prisoners in favour of the Southern army. Reinforced by these troops, and acting on the defensive, General Johnstone will be an awkward enemy to encounter; and we are very much inclined to think that the limit of Federal success has been reached in the South-West. Possibly, the attempt may be made to reoccupy Western Louisiana, and it may be successful. But even for this operation the time is short, and when accomplished it will not have advanced the objects of the Federal Government a step.

The retreat of Bragg's army into Georgia, so far from being a disaster, we regard as a clever strategic move. Of course it would have been a great thing to have defeated Rosecranz. But failing this, it can hardly be said that Bragg's army has not done its work. It has kept at bay a very powerful force some six months, and it has now moved into a country where supplies are abundant, leaving to the enemy a district that has been thoroughly drained of its resources. If Rosecranz pushes forward he abandons his water communication; he must take with him an enormous train, and leave his rear open to Forest's guerilla cavalry. Bragg has repeated Beauregard's masterly retreat from Corinth, and Lee's retirement from Manassas. Rosecranz is not very likely to follow him. The retrograde movement of General Lee is a disappointment only to those who founded extravagant expectations upon his advance. We learn from the New York press that he retired in perfect order, with his sick and wounded and his enormous booty sent before him. We know, too, that he inflicted such a terrible blow on Meade's army as frightened General Dix away from the Yorktown Peninsula and President Lincoln into a new conscription. The riots in New York are the first fruits of Lee's invasion of the North. We have yet to see the last. Lee, by the latest advices, was at Front Royal, and the Federals were in no hurry to go near him. If he can draw General Meade across the river he may possibly yet strike a crushing blow at the army of the Potomac. He may make for Richmond, rest his tired army, and await the Federal attack on his old battleground. But Lee has by this time an army of veterans, an army fit to go anywhere and do anything; and so long as that army is in the field we need have no apprehension about the safety of the capital of the Confederacy. We recollect how the fall of Fort Donnellson was avenged, and we have no fear that the South will not prove herself equal and superior to the present emergency.

The Fruits of Masterly Inactivity.

Those who have so sedulously striven to quiet the conscience of this nation, and to persuade it that England violated no moral obligation as a great Power by tacitly encouraging an attempt to subjugate a people of English race and speech, are now congratulating themselves on their foresight, and taking credit for the prudence of their advice. Events, they allege, have fully justified the policy of Great Britain, not only in refusing to recognise the Confederate States, but in dissuading others from so doing. We fail to perceive any good reasons for these congratulations. If, owing to this policy, the most fertile portion of the American continent were about to be converted into a new Poland, those who shaped it might well repent in sackcloth and ashes the monstrous blunder for which history would hold them responsible. Fortunately for the best interests of civilization, such a consummation is, humanly speaking, impossible. The Confederates have still great armies in the field; they have not even yet exhausted the military strength of their population, for the conscription, confined to the ages between 18 and 35, leaves them beyond this maximum an available able-bodied force of not less than 100,000 men; they are, if not abundantly, at least sufficiently supplied with the materials of war, for they have, what they had not when the struggle commenced, foundries, and powder-mills, and gun-factories. They have, above all, a resolute and unanimous people, while their enemy is fast becoming the prey of internal commotions and domestic broils. But even if the last army of the Confederates were defeated and their last stronghold captured, they could not, unless their own hearts failed them, be reduced to obedient submission. To hold a territory so large as theirs, and peopled by such men as are its natural growth, under military rule, is a task which even the North, in the height of the folly of its pride, must at last despair of accomplishing. And as if to make this task still more hopeless, the North has wantonly deprived itself of a means of success which no conqueror ever before despised. Instead of the usual policy of an invader, endeavouring to conciliate and to remove apprehensions, it has robbed, burned, and murdered, wherever its armies have advanced. It has made war, not merely against armed men, but against women and children, the aged and the infirm. It has threatened, what no other conqueror even of an Asiatic country has ever attempted, to subvert at one blow the entire social fabric of the invaded country, and has avowed its policy to be depopulation and colonization. Such an attempt at conquest would have failed against the smallest province of our Indian Empire; it cannot succeed against a people of six millions, occupying a territory equal to all Western Europe, and superior to their invaders in warlike qualities and patriotic virtue.

But though, happily, the great calamity of the subjugation of the South it is not within the power of Northern wickedness and folly to bring upon the world, there are evils, scarcely less in magnitude, which are justly chargeable to the policy of those who now congratulate themselves upon their prudence. The most momentous of these is the indefinite protraction of the war. During its progress there have been many periods when a single word from Europe would have ended it. Without that word the war could not end. So long as no neutral Power told the North that its enterprise was hopeless, it was warranted in not deeming it so. So long as no neutral recognised its independence, the South must expect that an enemy would continue to assail it. The policy of the South was defensive. Again and again did it hurl back the invader. Without a fleet, it retained all its important seaports save one against the fleets of the aggressor. With astonishing energy and resolution it created armies and the means of supplying them. Its internal tranquillity, despite the fearful shocks from without, remained undisturbed. In every respect and judged by the severest tests, it fulfilled all the conditions of a strong and stable Government, invincible in its own defence. Still Europe continued passive, and bade the North persevere. There was, therefore, but one hope left to the South for ending the contest, and that was to force the North to desist by assuming in turn the aggressive. The chances promised well, and at all events the stake was worth the risk. The bold stroke failed; and it is not too much to say that to this failure is traceable the whole series of reverses that have so suddenly changed the aspect of the war. If, as there is good reason to believe, every other point was weakened in order to make the one blow at the heart of the enemy more decisive, we have no difficulty in explaining the misfortunes in the West, and the renewal of the attack on Charleston. It certainly will not be doubted that the force which Lee carried with him across the Potomac was strong enough to have guarded Richmond, and yet to have saved Vicksburg and Bragg's position in Tennessee. Had the Confederates succeeded, the advocates of "masterly inactivity" might have taken credit to themselves, for the first dawn of peace would ere this have shed a lustre upon the wisdom of their course. But as they would then have shared the credit of success, so must they now bear their share of blame, for it is their policy that has borne its natural fruits.

Great Britain may have cause to regret the counsels which have persuaded her against her better convictions to assume an attitude so unworthy of her position as a great Power in the American quarrel. The ruin of her cotton industry, which will deepen and become more irremediable as the war progresses, will not, perhaps, be the only cause for regret. The loss of prestige is certain to entail more remote, but not less disastrous, consequences. She has not allayed the hatred of the North, but she has deliberately repelled the friendship of the South. In the affairs of the New World, at least, she has therefore permanently shorn herself of her legitimate influence. It will be fortunate if the loss of power to enforce respect shall stop there. No one will attribute motives of magnanimity to conduct so unexpected and inexplicable. It will be easier and more pleasant to those who bear her no love to believe that she lacks the courage or the will to discharge the duties of her proud position. Foreigners will learn to look at her as an admirably balanced commonwealth, indeed, a model of the checks and balances necessary for good government; but a commonwealth which has deliberately exchanged power abroad for ease at home, and which in the all-absorbing passion of growing rich has forgotten the ambition of being great. There are those who, so far from considering this a reproach, would see in it the realization of their most utopian wishes, and who are therefore gratified instead of pained, that Great Britain on the greatest question of the age should not venture to lift her voice above a whisper. But the great mass of the nation will rather think with Lord Russell, who much oftener talks as a wise man than acts as one, when, a few weeks ago, apparently forgetting how glaringly his words were contradicted by his acts, he said—

I have no confidence in the policy of doing nothing, nor can I imagine that a great country like this can separate itself from all the affairs of the world and say, "Let not our voice be heard or our influence prevail. We must look only to ourselves, and take no part in the politics of the world."

The New York Riots.

If ever there was an exemplification on a large scale that there is retributive justice in the affairs of this world, and that it overtakes nations as surely as it does individuals, we have it in the blood-stained streets and burning dwellings of New York city. In the hour of greatest triumph, when the danger of invasion is almost miraculously averted, when the fearful expenditure of men and money in the twelvemonth's campaign on the Mississippi has repaid the many bitter disappointments and revived the hope so long deferred, when its fortunes looked most prosperous, the North has met the punishment its crimes deserved. It is not difficult in this instance to trace cause and effect. Impelled by lust of dominion and of gain to attempt the liberties of a brave and generous people which had done or threatened it no harm, the North has lost one by one all the possessions, in the enjoyment of which it vaunted itself superior to the less-favoured nations of the Old World. It has exchanged the licence which it called liberty, for a despotism more vulgar and brutal than has been known since the worst days of the Roman Empire. The people which boasted that it recognised no coercive power except that of an enlightened public opinion, has learned to delight in passports, spies, military arrests, provost-marshal's, and state prisons. Unburdened with the loads which other States inherit from their past, it has recklessly tied a mill-stone around its neck in the shape of a debt so enormous, that it is alike ruinous to pay or to repudiate. There remained, however, another draught in the bitter cup which this misguided people applied to its own lips. Hitherto, though their liberties and property were at the mercy of the self-imposed tyrants, the sacrifice of life had not been forcibly exacted. Foreign hirelings and the refuse of the large cities, whose loss on the battle-field was a gain, manured with their bodies the distant battle-fields; the native youth of the country might be enticed, or cajoled, or bribed into the service, but they could not be torn by violence from home and family. The time has now come when the demon of war demands this last sacrifice, when the farmer is to leave his plough, the artisan his workshop, every household to give up a son, or a brother, or a husband, to swell the frightful list of the victims of this national madness. It is not surprising that at this demand the public patience should give way, and that the pent-up exasperation should at last vent itself in a frantic struggle of resistance. The recent successes of the North have hastened the long-foreseen crisis, for in profiting by these successes the rulers of the North saw their only chance of executing a measure to abandon which was to abandon the war.

The first attempt was the signal of delivering up the chief city of the North to a lawless mob, and to make it the scene of horrors which have not been paralleled since the darkest periods of the first French Revolution. To retreat and to persevere is now equally dangerous. To retreat would be to forego all the expected fruits of the successes on the Mississippi; to persevere is to inaugurate a civil war at home. New York does not so far differ in the character of its population or the nature of its interests from other cities in the Union, as to make it probable that her example will not be contagious. Riots such as those which she has commenced, are the symptoms of a disease that pervades every part of the body politic, and which, repressed in one locality, is sure to break out more virulently in another. Nor are the rural populations likely to remain free from the infection. It is notorious that in many of the Western States secret associations have long been in process of formation to resist the draft, and frequent riots and murders have for some time given warning of the deadly fire that was smouldering there. None but the most bigoted partisans of the North can have failed to observe that since the beginning of the war, it is that section of the late Union, and not the South, which has been rapidly undergoing the various stages of a revolution. One of these stages has just been reached, and experience teaches us that it is not the last. Who, that has seen the "model Republic" within three short years reach the point when the services of a regular army are required to enforce a conscription, can say with what speed the remaining stages will be travelled through?

There are many lessons to be learned from the impending struggle between anarchy and military despotism, in which a once prosperous country is by its own fault convulsed, but the most instructive to the European observer is that which betrays the animus of the Northern mind to the negro. In every outburst of popular anger, the malignity and cruelty of a Northern mob are invariably wreaked upon the heads of that unfortunate race. Not all the fictions of Abolitionists charge the South with so many fiendish atrocities perpetrated on the black man as the North has been guilty of within the last three years. The New York riot in this respect differs only in proportions from the innumerable smaller ones which preluded it in every part of the so-called free States. It is only yesterday that we heard of a negro torn from a gaol in a small country town and hanged by an infuriated mob, and similar atrocities are reported by almost every steamer. The wholesale massacre of these defenceless people by the Federal soldiery in Norfolk and in Alexandria are still fresh in our recollection. The more systematic, but scarcely less revolting, butchery before the works of Port Hudson is not forgotten. And now we hear of negroes hunted down like wild beasts, beaten to death, drowned, burnt, in the streets of New York. And yet there are those in this country who believe that the North makes war for love of the negro. Imagine the South subjugated, and its lands parcelled out among those who commit such crimes at home and without provocation, what would be the fate of the slaves in such a change of masters? Imagine an emancipation which would hand over the whole negro population of America to the tender mercies of such men as compose the New York mobs.

It is a fact which every English philanthropist should well ponder, that the only authenticated instances of barbarous outrage on the negro have been committed by Northern men, on Northern soil, or where Northern armies held possession. The Southern people had been described as monsters of brutality, wickedness, and lawlessness. The war has proved them humane, patient, brave, God-fearing, and law-abiding. The most bitter enemy of the South and its institutions cannot deny that this much-slandered people have exhibited these qualities in a degree seldom, if ever, excelled; that their armies, whether on their own or an enemy's soil, have been models of discipline; and that their conduct in the field and in the council has been marked by wisdom, moderation, and self-control. Is not such a people better to be trusted with the education of four millions of an inferior race, than one which has never learned to govern itself nor to govern others, and which has never shown itself temperate in the use of power, whether in prosperity or adversity? Is it not fair to assume that a community such as the Southern people have proved themselves, contains within itself the moral salt which will keep it free from universal corruption; that, if crimes such as have been charged to them are incident to their social system, they will find within themselves the virtue and the courage to apply the remedy? In other words, that a people so nobly endowed as the Southerners are admitted to be, may be safely left to the solution of a social problem which they must necessarily understand better than others less immediately concerned, and which they have the greatest interest as men and as Christians to solve justly. May we not read in the flames of the burning negro dwellings in New York, that the interests of the black man are safer in the hands of his present master than in those of his professed liberator?

Mr. Cobden on the Alabama.

No one who has watched with the least attention the course of the two men, even during the last two years, can have failed to recognise the infinite superiority of Mr. Cobden to his brother-in-arms of Birmingham. Both of them are pursuing, with indefatigable vigour and indomitable perseverance, a policy which is utterly opposed to the interests of their country, and utterly hateful to the feelings of ninety-nine in a hundred of their countrymen. Both of them are men in whom certain limited and narrow views of public morality and national interest have assumed the fixity and exclusiveness of monomania; both of them are fanatics for peace; both of them devotees of "economy;" both of them idolaters of Democracy; both of them, consequently, champions of the cause of the United States. On any question, but especially on any question touching our American policy, the two would probably give identical votes, and form identical judgments. And yet, even on this subject, though they may decide alike, no close observer can fail to see that they think and speak very differently. Mr. Bright judges men and things in America merely from a personal point of view; all that belong to his side he loves,—all that are on the other side he hates, with cordial, thorough-going, indiscriminate vehemence. He does not reason, but rails; he does not discuss, but merely denounces. Mr. Cobden, on the other hand, with as strong a bias, evidently makes some effort to think as an Englishman and to argue as a statesman. If his judgment has been formed by prejudice, he supports it by reasoning; if his appeals are neither just nor wise, yet they are addressed to the intelligence and the conscience, not to the passions, and especially to the baser passions, of his audience. If Mr. Bright had enjoyed a good education, and been born a country gentleman, he would have turned out a Ferrand, and railed at manufacturers as he now rails at aristocrats; if born to wealth and brought up at Oxford, Mr. Cobden would have emulated the fame of Peel or Gladstone. The one is a mere brawler, with the temper of a fiend and the conscience of a bravo; the other has in him the making of a statesman and a gentleman, sadly marred by the corrupting association with half-educated and vulgar admirers, and by his unhappy intimacy with a man like Bright; but still, whenever we have heard him speak,—

"Marred as he was, he seemed the goodliest man" that ever spoke from the Radical benches, and addressed the House of Commons in the language of cotton. Closely as they are united by personal and political attachment, between these two men there is a gulf fixed, moral and intellectual, wider than that which separates any two representative men of opposing parties. And the different estimate formed of the two by their adversaries is very marked. Tory orators and Tory journals endeavour to answer Cobden; they are content to denounce his friend. The House of Commons listens to Bright, laughs at him, sometimes cheers him; but it hears Cobden with attention, and weighs his words with the respect which is due to a man who rarely speaks at random.

We shall follow the same course, and address ourselves to answer his last and feeblest speech as if it displayed no unworthy feeling and no un-English predilections. We cannot but express our regret, to begin with, that Mr. Cobden should have quoted a letter of Mr. Gideon Welles to Mr. Sumner, Senator from Massachusetts, as if it were entitled to respect, and should have tried to force the House to listen to a contradiction, on such authority, of a statement made by a gentleman of Mr. Laird's standing and character. It was quite right to publish the letter, and let it go for what it was worth; but it was not well that Mr. Cobden should give his endorsement to the valueless word of a Federal Minister. Unhappily, that position, so far from being a guarantee of truth and honour, has become, since Mr. Lincoln's election, a sure badge of unscrupulous and impudent falsehood. The blasphemous Seward, the swindler Cameron, the mendacious Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary-at-War, from whose office no true report has yet emanated, are worthy colleagues of Mr. Gideon Welles; and as for his correspondent, all the world knows Charles Sumner for a coward, and those who know the history of the event that made him notorious know him also for a liar. This letter does not in the least affect the confidence of any reasonable man in the truth of Mr. Laird's statement; that he was asked to build men-of-war for the Federal Government; a statement which he has shown himself ready to prove. But the attempt to place such a letter from such men in opposition to the word of an English gentleman is damaging to the reputation of Mr. Cobden.

Mr. Cobden's complaints against the Government are founded on a memorial from certain shipowners of Liverpool, expressing great alarm in regard to the consequences of the precedents afforded by the Alabama and her consorts, in case of any future war in which England may be a belligerent, and some country with ample shipbuilding power a neutral. If we are not mistaken, some at least of these gentlemen belong to that party which has diligently exerted itself to put an end to maritime war altogether, by abolishing commercial blockades, and exempting private property not being contraband of war from seizure even under an enemy's flag. They are at least consistent in their endeavours to mitigate the dangers which, since the Treaty of Paris, fall with peculiar and exclusive severity upon their own particular branch of commerce. But they have forgotten to ask themselves whether anything that we might do now to oblige the American Government would be reciprocated if, at some future time, a lucrative trade might offer itself to American citizens in building vessels of war for our enemies. And this omission destroys the whole value of their particular argument.

It does not, however, affect the argument of Mr. Cobden. For whatever America is likely to do, it is our duty to do right; to fulfil every obligation imposed upon us by the law and the comity of nations. And Mr. Cobden's charge is, that our Government has neglected its duty. This accusation divides itself into two branches. First, the Government is charged with neglecting to enforce the Foreign Enlistment Act; secondly, it is charged with refusing to amend that act, where experience has proved it to be insufficient.

The first charge is false in fact. The Government has tried to enforce the law, and has done so in ways not very consistent with ordinary English policy. It has encouraged espionage, if it have not actually set spies upon the building-yards of English shipwrights. It has placed the services of officials of the Customs department virtually, if not formally, at the disposal of Mr. Adams, to prevent the clearance of vessels which the Federal envoy pointed out as suspicious. It has in one such case done grievous wrong, inflicted great injury, and refused all reparation. It has acted with great abuse of its powers for oppression in the case of the Alexandra. That vessel was seized on suspicion, detained for a long time on suspicion, before a word was hinted as to the charges against her; prosecuted in the Court of Exchequer Chamber on the evidence of a gang of scoundrels not one of whom could be believed on his oath by a British jury; and after her acquittal there, still detained in custody to await the result of a frivolous and vexatious appeal, which cannot be tried for months. Of course, the expense to the owners is ruinous; and they cannot recover costs of suit against the Crown. In fact, the Government have determined to do for Mr. Adams, by the power of the purse, what they cannot do by law, and, in the interest and service of the North, to oppress English shipowners by an unscrupulous use of the legal privileges of the Crown and the bottomless purse of the nation. So completely unfounded is Mr. Cobden's first charge against them, that they have actually exceeded the law which he accuses them of neglecting to enforce.

Again, Mr. Cobden misunderstands altogether the intents and character of the Foreign Enlistment Act. Its framers never intended to draw the preposterous distinction between ships and arms of which he has, to our great surprise, shown himself capable. They did not mean to interfere with trade, whether in vessels or in anything else that is contraband of war. They left that trade to be carried on as before, at the risk of those engaging in it; they left it to the belligerents to enforce the rules of war, as it is left to country gentlemen to enforce the laws against poaching. Their object simply was to protect the neutrality of Great Britain from infraction, by her own subjects or by others: to put a stop to private war; and to ensure that no expeditions should sail from our shores to disturb the peace of a Power with which our Sovereign was on friendly terms. Accordingly, the clauses relating to ships forbid their being fitted out, armed, or equipped; but leave our shipwrights free to build and sell them to belligerents, who may afterwards arm and equip them where they like, so it be not in British ports. Therefore, with regard to the Alexandra, the Alabama, and all such vessels, the only question is whether they were fitted out—for we all know that they were not armed—in Liverpool. The Chief Baron thought they were not "fitted out" within the meaning of the Act; and the jury, in the case of the Alexandra, agreed with him. If so, the Act has not been violated.

The second question remains—Is the Act, if enforced, a sufficient fulfilment of our obligations under international law? The Americans have nothing to do with this or any other act; no claims under it upon our Government. But Act or no Act, they may claim from us a strict fulfilment of our international duties as neutrals. They, and Mr. Cobden on their behalf, declare that these duties have not been fulfilled in the case of the Alabama.

Happily, they have furnished us themselves with two conclusive answers. First, a vessel was built in an American port, equipped and armed there, manned by an American crew, taken to Buenos Ayres, transferred to the local Government, and employed, with the same captain and crew, in war with Spain: Held, by the Supreme Court, that there had been no violation of international law. Again, during the Russian war, when, as Mr. Cobden affirms, America observed strict neutrality and strictly enforced a Foreign Enlistment Act exactly like our own, a ship was built in an American port for Russia, taken out to Russia via Brazil, by an American crew, and protected from capture by an American man-of-war. Here, it seems to us, was a clear violation of law, inasmuch as the vessel was contraband, and the American flag could not lawfully protect her from search and capture. But this precedent clearly estops all complaints in the case of the Alabama; and the former decision as clearly shows that, in her case, no violation of international law was committed. True, that she never entered a Confederate port. But that is not our fault. We did not and could not have had legal knowledge that she would not do so; and we had no means of compelling her to make the attempt.

It seems, then, that both Mr. Cobden's charges against the Government, in regard to the Foreign Enlistment Act, are unfounded. The law has not only been enforced, but strained; and it is not only sufficient, if enforced, to meet all claims that can be fairly made upon a neutral Power, but it goes far beyond anything which, according to the decision of the highest American authority, is required of a neutral Power by the law of nations.

The Session.

THE close of the Session brings an unusual sense of relief to everyone who takes any concern in the doings of Parliament, even down to the readers of the debates. Political cynics are apt to consider the House of Commons a nuisance, if they seldom venture to express that Diogenean opinion; to reporters it is a weariness of the flesh; to members in the first half of the session, a pleasant club, and in the latter half a prison, where sentences of hard labour are carried out in earnest; to the political portion of the public its debates are a laborious task, to the non-political mind they are a tiresome subject, occupying space in the newspapers which might be given, according to the taste of the reader, to literature, police reports, two-headed calves, or the Divorce Court. But we never remember a session in which, by universal consent of every one, from Lord Palmerston, who has frequently absented himself, down to the youngest reporter or the most patient reader of the Morning Star, Parliament has been so unanimously voted a dreary bore. It has talked as much as usual, to less purpose; it has promised more things than usual, and has disappointed every one. Motions have been withdrawn, debates have ended in smoke, threatened crises have suddenly faded away; and Parliament goes about its business with a conviction that six hundred gentlemen have wasted in town six months of uncommonly fine weather, without the remotest benefit either to their own reputation or to the condition of their country. Even Ministers, who generally look back with peculiar satisfaction on a quiet session as one in which they have had everything their own way, must have enjoyed less than usual their dinner on Saturday last, off endless courses of indefinite fish and whitebait grown to the size of smelts. For they have not done themselves any credit this year. They have been able to remain in office, without being seriously menaced by any attack from without. But they have sustained one or two unpleasant rebuffs, and have undergone several debates not the less damaging that they did not end with a hostile division. Mr. Gladstone has to forget, if he can, the failure of his scheme for the taxation of charity. Lord Russell has had to swallow so much rebuke, exposure, and ridicule in both Houses as might well spoil his appetite for Greenwich fare. Mr. Layard cannot forget that the last great discussion of the session left unsettled a question of personal honour and veracity between himself and the Emperor of the French. Lord Palmerston has been shown, more plainly than is pleasant, that he holds office not by the loyalty of his followers, but by the confidence personally reposed in him by the country gentlemen opposite, and the rare forbearance of their chief in the Upper House. As for poor Sir George Grey, he is used to all sorts of mortifications, and endures reproof and scandal with an insensibility that nothing can penetrate. And his colleagues may, perhaps, take comfort when they reflect on the dangers which, at the close of the last session, were generally predicted from that which has now closed, and rejoice that the ices of March are past with safety if not with honour. For in August, 1862, most men believed that this year must witness the fall of Lord Palmerston's Government. It had not a majority in the House of Commons, and it had quarrelled irreconcilably alike with the Radical economists and with the Irish Catholics. It was at issue with public feeling in its American policy. Its Foreign Secretary was certain to make some half-dozen serious blunders before the recess was over; and if it should escape all other dangers, the budget could hardly fail to afford an occasion for its overthrow. All these prophecies have been falsified; and the Administration has clearly a right to congratulate itself that its existence has been prolonged for a year on which it had no reason to count.

The Opposition has been unusually quiescent. No single party conflict has occurred; for on the only matter which seemed to promise a fair opening for one, Mr. Gladstone gave way; sacrificing his own crotchet to the manifest wish of the independent members of his own party, and to the necessities of his colleagues. Ministers have been scolded, but never censured. Lord Russell's insolence to Denmark was certainly regarded with extreme disfavour by two-thirds of both Houses: but no one thought it of such importance that an attempt to oust the Government might safely be founded upon it. The capture of Brazilian ships in the territorial waters of the Empire, in order to avenge the quarrel "of a mad Consul and three tipsy seamen," disgusted almost every man of sense and honour in England. Nine in ten of the Liberals themselves would in private have expressed their shame and indignation at this scandalous proceeding in unmeasured terms. But though Lord Malmesbury in one House, and Mr. Fitzgerald in the other, took up the matter warmly, and though Lord Russell's bullying violence, and Mr. Christie's bearish and quarrelsome temper were reprobated as they deserved, a vote of censure seemed too strong a measure for the mood of Parliament, and the culprits went unscathed. The treatment of Greece by our Foreign-office has condemned that unhappy country to several months of anarchy, and now threatens to involve her in civil war; but no one cares to bring the matter to an issue in Parliament, and force Lord Russell to give place to a wiser or more honest man. The surrender of the Ionian Islands threatens us with the loss of our position in the Mediterranean, and the interception of our overland route to India. It inflicts a grievous injury on the Porte; it reverses our ancient policy in the Levant; it is the greatest cession of power, prestige, and influence we have ever made: and yet it has passed without censure and almost without notice, while no one supposes that a hundred members of Parliament approve of it. The quiescence of the Conservatives may be the result of a profound scheme of Parliamentary laches; it may be merely the consequence of the personal popularity of Lord Palmerston; or it may arise solely from the personal reluctance of Lord Derby to undertake once more the disagreeable labour of governing without a great Parliamentary majority. But whatever its origin, it seems to us to involve a very serious dereliction of duty. It devolves upon the Administration an amount of power which no Ministry ought to possess; least of all a Ministry notoriously too weak to be held seriously responsible. The balance of constitutional forces is alarmingly disturbed, and the theory of Executive accountability becomes a farce, when face to face with a Government which scarcely pretends to govern we have an Opposition which altogether forgets to oppose.

In nothing is the danger of such a position better seen than in the American policy we are now pursuing; a policy which is simply the only possible compromise between two conflicting opinions within the Ministerial party—that is, to do nothing and to endure everything. The country suffers; the people grow dissatisfied; Parliament is disgusted—but no change can be made. Change from within would break up the Cabinet; and no change can be enforced from without, save by the chiefs of a party able and willing, if need be, to take office on principles and to carry out views of its own. It is the knowledge that the Opposition is just as devoid of an American policy as the Administration, that makes all debates on that subject end in so lame and impotent a conclusion.

All these debates, however, prove the truth of that which we have so often stated, that the sympathy of the House of Commons is heartily with the Confederate cause. No one can sit through one of them, and fail to perceive that the advocates of the Federal cause are speaking to an audience which has no sympathy with their clients—to an assembly which thinks nothing of the Union, of the Emancipation ukase, of Northern pretensions to the championship of freedom and nationality, and very much of Wilkes and the Peterhoff, of Butler and of New Orleans. No one can be present when any friend of the South is speaking, and not see that the feelings of his audience go along with him; that secession, rebellion, slavery are to them mere words of abuse; that their hearts are with the heroism of Stonewall Jackson, the generalship of Lee, the statesmanlike courage and wisdom of President Davis, and the magnificent resistance of six millions of English-speaking and English-born people to the armies of a barbarous and mongrel rabble. Every phrase that tells heavily against the North is rapturously cheered; every argument that seeks to establish the goodness of the Federal cause is heard with cold indifference if weak, with obstinate incredulity if plausible. These debates have elicited some of the best speeches of the session, especially from those members of each party who, from their party position, are not fettered by actual or prospective responsibility. Mr. Cobden has laboured hard to prove the case of Mr. Adams against the Government for the escape of the Alabama. Mr. Bright has cursed the slaveholding aristocracy with all the exuberant venom of a nature whose ruling passion is hatred, and whose every impulse is one of malignant bitterness; Mr. Forster has pleaded the cause of anti-slavery fanaticism with a calmness and dignity which prove him a fanatic to the core, with none of those lurking doubts which betray themselves in the violent passions and furious outbursts of such unhappy monomaniacs as Coningham and Peter Taylor. Mr. Roebuck has exposed with withering sarcasm the thorough baseness, cowardice, meanness, and savagery of Northern nature; Mr. Lindsay and Mr. Gregory have both spoken with sober good sense and the power of irresistible facts; Lord Robert Cecil, the ablest man in the House who has not yet filled a Cabinet office and may yet expect to do so, has demonstrated his capacity, alike as a statesman and a debater, for the future leadership of his party. The discussion has ended in nothing, because, whatever may have been the temper of individuals, neither party has as a party had courage to inaugurate a policy in accordance with its own convictions and sympathies. But good has been done, and truth has been elicited. The discussions provoked by the frequent captures of British ships under circumstances of aggravated illegality have only drawn from Lord Russell advice to our traders to trust to the equity of American Prize Courts, or vindications of the propriety of the conduct of Admiral Wilkes and Secretary Welles. But answers of this kind only gain time; and enough has been shown of the disposition of Parliament to warn Lord Russell that his patience under American insults is felt as an insult from him to the representatives of the British nation. The discussion of the case of the Alabama has served to elucidate the meaning of the Foreign Enlistment Act; to show that it was meant not to fetter trade, but to hinder private war; to prove that there was no clear legal ground for the seizure either of the Alabama or of the Alexandra, and that in interfering with the building of ships for the Confederacy Ministers are guilty of an unworthy compliance with the unreasonable demands of the Federal Government. The excellent speeches of Mr. Laird have shown beyond dispute, first that the Federal Government has tried to do the very thing it accuses the Confederates of doing—to get ships built in England; and second, that during the Russian war a ship was built for Russia in an American dockyard, and actually protected by American men-of-war during a part of her outward voyage. Though Lord Russell refused to state that neutral ships might lawfully carry munitions of war to neutral ports, and that the ultimate destination of such cargoes in no way concerned the belligerent, others made the statement for him, and it went forth uncontradicted as a warning to the lawless commanders of Federal cruisers. The debate on Mr. Roebuck's motion proved a great deal, though it accomplished nothing. It made known to the world the willingness of France and the right of England to recognise the Confederacy—would that it had not also made known that the chief, if not the sole reason, which restrains our Government from exercising that right is the fear of war. Something has been gained by all this; and if our inaction tempt to insult, yet the tone of Parliamentary discussion may warn even Americans that they have trespassed already too far on the patient forbearance of England.

It is not quite satisfactory to think that the close of the session leaves the Ministry absolute masters of the situation for six months to come, while European affairs are in their present critical position. Lord Russell is hardly the man to whom we would willingly intrust the question of a continued peace, or an all-devouring war, among the Great Powers; and that is the question of the present hour. But the voice of Parliament and of the press has been so nearly unanimous against a Polish war, that we can hardly think that even the present Ministry will neglect the warning. If they do, there is little chance that for them the next session will be as peaceable and safe as this has been.

THE CAMPAIGN ON THE LOWER MISSISSIPPI. (From our Own Correspondent.)

NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA, JULY 4.

The arrival of three steamboats from up river last evening, at 6 o'clock, brought the following intelligence.

Night before last the steamboats Zephyr and Iberville left our Levee with horses, provisions, and a few passengers to go to Springfield Landing. At two o'clock yesterday morning, as they were steaming by the Trinchard plantation, six or seven miles below Donaldsonville, on the left bank of the river, three guns fired on the boats, the very first shot passing through the steam drum of the Iberville and disabling her. She drifted on to the bank, where she was exposed to the fire, not only of the battery, but of the sharpshooters on shore. She lay there as a target, while in rapid succession a shell was put through her pilot house, two shots through her stern, one below water in her hull, and one man (only) on board was wounded. The Zephyr received a shot or two, which passed through her upper works and wounded two men. The Sally Robinson and gunboat No. 2 were in close proximity—the Robinson, on her way down from Springfield Landing, and the gunboat policing in that vicinity. No. 2 shelled the shore, while the Robinson took the Iberville in tow. The latter pumped all the way down to keep afloat, and is now at the Levee in a sinking condition. The Zephyr also thought that the passage from Donaldsonville to New Orleans might be safer than from that point to Springfield Landing, and she returned with the rest to the city last evening.

On the way down, an officer on the Sally Robinson shot and killed a drunken soldier who was insolent and threatened the officer with a knife.

Early on Thursday morning the Tennessee cavalry made a raid into Springfield Landing, which is really Banks's base and his place for stores. It is not four miles from his headquarters. One of the Confederate prisoners who was taken during the short skirmish which followed the raid, says that the intention was to destroy the steamboats lying at the bank. As it was, I learn, both from Federal and other authority, the Confederates succeeded in destroying a large amount of military stores, and in running off a few of the collected "contrabands."

The official organ this morning publishes not a word of this information, though it was known all over the city last night. It does publish, however, the following stringent order, which shows how thoroughly the invasion panic-scare has taken hold of the officials. It would seem that they fear internal troubles, as well as an attack from outside:—

Head-quarters, Defences of New Orleans,
New Orleans, July 3, 1863.

General Orders, No. 18.

Hereafter no public assemblages, except for public worship, under a regular commissioned priest, will be allowed in this city for any purpose or under any pretence whatever, by white or black, without the written consent of the Commander of the Defences of New Orleans; and no more than three persons will be allowed to assemble or congregate together upon the streets of the city. Whenever more than that number are found together by the patrol, they shall be ordered to disperse, and, failing to do so, the offenders shall be placed in arrest.

All bar-rooms, coffee-houses, stores, and shops of every description, will be closed at 9 o'clock P.M.

All club-rooms and gambling-houses are hereby closed until further orders.

No citizens or other persons, except the police and officers in the United States' service, or soldiers on duty or with passes, are to be allowed in the streets after 9 o'clock P.M.

By command of Brig.-Gen. EMORY.

W. D. Smith, Lieut.-Col., A.A.A.G.

General Emory, commanding the defences of New Orleans, also publishes this morning an order with regard to organizing the brigade for the defence of the city; and General Shepley, who is to command the brigade, publishes an order, in which he "appeals to the Union citizens of New Orleans to rally in defence of their homes, their beloved city, and of that sacred flag and glorious Union to which they have voluntarily vowed their fidelity and allegiance."

At this hour we are waiting to hear from the first gun which is to open the last assault upon Port Hudson. The reduction of that place is one of the preliminary essentials to open the Mississippi—and yet, after the most strenuous efforts since the 14th of March to effect that opening, the recent burning of the boats at Donaldsonville, and the more recent firing upon Federal steamboats near the same point, to say nothing of the capture of the Boston, almost in sight of the fleet, and under the very nose of the ports below the city—all these things show that the Mississippi is not yet safely "open" from the Passes to Port Hudson.

Port Hudson may fall, Vicksburg may be reduced, but the river is not safely navigable so long as there is an opportunity to plant a battery on either shore between St. Louis and New Orleans.

There is but one thing that can open the Mississippi, and that is PEACE.

NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA, JULY 3.

Whenever a boat comes down the river from Port Hudson, the Levee—generally so dull and deserted, now-a-days—shows some little signs of life. There is a crowd of expectants almost every evening waiting for the boat. Some are drawn thitherwards by sympathy, many more by curiosity, and a few go to the Levee hoping to hear the latest news from trustworthy, because from unofficial sources. The boats bring always the same sort of passengers—wounded soldiers, and sometimes a few picket-caught prisoners. These last, if there is an opportunity to exchange a word with them, always give a widely different, and far more truthful story, in respect to the situation, than the one current at headquarters, and industriously circulated by Federal officials. Little, next to no reliance whatever is to be placed upon the statements with regard to military movements in this Department, published officially in the Federal official organ. Small and temporary successes are magnified into important victories, while defeats and disasters are not chronicled at all. Thus, the other day, news reached the city of the capture of Brashear by the Confederates; the local journals received a Provost-Marshal's order, notifying them by order of the commanding-general "to make no allusion for the present to military movements in this Department." Nothing has been printed here—not even a line respecting this important capture.

Nevertheless, four days after the issue of the order "to make no allusions to military movements," the official organ published a flaming account of a small Federal success at Donaldsonville. The account stated that "last Sunday morning the enemy attacked Donaldsonville at 1.30, and fought till daylight"—that "they met with a bloody repulse, losing 120 prisoners"—the Federals "lost six killed and fourteen wounded; among the latter two commissioned officers." The following day the official organ thought it was "probable" that "the enemy's entire loss in killed, wounded, and prisoners, amounted to about six hundred." In the first account it was stated that one or more gunboats participated in the fight. It was not till this evening that the official organ (Banks's paper) discovered and published the fact that the gunboats Princess Royal, the Kinneo, and the Winona were in the action.

Now, the facts are as follows:—There was (and is) a considerable Confederate force in the rear of Donaldsonville, and Sunday morning an advance detachment was sent in to surprise and seize the position. Fortunately for the Federals, who were in small force, there were gunboats in the river to shell the "rebels," otherwise every Federal there who was not killed would have been taken prisoner. The gunboats gained the day; they shelled out the Confederates, who had carried and occupied the fort, and landed a force which, in conjunction with the volunteers, succeeded in capturing about 100 Confederate prisoners, who were brought to the city. And yet Banks's paper, which presumed it was probable that the "rebel loss" amounted to 100 or 200 more men than were engaged on that side in the fight, was utterly oblivious till the public had forgotten all about this really small affair, that three gunboats carried the day. Nor, so far as its columns indicate, does the official organ know to-day that Banks was terribly repulsed at Port Hudson, May 27 and June 14; and that June 23, Brashear City, with hundreds of prisoners and an enormously valuable amount of military stores, was captured by a body of 600 Confederates.

Since sending my letter by the last steamer, I have seen one of the forty who escaped from Brashear by gunboat on the morning of the surprise and capture. He gives me some interesting particulars in addition to the account already sent. When the battery at Berwick Bay opened fire at daylight, many of the soldiers and people ran down to the shore to see what was going on. They knew the Confederates had no transportation to cross the bay at that point, and the attack, which had been expected for twelve days, was looked for in the direction of Lafourche. Shortly after the battery fire began, the Confederates dashed into the city from the woods above. They were resisted by a company of negroes and the small guard of the Provost-Marshal. A few shots were exchanged, and a Federal lieutenant and sergeant were wounded. This was all the fighting. The Federals, excepting the forty who escaped on the gunboat, surrendered as prisoners.

Besides the capture of six or seven hundred convalescents, several companies (belonging to different regiments) on duty, and 2,000 negroes who had run away, or were stolen from the country round about—the amount of property "confiscated" by the Confederates was sufficient to compensate them for nearly all the property destroyed and stolen by the Federal army in its advance to Alexandria. A train of more than thirty cars (with two locomotives) had been on the track near the depot for a day or two, waiting an opportunity to run to New Orleans. They were loaded with flour, bacon, whisky, ammunition, shot, shells, Enfield rifles, "niggers' traps," and the negroes were to be sent on that train. In the magazine, besides a large quantity of filled and unfilled shells, were nearly sixty thousand rounds of ball cartridges, and in a building near by were tents to cover 20,000 men, thousands of knapsacks, and other valuable military stores. Seven or eight first-class blockade runners could not have brought the munitions of war thus confiscated by the Confederates. They have had abundant time to remove the property, unmolested and undisturbed.

"Rebel invasion" scares are chronic all over the country now. The Federals here have had their panic, and they are by no means free from fear to-day. It is noticeable that the late steamers for the North have taken several prominent Federal officials, who thought the place was becoming too warm for them. Almost all the United States' property has been brought over from the Algiers' side and stored in this city. And as a means of defence, General Emory has authorized the organization of a brigade for home defence, and Brigadier-General Shepley, Acting-Military Governor, has been placed in command. The order for this brigade was not printed, but circulated in copy among the supposed-to-be faithful. The result, thus far, has been the enlistment of a few Custom-House clerks and policemen, and a considerable quantity of negroes, who are now camped in Congo Square, looking for their new army clothes, and feeding on Government "grub." The idea of actual invasion so long as the gunboats are in the river is manifestly absurd.

It is not unlikely that if Banks continues to persist in laying siege to Port Hudson, the Confederates may threaten the city as a feint to draw back the Federal forces. With their present small force the Confederates can do better in the country than in New Orleans; and the occupation of the city without possession of the river and the forts below would be impracticable.

After innumerable statements that Port Hudson was to fall in two, three, or four days, according to different telegrams sent down since mid-June, we have the assurance to-day that the "last assault" will be made to-morrow. It is understood that if unsuccessful, the siege will be raised.

I send you Governor Moore's message; it is printed in the Louisiana Democrat, published in Alexandria, the city so lately "captured" by Banks. The Democrat notifies its subscribers, by the bye, that it can receive no new subscriptions, as its list (5,000) is all that it can do press-work for. The Jackson Mississippi of late dates has reached this city, but contains no news of importance. During the Federal raid in that place the Northern vandals destroyed the type, presses, and everything in the office. The paper now appears in new and beautiful imported type, and is another exposition of the beauties of what the Federals flatter themselves is the "blockade" of Charleston, Savannah, and Mobile.

And now, pending the next "last assault" upon Port Hudson—which may be a success, though more likely to be another ruinous repulse—let me note the actual situation of the Federals in the Gulf Department to-day. Banks is nominally the Commanding-General of Louisiana, Alabama, Texas, and, for ought I know, his commission may give him military jurisdiction over the whole of China. He actually holds the first, second, third, and fourth districts, composing the city of New Orleans, Algiers opposite, Baton Rouge, the ground his army corps camps upon in the vicinity of Port Hudson and one or two points on the Mississippi by means of the gun-boats, which police the river between the Passes and Springfield Landing.

All the territory of Texas, all of Alabama, and this state, excepting the few points specified, are in the hands of the Confederates. This includes not only the entire Teche, Opelousas, and Attakapas country so recently "conquered" by Banks, but also the entire Lafourche occupied by Butler and turned over to Banks (simply because it could not be stolen and carried to the North). Moreover the restoration of this territory to its owners necessitates the return of a vast amount of cotton and other property, which Banks "confiscated," but could not carry away.

We have a right to review a campaign which, under the present commanding-general, covers a period of nearly seven months,—and Banks's failure, thus far, is due to the following causes:—

1. His utter want of military capacity. No one can doubt that Banks possesses many excellent personal qualities. His honesty is in striking contrast with the rapacity of his predecessor, and he has done all that "orders" can do to repress the thieving proclivities of his subordinates and followers. He is something of a politician, and has been Speaker of the United States' House of Representatives. But to successfully conduct an extensive campaign, and one of conquest and subjugation—to reduce a place like Port Hudson, a man needs a certain amount of military talent and military education.

2. The want of reinforcements. That is a matter between him and his Government.

3. His dependance upon a corps d'Afrique of 18,000 negroes to carry out his plans. The corps never can be raised, and of the nucleus (nearly three regiments) more than half of them were cut to pieces in the assaults of May 27 and June 14. It was, indeed, short-sighted or misplaced confidence, if the commanding General supposed that the summary slaughter of these poor deluded negroes would be a stimulus to further enlistments from that race.

4. His first congratulatory order, after the small successes attending his raid across the Teche, felicitates his corps upon the fact that "in three months" they have become soldiers. He thus ignores the two and three years' men—the veterans left to him by Butler—and confines his congratulations to the new nine months' men he brought here with him. By that one order he lost the affection of half his army corps.

5. His favoritism in placing regiments in line of battle. This is a very serious charge, and I do not make it. But an unofficial list of the killed and wounded in the assault of May 27, published in a New York journal, shows a frightful disproportion between the large numbers in the New York regiments, and the almost none at all in Massachusetts and other New England regiments.

6. In his official report of that day's fight, he devotes whole paragraphs to fulsome eulogies of the "bravery" of his blacks, and almost entirely ignores the losses among his own officers.

7. And the last that need be noticed now—the condition of his army corps, disheartened, defeated, demoralized, and, in no small degree, disaffected.

All these errors—excepting, of course, his want of military capacity, and his want of reinforcements—are so clearly his own fault, and arise so entirely from the non-exercise of ordinary foresight and sagacity, that one may well wonder how Banks was ever considered a "politician." He actually closed his eyes to everything but his own political future, and without a particle of prestige attaching to former successes, he entered upon this campaign as if he had but to wave his hand to open the Mississippi.

There is, moreover, an undisguised want of cordiality between the naval and military arms of the Federal force. You scarcely ever see the officers of the two services together. This extends throughout the country. The United States navy, which boasts of its Farraguts, Porters, Footes, Duponts, and a host of distinguished names, naturally despises the new-made political and stock-jobbing officers who fairly flood the Federal ranks. The youngest midshipman knows that while a man may step from a shoe-shop, oyster saloon, or lawyer's office, and command a regiment or brigade of volunteers, the commandant of the smallest gunboat must needs have a knowledge of his profession; and the American sailors have a contempt for an army largely composed of the dregs of a foreign population—or, as it is frequently phrased—"made up of Dutchmen and niggers." In this department the hostility of the navy to the army dates back to the time when Farragut, after passing through the feu d'enfer of the forts, came up and compelled the surrender of New Orleans; and Butler placidly sailing up the Mississippi a week afterwards, landed and coolly claimed the victory.

And next, it is due to Banks' failure to co-operate with Farragut when his fleet was subjected to the terrible fire of the Port Hudson batteries, March 14, 15. It is the universal belief in the navy, that had Banks then assisted, instead of contenting himself with the flattering thought that he was "creating a diversion," Port Hudson might have been taken. As it was not we can afford to let the navy indulge in the delightful delusion. It is due, too, to a general ignoring of the fleet's services—even in so small a matter as the Donaldsonville affair of Sunday last. The gunboats there alone prevented the small Federal force on land from being summarily "gobbled." They alone held Brashear City, so long as it was held at all; and when they were withdrawn the city was speedily captured by the Confederates. They alone keep the river open for the return of the remains of Banks' army from Port Hudson, and enable that army to be supplied with stores and provisions from this city. And the gunboats alone, by lying in position to shell this city, prevent General Magruder and staff from dining in the St. Charles Hotel this evening.

It is not surprising that "rebels" even should have some respect for this arm of the Federal force—though here, as elsewhere, it has achieved almost every Federal success since the inception of the war. It is because, so far, at least, as this department is concerned, as yet no suspicion attaches to any of the naval officers that they are cotton-and-sugar-speculating and spoon-stealing thieves; nor is the service haunted by a horde of needy, greedy Northern adventurers, who look upon the war as a gigantic raid to ruin the planters of the South, for the purpose of enriching the plunderers from the North.

To-morrow brings another anniversary of the American Independence Day. It will be celebrated, even here. It is hardly necessary to say that "all business will be suspended," for the war—so far as general business is concerned—has long ago made every day here a holiday. At the North, the papers tell us, and the published programmes indicate, the day, this year, will be one of more than usual public demonstration. It is strange that the effort of the American colonies to throw off the yoke of Great Britain should be called a Revolution, while a precisely parallel movement by the Southern States is a rebellion. Spread-eagle orators, to-morrow, will fulminate once more the annual anathemas against the enormity of employing mercenary hireling Hessians to crush the liberties of the colonies; but they will be as silent as the graves which cover the half million men North and South, who have fallen in this war, about their own German and Irish regiments, and about the infamy of instigating and enlisting negro slaves to murder their own masters.

NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA, June 26.

In my last letter I gave you a brief account from "official" sources of a skirmish at Lafourche Crossing, which Federal accounts magnified into a victory. It is somewhat significant that the day following brought intelligence the authorities do not see fit to give to the public. Yesterday perfectly trustworthy information, widespread throughout the city, induced the Provost-Marshal to issue an order to all the journals to make no allusion at present to military movements in this department.

You have received already, in connection with the Lafourche Crossing skirmish, an account of the critical situation of the Federal forces at Brashear City. The Lafourche "victory" resulted in the Federals burning the bridge over the bayou, and throwing their field guns into the stream. They then retreated to Bute, nearer this city, and pretended to make a stand by throwing up entrenchments. But yesterday and this morning the entire Federal force came back to the city and abandoned the Lafourche. To complete the "want of connection" between this city and Berwick's Bay, after the Federals burned the Lafourche Crossing bridge, the Confederate store up the rails on the road for a mile or more westward, thus rendering the isolation of Brashear City, so far as Federal relief was concerned, complete.

Tuesday evening the United States' transport St. Mary, sent from this city, via the Gulf, to bring away the men at Brashear, met in Berwick's Bay, twenty-five miles from the city, the United States' gun-boat Hollyhock. The St. Mary hove-to and received on board the Provost-Marshal and forty soldiers, who had escaped from Brashear. Their story—a most interesting one—is as follows:—

The force in occupation at Brashear—a part of two Federal regiments, one company of battery-men, and several convalescents—heard of the skirmishes of Saturday and Sunday at La Fourche, and naturally looked for an attack upon their own position. But they looked in the wrong direction. They expected to encounter an advance from Lafourche at Bayou Boeuf. Early Tuesday morning, two batteries, placed in position the night before at Berwick city across the Bay, opened upon Brashear city. Captain Noblett commanded a small Federal force in Fort Buchanan—an earthwork on Lake Polouandre, a mile and a half north of the city. His horse came running riderless into town, and very soon after a Confederate force of some six hundred men, a portion of them cavalry, dashed into the Federal camp. The surprise was followed by an immediate surrender of the Federals. The few men who succeeded in boarding the gunboat were all who escaped. The Confederate force that achieved this brilliant success was a part of General Mouton's division. The men crossed Lake Polouandre on rafts and in flat boats, and came down to the city through the woods. The success of the manoeuvre was complete.

As yet the only information we have is from the few men who escaped on the gunboat, and who arrived in this city by the St. Mary yesterday. They do not know who commanded the Confederates; they say they do not know the extent of the captured Federal force. There were two thousand negroes, men, women, and children, in the place. The whole of the superfluous baggage left by Banks when he advanced to Alexandria was captured. Among the items are tents sufficient to cover a small army, officers' private baggage, thousands of knapsacks, a considerable store of arms, some provisions and supplies, besides the four guns in Fort Buchanan, four more at Bayou Boeuf, a 30-pound Parrot in the city, and at least 30,000 rounds of ammunition.

The value of this success, apart from even a temporary occupation of an important position, can hardly be estimated. It almost atones for the ravages committed by the Federal army in its late march through that section of the state in the advance to Alexandria. The captured property will speedily be transported beyond the Teche, and what cannot be readily removed will be destroyed.

Your map will show you the position of Manchac, at the outlet of Lake Maurepas, fifty or more miles north-west from this city. The Jackson railroad from New Orleans crosses the Pass, and the bridge has been burned more than once since the war began. The Federals have recently completed it once more, and yesterday a train was sent up from Kenner (twelve miles from here) to Manchac, to bring down the workmen and tools used in repairing the bridge. The train, with the only locomotive on the road, was captured by the Confederates. They now command the railway, and if they are not compelled to destroy the bridge to prevent a Federal attack, they have an important position for an advance upon this city.

From Port Hudson, which within a day or two has actually become of secondary interest, we have nothing but a few more sick and wounded men. The foraging train of seventy waggons, whose capture I announced in my last letter, was sent out to collect cotton. That long-looked-for "last" assault has not been made. In the city among the Federals there is a nervous anxiety for the not far-off future. The Provost guard is doubled, and six or more gunboats are in position to shell the city in the event of a "demonstration."

In a recent letter I characterized the late advance through the Teche and Attakapas country as a Federal horse, mule, cattle, and cotton collecting raid. The very first telegram from the field informed the public that the army corps "found an abundance of everything." The entire route of march was a scene of wholesale plunder. We have just received the return journals from the North, containing comments upon the advance. The Abolition Evening Post notifies the world that New Orleans is now the place where cotton can be procured in abundance. The New York Commercial Advertiser boasts "that the property captured by General Banks in this campaign will amount in value sufficient to almost pay the entire expenses of his command." The Providence (R. I.) Journal, edited by United States Senator Anthony, copies approvingly a letter from New Orleans, which says that "on the 15th ult. there were five thousand bales of cotton at Opelousas in Federal possession, and that four hundred bales a-day were coming in from the surrounding country." Indeed, the Northern journals generally seem to have considered the collection of cotton as of more importance even than the "conquest" of Louisiana.

Not a word about the devastated plantations, the destroyed property, the desolated homes, the dead, the worse than dead negroes swept away from the fictitious "slave-pens" of Abolition poetry into the actual slaughter pens of Port Hudson. The New York Express speaks of the wholesale plunder of planters in this department as follows:—

The Department of the Gulf has been one of the richest—if not the very richest "places" of the war, for that numerous class of patriots whose love of country is but love of plunder and pelf. We had cherished the hope that these things would cease when General Butler was re-called, and when a certain Maine Colonel was court-martialed for offences which, if perpetrated under ordinary circumstances, would have sent the perpetrator to a State Prison or Penitentiary,—but almost every arrival from New Orleans shows how sadly we are disappointed. Now, soldiers are not thieves, though there are a great many thieves among soldiers,—and we fear that officers, even more than the privates, are open to the charge.

The Confederate re-occupation of the plundered territory has, of course, restored much of the cotton, awaiting shipment, to its owners, and what could not be readily removed has been destroyed. In spite of the felicitations of Federal journals, it is scarcely possible that Banks's cotton successes are a sufficient consolation for his recent disasters at Port Hudson, Lafourche, and Brashear city.

The following from the Federal official organ's money article to-day contains a world of information that additional words would only weaken:—

The condition of financial and commercial affairs remains substantially unchanged, and extreme dullness still prevails. Movements now in progress in this section of the country have checked the late receipts of cotton and sugar. The total stock of produce from the interior is too limited for operations of any magnitude, and transactions in financial circles are consequently on a very limited scale. The total available stock of sugar in the country is extremely small, and the present prospects for a crop this season are of a most unfavourable character, while the indications are that what little may be produced will be very inferior in quality.

It is curious, too, to read the comments of the Abolition journals upon the negro regiments in Banks's army. The Providence Journal says: "The black soldiers in Louisiana are giving incontrovertible proofs of being fit to fight rebels,"—meaning, no doubt, that they are fit for slaughter; but the Boston Transcript thinks they "have demonstrated, by a loss of six or seven-ninths of their whole number, that negroes can fight." The New York Express tells the actual story thus:—

The more we hear of what the negroes did at the sanguinary assault on the enemy's works at Port Hudson, the plainer it would seem to appear that the poor creatures were terribly slaughtered, and placed in a position where slaughter was almost foreseen to be unavoidable. With General Banks' (white men's) bayonets in their rear, they were marched right up to the muzzles of the rebel guns. The negroes in such a position, could only do one thing, and that was to die—as they did.

There is damning evidence in the Port Hudson correspondence of the Abolition New York Times. Speaking of these same negroes, it says:—

These brave people went on, from morning until 3.30. p. m. under the most hideous carnage that men ever had to withstand, and that very few white men would have had nerve enough to encounter, even if ordered to. During this time they rallied, and were ordered to make six distinct charges, losing 37 killed, and had 155 wounded, and 116 missing—the majority, if not all, of these beings, in all probability, now lying dead on the gory field and without the rites of sepulture; for when, by a flag of truce, our forces in other directions were permitted to reclaim their dead, the benefit, through some neglect, was not extended to these black regiments.

Whose fault it is I know not, but it is painful to state that in the midst of all this carnage, when men in every form of horrible mutilation were being sent to the rear—after fighting as very few white men could have fought—not a single ambulance or stretcher was there to gather their torn and lacerated bodies.

Of course not; the "niggers," when they stood between the white regiments and certain death—when they had been bayoneted from the rear into the sure slaughter which awaited them in front, their work was done.

I have a copy of the Fort Brown Flag (published at Brownsville, Texas), June 5, brought here by a schooner from the Rio Grande. The weather there was warm and yellow-feverish. Trade was tolerably active, but cotton was dull, touching at one time during the week 20 cents. The United States' sloop-of-war appeared off the bar lately, and remained three or four days. She captured a small schooner during her stay, and paraded the prize through the fleet of vessels (all, of course, engaged in the cotton trade "with Matamoros, Mexico")—and Mexico, you are aware, raises no cotton), as a great thing. General Miramon, ex-President of Mexico, with Generals Cobos and Benivades, were at Brownsville, and had tendered their services to Juarez to assist in expelling the French. Confederate General Bee was about to move his head-quarters to Columbus. The Flag thinks "it must have been an urgent necessity that made General Magruder remove not only the troops, but the commanding officer." Of course, the editor of the Flag has not yet learned of the operations of Magruder's men in Louisiana. The command of the Texan frontier devolves upon Colonel Duff. Hon. Pendleton Murrah, Colonel J. M. Crockett, and General T. J. Chambers are announced by their friends as candidates for the governorship of Texas. Meanwhile, it is pleasant to reflect that Texas is supposed to be a portion of the Gulf Department commanded by Major-General Banks; and that Brigadier-General Hamilton, who, at last accounts, was "lecturing" in Boston, Massachusetts, is duly appointed by Mr. Lincoln as military governor of Texas. Sancho Panza held a similar commission from Don Quixote. The Federal governorship of Japan has not yet been announced.

The New York papers are likely to mislead some of your readers, in their publication of the following list of passengers by the Cahawba, which sailed from this city June 2, and arrived, via Fortress Monroe, at New York June 10. She landed these Confederate officers at Fortress Monroe:—

Colonel A. R. Witte, 10th Arkansas; Captain I. Atkinson, G. R. Hart, Captain D. W. Creath, of General Bee's Staff; Captain G. S. Fusilier, Captain Taylor, of ditto; Captain E. Holmes, of Crescent Regiment; Captain Fuller, of Queen of the West; Captain Grieshe, of 4th Texas Cavalry; G. W. Holloway, 11th Louisiana battery; Captain J. H. Long, 4th Texas Cavalry; Captain J. F. McLean, 9th Tennessee; Captain L. W. Matthews, 10th Arkansas; Captain W. H. Prault, 1st Alabama; Captain P. J. Semmes, C. S. Light Battery; Captain E. A. Scott, 9th Louisiana; Captain I. B. Wolfe, 14th Arkansas; Captain J. W. Youngblood, General Gardner's staff; Lieutenant Samuel Alstein, Crescent Regiment; W. H. Andrews, 1st Alabama; B. E. Boyle, 7th Texas Cavalry; A. Burgines, Crescent Regiment; F. W. Brown, Louisiana Battery; E. A. Camanche, C. S. Conford, 4th Louisiana; J. Dubeq, gunboat Diana; D. M. Ewes, ditto; F. Jackson, 8th Louisiana; W. C. Jutter, 4th Louisiana; Charles Greenback, 30th Louisiana; J. Henson, Miles's Legion; D. B. W. Eates, 9th Louisiana Cavalry; H. L. Fash, Beauregard Regiment; Kirkland, 9th Louisiana Battery; C. W. Kelsey, 10th Arkansas; S. D. Melville, 18th Louisiana; W. H. Lilly, 10th Arkansas; E. McGowan, purser, gunboat Diana; J. M. Mobely, 1st Cherokee; A. P. Morse, Ordnance Corps; J. N. Musselman, 4th Louisiana; W. Nelson, Crescent Regiment; D. A. Nation, 15th Arkansas; Z. M. Porter, Arizona Regiment; Charles Russell, 13th Louisiana; W. H. Rodgers, Crescent Regiment; A. Echlich, 4th Texas Cavalry; John Smith, Arizona Regiment; G. N. Stafford, 8th Louisiana; J. Weber, 28th Louisiana; W. Welch, Arizona Battalion; H. W. Wilkinson, Steed's Battalion.

It is presumed that these were the officers who took possession of the steam-boat Maple Leaf, which was carrying them from Fortress Monroe to Fort Delaware. They ran her down the coast forty-five miles below Cape Henry Lighthouse, and went on shore in small boats. Twenty-six of the officers remained in the steamboat, and went back in her to Fortress Monroe.

AFRICAN MISSIONS.

There are few things in these days that come so much as a matter of course as a letter from the interior of Africa, or some other cooler, but still more inhospitable region, informing us of the extinction of a Mission or the last agonies of a bishopric. In the intelligence of the Livingstone Expedition, given on Thursday from the South African Advertiser, relating the extreme sufferings of several Missionaries in the Zambezi region, the melancholy death of one and the utter want of visible results will hardly excite surprise, unless it be in the minds of the most youthful and sanguine supporters of the Mission. It appears that a dreadful famine had prevailed in the whole of that region, inasmuch that it is not only impossible to make journeys, but one of the Missionaries died at his post. They witnessed the deplorable spectacle of a third of the population perishing, villages falling into ruins, poor creatures crawling over the country in quest of food and dying by the roadside, or thrown into the rivers by the equally famished cultivators, whose patches of corn they were pillaging. The Zambezi Mission is interwoven with Dr. Livingstone's explorations, and has its full share of the perils, the delays, and the adventures that we naturally expect in the story of a discoverer. The Rev. Mr. Stewart, arriving in the Zambezi early last year, waited five months in the hope of proceeding with Dr. Livingstone, and then started alone, in a canoe with a native crew, towards Lake Nyassa. Within fifty miles of it he was driven back by the absolute impossibility of procuring food. He returned and went to the station of the Oxford and Cambridge Mission, where he received much kindness and was taking excursions into the surrounding country. In September he ascended the Zambezi a good way, and was again obliged to return for want of food. By another route he finally arrived at Mozambique, and had a most hospitable reception from the Portuguese Governor. Letters from the Station on the river Shire confirm the sad story, and describe the famine as caused by drought, but aggravated by native wars. Mr. H. C. Swinburn died on the morning of last New Year's Day of exhaustion produced by fever. It was feared that the Mission must be abandoned, and that the Missionaries would have to return to Joanna, to Natal, or to the Cape. As to the general condition of the country to which these Missions are sent, several letters handed to us by Captain Speke, and published side by side with the above extracts from the Cape journals, give sad and ample testimony. The races that occupy that vast interior are just above savages. They are violent, rapacious, thoroughly unsettled, singularly without religion, except here and there the murderous rites of an abominable Fetish, and, what is the worst of all, without the sentiment of honour. They are not to be trusted. They know not the truth in the most primary sense of the word. Life there is cheap, for man is a weed. There is neither a beginning nor an end in such a region, for there is not the moral basis to build upon, nor is there any security that the work will not be suddenly extinguished in blood by some outbreak of barbarism.

Of course, we shall be told that this is what missionaries must expect. The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church. The first Christians were martyred by wholesale. Some of the Apostles were martyred. If we talk of famine, of perils by land and by water, of imprisonments, and of cruelties, did not St. Paul suffer all? This is the beginning of all Churches. A young gentleman of Oxford or Cambridge has his choice. He may choose—not exactly "the pleasure of sin for a season," but a pleasant living in a good neighbourhood, a pretty parsonage, wife, children, and all the rest of it;—or he may go forth as an Apostle to preach the Gospel to the heathen, and share the labours, the death, and the crown of an Apostle. If we venture to demur, or to ask a question, we shall be set down as worldly wise, "carnally minded," and perhaps atheistical. So we will not obtrude any of our own worldly wisdom into this sacred subject. No City oracle shall be appealed to on this occasion. What we say is what we have received from the Gamaliels at whose feet we sat many years ago. In the good and learned books we used to read, and the lectures we attended, it was said to be testimony to the reasonable and truthful character of the Gospel that it was never preached without due preparation. Everywhere the ground was made ready for it. For its sake, and to prepare the way for it, one family was chosen, a solemn ritual instituted, a Divine polity established, and prophets inspired. To prepare for its reception in the wide world, empire succeeded empire, philosophy gave way to philosophy, paganism sublimated or was debased, everything ripened to receive or fell out of the way; union, dispersion, peace, war were all worked to the same happy result. The Apostles preached first to the orthodox Jew, then to the schismatic Samaritan, then to the high-minded Roman, then to the speculative Greek, then, and then only, and only by the way, to the so-called barbarian living under Greek and Roman influences. Pearls were not cast to swine, nor that which is holy to the dogs. All this we have been told again and again. The very names of the Epistles in the New Testament, besides their contents, testify to the fact that the Gospel was preached everywhere in the first instance to enlightened communities, deeply imbued with philosophy and science, and with a religion that could be appealed to for the basis of actual truth, or Divine instinct, which it contained. Accordingly, while the Apostles met with troubles enough, they were nowhere thrown alone among utter savages. They are nowhere described as rowing up unknown rivers, in quest of unknown lakes, among people with whom they could only communicate by way of interpreters or signs, and whom it was necessary to bribe. They are not shown in alliances with discoverers, exchanging rifles and gunpowder for provisions and escort. There are legends, indeed, of early Missions to India, and even to Britain; but everywhere the Gospel went in the path of Roman legions, of Greek philosophers, of the wandering Phœnician, and the ubiquitous Jew. The plain meaning of all this is that civilization precedes and must precede Christianity.—Times, July 27.

THE CATASTROPHE AT ASTON.

(From the Birmingham Gazette.)

The following are copies of a letter received by Mr. Charles Sturge, Mayor of Birmingham, written by command of the Queen, in reference to the late catastrophe at Aston-park, and of his worship's reply thereto:—

Osborne, July 25, 1863.

Sir,—The Queen has commanded me to express to you the pain with which Her Majesty has read the account of a fatal accident which has occurred during a fête at Aston-park, Birmingham.

Her Majesty cannot refrain from making known through you her personal feelings of horror that one of her subjects—a female—should have been sacrificed to the gratification of the demoralizing taste, unfortunately prevalent, for exhibitions attended with the greatest danger to the performers.

Were any proof wanting that such exhibitions are demoralizing, I am commanded to remark that it would be at once found in the decision arrived at to continue the festivities, the hilarity, and the sports of the occasion after an event so melancholy.

The Queen trusts that you, in common with the rest of the townspeople of Birmingham, will use your influence to prevent in future the degradation to such exhibitions in the Park which was gladly opened by Her Majesty and the beloved Prince Consort, in the hope that it would be made serviceable for the healthy exercise and rational recreation of the people.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your most obedient, humble servant,

C. B. PHIPPS.

The Mayor of Birmingham.

Borough of Birmingham, Mayor's office,
July 28, 1863.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 25th inst., written by command of Her Majesty the Queen.

In the first place, I beg you will convey to Her Majesty my humble assurance that there is not in the kingdom an individual who laments more sincerely than myself not only the melancholy accident to which you refer, but the depraved taste for a barbarous species of amusement which unhappily has become popular, not only in the metropolis, but in all parts of Her Majesty's home dominions. It is only a short time since, and during my mayoralty, that it was proposed to exhibit a similar performance within the borough; but, though I was not empowered by law to interfere, I ventured so far to interpose my authority as to prevent it. In this unfortunate instance my name appeared in conjunction with those of the lord-lieutenants and several magistrates and members of Parliament, as patrons of the fête, which was for a charitable purpose; but I believe not a single gentleman whose name so appeared had any idea that a dangerous exhibition would be attempted. For the future I have every reason to hope that, notwithstanding Aston-park is beyond the jurisdiction of the authorities at Birmingham, their influence and that of their fellow-townsmen will henceforth limit its use exclusively to the healthy exercise and rational recreation of the people, so that the gracious intentions of Her Majesty and her revered Consort may not be frustrated, but realized.

In the meantime, I trust that exhibitions of so dangerous and demoralizing a character may be interdicted by Parliamentary enactment.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,
CHARLES STURGE, Mayor.

Colonel the Hon. Sir Charles B. Phipps, &c., Osborne.

AFFAIRS, FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

MONEY AND DISCOUNT MARKET.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, July 29.

THERE has been no change in the general aspect of the money and discount markets; a steady business has been transacted without pressure in any of the departments, and at rates of accommodation much the same as last week. We have encountered however, a perfect panic in the foreign stock market, where an excess of speculation, with a desire by weak holders to realise upon inflated prices, has produced a collapse which at one moment threatened to be attended with a great deal of mischief. The worst has, apparently, been passed, and since the rumours of war between France and Russia have subsided, and a large amount of speculation bargains have been closed, we shall, probably, experience a recovery, which will be followed by a healthier state of things, and infinitely less excitement.

Nothing very serious can, it is evident, be the matter, or we should have the rates for money disturbed and agitated; and as this is far from being the case, the present storm will shortly blow over. The favourable state of the weather for the harvest, and the supply of capital afloat, will arrest any stringency for the moment, whatever may be the results of the late increase of engagements towards the end of the year.

BULLION AND SPECIE MOVEMENTS.

Only two parcels of gold have been sent into the Bank this week, amounting together to £108,000, but there have been no withdrawals. The arrivals of bullion have been large, reaching to £931,584; of this £514,600 is from the West Indies and the Pacific, and £31,024 from Port Philip, the remainder being from America. The price of bar silver is unaltered, but Mexican dollars are rather unsteady those by the last packet were sold at 5s 2½d; but since then the price has risen to 5s. 2½d., except those brought by the present packet there are not many in the market.

HOME AND FOREIGN SECURITIES.

The English Stock Market has, under the influence of the other departments of the Stock Exchange, been somewhat excited during the week, and prices have fluctuated to the extent of ½ to 1 per cent. At one period there was considerable depression manifested, but to-day a better feeling has altogether prevailed, and prices have again improved, the closing quotations for Consols being 92½ to 93, for both money and account. Exchequer Bills have remained remarkably steady, not having altered, from par to 3s. prem. Some very great changes have taken place in the Foreign Stock market, particularly in Greek, Spanish, and Mexican, but to-day the political intelligence from the Continent being read more favourably, a much better feeling has prevailed. Greek closed at 31½ to 32; Mexican at 35½ to 36; Spanish Passives at 31½ to 32, and the Certificates at 12 to 1.

CONFEDERATE COTTON LOAN.

The news from America this week by the China confirmed the account of the fall of Vicksburg, and announced also the surrender of Port Hudson. In consequence the Confederate loan has suffered a severe fall.

On Monday, the decline was 5 per cent.; the closing price being 9 to 8 discount. Yesterday morning, panic appeared to seize the holders, and the stock declined nominally to 20 to 17 discount. However, there were few transactions as low as 16; the market speedily rallied to 15 to 13—and closed steady 14 to 12. The cause of this panic is traceable to the circumstance that much stock was in weak hands, lately bought by those who, in confident anticipation of further successes of Lee's army upon their advance into Pennsylvania and Maryland, found themselves disappointed of this, and committed to their engagements for the account day (Friday next) and also to the payment of the next instalment—1st proximo: unable to meet these, sales to a large extent were inevitable. To add to this, there was extreme heaviness in every department of the Stock Exchange, which also had its influence.

To-day the market opened steady—13 to 11 discount, at which places, considerable transactions took place. Subsequently lower prices from Liverpool caused a relapse, and they were again heavy,—the closing price being 15 to 14 discount.

AMERICAN SECURITIES.

A very large business has been transacted during the week in American Government Securities, and in the majority of cases at an advance of from 3 to 1 per cent. The chief dealings have been in the Stocks, more particularly connected with the Northern States. Prices, of course, have been influenced by the news from America. Virginia Six per Cent Stock has been dealt in at 43½, 42½, 41½, and 42. Atlantic and Great Western, Pennsylvania Sections, 7½, 72½, and 72. Erie Shares $100, all paid, 67, 68½, 68, 69½, and 70. Ditto Seven per Cent. Preference ditto, 64½, 65½, 64½, 67, 68½, and 68. Ditto Seven per Cent., second mortgage 1859, 78; Ditto, third ditto 1883, 73 and 74. Ditto, fourth ditto, 72. Illinois Central Six per Cent., 1875, 81½. Ditto, Seven per Cent., 1875, 76, 75, and 76. Ditto, $100 Shares, 890 paid, 27, 25½, 25, 26, 22½, 23, and 21½, discount ex div. Ditto, $100 Shares, all paid, 64½, 65, 68½, 68, and 69. New York Central Seven per Cent., 1861, 66. Panama Railroad second mortgage, 1872, 103½, and 104½. Pennsylvania Central Bonds, second mortgage, 86½, and ditto ditto $50 shares, 40 and 41½.

RAILWAY SECURITIES.

A very good business has been transacted in English Railway Securities, particularly in those of the leading undertakings. For two or three days prices were generally weak in sympathy with the other markets; but to-day there has been an improvement in nearly all classes, and the market closed with a tendency to a further advance. Although there has not been quite so much doing in Foreign Railway Shares, prices have been fairly sustained. With regard to shares in British Possessions, the transactions have been to a moderate extent at pretty steady, particularly for Indian and Canadian descriptions.

PROGRESS OF ENTERPRISE.

Although about the average number of new Joint-stock undertakings have been brought forward during the week, the aggregate required for prosecuting them is comparatively trifling, being only £330,000. Two of them—the Patent File Company, and the Export and Inland Coal Company; each ask for £100,000. The Castle Hotel Company, Richmond, want £60,000; the London Paper Making Company, £50,000; and the Philharmonic Room, Southampton Company, £20,000. It appears from some statistics just compiled, that the number of English joint-stock companies registered since the commencement of the year, has been 296, representing a nominal capital of £62,690,150. The Irish undertakings registered in the same period have been only 9, with a nominal capital of £120,000; and the Scotch 11, with a nominal capital of £668,843. The largest company registered was the General Credit, with a nominal capital of £10,000,000; and the smallest the Aberdeen Public Offices Company, with a nominal capital of only £410. The average capital of each English company is £210,000; that of the Irish, £14,000; and that of the Scotch, £62,000.

MORTGAGE LOAN FOR THE SAGUA LA GRANDE (CUBA) RAILWAY.

A prospectus has just been issued for a first Mortgage Loan of £300,000, in bonds of £100 each, for the Sagua La Grande Railway. The bonds are to bear interest at 7 per cent., payable half-yearly in London, and are to be issued in three series; the 1st of £160,000; the 2nd of £70,000; and the 3rd of £70,000. The subscription price will be £97 per bond with interest from the 1st of May last, and the payments are to be made £5 on application, £12 on allotment, £20 on the 1st of September, £15 on the 1st of October, £20 on the 2nd of November, £15 on the 1st of December, and the remaining £10 on the 1st of January, 1864.

BANK MEETINGS.

At the meeting of the directors and shareholders in the English, Scottish, and Australian Chartered Bank, a dividend was declared of 6 per cent. per annum. The accounts presented showed a balance of profit amounting to £25,696, out of which £15,000 was devoted to the payment of the dividend, £1000 towards the reduction of Bank premises and furniture accounts, and £9,696 towards increasing the reserve fund, which would then stand at £25,109. It was subsequently resolved to increase the capital of the Bank, for which purpose 5,000 new shares are to be issued at £20 per share.

At the first half-yearly meeting of the Consolidated Bank, formed some time since by a junction of the Bank of Manchester with the London Bank of Heywood, Kennards & Co., the profits for the half-year were shown to be £30,160, out of which a dividend was declared at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, leaving £7,368 to be carried to the current account. The half-yearly meeting of the London and Middlesex Bank, was held this afternoon, when a dividend at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum was declared, leaving £1,082 to be carried over to the next account.

THE COURSE OF THE PRODUCE MARKETS.

In American produce the fluctuations since this day week have not been important. Holders are firm, the progress of events being regarded as anything but favourable to an early termination of the war. At the same time the high prices asked have the effect of keeping purchasers, almost without exception, upon a very limited scale. Cotton has advanced ¼d. per lb., and the market is still strong, although without any great activity. American wheat and flour in common with other foreign grain may be quoted firmer in value, owing partly to political complications on the Continent, and partly to the smallness of home supplies. Provisions of most descriptions are dearer. Bacon middles have risen 1s. to 2s. per cwt., some rather extensive purchases having been made for export. A considerable advance in the price of Dutch butters has caused some improvement in all other descriptions, and fair qualities of American have made 70s. In lard there is not much doing; fine is held for full terms, whilst common is dull. Ashes meet a fair inquiry at 29s. 9d. to 30s. in Liverpool, and 32s. is the nominal quotation in London. Hotchkiss oil of peppermint remains quoted 16s., but a sale is reported to have been made at 15s. 9d. North American tallow has realized 43s., a general rise in this market having been induced by the critical position of Russian politics. To-day, however, the tone is not so firm, and 42s. 6d. to 43s. was the closing quotation, which is within 6d. per cwt. of the price of P.Y.C. Petroleum, after dullness throughout the week, at present meets a better inquiry; refined sells more freely at 2s. 3d. on the spot, and 2s. 5d. for winter delivery. At Liverpool a considerable business has been done for exports at 2s. 3d. per gallon. For crude Pennsylvania £18 5s. per tun has been paid. Rosin continues very firm. No change can be quoted in American turpentine, although French offers as low as 75s. per cwt. The tobacco trade continues extremely inactive, with no material change in general quotations. The last transactions in Philadelphia bark were at 7s. 9d. to 8s., and Baltimore at 6s. to 7s. per cwt. in Liverpool. Central American rubber is worth 1s. 2d. to 1s. 6d. per lb., and a fair inquiry prevails. Sperm oil, owing to the restriction of business in our cotton manufactures, is without improvement, and £80 is the nearest price for either colonial or American fishing. Upon all articles suitable to the requirements of the United States, the latest New York advices have had a prejudicial effect. Scotch pig iron has become extremely difficult to quit, and sales have been forced at 52s. 10½d. per ton, cash. Spelter tin and lead have also shown increased dullness since our last. Some speculative purchases of saltpetre, based on the expectation of at least a precautionary increase of armaments on the continent, caused a sudden advance of £2 per ton, but the market shows symptoms of nearly as sudden a relapse, and this afternoon sales were made at 15s. per ton under the highest point; £38 10s. was the last price paid for arrival, and £37 5s. to £38 on the spot. Camphor is rather well held at 46 6s. per cwt., but purchases are confined to the bare provision for immediate requirements. Quinine and quinine barks have an improved tendency. Gums continue to move off in retail quantities without quotable change in value. Our Spice market keeps very dull, and export kinds of both pepper and nutmegs are purchasable upon easier terms. At our colonial wool sales American buyers are doing very little, but the descriptions in which they were in previous auctions; the principal operators are generally held for full terms.

COTTON AND DRY GOODS MARKET.

LIVERPOOL, Wednesday Evening, July 29.

OUR last report left the market hardening with a good demand. As the week went on, the buoyancy increased. Much attention was paid to the rapid reduction of stock as exhibited in the returns of Friday, and spinners evidently began to be alarmed at the small figures to which it was dwindling. After deducting the China and Bengal cotton, which do not deserve to be reckoned as serviceable in bearing the brunt of the consumption, only 200,000 bales were left in stock, of which nearly one-half was Egyptian.

On Saturday, accordingly, the market was very strong, with sales of 10,000 bales, chiefly to the trade, and there was many symptoms that a speculative rush was setting in.

On Monday morning, the China's news was before the public, and excited extraordinary interest. The drift of them was again decidedly adverse to the Confederates. Fort Hudson had surrendered. Lee had retired into Virginia. Bragg was obliged to have fallen back into Georgia, and a fresh attack, attended with partial success, was making on Charleston. In addition to these items, the astounding accounts of the murderous riots in New York were also received.

The impression of many persons was, that the market would be damped by these advices, but the headway it had got during the previous week sufficed to start it again and a very strong demand set in, almost amounting to excitement—the run was chiefly in American cotton, which advanced that day nearly ¼d. per lb. All other kinds advanced ¼d. The sales reached 1,000 bales. It appeared, however, that this improvement was in spite, rather than in consequence of the American news.

On Tuesday morning, when peoples' minds had sobered down, the market opened quietly: the Liberator's news rather tended to increase that feeling, for they intimated the possibility of the early fall of Charleston, an event which would have unsettled the markets. The demand, accordingly, fell off, and with sales of 6,000 bales, prices of American were hardly sustained at their extreme point, though other sorts remained quite steady.

To-day the sales are again 6,000, and the feeling continues dull, though no change can be quoted. Middling Americans are worth 22½d.; Fair Dhollerah (which can scarcely be found), 18½d.; and the same class to arrive, May sailing, is worth nominally 18d.

Our market is upheld on the one hand by the great scarcity of supply, present and prospective, and the good Indian news. On the other, it is checked by the uncertain character of American affairs, and a suspicion that some quantity of cotton may, after all, be got at in the South. The least inclination of the balance would move the market either up or down.

MANCHESTER, Tuesday, 28th July.

The improvement in Liverpool from day to day during the past week has imparted a better feeling to this market generally, but not to a corresponding extent, as yarns have only advanced from ¼d. to ½d. per lb. on the prices obtainable a week before, whilst the class of cottons from which these yarns are spun has gone up considerably beyond that. Although yarns have improved in value, cloths cannot be said to be quotably higher very little disposition being shown to pay higher rates at present for them, which is puzzling to the manufacturers, who have been buying yarns on speculation, thinking that we were on the eve of rapidly advancing prices.

To-day the Germans have been buying rather more bundled yarns than for some time past, but still their business is quite of a retail character.

India shippers hang back and buy next to nothing in the shape of cloth, but holders are hopeful and look for a good demand setting in for the market very shortly.

Among the Contents of THE INDEX of July 23, are—

PENNSYLVANIA AND MISSISSIPPI.
CONSISTENCY AT THE FOREIGN-OFFICE.
THE PROSPECT.
NORTHERN THREAT OF WAR WITH ENGLAND.
VICTOR HUGO.
NATURAL HISTORY OF MAN.
THE EDINBURGH AND QUARTERLY.
CHARLES SUMNER.
THE RICHMOND ENQUIRER.
LETTER FROM NEW ORLEANS.
PARIS TOPICS.
LIST OF KILLED AND WOUNDED IN THE THIRD ALABAMA AT CHANCELLORSVILLE.

SHIRTS.—International Exhibition.
Class 27 C. No. 4572. Prize Medal and honourable mentions 1851 and 1862. Shirts, Collars, Flannels, and every description of underclothing manufactured on the premises.

J. BRIE AND CO.,
43, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.
The only Shirtmakers admitted as Exhibitors at the International Exhibition of 1862.

VALUES OF GOLD.—WATER-STON AND BROGDEN, for the information of the public and their numerous patrons beg to make the following announcement regarding the VALUE of GOLD, feeling persuaded that the interests of the fair trader and public will be alike protected by the wide circulation of knowledge on the subject. Gold being divided into 24 parts or carats, it follows that gold of

Per oz.	Per oz.
24 carats fine is worth.....£4 4 11	13 carats.....£2 6 0
23 ditto.....£4 1 5	12 ditto.....£2 2 6½
22 ditto (British standard).....£3 17 10½	11 ditto.....£1 18 11
21 carats.....£3 14 4	10 ditto.....£1 11 10
20 ditto.....£3 10 9½	9 ditto.....£1 8 9½
19 ditto.....£3 7 3	8 ditto.....£1 4 9
18 ditto.....£3 3 8½	7 ditto.....£1 1 2½
17 ditto.....£3 0 2	6 ditto.....£0 17 8
16 ditto.....£2 16 7½	5 ditto.....£0 14 2
15 ditto.....£2 13 1	4 ditto.....£0 10 7½
14 ditto.....£2 9 6½	3 ditto.....£0 7 1
	2 ditto.....£0 3 6½

Manufactory, 16, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London, W.C.
N.B.—Assays made of Chains and Jewellery for 1s. each.

NOTICE.—This Establishment is closed at six o'clock in the evening, and on Saturdays at one o'clock.

FRANCIS FORD, MANCHESTER.
Manufacturer of Three and Six Cord Spool Thread, Cotton Balls, Knitting and Embroidering Cottons, &c. Imported by P. RAILLON and NEYREY, New Orleans, and GEORGE CHAMBERS and CO., Nassau, N.P.

A. G. MILWAINE, AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, Tobacco, Cotton, Grain, and other produce, PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA.

TWO PRIZE MEDALS awarded "For General Excellence" in DRESSING CASES, BAGS, DESPATCH BOXES, &c. Gentlemen's Travelling Bags, Useful Size, 14s. 6d.; Full Size, 18s. 6d.; Large Size, 21s. Courier Bags, with Shoulder Strap, from 10s. 6d. Morocco Ladies' Bags, 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 14s. 6d., 15s. 6d., and 21s. Tourists' Writing Cases, 8s. 6d., 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d. Finest Cutlery in Razors, Scissors, Needles, &c. JENNER and KNEVSTUN, Manufacturers to the Royal Family, 33, St. James's-street, and 66, Jermy-street.

GEORGE CHAMBERS, & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants,
NASSAU, N.P.
BAHAMAS.

J. PFEIFFER & MULLER,
Commission Merchants,
52, Rue du Chateau d'Eau,
PARIS.

SAMUEL SMITH,
COTTON BROKER,
11, Manchester Buildings,
LIVERPOOL.

HENRY ADDERLEY & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants,
NASSAU, N.P.
BAHAMAS.

FRANCIS PRESTON,
ENGINEER AND CONTRACTOR TO HER
MAJESTY'S WAR DEPARTMENT,
35, Loveday Street,
BIRMINGHAM.
And Ancients' Bridge Works,
MANCHESTER.
Established 1816.

J. H. ASHBRIDGE & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants,
NEW ORLEANS.
Office—30, Brown's-buildings, Liverpool.
Agents—Liverpool and New Orleans Mail Steam Navigation Company.

BEACH & ROOT,
Commission Merchants,
CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA
and
ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

BEACH, ROOT, & CO.,
APSELY BUILDINGS, OLD HALL STREET,
LIVERPOOL.

S. ISAAC, CAMPBELL, & Co.
CONTRACTORS & MERCHANTS.
71, Jermy-street,
LONDON.
Sherbro: West Coast of Africa.
Represented by
W. B. HART,
Nassau, New Providence.

WIGGINS, TEAPE, & Co.,
WHOLESALE AND EXPORT STATIONERS,
10, ALDGATE, LONDON.

Special Papers suited to Foreign Markets.

ROWLAND & BROTHERS,
Commission Merchants,
NORFOLK,
VIRGINIA.

JOHN FRASER & CO.,
CHARLESTON, South Carolina.
FRASER, TRENHOLM, & CO.,
Liverpool, Commission Merchants.

SEARING AND CO.,
Commission Merchants,
MOBILE AND NEW ORLEANS, C.S.A.
Represented by
R. G. BEESLEY, Cotton Broker,
No. 2, Byron's-court, Royal-exchange,
Manchester.

J. E. HERTZ,
(Of the late Firm of MORDECAI and CO.),
Commission Merchant,
CHARLESTON,
SOUTH CAROLINA.
References to
M. C. MORDECAI, Esq.
Charleston, South Carolina.
Messrs. COHEN and HERTZ,
Savannah, Georgia.

LAMB, BALL, & CO.,
Ship and General Commission Agents,
ST. THOMAS,
WEST INDIES.
J. J. HALL,
J. D. LAMB.

WEBER BROTHERS,
Commission Merchants,
SAVANNAH,
GEORGIA, C.S.A.

HOTEL DE LA GRANDE BRETAGNE,
Rue de Po,
TURIN.

McDOWELL, WITHERS, AND CO.,
MOBILE ALABAMA, C.S.A.,
Commission Merchants.

R. D. RUSDEN, MANCHESTER,
ENGLAND, American Drills of all kinds,
Denims, Stripes, Shirtings, and all sorts of Manchester Goods.

ANDREW LOW AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH
GEORGIA.

HAMILTON AND GRAHAM,
Importers, Wholesale Dealers in Dry
Goods, &c., PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA.

H. LEVY AND SON,
Commission Merchants, MOBILE.

GARLAND GOODE, MOBILE,
Cotton Factor and Commission Merchant.

BOYKIN AND McRAE, Cotton
Factors and Commission Merchants,
MOBILE, ALABAMA, C.S.A.

J. W. ANDERSON AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH,
GEORGIA.

JAMES CHAPMAN,
Commission Merchant, CHARLESTON.

N. A. HARDEE AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH,
GEORGIA.

R. N. GOUDINE AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, Charleston.

DUNLOP, MONCURE, & CO.,
General Commission Merchants,
RICHMOND.

WARWICK AND BARKSDALE,
GALLEGO FLOUR MILLS.
This immense establishment of capacity to manufacture 1000 barrels of Flour per day, purely for South American Market. RICHMOND.

MILLER AND BATRE, Exchange
Brokers, MOBILE, ALABAMA, C.S.A.

R. AND D. G. MILLS, Cotton
Factors and Commission Merchants,
GALVESTON, TEXAS, C.S.A.

GENERAL THOMAS J. (STONEWALL) JACKSON.

Two Continents, both friend and foe, combine to mourn the premature death of General JACKSON, hero and Christian. Two years have been sufficient to create a fame which has won the kindly respect of enemies and the admiration of the Old World, which twenty-four months since was ignorant of his existence.

It has been suggested that some general recognition from Great Britain of the worth of such a man, by name, by race, and by character related to us, although the citizen of another land, would be a graceful token of friendly feeling from the old country to our kinsmen across the Atlantic.

The eminent sculptor, J. H. FOLLY, Esq., R.A., has undertaken to execute a marble Statue, heroic size, of the General for £1,000, while £500 may be required for pedestal, inscription, and other extras. Accordingly, for £1,500 a complete Statue of "Stonewall" JACKSON, by one of our most distinguished sculptors, may be prepared for transmission to his native country when the unhappy war shall have ceased. Towards raising this sum, the Subscriptions of our countrymen and countrywomen are earnestly solicited. Central and Local Committees, with auxiliary Ladies' Committees, are being formed to collect the necessary funds.

The undersigned will gladly receive Subscriptions until the final arrangements are made, and an account has been opened for "General JACKSON'S Statue," at Messrs. COURTTS and Co.'s, Strand, London, W.C.

N.B.—It is not at all intended that Subscriptions to the Statue should imply any opinion on the merits of the American struggle. They will be taken solely and simply as a recognition of the rare personal merit of General Jackson.

COMMITTEE.

EDWARD AKROYD, Esq.
HON. EVELYN ASHLEY.
LORD CAMPBELL.
LORD EUSTACE CECIL.
EARL OF DONOUGHMORE.
HON. ERNEST DUNCOMBE, M.P.
SIR EARDLEY EARDLEY.
SIR ARTHUR H. ELTON, BART.

SIR JAMES FERGUSSON, BART., M.P.
HON. C. FITZWILLIAM, M.P.
J. S. GILLIAT, Esq.
W. H. GREGORY, Esq., M.P.
COL. GREVILLE, M.P.
SIR HENRY DE HOGHTON, BART.
A. J. B. BERESFORD HOPE, Esq.
SIR E. KERRISON, BART., M.P.

J. LAIRD, Esq., M.P.
SIR COURTTS LINDSAY, BART.
W. S. LINDSAY, Esq., M.P.
G. PEACOCKE, Esq., M.P.
G. E. SEYMOUR, Esq.
J. SPENCE, Esq.
LIEUT.-COL. C. N. STURT, M.P.

A. J. B. BERESFORD HOPE, Esq., 1, CONNAUGHT PLACE,
Hon. Treasurer.
W. H. GREGORY, Esq., M.P., 19, GROSVENOR STREET WEST.
Hon. Secretary.

MANCHESTER SOUTHERN CLUB, advocating the stoppage of the war, the independence of the South, and the gradual emancipation of the slave, open daily for the enrolment of members and receipt of subscriptions. Local committees can have information as usual.—Address, MATTHEW CHADWICK, } Hon. Sec.
T. MALAN WALKER, }

JAMES J. BENNETT & WAKE,
Steam-Ship Insurance and General Commission Agents,
77, Cornhill, London,
and JAMES J. BENNETT,
Matamoros.

NEW LINE OF STEAM PACKETS

LIVERPOOL, ST. THOMAS, LA GUAYRA, PTO. CABELLO, CURACAO, SANTA MARTHA, CARTHAGENA TO COLON, RETURNING FROM THAT PORT BY KINGSTON (JAMAICA), PORT-AU-PRINCE, CAPE HAITIEN TO LIVERPOOL.

The Liverpool, Western and Spanish-American Steam Packet Company

WILL commence running powerful A 1 Screw Steamboats from this port on the 20th June next, to be at Colon in time to take the Goods and Passengers brought to Panama by the Steamers, from the North and South Pacific, and to Colon, about the 21st July, continuing the same dates monthly. The Steamboats are:—

The CHRISTOPHOL COLON, 1,572 tons, W. Baker, Commander, to sail from Liverpool, 20th June
The SAINT THOMAS, 1,210 tons, W. Gilberry, Commander, 20th July
The BOLIVAR, 1,239 tons, W. W. Kiddler, 20th Aug.
The HUMBOLDT (building), 1,400 tons

Goods and Passengers will be taken, if required, at through rates from the Continent, via Liverpool, over the Panama Railway to Ports in the Pacific, and also back from those Ports by same route. The CHRISTOPHOL COLON has very spacious and well-ventilated berths and saloon, which will afford every comfort to Passengers. The Rates for First and Second-class Passage will be moderate.

IMRIE & TOMLINSON,
ALEXANDER DURANTY & Co.,
Liverpool, May 1, 1863.

WEST INDIES. — LIVERPOOL, WEST INDIAN, AND CENTRAL AMERICAN STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.

For SAINT THOMAS, PORT-AU-PRINCE (HAYTI), KINGSTON (JAMAICA), SANTA MARTHA, CARTHAGENA, AND COLON OR ASPINWALL.

Taking Goods at through rates for Panama and Ports in the North and South Pacific (in connection with the Panama Railroad, the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company).

The following fine new A 1 full powered Steamers will sail from LIVERPOOL on the 21st of each month, receiving goods up to the 19th of each month:—

DARIEN .. .. 1,172 tons.
VENEZUELAN .. .. 1,000 "
GRANDADIAN .. .. 1,100 "
MEXICAN (now building), 1,100 "

In consequence of the VENEZUELAN not being quite completed, the first-class Screw-steamer SHAFTESBURY, Captain VICKERMAN, Will be despatched for the above Ports on the 21st May, taking goods until the 19th May.

Goods taken at through freights from the Continent.

For rates of freights or passage, having superior accommodation for passengers, apply to J. M. CURRIE, Paris and Havre; GLAFCKE and HENNING, Hamburg; LAPITE and VANDERCRUYE, Bordeaux; W. D. ROBERTS and Co., Glasgow; or to LEECH HARRISON, & FORWOOD, Agents, Liverpool.

THE PATENT FILE MACHINE. AND FILE MANUFACTURING COMPANY (LIMITED). Makers of every description of Steel and File suitable for Engine-rooms, Machinery, Agricultural Implement Makers, and for the general and export trade. Works, Ashton Old-road, Manchester.

AMERICAN WINES AND SPIRITS, &c.

W. R. S. MARKWELL,

WINE MERCHANT TO HER MAJESTY AND THE IMPERIAL COURTS,
35, 40, & 45, ALBEMARLE STREET,

AND
4, STAFFORD STREET, PICCADILLY, LONDON, W.

Monaghela, Bourbon, and Old Dominion Whiskies; Peach Brandy; Staughton, Sickles, and other Bitters; Fruit Spirits; Sparkling and dry Catawba; Californian Champagne; all kinds of Continental Wines, including the original importations from Hungary.

The Stock of Wines, Spirits, and Liqueurs are of the oldest, most extensive, and best selected in England.

TERMS, CASH!

ACCOUNT BOOKS, &c.,

Of all Rulings, ready in Stock, or made to any Pattern on the Premises.

LITHOGRAPHIC AND COPPER-PLATE. — Circulars printed on the Shortest Notice; all kinds of Copper-Plate Printing with economy and despatch.

CARD-PLATES. — Engraved in various styles with despatch. 2s. each.

LETTER-PRESS. — Letter-Press work of every description: Circulars, Catalogues, Share-Plates, &c.

NOTE-PAPER. — Embossed die, Plain, and Colours, with Crest and Initials, and Printed Address, without charging for Dies or Plates.

All Articles being prepared on the Premises can be ensured with despatch and economy at Wholesale and Shipping Prices.

F. ARNOLD, MANUFACTURING STATIONER, ETC., 86, FLEET STREET, E.C.
(CORNER OF ST. BRIDE'S AVENUE.)

VINS SUPERIEURS DE CHAMPAGNE.

DINET-PEUVREL ET FILS,

PROPRIETAIRES ET NEGOCIANTS,

A AVIZE, MARNE,

EXECUTE ORDERS FOR ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.
Please send References with Order.

PARIS EXHIBITION, 1855.

LA GRANDE MEDAILLE D'HONNEUR

WAS AWARDED TO

THOMAS DE LA RUE & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

PATENT PLAYING CARDS. PATENT METALLIC BOOKS; WITH

HARD ELECTRO-GILT PENCILS WHICH NEVER THICKEN AT THE POINT.

INDIA INLAND NOTE OR CHIT PAPERS, for Half Anna Postage Rate.

WATER-LINED OVERLAND NOTE PAPERS, in great variety.

MACHINE-FOLDED ENVELOPES. PATENT METAL SLATES.

POCKET TOURISTS' CASES.—Size, 5½ in. by 3¼ in. by 1½ in. with every requisite for Correspondence.

ALLIANCE DESPATCH DESKS.—The most perfect Despatch Desk yet made.

DE LA RUE & CO.'S INDELIBLE DIARIES.—Published annually for exportation in August.

WALLETS, ALBUMS, SCRAP BOOKS, &c., &c.

The above can be obtained through any Stationer or Merchant.

REID AND STEWART,
Commission Merchants,
SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

Represented by
ANDREW STEWART, 1, Rumford-place,
Liverpool.

C. W. WHITE,
Ship and General Commission Agent,
ST. THOMAS, WEST INDIES.

HARPER AND CAUGHEY,
Commission Merchants,
SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

Represented by
J. and A. CAUGHEY, Tempest Chambers,
Liverpool.

H. O. BREWER & CO.,
MOBILE, ALABAMA.
General Commission and Shipping Merchants.

ADDRESS TO CHRISTIANS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

By the
CLERGY of the CONFEDERATE STATES of AMERICA
London: James Nisbet and Co., 21, BERNERS-STREET, OXFORD-STREET.

18mo., cloth, extra gilt edges, price 1s.

BEN RHYDDING, THE ASCLEPION OF ENGLAND. its Beauties, its Ways, and its Water Cure. By the Rev. R. W. THOMSON. With Map of the Railway Routes to Ben Rhydding. Third Edition.

T. NELSON and Sons, London and Edinburgh. To be had, free by post for 18 stamps, of SHUTTLE-WORTH, Bookseller, Ilkley.

The Index,

A WEEKLY JOURNAL OF POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND NEWS.

Devoted to the Exposition of the Mutual Interests, Political and Commercial, of Great Britain and the Confederate States of America.

Published every Thursday Afternoon.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

Subscription, Twenty-six Shillings per annum. Stamped, Thirty Shillings per annum.

Nos. I. to LXVI. NOW READY.

THE INDEX

CONTAINS

Private Letters from the Southern and Northern States.

Latest Direct Intelligence from the South.

Leaders on Topics of Interest.

Reviews of Books.

Magazine Articles.

The Cotton and Dry Goods Market.

Confederate State Papers.

Gleanings from the Northern and Southern Press.

Foreign Correspondence.

Southern Statistics, &c., &c.

THE INDEX has already obtained an extensive and still rapidly increasing circulation in Great Britain, the Continent, the West Indies, and the Northern and Southern States of America. It goes into the hands of all who, through business interests, political pursuits, or personal sympathy, are concerned in the great Transatlantic questions now in process of solution.

The Second Half-Yearly Volume

OF

THE INDEX,

Is Now Ready, Price £1 1s.

Subscriptions and Advertisements to be sent, and Post-office Orders made payable to

J. B. HOPKINS, 13, BOUVERIE STREET,
FLEET STREET, E.C.

Printed for the Proprietors by HENRY FLORENCE MACKINTOSH, of 11, Cranecourt, Fleet-street in the Parish of St. Dunstan, in the City of London, and published by him at THE INDEX Office, 13, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London.—Thursday, July 30th, 1863.

THE INDEX

A WEEKLY JOURNAL OF POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND NEWS.

VOL. III—No. 67.]

LONDON—THURSDAY EVENING, AUGUST 6, 1863.

[PRICE 6D.

CONTENTS.

NOTES ON EVENTS OF THE WEEK AT HOME AND ABROAD.
NEW ORLEANS LETTER.
PARIS TOPICS.
WAR WITHOUT END.
A PARALLEL AND A CONTRAST.
THE NEW ASPECT OF THE WAR.
THE RIGHTFULNESS OF SOUTHERN SECESSION.
THE PEACE PARTY AT THE NORTH.
FEDERALISM.
MAGAZINES FOR AUGUST.
A VOICE FROM A FEDERAL PRISON.
MR. VALLANDIGHAM'S ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF OHIO.
GENERAL LEE'S ORDER FOR THE PROTECTION OF PRIVATE PROPERTY IN PENNSYLVANIA.
THE SOUTHERN CONSCRIPTION.

NOTES ON EVENTS OF THE WEEK.

AMERICA.

In default of reliable military news, we have a series of contradictory rumours. It is reported that Mr. Lincoln is greatly disappointed at the "escape" of General Lee, that Meade has offered to resign his command, and that another invasion of the North is dreaded. The next intelligence is that Lee cannot cross the Potomac; and finally that that commander is in force in the Shenandoah Valley, and at all the fords of the Potomac. The Northern public is now convinced that the Southern army is not fleeing, that Meade is not pursuing, and that Gregg's cavalry has sustained a severe disaster. In short, it is now known that though Lee did not do all the North feared, he is as strong as ever.

On the 25th of July the Washington Government was in receipt of news from Charleston, which it declined to publish. According to unofficial statements the progress of the Federals had been stayed, and they had sustained severe losses. There was also a rumour that the enemy had been driven from Morris Island. We shall not follow the example of the Yankees, and prophesy the issue of the contest, but we know that Charleston is prepared for a desperate resistance, and that if she falls the only booty of the conqueror will be blackened ruins. Everything that has transpired up to this moment shows that the defence has been thoroughly successful.

General Morgan has been several times nearly captured, and his band completely cut up, in Federal despatches. We were officially informed that the gallant General had fled from his command; next that he had tried to cross the Ohio river, and that he had been driven back by a gunboat; and finally it is notified that these reports, both official and unofficial, were wrong. It appears that his losses in Ohio have been exaggerated, that on the 22nd July he captured Colonel Chandler and twenty-five men, and that the next day he crossed the Muskingum River at Eastport and repulsed the Federals, and then went to Washington, Ohio, where he was collecting supplies.

General Johnstone has made a vigorous stand at Jackson, Mississippi. On the 9th July, he issued an address to his troops, which we publish in another part of our impression, and his confidence in the valour of his men was fully justified. On the 12th an attack was made upon his lines. This was defeated with a loss to the enemy of a thousand men, including General Osterhaus; and the banners of the 28th, 41st, and 53rd Illinois regiments were captured. On the 14th, there was a truce for the burial of the Federal dead. The skirmishing continued on the 14th and 15th, and on the last-named day the Confederates buried 153 of the enemy. On the 16th, a heavy demonstration was made against the Confederate right and centre, and it was repulsed by Walker's and Loring's divisions. The city has been nearly destroyed by the enemy's shells. On the 16th, according to a Washington despatch, General Johnstone evacuated the place without loss of artillery or prisoners. Defences were in thorough repair. The casualties of the Confederates are reported to be small. Captain Ferguson, of the South Carolina battery, was mortally wounded on the 15th.

President Davis has issued a proclamation, which we elsewhere publish, in which he orders all white residents in the Confederate States not exempted from military service between the ages of 18 and 45, to be immediately enrolled. Thus, excepting old men and boys, the entire male population of the South will be under arms to repel the invader. The different conduct of the two Governments is worthy of remark. President Davis calls for more men after reverses; whilst President Lincoln calls for more men after a series of successes. The Southerners are ready to enlist when their services are needed; the only chance of getting the Northerners to submit to the conscription is to assure them that there is no chance of their having to meet the enemy.

How the South bears misfortune may be seen from the telegrams that were published yesterday. She has never been elated with victory, and she is not depressed by misfortune. She is only intent upon preparing for the worst. The papers, so far from modifying the bad news, parade it. The Mobile Register tells its readers that the movements of Bragg and the fall of Vicksburg will result in 160,000 of the enemy being on the soil of Alabama. This is undoubtedly an exaggeration, but it is far better to overrate than to underate the adversary. President Davis calls for a levy of white residents between the ages of eighteen and forty-five, who are not exempt from military service; even this does not satisfy the press, which clamours for a levy en masse. At the capital of Alabama a meeting has been held to organize the whole population for home defence. The stock of the Virginia Navy Company, of which the object is to carry on a guerilla war on the ocean against the commerce of the adversary, has been subscribed. The Enquirer, which is not the organ of the Government as some of our contemporaries persist in calling it, demands an immediate enlargement of President Davis's powers to revise the election of officers, and to get rid of the incompetent. The people of Georgia are arming to resist the threatened invasion of Rosecrans; and the citizens of Lynchburg are organizing for defence. All this proves that the only way to conquer the Confederates is to exterminate them, but extermination involves a sacrifice of Northern life that will leave the victor utterly prostrate.

The Richmond Despatch of the 17th of July says:—"Lincoln, Seward, Halleck, and the whole Yankee press are hugging themselves in the delusion that they already see the end of the war, and that that end is to us the death of our liberty and the beginning of an interminable servitude. To their taunts and sneers we reply, 'We have not yet begun to fight.' They think they have seen pitched fields, but the hottest of those they have seen are to those which must come but as the freshness of an April morning to the fiery breath of the dog-days. This people has never yet put forth its strength to half its extent. Furious as has been the war in which it has been engaged, mighty as have been its struggles, glorious as have been its victories, unparalleled as has been the result, what we have done is scarcely a type of what we can do."

Despatches from Cincinnati of the 24th report that authentic information from the army of General Rosecrans proves it to be still in the vicinity of Tullahoma and Winchester, with the headquarters of the Commanding General at the latter place, and that all statements of movements upon Chattanooga and Rome, Georgia, previously made, were unfounded.

War with England and France, or at least war with England, is incessantly demanded in the North. The Government endeavours to make the draft acceptable by pretending that the new levies are to be used against this country. The few who believe in the possibility of the reconstruction of the Union clamour for a foreign war as the only means of effecting that object. The peace party look to it as the sole means of ending the present war. Patriots seize upon it as the only way of preventing the armies of the republic from being turned against social order at home. The popular passions are more and more inflamed, and war with England has become a creed in the North. All parties desire it, and at the first opportunity it will be undertaken with unanimous approval.

The riots in New York are over, but a renewal of them is threatened if the draft is enforced. The news per Jura intimates that the draft will be abandoned in New York, and if in that city it must, of course, be abandoned elsewhere. Governor Seymour fears if it is carried out the female servants will fire their masters' houses. A telegram from Paris says,—"Official reports have been received here from New York which state that the Government appears to definitely renounce the conscription, which had been declared unconstitutional by the sentence of a New York municipal Judge. 'This fact is to be attributed to the progress of pacific ideas in the North.' Large sums are voted by the authorities in New York to enable those who have no means to purchase exemption. But if the rich with their own money, and the poor with other people's money, are to escape the service, we do not see where the required recruits are to come from. In Maryland the draft has been forcibly resisted. The barns of the enrolling officers have been burnt, and their residences attacked. Forcible opposition to the conscription has been made in several towns in Maine. At Kingfield, in that State, the officers conducting the draft were set upon by a mob, their papers seized and destroyed, and themselves driven from the town. In other places the citizens have thrown up earthworks to resist the enforcement of the Act. It has been decided by the Provost-Marshal, General Fry, that no negro can be accepted as a substitute for the draughted white man.

Before the surrender of Fort Hudson General Gardner issued an order, dated July 8th, in which he congratulated the troops on their gallant defence. Every assault had been signally repulsed, and the place was given up under pressure of famine and the approach of overwhelming reinforcements consequent upon the fall of Vicksburg.

The supremacy of the crowd during the late riots in New York has been illustrated in a singular manner. There were two British vessels in the North river, one from Belize, and the other from Jamaica, both being commanded by negro captains, and manned by negro crews. The rioters threatened to burn the ships, and to prove that they were in earnest assaulted some of the crew. The British consul could not protect them; neither the State authorities nor the Federal Government could do so, and at the consul's request her Majesty's ship Challenger was sent for by Lord Lyons, and anchored at the mouth of the Hudson. In the meantime the coloured British subjects took refuge on board the French man-of-war, the Cardenas, Admiral Reynaud giving them shelter until the arrival of a British ship. Is it not exceedingly droll that we recognise a Government that has no power to protect British subjects from being murdered in the streets of its chief city, and refuse to recognise a Government that is constitutionally dominant and loyally obeyed?

General Burnside murdered two Confederates at Sandusky, Ohio, upon most frivolous and transparent pretences. The Confederate Government demanded justice, and placed two of their prisoners, Captains Sawyer and Flynn, in close confinement at Richmond, to be executed if the Washington Government refused to make due reparation for the crime committed by their officer. Upon this the Confederate Government is informed that if they take reprisals by executing Captain Sawyer and Flynn, General W. F. Lee and Captain Wiunder, now Federal prisoners, will suffer a like fate. If the Lincolmites are resolved on such a policy, if they claim to murder Confederates with impunity, nothing remains but to hang out the black flag.

It is announced that Mr. Whiting, Solicitor to the Federal War Department, is to come to Europe, "as the accredited agent of the United States to the European courts, and the legal adviser of Messrs. Adams and Dayton." It is stated that he is instructed to remonstrate with the British authorities against the building of iron-clad vessels in British ports, which the Federal Government suspects to be intended for the Confederate service." If this is a correct version of Mr. Whiting's mission, he might as well have remained at home. He may be a useful adviser to Messrs. Adams and Dayton, but so long as the United States has a Minister in the country, the remonstrances of other accredited agents will not be received. Moreover, "British authorities," unlike Federal authorities, do not make the law, but obey it, and no remonstrance will induce them to act in opposition to the decision of our law courts. In any case, "the suspicion of the Federal Government" will not be accepted as evidence.

It is reported that a Federal cavalry expedition from Newbern has destroyed the bridge over the Tar River, and burnt 5,000 bales of cotton. The telegraphic summary of news speaks of an incursion to Wythville, on the East Tennessee Railway, and the destruction of the rail there. It is physically impossible that any Federal force should have got to that point, and the place referred to is more probably Whiteville, on the Wilmington and Weldon Railway, in North Carolina.

Mr. Vallandigham's brother and Dr. Clarke were arrested at Newark, Delaware, on suspicion, but were released on taking the oath of allegiance.

ENGLAND.

The report of the committee "on various kinds of improved ordnance" has appeared, and is on the whole a very satisfactory document. It commences with a history of the Armstrong gun, and with an account of the experimental contests between the Whitworth and the Armstrong guns, with respect to which it is remarked that the trials of the former weapon were not of so extended a character as those of the latter, because at that particular time Mr. Whitworth had no guns of his own construction, nor did he propose any system of constructing guns. The definition given of what is called the Armstrong system is a "combination of construction, breach-loading, rifling, and coating the projectiles with soft metal;" and the committee is of opinion that the adoption of the Armstrong gun by the Secretary of State for War in 1858 for special service in the field was fully justified. The gun was first introduced into the navy for boat service in the winter of 1858-9, principally on the advice of Captain Hewlett, R.N., of H.M. ship Excellent, and in the autumn of that year the 40-pounder and 110-pounder guns were ordered. The supply of guns and projectiles has been obtained solely from the Royal Arsenal at Woolwich and the Elswick Ordnance Factory, and the total sum expended in their manufacture has amounted to £2,539,547 17s. 8d. The results of this outlay are next touched upon in the report. The 12-pounders, although thought by some to be too complicated for service, are generally approved of, and the Commander-in-Chief and the Adjutant-General of Artillery are loud in the praises of the weapon. With regard to the 110-pounder guns, admitted to be useful as chase guns, the report is condemnatory of the introduction of them as broadside guns, because they are not capable of penetrating iron-plated ships. The old 68-pounder, in fact, still maintains its way, and the First Lord of the Admiralty says that, "we have nothing better now for close quarters than the 68-pounder."

The Regiment of the 1st Middlesex Volunteer Engineers was inspected last Saturday by Colonel M'Murdo, the Inspector-General, in Battersea Park. The operation performed was the construction of a bridge across a piece of water 100 feet wide. The time consumed in making of the bridge was an hour and a quarter, the materials being placed by the water-side before the order was given for commencing the work. The speed and skill displayed were highly commended by the Inspector. The Central London Rifle Rangers have also been inspected by Lieutenant-General Sir J. Yorke Scarlett, K.C.B., and the Queen's Westminster have held their annual fête at the Crystal Palace. After the concert, theatrical performances, and athletic exercises, several hundred members sat down to the regimental dinner, under the presidency of Earl Grosvenor, the Lieutenant-Colonel of the regiment.

The vacancy in the representation of the borough of Pontefract, caused by the elevation of Mr. Monckton Milnes to the peerage under the title of Lord Houghton, has been already filled. Two candidates were in the field, namely, Sir E. W. Head in the Liberal, and Major Waterhouse in the Conservative interest. However, on the morning of the nomination, Sir E. W. Head issued an address, in which he announced his withdrawal from the contest, and stated that after a five days' canvass in the borough he found the Liberal voices uncertain and their strength divided. Consequently Major Waterhouse was returned without opposition. Another peer has been created in the person of Colonel White, who has represented the counties of Dublin and Longford in several Parliaments, and who will assume the style and title of Baron Annely in the county of Longford in the peerage of the United Kingdom.

On Tuesday last Lord Palmerston laid the foundation stone of a new building intended to be erected as an addition to the Sailors' Home in Well-street, Wapping. The auxiliary building will accommodate 160 seamen; and the estimated cost is about £12,000. The original Home was opened in 1835, since which date 139,180 seamen have availed themselves of the advantages held out by the institution, and these men have deposited no less a sum than £1,110,980, to be invested and expended for their benefit.

The town of Halifax has been at once the scene of unbounded loyalty and profound discontent; of loyalty because of the visit of the Prince of Wales, of discontent because of the absence of the Princess of Wales. Unfortunately, the Princess of Wales, who with all deference to the Prince was to be the grand centre of attraction, has been attacked by indisposition serious enough to prevent her from visiting Halifax and enduring the shouts of thousands, and the fatigue of an elaborate ceremony, but not, we are happy to say, incapacitating her from quietly accomplishing the intended journey to the highlands of Scotland. However, the Prince of Wales having promised to visit the town for the opening of the new Town Hall, did not fail to keep his word, though he was compelled to undergo a journey from Osborne to Halifax, on Monday, to perform the necessary programme in the afternoon, and the morning of Tuesday, and to return to Osborne on the same day. He arrived on the afternoon of Monday, visited the great carpet manufactories of Messrs. Crossley and Son, and dined at the house of the Mayor of the town, Mr. John Crossley, and was serenaded in the evening. On the next day he visited in procession the People's Park; heard the national anthem and the "Hallelujah Chorus" sung by 10,000 voices; and performed the ceremony of opening the new Town Hall, after which he immediately left for London.

During four days of last week the sporting and the fashionable world luxuriated in Goodwood and its famous races. The beautiful seat of the Duke of Richmond cannot boast contests of such importance as those that may be witnessed at Epsom and Doncaster, nor has it a course absolutely equal to Newmarket, but the magnificence of the park and the surrounding scenery render the meeting by far the most enjoyable of all. On the present occasion the races were neither so interesting in prospect nor so exciting in result as in many preceding years. The Goodwood Stakes were carried off by an outsider, called Blackdown, to the great mortification of the owner of Anfield and the thousand supporters who stood by this colt of Mr. Greville's with such unwavering fidelity that nothing more than the odds of seven to four could be obtained against him at starting. The "favourite," however, managed to secure the second place, being defeated by three-quarters of a length. The Findon Stakes were won by Mr. R. Ten Broeck's two-year-old colt Paris; and on the same day Maccaroni, the winner of the Derby, overcame two indifferent opponents called the Gonner and Escape with consummate ease. The Goodwood Cup supplied an ample field for speculation from the competition between the French mare La Touques, who won the French Derby and Oaks, and ran second for the Grand Prix de Paris, and the admirable Buckstone, who defeated Tim Whiffler after one dead heat for the Ascot cup. Both these animals were, however, beaten by Isoline, who ran second this year for the English Oaks, and who started at the odds of seven to one. The race was further remarkable from the presence of a pure Barb, called Mazagan, the property of the Duke of Beaufort. This horse being more than six years of age, carried about four stone less than the four-year-old Buckstone, and in spite of this advantage was left hopelessly in the distance by the English horses. In the Molecomb Stakes Mr. Merry's two-year-old colt Scottish Chief, a victor at Ascot and Newmarket, and backed heavily already for the Derby of 1864, was defeated easily by the French Fille d'Air, the property of Count de Lagrange.

A series of festivities of a nature and on a scale peculiar to England has been given by the Earl of Stradbroke, at his seat at Henham Hall, in the county of Suffolk. We call attention to these rejoicings as illustrative of the relations existing between English noblemen and their tenants and neighbours, and as slightly corrective of the notions on these subjects existing in certain parts of the Continent and of America. The occasion of the festivities was the birth of an heir of the house, whose appearance will save the estates from passing into the power of a distant relation. On the first of the three days of rejoicing a large number of the nobility and gentry of the county were present to witness the christening, and were, of course, splendidly entertained; on the second day, there was a review of 2,000 Volunteers, representing the various regiments of the county, after which these 2,000 Volunteers, with about 1,000 other guests, chiefly tenants of the estate, were entertained at dinner, and the third day was set apart for the workpeople, the smaller tenantry, and their wives and children. A regular country fair had been established in the Park with the usual accessories of numberless mountebanks, performing monkeys, and the like. Two enormous waggon-loads of toys were distributed among the children, and customary rustic games, music, and dancing everywhere abounded. No less than 8,000 people in all were entertained in the course of the three days.

In the list of successful candidates in the open competition for the Civil Service of India, appears the name of Satyendra Nath Tagore. This gentleman is a native of Calcutta, where his family has long been remarkable for ability. He is twenty years of age, and has been educated at the Presidency College, in the University of Calcutta. He is the first Hindoo who has competed since the establishment of the open examination for the service, and it is expected that his success will encourage other natives of ability to visit England with the same object.

A man of colour, named George Washington, was charged with begging in the streets of London, before one of the Metropolitan magistrates last week. His story was that he had been a slave in the Confederate States, and that his wife and children were now in Texas, that he had served as a drummer in the Confederate army, and at Bull Run, had deserted to the enemy and got to New York. Thence, by the advice of General Morgan, who informed him that "slaves would be sure to find plenty of sympathisers in England," he got a place on board ship and came to this country. Having arrived here and consulted a "costermonger" on the best method of exciting sympathy in the public mind, he hit upon the expedient of parading the streets adorned with a placard and soliciting alms. His astonishment at being arrested for mendicity was very considerable, and on being discharged he expressed his intention of returning at once to New York. It is to be presumed that his notions of the reception which he will probably meet with in that city are derived rather from recollections of General Morgan's advice, than from an intimate acquaintance with the feelings of the New York populace towards the coloured race.

Sir Cresswell Cresswell, whose name has been a household word in England for five years, died last week from internal disease, hastened in its fatal effects by an accident. His life has been one of hard and unwearying toil, recompensed by gradual but corresponding reward. In 1814 he took his degree of Bachelor of Arts at Cambridge, but did not attain honours. In 1819 he was called to the bar, and joined the Northern Circuit in the palmy days of Brougham and Scarlett. He was made King's Counsel in 1834, and was elected for Liverpool, and entered the House of Commons in 1837. Five years later he was raised to the Bench, and as a Judge fully satisfied the expectations formed of him. In the year 1857 the new Divorce and Probate Act was passed; and the Legislature first recognised and put into practice the principle of making divorce possible without the expenditure of a fortune, while at the same time it swept completely away the whole system of proving wills in the prerogative courts of the archbishops, and in episcopal and local courts. In January, 1858, when the new Court came into operation, Sir Cresswell Cresswell was appointed to preside over it. Any one in the least acquainted with the method of English law-making and procedure will readily comprehend that the new Judge had not only to administer a new system of law, but also to manufacture one; this Sir Cresswell Cresswell has done with consummate skill, and by his wisdom and labour he has built up a code, and a practice based on the soundest principles, and calculated to earn the confidence and veneration of his successors in office. With him it rested whether the new Divorce Court should fulfil the worst forebodings of the opponents of the Act, or become as satisfactory an institution as such a Court can be made; and the praise which is universally awarded to him both by the profession and the public, is an assurance that his industry, discretion, and perfect self-confidence, have saved society from a considerable risk, and enabled the Legislature to arrogate to itself no small amount of social wisdom.

The litigious Mrs. Broun, more familiarly known as Patience Swinfen, has once more proved victorious in a suit. It will be recollected that this person about the year 1854 became, under the will of Mr. Samuel Swinfen, the devisee of the Swinfen Hall Estate, and that the heir-at-law by a bill in Chancery sought to overthrow that will in the following year. An issue as to the validity of the will having been directed by the Court of Chancery to be tried before a jury, Sir Frederick Thesiger, now Lord Chelmsford, was retained as counsel for Patience Swinfen, and in the exercise of his discretion as such compromised the action with the plaintiff. This settlement of the matter was repudiated by Patience Swinfen, who, moreover, brought an action against Sir F. Thesiger for having made the compromise without authority. In that action she was defeated on the ground that counsel have an immunity from action in respect of their conduct in practice at the bar. This settlement of the suit having been set aside, the original action was renewed, and resulted in favour of Patience Swinfen. This victory, which secured to her the possession of a large property, was entirely the work of Mr. Charles Rann Kennedy, who from the year 1856 to 1859 acted in all things as her adviser and most ardent friend. In the course of the year 1859, Mr. Kennedy represented to Patience Swinfen that his devotion to her cause and interests had not only distracted his attention from his ordinary business and thereby caused him considerable loss, but that he had received no remuneration for his services from her. In fact he, though a barrister, had acted throughout without the usual intervention of a solicitor, and therefore had received no customary fees. Thereupon his client, having freely admitted that the sum of £20,000 would be no more than a fair remuneration for the services of Mr. Kennedy, executed a deed of gift in his favour of the Swinfen Hall Estate, subject to her life-interest and certain other charges. Shortly afterwards Patience Swinfen became the wife of a Mr. Broun, and a misunderstanding having sprung up and ripened into a deadly quarrel between her and Mr. Kennedy, she sought to repudiate the deed of gift, the validity of which he no less strongly upheld. At length Mr. Kennedy brought an action in the Common Pleas against Mrs. Broun on accounts stated between them, and obtained a verdict for £20,000. This verdict was, however, set aside by the court on the ground that no contract made between a barrister and his client, whether in consideration of future or past services, can be valid at law. Still Mr. Kennedy had the deed of gift of the estate, and that deed was of course valid at law. Mrs. Broun proceeded, therefore, to get the deed set aside in a Court of Equity, on the ground that it was executed under undue influence, while Mr. Kennedy sought to maintain the deed on the ground of meritorious services having been rendered as the consideration for the gift. The suit came before the Master of the Rolls, and his Honour found that the deed was executed while Patience Swinfen was so far under Mr. Kennedy's influence that she had no power to resist the appeal made to her; and as to the question of consideration, he held, following the decision of the Court of Common Pleas, that as counsel should not sue for their fees, so the admission of such being due to them could not be a good foundation for a deed of gift. Mr. Kennedy was, therefore, ordered to give up the deed to be cancelled, and to pay the costs of the suit. It is impossible to conceive a harder case than has befallen Mr. Kennedy. He gave up time, labour, and all the income derived from the exercise of his profession, to secure to Patience Swinfen her property, after her former advisers had failed in the attempt, and he has not only gone unrewarded, but has been mulcted in enormous costs and expenses. He has fallen a victim to his own credulity in the friendship of his client, and to the inexorable rule of his own profession, that a barrister's fees are mere gifts and incapable of conversion into debts; at the same time he must thank himself for much of his misfortune, for he was not and could not be ignorant of a rule so well ascertained.

EUROPE.

There is no change in the Polish situation. The allied Governments have not yet determined upon their rejoinder to the despatches of Prince Gortschakoff. The work of the diplomatists is a difficult one. So long as there was only a question of words, agreement involved no decisive action, union was comparatively easy, but now that a policy must be determined on, which may have serious consequences, the difference of object comes out strongly. Neither England nor Austria wish for war; they would prefer the restoration par et simple of Russian rule to a contest in which they believe the Poles would gain considerably, whilst their own interests would suffer greatly. The French Government, on the other hand, although it may not wish for war, yet would prefer running the risk to putting up with the discomfiture implied in leaving Russia to act as she pleases; and thus we have France taking the lead in the negotiations, and using all her efforts to win the assent of England and Austria to a decided, energetic policy. The three Cabinets are in active communication, but it is doubtful whether England and Austria will agree to the French proposal of a collective note. It is more probable that, a general agreement being arrived at as to the substance of the rejoinder, each Power will express its views in its own language as in the recent propositions.

At present, if we may believe official and officious newspapers, the identity of sentiment between the three Courts is complete. We hear too much of this union, "the lady doth protest too much." One cannot suppress the suspicion that these assurances of harmony are devised to mask some disagreement.

The most hopeful sign of the times is a despatch in which Prince Gortschakoff has replied to the recent note of Count Rechberg, and which, following the example of the Austrian Minister, he has published immediately in St. Petersburg. This despatch, in which the Prince complains that the Austrian Minister has entirely misunderstood him, and denies emphatically that he had sought to separate Austria from England and France, or intended to establish an assimilation between Galicia and Poland, is very conciliatory in its tone, and indeed presents a marked contrast to the replies to the notes. Such is the impression at least which the telegraphic summary of its contents leaves. We need not say that the text of a despatch is very often found not to justify the construction which a telegraphic agent has put upon it. It requires considerable skill to give in a few lines a faithful summary of a despatch, and that skill, we have painful evidence every day, very few telegraphic agents possess.

Much excitement has been created in Paris, and, indeed, in the stock markets of Europe generally, by a pamphlet entitled "L'Empereur, La Pologne, et l'Europe," issued from the famous shop which gave to the world the pamphlets which have been tacitly allowed to have been Imperial manifestos. The quidnuncs have chosen to consider this pamphlet as an Imperial manifesto—for what reason, save that the Emperor has before spoken by pamphlets, and that this writer adopts a very authoritative tone, we cannot discover. Its object is to declare that "if Russia will persist in the deplorable course she has adopted," the Powers will go to war with her, and in this wise, an Anglo-Franco-Swedish fleet will act in the Baltic, and an Anglo-Franco-Italian fleet in the Black Sea, violating the neutrality of those waters consecrated in 1856. Austria and Prussia will closely watch the western frontier of Russia, and if Prussia will not accept this "natural duty" France will inflict upon her a second Jena, and the Powers will make her a high road to Russia. The Emperor has certainly had no part in this pamphlet, which is differently ascribed, we may assume in both cases falsely, to both M. Mocquard and M. Granier de Cassagnac. He certainly, if he wishes for war, is too wise to irritate Prussia by taunts and threats to reunion; and he as certainly would not thus boldly divulge schemes which would excite the distrust, if not the positive opposition of England and Austria.

According to some reports, there are very great dissensions between the aristocratic and democratic parties, the whites and the reds; dissensions which but for the dread of a common enemy would break out in an intestine struggle. This incurable jealousy and division has always been, and bids fair always to be, the bane of the Polish cause. No valour, no endurance can withstand it.

It is said that an outbreak is preparing in Warsaw. Hardly probable. The Russians have too large a force, and the result of the struggle would inevitably be the dispersal of the National Government, and its deprivation of the facilities it has hitherto enjoyed for the publication and execution of its orders. The amount of the forced loan it has decreed is 21,000,000 Polish florins, or about half a million sterling.

It is now said that the person whom the Austrian authorities arrested as Wysocki is not the Polish leader. If it should be Wysocki he has very good reasons for denying his identity. He took part in the Hungarian revolution, and was condemned, in contumaciam, to death —a sentence which would not, of course, be now executed, but the commutation of which into a term of imprisonment would be disagreeable enough. The Austrian Government is acting with great vigour against the insurrection in Galicia. It may be resolved to use all diplomatic means to obtain for the Poles the franchises to which they are entitled, but it seems to have discovered that the continuance of the agitation in Galicia has some danger, or rather is preparing some trouble for itself, and it has consequently been arresting in a wholesale manner those Galician noblemen against whom any case of participation in the recent expeditions can be established. These measures have given some offence to the population of Lemberg—the peasants go with the Government, and would be delighted to get a hint to murder their lords, but the urban population is everywhere in favour of the insurrection—and they, at least the youths and loose women of the town, have given vent to their feelings by a general attack upon the luckless Jews, in which no lives indeed were lost—thanks to the interference of the military—but the children of Israel suffered very much in person and property.

The Vienna papers published a few days since a letter alleged to have been addressed by General Werder, the Prussian Commander-in-Chief on the whole Polish frontier, to the General of cavalry, Count Waldersee, in which, relying upon some clauses of the famous convention of the 8th February, which he textually sets out, the Commander-in-Chief points to a speedy entrance of the Prussian troops into the kingdom of Poland. The letter, evidently designed to fan the feeling against Prussia, is now declared to be a forgery.

Considerable sensation has been excited by an article in the Neue Preussische Zeitung, commonly called the Kreuz-Zeitung, the organ of the Junker party and the great champion of Russia, describing Russia as neither a sufficient nor a trustworthy ally for Prussia, and advocating an understanding with England and Austria. Very sensible advice, and coming from such a quarter it will, we may hope, have some good effect. The Kreuz-Zeitung, however, thinks that Count Bernstoff, the Prussian Ambassador in London, is not the fit man to accomplish such a purpose. Count Bernstoff may be proud of the censure. It is another convincing proof that, although a member of the illiberal ministry of Von der Heydt, he has always been opposed to the arbitrary system and the violations of the constitution advocated by the Feudal and reactionary party.

The long-expected interview of the sovereigns of Austria and Prussia has taken place. The Emperor arrived at Gastein on Sunday. Politics may have something to do with the interview, but it is just as likely to be one of mere civility. The King of Prussia has been staying in the Austrian Empire some time, and it is only common politeness for the Emperor of Austria to call upon him, and tell him that he is welcome.

The Transylvanian Diet met at Hermanstadt a few days since. The deputies of the Saxon and Rouman nations, as well as the nominees of the Crown from those nationalities took their seats, and received with expressions of the utmost satisfaction the Imperial rescript calling upon them to send deputies to the Reichsrath, and devote themselves to legislation for the benefit of the principality. The Magyars, although present at Hermanstadt, did not take their seats, and after a long consultation they have finally resolved, as the Imperial rescript declared the union established between Transylvania and Hungary in 1848 illegal, not to take their seats, and have announced that determination to the President of the diet, who forthwith ordered new elections for the deputies, and transmitted the announcement of refusal of the members named by him to accept the honour to the Emperor. The rest of the diet representing the large majority of the nation has not allowed this proceeding to disturb it. It has begun the consideration of the reforms which the delegate of the Emperor has submitted to it, and it will doubtless in due time send its contingent to the Reichsrath. The Magyar leaders are playing a losing game both in Transylvania and Hungary. The people will not be long content to refuse the real liberties the Emperor offers, liberties which they never before possessed, for the dream of a sentimental independence, which would be ruinous to them and mischievous to the Empire.

According to one account King George I., of Greece, will leave Copenhagen for his capital immediately after the question of the Ionian Islands has been arranged, that is to say, some time after Christmas. According to another account he starts on the 29th of August. The National Assembly has been preparing for his arrival by rehabilitating—we must use the word—all the persons convicted of political offences in the last reign, amongst others, one Aristides Dosios, a scoundrel who attempted the assassination of the ex-Queen. Let us hope the young King will appreciate this delicate attention. Disorders continue, and will continue until the Government acts rigorously and sternly, but of that there is little chance, unless King George begins his reign by arresting and executing or deporting all the members of the National Assembly and officers of the army.

The Italian Chambers have passed the tax bills, and have been prorogued. Although they have left a great deal of business unperformed, there is some excuse for them in the terrible heat which prevails at this season in Turin.

MEXICO.

General Forey is rapidly establishing order in Mexico. He has resigned into the hands of a triumvirate, consisting of Generals Almonte and Solas, and the Archbishop of Mexico, and elected by the supreme junta of Government, named by the general having the executive power and the direction of the affairs of the nation, until the establishment of a definitive power. He has addressed several proclamations to the people, promising them liberty and order, and altogether seems to have been very successful. It need not be feared that the new Government will go very wrong whilst the French commander directs their movements; but it is complained in some quarters that they represent only the Church party.

THE EAST.

"Nana Sahib has been captured." So runs the telegram. But the telegraph has said the same thing before, and it is best to be incredulous until overwhelming evidence is given of the identity of the prisoner. When that evidence is given, the general cry will be "Thank God!" There is not an Englishman, save, perhaps, Mr. John Bright, who will not delight to hear that this disgusting monster has been executed.

The Imperialists have gained a victory over the Taepings.

A telegram from Shanghai, supplied by Mr. Reuter, states that a fearful earthquake took place at Manila on the 3rd of June, and that 10,000 persons were buried in the ruins of the town. A telegram from Singapore in the French papers, which is much more likely to tell the truth, says that many persons were wounded.

SOCIETY ISLANDS.

A new species of slave trade has sprung up in the Society Islands, and some other groups of the Polynesian archipelago. Labourers are required for the guano works in the Chinchas Islands, and, as might be expected, cannot very easily be got. In this emergency, some speculative Peruvians have hit upon the idea of seizing the natives of the islands of the Pacific, and selling them to the directors of the guano works. Of course, these slaves are called free labourers, and the Peruvian Government would hold up its hands in disgust at the bare idea of these Indians being taken against their will; but no questions are asked, and the Indians once carried there have no option but to work on as slaves until they die. A great deal of havoc has been made amongst the populations of the Pacific in this way, but at last the French have caught a set of offenders, and severely punished them. The captain and pilot interpreter of the Peruvian brig Mercedes Abeleira de Ahole have been convicted in the Society Islands of having carried off, some by fraud, others by force, 152 inhabitants of the Quamoutic Islands, with the intention of carrying them to Peru and selling them to the contractors of the guano works in the Chinchas Islands. The captain has been condemned to five years of forced labour and fines amounting to nearly 19,000 francs, and the pilot interpreter, who seems to have been the principal agent in inveigling the natives on board, to ten years of forced labour, and the court ordered the sale of the ship to pay the fines it imposed.

THE CAMPAIGN ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA, July 11.

We have news, such as it is, both of the fall of Vicksburg and of the surrender of Port Hudson. The first has, doubtless, already reached you from the North, and perhaps intelligence of the second. I have waited as long as possible for the sailing of this morning's steamer, hoping to send you the "official report" of General Banks, but his organ fails to publish it this morning.

We had news here, July 8, of the surrender of Vicksburg. The "official" published it, but people would not believe it, and the money-market was entirely unaffected by the news; the poster placarded about the streets failed to convince, and beyond what is stated to be an official despatch from General Grant to General Banks, we do not know that Vicksburg has fallen to-day.

We can scarcely be blamed for disbelieving an official organ which stated that Banks was going to Mobile, when every one knew he was about to march in an opposite direction towards Red River. Nor can we be blamed for refusing to credit the United States' Government despatches, when we read such as the following, or indeed any of the almost countless falsehoods officially promulgated, within a twelvemonth, from Washington:—

OFFICIAL TELEGRAM.

WASHINGTON, June 24.

Despatches from General Banks have been received by the War Department, to the effect that on the 14th inst., having established his batteries within thirty-five yards of the rebel works at Port Hudson, after a vigorous cannonade, he summoned General Gardner to surrender.

On his refusal, an assault was made, and our forces gained positions within fifty to one hundred yards of the enemy's works, which they held. General Paine was severely wounded. General Banks expressed himself confident of success.

All England knows now how wholly false the above statement is, and there is actually something ridiculous in establishing batteries within "thirty-five yards," and then "gaining" positions within one hundred yards of the enemy's works.

For all this, several persons have been arrested here within a day or two, and have been heavily fined for "seditious language,"—i.e., for saying that they did not believe Grant's despatch.

It is stated that when the gunboat Price brought down Grant's despatch last Wednesday to Port Hudson, the fleet both above and below fired salutes, and the Confederates on the works asked the Federals in the trenches what the demonstrations meant. "The surrender of Vicksburg." This was reported to General Gardner, who is said to have sent a letter to Banks asking a cessation of hostilities till he could ascertain the truth for himself. Banks declined, but sent him a certified copy of Grant's despatch. Whereupon Gardner announced that he was ready to arrange for the terms of surrender, and a conference of three officers from each army was held. It is also stated, but not yet published, that Gardner was in a starving condition, that "the last mule had been eaten," and General Banks immediately sent in 6,000 rations.

The terms of surrender are said to be the following:—
1. All the public property and munitions of war to be given up, officers and soldiers retaining their private property. 2. Prisoners to be treated according to the usual rules of war. 3. The sick to be cared for by Federal or Confederate officers. 4. The place to be at once evacuated by the Confederates.

None of this, however, is yet published, officially or otherwise. It is understood that the despatches go north this morning. There is a steamer to sail Monday, by which I hope to send you full particulars.

The river, which is officially reported to be quiet, is now open to vessels from here to Baton Rouge without the risk of attack from the "rebel" batteries. There are now three of these batteries—one just below Donaldsonville, one at College Point, and one ten miles nearer and within fifty miles of the city. Every boat up or down has been attacked. Captain Abner Reed, of the gunboat Monongahela, was killed by a shot from the Donaldsonville battery last Wednesday; another person on board was killed. The Tennessee was attacked, and lost one man yesterday, and gunboats are engaged now in shelling the batteries, while not a boat goes up or down without a convoy.

The Boston papers received by the latest Northern mail say much about Colonel Thomas E. Chickering, and "the marked successes which have attended his military operations in General Banks's department." In order that your readers may estimate the Boston idea of "military operations," the following is quoted from the Boston Transcript:—

From the official report of Colonel C. it appears that during his administration as military Governor of Opelousas, Louisiana, and Commandant of United States' Military Depot, Barre's Landing, 6,000 bales of cotton were collected in the parish of St. Landry and shipped by the Constable and Grand Duke to New Orleans, besides large quantities of sugar, molasses, and other products of the country. Upwards of ten thousand contrabands were sent by Colonel C. from Barre's Landing, by steamer to New Orleans, from there to Government plantations. The mills at Opelousas and vicinity were set to work and kept in use grinding corn, of which thousands of bushels were issued daily to the army and contrabands. . . . The report concludes, by delivering over to the Quartermaster at Brashear, a train of six hundred and thirty waggons, over three thousand mules and horses, an ammunition train of fifty army waggons, and seven thousand three hundred contrabands, having marched from Bain's Landing to Brashear, a distance of one hundred and ten miles in five days, without the loss of a wagon or part of the train. One Lieutenant of the 110th New York was killed in an engagement with the enemy at Franklin, and several officers and men taken prisoners, but the train was safely brought to its destination. Nearly three million dollars will be realized to the Government from this one part of General Banks's march to Alexandria.

A portion of this report is true; but there is a general richness about the quoted article which was no doubt evident even to the editor of the Transcript, when he learned that a very small part of the stolen cotton ever reached New Orleans. That which was stored at Barre's Landing, awaiting transportation, was seized by Magruder's men, and all that was not removed was destroyed. The "upwards of ten thousand contrabands sent by steamer (!) from Barre's to New Orleans" have not yet arrived. Two thousand negroes, hundreds of bales of cotton, droves of cattle, horses, and mules, were sent to Brashear, and, as Boston has recently learned, have all been recovered again by the Confederates, together with "nearly three million dollars" worth of property "realized" from (not to) the United States' Government "from this one part of General Banks's march to Alexandria."

You have already received a statement from Federal sources of the amount of property "confiscated as contraband of war" by the Confederates when they captured Brashear city. I have since learned that there were large quantities of provisions and other goods taken by speculators to Brashear with the intention of opening an extensive and profitable trade in the recovered country which Banks was to restore to the Union. Of course this property of the speculators who accompany all the "military operations" in the South was "gobbled" with the Federal stores. The Jackson Mississippian of July 3 publishes the account of the capture of Thibodeauxville and Brashear, and gives the following inventory of the "effects," i.e., the effects of a sudden descent of 600 Confederates upon the city of Brashear before breakfast on a fine summer morning, known in the calendar as June 23:—"1,500 prisoners, 7,000 Enfield rifles, 200,000 rounds of ammunition, 800 sacks of coffee, 3,000 lbs. of flour, 20,000 suits of clothes, 20,000 pairs of boots and shoes, two trains of cars with locomotives, an immense quantity of commissary stores, the whole valued at $2,500,000." Surely Colonel Chickering must have reckoned at cash value his "military operations," which subsequent events show to have been entirely on "exchange account."

Later than this account we have General Dick Taylor's official despatch in the Louisiana (Alexandria) Democrat July 1, which says that "Generals Taylor, Mouton, and Green attacked and surprised the Federal force at Brashear, and captured 1,800 prisoners, including thirty-three commissioned officers, commissary stores to the value of $3,000,000; quarter-master's stores, $1,500,000; ordnance stores, $250,000; medical stores, $100,000; 23 garrison and regimental flags; 1,000 tents; 2,000 horses and mules; 7,000 negroes; 7,000 stands of arms; 16 siege guns; and a position as important as Port Hudson or Vicksburg."

That General Taylor fully appreciates the importance of the position is evident, since he has issued an order that he means to hold it. He warns those who will not take the oath of allegiance to the Confederacy that they cannot remain within his lines. Some of the returned paroled Federal prisoners say that the speculators and traders who expected to make fortunes when Banks opened the country across the Teche to trade, were some of them recognised as New Orleans men, or Louisianians. These were promptly conscripted, and were sent over the Bay to Berwick city. A late telegram to the Mobile Advertiser and Register, of July 4, states that "other important movements of General Taylor are progressing."

As for the contrabands, leaving at least two thousand to be recovered by the Confederates at Brashear, hundreds were brought by rail to Algiers, or to this city, to be packed in the cotton presses, or sent to Port Hudson to be slaughtered, or set at work on the defences at Camp Parapet above New Orleans, while a few were sent to what are facetiously called the Government plantations. These poor blacks—those of them who have survived the change of food and mode of living, the mode of dying in the trenches at Port Hudson, the packing and putrefaction of the presses, the outrageous tasks imposed by their new masters, who care no more for a "nigger" than for a dog—never knew what slavery was until they entered upon a life of "liberty." They can be seen any day at Algiers—negro men, women, boys and girls, cutting and "toteing" wood in the swamps, staggering under their loads at mid-day along the dusty sun-parched roads, or at the defences, digging from dawn till dark, and working, not under the "overseer's lash" so pathetically alluded to in "Uncle Tom," but under the bayonets of their new Northern drivers, who have not even the humanity that a property-interest would prompt in the meanest slave-owner ever dreamed of by the most imaginative of the whole Beecher book and money-making tribe.

Among the incidents of the week is the following:—Some forty mounted Texans brought in a lot of the paroled Federal prisoners captured at Brashear, and delivered them to the outposts beyond Algiers, near Butte Station. This was last Saturday. The same night the Texans attacked the Federal pickets, were surrounded, and were brought as prisoners to this city.

Among the remarkable men developed by the present civil war is Neal Dow, of Portland, Maine, known as the father of the "Maine Law," and first cousin to every fanaticism that ever possessed New England. He came here as a Brigadier-General with Butler, and immediately entered upon a career of unblushing robbery, which promised to surpass in infamy even that of his Massachusetts master. He literally stole everything he could lay hands upon, and transferred an enormous amount of his thievings to his Northern home. He spared no one, robbing alike Unionists and Secessionists. For stealing twelve hogheads of sugar and a silver pitcher from one planter, he was actually convicted as a thief in a Federal court. In a few instances he had been compelled to return stolen property to the owners. His career here was cut short by his transfer to Pensacola, Florida. There he was in command. He sent men to Fort Pickens as prisoners, and robbed them at leisure, stripping their houses of pianos, pictures, plate, even children's clothing, and boxed up the proceeds of his burglaries and sent them to the North. There is scarcely a thief in the Brest or Toulon galleys who would not feel himself disgraced by a depravity so gross, and a propensity for plunder so insatiable that it spared neither friend nor foe. But there is something still more strange. His crimes, his thefts, were as well known to the United States Government at Washington, as huge piles of affidavits, the newspapers, and the published convictions of courts, and the complaints of the sufferers, and his known character could make them. And yet, he retained his command, when the whole people of America knew that he was a common thief.

As a soldier he was much of the same school as that in which Messrs. Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol obtained their commissions. He went to Port Hudson, was literally kicked from one division to another, and finally brought up in the division on the left, without the consent of the general commanding that division. In the assault of May 27 he blundered into a slight wound that lacked not many inches of having been inflicted upon the seat of his saddle rather than himself. Since then he has been recovering in a farm-house near Baton-Rouge, and not long ago a party of Logan's scouts surrounded the house and carried Dow away a prisoner. A despatch to the Advertiser and Register (Mobile), July 3, says that he was expected in Jackson, Mississippi, that night. It is not generally thought, even in the Federal army, that he is entitled to a single consideration as a prisoner of war.

A citizen of New Orleans, within a week past, has been released from Fort Pickens. He was told by the Provost-Marshal that "there was nothing against him." For this "nothing" he has lost thirty pounds of flesh and a whole year of life—twelve months in an American bastille. The following gentlemen are now confined as political prisoners in Fort Pickens:—Ex-Mayor Stith, ex-Mayor Monroe, George C. Lawrison, J. B. Lee, Dr. Mackin, Dr. Booth, Daniel Conway, Charles Reed, Mr. Colston, G. M'D. Burke, Victor de Pratt, Eugene de Pratt, Robert Johnson, Oscar Blasco, William Evinton, all of New Orleans, and Mr. Hunter, of Florida. Mr. Rufus L. Bruce has just been released. Last week a flag of truce came to the navy yard at Pensacola, and a formal demand was made for all the prisoners. The Federal commander promised to refer the matter to General Banks.

My next will give you the particulars about Port Hudson; it is impossible to send by to-day's mail. Meanwhile, remember that if Port Hudson and Vicksburg have fallen, peace, and peace alone, can open the Mississippi.

MR. VALLANDIGHAM'S ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF OHIO.

NIAGARA FALLS, CANADA WEST, July 15.

Arrested and confined for three weeks in the United States, a prisoner of State; banished thence to the Confederate States, and there held an alien enemy and prisoner of war, though on parole; fairly and honourably dealt with and given leave to depart, an act possible only by running the blockade at the hazard of being fired upon by ships flying the flag of my own country, I found myself first a freeman when on British soil. And to-day, under protection of the British flag, I am here to enjoy and in part to exercise the privileges and rights which usurpers insolently deny me at home. The shallow contrivance of the weak despots at Washington, and their advisers has been defeated. Nay, it has been turned against them; and I, who for two years was maligned as in secret league with the Confederates, having refused when in their midst, under circumstances the most favourable, either to identify myself with their cause or even so much as to remain, preferring rather exile in a foreign land, return now with allegiance to my own State and Government, unbroken in word, thought, or deed, and with every declaration and pledge to you while at home, and before I was stolen away, made good in spirit and to the very letter. Six weeks ago, when just going into banishment, because an audacious, but most cowardly despotism caused it, I addressed you as a fellow-citizen. To-day and from the very place then selected by me, but after wearisome and most perilous journeyings for more than 4000 miles by land and upon the sea, still in exile, though almost in sight of my native State, I greet you as your representative. Grateful, certainly, I am for the confidence in my integrity and patriotism implied by the unanimous nomination as candidate for Governor of Ohio which you gave me while I was yet in the Confederate States. It was not misplaced; it shall never be abused. But this is the last of all considerations in times like these. I ask no personal sympathy for the personal wrong; no; it is the cause of constitutional liberty and private right cruelly outraged beyond example in a free country, by the President and his servants, which gives public significance to the action of your convention. Yours was, indeed, an act of justice to a citizen who for his devotion to the rights of the States and the liberties of the people had been marked for destruction by the hand of arbitrary power. But it was much more. It was an example of courage worthy of the heroic ages of the world; and it was a spectacle and a rebuke to the usurping tyrants, who, having broken up the Union, would now strike down the Constitution, subvert your present Government, and establish a formal and proclaimed despotism in its stead. You are the restorers and defenders of constitutional liberty, and by that proud title history will salute you. I congratulate you upon your nominations. They whom you have placed upon the ticket with me are gentlemen of character, ability, integrity, and tried fidelity to the Constitution, the Union, and to Liberty. Their moral and political courage—a quality always rare, and now the most valuable of public virtues—is beyond question. Every way all these were nominations fit to be made. And even jealousy, I am sure, will now be hushed, if I especially rejoice with you in the nomination of Mr. Pugh as your candidate for Lieutenant-Governor and President of the Senate. A scholar and a gentleman, a soldier in a foreign war, and always a patriot; eminent as a lawyer, and distinguished as an orator and a statesman, I hail his acceptance as an omen of the return of the better and more virtuous days of the Republic. I endorse your noble platform—elegant in style—admirable in sentiment. You present the true issue, and commit yourself to the great mission just now of the Democratic party—to restore and make sure first the rights and liberties declared yours by your Constitutions. It is vain to invite the States and people of the South to return to a Union without a Constitution, and dishonoured and polluted by repeated and most aggravated exactions of tyrannical power. It is base in yourselves and treasonable to your posterity to surrender these liberties and rights to the creatures whom your own breath created and can destroy. Shall there be free speech, a free press, peaceable assemblages of the people, and a free ballot any longer in Ohio? Shall the people hereafter, as hitherto, have the right to discuss and condemn the principles and policy of the party—the Ministry—men who for the time conduct the Government—to demand of their public servants a reckoning of their stewardship, and to place other men and another party in power at their supreme will and pleasure? Shall order 88 or the Constitution be the supreme law of the land? And shall the citizen any more be arrested by an armed soldiery at midnight, dragged from wife and child and home to a military prison; thence to a mock military trial; thence condemned, and then banished as a felon for the exercise of his rights? This is the issue, and nobly have you met it. It is the very question of free, popular government itself. It is the whole question—upon the one side liberty, on the other despotism. The President, as the recognised head of his party, accepts the issue. Whatever he wills, that is law. Constitutions, State and Federal, are nothing; acts of legislation nothing; the judiciary less than nothing. In time of war there is but one will supreme—his will but one law, military necessity, and he the sole judge. Military orders supersede the Constitution, and military commissions usurp the place of the ordinary courts of justice in the land. Nor are these mere idle claims. For two years and more, by arms, they have been enforced. It was the mission of the weak but presumptuous Burnside—a name infamous for ever in the ears of all lovers of constitutional liberty—to try the experiment in Ohio, aided by a judge whom I name not, because he has brought foul dishonour upon the judiciary of my country. In your hands now, men of Ohio, is the final issue of the experiment. The party of the Administration have accepted it. By pledging support to the President, they have justified his outrages upon liberty and the Constitution; and whoever gives his vote to the candidates of that party commits himself to every act of violence and wrong on the part of the Administration which he upholds; and thus, by the law of retaliation, which is the law of might, would forfeit his own right to liberty, personal and political, whenever other men and another party shall hold the power. Much more do the candidates themselves. Suffer them not, I entreat you, to evade the issue; and by the judgment of the people we will abide. And now, finally, let me ask, what is the pretext for all the monstrous acts and claims of arbitrary power which you have so nobly denounced? "Military necessity." But if, indeed, all these be demanded by military necessity, then, believe me, your liberties are gone, and tyranny is perpetual.

For if this civil war is to terminate only by the subjugation or submission of the South to force and arms, the infant of to-day will not live to see the end of it. No, in another way only can it be brought to a close. Travelling a thousand miles and more, through nearly one-half of the Confederate States, and sojourning for a time at widely different points, I met not one man, woman, or child, who was not resolved to perish rather than yield to the pressure of arms, even in the most desperate extremity. And whatever may and must be the varying fortune of the war, in all which I recognise the hand of Providence pointing visibly to the ultimate issue of this great trial of the States and people of America, they are better prepared now every way to make good their inexorable purpose than at any period since the beginning of the struggle. These may, indeed, be unwelcome truths; but they are addressed only to candid and honest men. Neither, however, let me add, did I meet any one, whatever his opinions or his station, political or private, who did not declare his readiness, when the war shall have ceased, and invading armies been withdrawn, to consider and discuss the question of reunion. And who shall doubt the issue of the argument? I return, therefore, with my opinions and convictions as to war or peace, and my faith as to the final results from sound policy and wise statesmanship, not only unchanged, but confirmed and strengthened. And may the God of heaven and earth so rule the hearts and minds of Americans everywhere, that with a Constitution maintained, a Union restored, and liberty henceforth made secure, a grander and nobler destiny shall yet be ours, than that even which blessed our fathers in the first two ages of the Republic.

A VOICE FROM A FEDERAL PRISON.

The following letter has been handed to us for publication:—

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 18.

DEAR FRIEND,—My silence may cause you anxiety knowing as you do that I have been arrested by the military authorities of this city. You would have heard from me sooner, however, had not my ill-health forbid it. It was my intention when I arrived in this city to have proceeded without delay to "Dixie." Having suffered considerably during my passage across the ocean I had become very much exhausted, and on my arrival here felt quite unable to proceed further south. Thus determined I threw myself on the mercy of my friends. It was soon known, however, that a "rebel" was in town, and the circumstance readily became known to the military authorities, who sent a detachment of soldiers at midnight and caused my arrest. Taken from my sick-couch I was escorted to the military prison, placed in the top or sixth story of an old furniture factory. Two lamps were dimly burning in quite a large room, where some 150 other prisoners were wrapped in sleep. Being very ill I was completely exhausted, having had to walk nearly a mile with the guard. Entering this horrible abode I was first awed at the ghastly sight of human beings stretched promiscuously on a floor lathsome with grease and filth; the odour, too, from the sleeping multitude, together with the stench from adjacent water-closets, made the scene and feelings thus experienced the most horrid that imagination can well picture. To complete the night scene and to consummate the last act in the night tragedy, the guard together with some Federal deserters—these also under arrest—as each poor unfortunate victim of Federal cruelty (myself included) entered this dismal and filthy abode, they were received with an insulting jeer, "Fresh fish." Escorted to my "berth," with the filthy floor for my bed, the same for my pillow, I was invited to "rest." Asking to be excused from participating in this "hospitality," I was allowed the privilege of resting my exhausted person on a broken-down chair with three legs, which was the only piece of furniture in the room. Placing the chair scant against a large support beam, I made it answer the double purpose of supporting my back as well as the hours while watching for the dawn of day. The stench of the room, the filth of the place and prisoners, by no means tended to shorten the hours which counted as weeks to me. At last the dawn appeared. Old Sol, too, soon paid us his morning visit. The sleepers awoke, and to my surprise found very many gentlemen of family and education mingled with the motley crowd. Two gentlemen were also among the unfortunates. One, a Mr. Geo. Richardson, No. 2, Brunswick-terrace, Blackwall, London, was placed there for expressing "a desire to be in Dixie, and sympathizing generally with the rebels." He is also accused of endeavouring to make his way to Dixie through Kentucky. Undoubtedly the young man is Southern in his views—like most Englishmen—touching this war, and thoughtlessly expressed them too freely. This, to my mind, is the only "accusation" that can be established against him. The young man, it seems, has arrived in this country within a few months, and has applied to Lord Lyons for relief. I feel impressed with the belief, however, that the slow process of diplomacy may leave him in that horrible bastille dragging out a miserable existence for months to come. Alas for English greatness! I greatly fear the last rays of England's glory has disappeared beyond the horizon of time; i. e.—

"Ireland's pride and England's glory
Is buried in disgrace by Lord Russell's stony,
"Non-intervention."

Several of the prisoners had a ball and chain attached to their leg; and one poor fellow, because he refused to perform some menial office, was gagged till the foam came out of his mouth in large quantities, and he finally rolled over, supposed by many to be strangled to death; he afterwards recovered, however, though at the time his life was despaired of. Poor fellow, he excited universal pity—even from the guard—as his mouth was forced open and the gag placed tightly in it. Thought I, are we transfigured into the regions of demons? or are the awful tragedies of "bloody Queen Mary" to be enacted on this once peaceful and happy country? I must conclude my history of "Kemper Barracks"—for that is the name of our prison "home"—fearing the Yankees might confiscate this letter as they did the contents of my pocket, and try their "gag policy" on the writer. Before doing so, however, I must ask your pardon for referring to another revolting sight which a fellow-sufferer reminds me of. It is the vermin. It is truly horrible to see the poor suffering prisoners endeavouring to keep themselves free from those filthy insects. Many of the prisoners are only half clad, and very many of them without any bed-clothing whatever.

For the past week this city—or its frantic inhabitants—have experienced a grand "skare," as the Yankees term it. About a week ago the invincible and omnipresent Major-General John Morgan, of the Confederate States' army, crossed the Ohio river, at a place called Brandenburg, about 200 miles southwest of this city. He had with him about 4,000 men. With this force he passed through the free States of Indiana, and is as I write far away in the eastern part of this State. He came within eight miles of this city, supplied himself with plenty of good horses on the road, fed himself and men well, provided the entire command with abundant clothing, taxed the citizens in his track for a goodly supply of "greenbacks" (which means Federal money), burned bridges, destroyed railways, frightened the country people in his track, and for many miles around, out of their wits, fed his 4,000 horses in the corn-fields of the farmers, and had the whole country in a terrible state of excitement in this region, which at present is only transferred to regions further east. He has had about 40,000 Yankee soldiers after him—this includes some 8,000 cavalry—but up to the present he has successfully evaded them. This is considered here the most daring raid of the war, and has made some of the war Yankees in Indiana and Ohio feel the smart of war at their own firesides. This city was under martial law, and everybody had to "turn out." Poor Burnside—the idiotic commander of this department, who is celebrated for his severity to the "rebel" ladies in this vicinity, and is called by them the "woman-fighter"—cannot, with his 40,000 men, catch the invincible "John," with his 4,000 veterans. It is said by knowing ones, that if Burnside would pay more strict attention to his legitimate business and less to the private correspondence of certain ladies, which he procures by stealing the letters from the post-office, he would be more successful as a General, and vastly more respected as a gentleman. The history of this war, when it is written, will prove that the "women-catchers" and the "women-fighters" have proved themselves incompetent for any other business. Take, for instance, Butler, Hooker, Mitchell, Burnside, Milroy, Hunter, and a host of other more insignificant brutes, whose claims to generalship or Christianity is hardly so just as the baboon who claimed that because he wore a gentleman's hat he must at least be a gentleman.

Vicksburg has fallen, so has Fort Hudson; General Lee is returning to Richmond. This seems hard luck for the South; but the disasters, severe as they are, will only arouse the people of the South to a sense of their danger; it will doubtless prolong the war, and make the struggle more severe for the people of the South, but it cannot change the issue. Fortunate, indeed, will it be for France if that country, unaided by England, recognise the South; for be assured the latter country may seek cotton from their boasted East India territory or purchase it from France—this will be the result of a policy inaugurated by "Non-intervention Russell." Poor idiot, he keeps his eyes on the trout while he loses the salmon. He reminds me of the girl, who, about to be married, commenced crying; and when asked the cause of her grief said, "I'm afraid that I shall have a child, and it may some day fall into the fire and burn itself." Poor Russell, he is afraid of "fire." I must close. Please extend to Captain Smith and our friend the Doctor my kindest regards. Let them know that though not quite as I desire, yet I am in a fair way to get out of my present trouble. It has taken me two days to write this letter, and I am only able to write by spells. Being very nervous you will, I trust, excuse its appearance. For the present farewell.

Not forgetful of your kindness whilst in London, I beg you will accept my heartfelt gratitude, and receive this as the only homage I have to offer.

Believe me, your sincere Friend,
W. H.

PRAYERS USED IN THE CONFEDERACY.

The following prayers are in use in the Churches of the Confederate States:

O Lord, our Heavenly Father, who dost from Thy throne behold all the dwellers upon earth, look down in mercy, we beseech Thee, upon the Confederate States, who have fled to Thee from the rod of the oppressor, and thrown themselves upon Thy gracious protection, desirous hereafter to be dependant only on Thee. To Thee have they appealed for the righteousness of their cause, to Thee do they now look up for that support which Thou alone canst give. Take them, therefore, Heavenly Father, under Thy nurturing care; give them wisdom in council and valour in the field, defeat the evil designs of our adversaries, convince them of the unrighteousness of their cause, and if they still persist in their sanguinary purposes, O let the voice of Thine own unerring justice sounding in their hearts constrain them to drop the weapons of war from their unnerved hands in the day of battle, that victory may rest with our armies, and peace in all our borders. All these we ask for Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour's sake. AMEN.

Almighty God, whose providence watcheth over all things, and in whose hand is the disposal of all events, we look up to Thee for Thy protection and blessing amidst the apparent and great dangers with which we are encompassed. Thou hast in Thy wisdom permitted us to be threatened with the many evils of an unnatural and destructive war.

Save us, we beseech Thee, from the hands of our enemies. Watch over our husbands, fathers, brothers, and sons, who, trusting in Thy defence, and in the righteousness of our cause, have gone forth to the service of their country. May their lives be precious in Thy sight, preserve them from all the dangers to which they may be exposed. Enable them successfully to perform their duty to Thee and to their country, and do Thou in Thine infinite wisdom and power so overrule events, and so dispose the hearts of all engaged in this painful struggle, that it may soon end in peace and brotherly love, and lead not only to the safety, honour, and welfare of our Confederate States, but to the good of Thy people and glory of Thy great name. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. AMEN.

O Lord, our Heavenly Father, the defender of all who put their trust in Thee, look down with compassion, we beseech Thee, on Thy servants, who committed themselves to Thy keeping as in the hands of a faithful Creator; who desire the continuance of our prayers for their safety, and further them with Thy continual help; defend them from all violence, and cover them as with a shield from the fury of our enemies, and grant that they may return to us in safety and pass the remainder of their days in Thy fear, and to Thy Glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord. AMEN.

ORDER OF GENERAL LEE FOR THE PROTECTION OF PRIVATE PROPERTY IN PENNSYLVANIA.

General Orders, No. 13.

Head-quarters, Army of Northern Virginia,
Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, June 27.

The Commanding General has observed with marked satisfaction the conduct of the troops on the march, and confidently anticipates results commensurate with the high spirit they have manifested.

No troops could have displayed greater fortitude, or better performed the arduous marches of the past ten days.

Their conduct in other respects has, with few exceptions, been in keeping with their character as soldiers, and entitles them to approbation and praise.

There have, however, been instances of forgetfulness on the part of some that they have in keeping the yet unsullied reputation of this army, and that the duties exacted of us by civilization and Christianity are not less obligatory in the country of the enemy than in our own.

The Commanding General considers that no greater disgrace could befall the army, and, through it, our whole people, than the perpetration of the barbarous outrages upon the unarmed and the defenceless, and the wanton destruction of private property, that have marked the course of the enemy in our own country.

Such proceedings not only degrade the perpetrators and all connected with them, but are subversive of the discipline and efficiency of the army, and destructive of the ends of our present movement.

It must be remembered that we make war only upon armed men, and that we cannot take vengeance for the wrongs our people have suffered without lowering ourselves in the eyes of all whose abhorrence has been excited by the atrocities of our enemies, and offending against Him to whom vengeance be-longeth, without whose favour and support our efforts must all prove in vain.

The Commanding General therefore earnestly exhorts the troops to abstain, with most scrupulous care, from unnecessary or wanton injury to private property, and he enjoins upon all officers to arrest and bring to summary punishment all who shall in any way offend against the orders on this subject.

R. E. LEE, General.

THE SOUTHERN CONSCRIPTION.

President Davis has issued the following proclamation:—

Whereas, it is provided by an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to further provide for the Public Defence," approved the 16th day of April, 1862, and by another Act of Congress, approved the 27th of September, 1862, entitled "An Act to amend an Act entitled An Act to provide further for the Public Defence," approved 16th of April, 1862, that the President be authorised to call out and place in the military service of the Confederate States, for three years, unless the war should have been sooner ended, all white men who are residents of the Confederate States, between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years, at the time the call may be made, and who are not at such time legally exempted from military service, or such part thereof as in his judgment may be necessary to the public defence.

And whereas, in my judgment, the necessities of the public defence require that every man capable of bearing arms between the ages aforesaid should now be called out to do his duty in the defence of his country, and in driving back the invaders now within the limits of the Confederacy.

Now, therefore, I, Jefferson Davis, President of the Confederate States of America, do, by virtue of the powers vested in me as aforesaid, call out and place in the military service of the Confederate States all white men residents of said States between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years not legally exempted from military service; and I do hereby order and direct that all persons subject to this call and not now in the military service do, upon being enrolled, forthwith repair to the conscript camps established in the respective States of which they have been residents, under pain of being held and punished as deserters in the event of their failure to obey this call, as provided in said laws.

And I do further order and direct that the enrolling officers of the several States proceed at once to enrol all persons embraced within the terms of this proclamation, and not heretofore enrolled.

And I do further order that it shall be lawful for any person embraced within this call to volunteer for service before enrolment, and that persons so volunteering be allowed to select the arm of service and the company which they desire to join, provided such company be deficient in the full number of men allowed by law for its organization.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Confederate States of America, at the city of Richmond, this 15th day of July, in the year of our Lord 1863.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

By the President.—J. P. BENJAMIN,
Secretary of State.

THE RESOURCES OF THE SOUTH.

(From the Richmond Examiner.)

The military resources of the South were never more ample than now; and the present condition of the Confederacy, with reference to material elements of success in the war, is one of varied and lively encouragement.

It is estimated that we have arms enough to put in the hands of a million of men, and our available military strength is rated at but little less than a million and a half. We have now in the Confederate service from 400,000 to 450,000 effective men; and the irregular organizations and State militia would probably add 200,000 more. These figures are authentic; a portion of them are derived from such public data as appear in the debates in Congress; while the estimates of the additional forces that might be called out in circumstances of paramount necessity is probably not out of proportion to the well-ascertained statistics of population.

Other aspects of the picture of our condition are not discouraging. The recent alarm with reference to the resources of subsistence in the Confederacy has, in a great measure, subsided, and given place to better informed and more confident views of the stocks of provisions on hand, and our vast capabilities of production, which are now in exercise. The grain crops in the South were never more promising than at the present season. The crop of wheat likely to be harvested this year will be without a parallel in the South. From all parts of the Confederacy, from the Potomac to the Rio Grande, and the remotest Western boundary, we have cheering news of the growing grain crops. Contrary to the expectations of some, that the cotton region would not prove to be adapted to the cultivation of wheat, it has produced this grain with a luxuriance quite equal to that we have seen in the best wheat districts of Virginia. The corn also is said to look healthy and thrifty in all parts of the Confederacy, with the prospect of an overwhelming crop.

Extending our survey of the internal condition of the Confederacy, we have also cause for congratulation in its improved finances; the excellent results of the tax bill; the withdrawal of the currency; the reduction of outlays and the enlarged revenue of the Government. We learn that already, under the operations of the funding system, there have been at least eighty millions withdrawn from circulation and returned to the Treasury. The consequences of this reduction are already felt in the decline of prices, the discouragement of speculation, and the moral as well as the commercial benefits of renewed confidence in the credit of the Government.

These traits in the general condition of the South, which we have hastily reviewed, are full of patriotic encouragement. We commenced this war without manufactures, without access to the markets of the world, and with scarcely more than 100,000 arms. Surely, since we have accomplished so much under the disadvantages of the past, we may look with confidence to a future in which we shall contest the fortunes of the war with armies more numerous than we have yet brought into the field; with well-disciplined industry at home; and with a revenue large enough to pay off our present war debt in five years, and therefore put the credit of our Government beyond all doubt.

A SCOUT ROUND CORINTH.

The Atlanta Confederacy publishes the following letter from Captain Ferrell:—

Head-quarters, Ferrell's Battery, near Cherokee, Alabama, June 16, 1863.

Messrs. Editors,—I have just returned from a most interesting and successful scout around Corinth. On Wednesday last, the 10th inst, I received orders to move my battery to the front. I immediately moved down to Cherokee, a railroad depot thirty miles east of Corinth, where I found Colonel Roddy with his old regiment, Colonel Patterson's regiment, and Captain Julien's battalion, all in readiness for "something"—I did not know then what. But I was soon made acquainted with the status of affairs and the design. I learned that the enemy, five or six hundred strong, occupied Glendale, a station on the Memphis and Charleston railroad, about six miles east of Corinth, and that their pickets were out as far as Burnsville, another station five miles east of Glendale.

Early the next morning we were on the march in the following order: Lieut.-Colonel Warren, with three companies of Colonel Patterson's regiment; and Captain Julien's battalion to support my battery, was ordered to move down upon Burnsville, drive in the pickets of the enemy, draw out the force at Glendale, and hold them in check at Yellow Creek, eleven miles east of Corinth. Major Newsom, in command of Colonel Roddy's regiment (the gallant Bill Johnson being quite sick), was to get in rear of the enemy, provided we drew them out, while Colonel Patterson, with the balance of his own regiment and three companies of Colonel Roddy's, was to make a circuit round Corinth.

Colonel Warren promptly executed his part of the programme. He drove in their pickets at Burnsville and soon occupied the place, leaving my battery in a strong position at Yellow Creek; but he failed to draw the Yankees out of their fortifications, consequently Major Newsom had to "lie and wait" for something to "turn up," only diverting their attention from the movements of Colonel Patterson, who soon succeeded in reaching the Mobile and Ohio railroad at Cypress Creek, eight miles north of Corinth. He there burned two fine bridges and about two or three hundred yards of fine trestle-work, and tore up the railroad in several places. He also surprised a Federal Colonel in his camp, captured him, one captain, three privates, thirty mules and horses, and one wagon loaded with clothing, hats, etc., for his regiment. Colonel Patterson then returned to Cherokee, having made the circuit of 130 miles in two days and a-half, without losing a man or horse. The whole affair was well planned and most admirably executed, and reflects great credit upon the sagacity and energy of our highly esteemed and much beloved Colonel P. D. Roddy, than whom a braver, better, and more popular officer does not exist. By the way, I hear that he is now a Brigadier. He ought to have been long since. He has done as much for the Confederacy according to the means placed in his hands, as any man in it; and it is certainly gratifying to his friends, especially to the citizens of North Alabama, to find that our rulers are beginning to appreciate his services.

A most important fact I forgot to mention in its proper connection. While north-west of Corinth, Colonel Patterson received about 100 Tennessee recruits, who are now actually in camps. This you may rely on as true. As we were returning, we heard of a company of Yankees scouting on a different road. Captain Dick Johnson (a brother of the Colonel) was ordered in pursuit, and succeeded in capturing four of them. Everything is now quiet. Major Forrest, a brother of the General, is here with us, and intends organizing a regiment for this command. There is no doubt as to his success, as he is universally popular as a gentleman and an officer.

COLEMAN B. FERRELL.

GENERAL JOHNSTONE'S ADDRESS TO HIS ARMY.

On the 10th of July, General Johnstone issued to his troops the following order, which was read along the line amid deafening shouts from the soldiery:—

Head-quarters on the field, July 9.

Fellow Soldiers,—An insolent foe, flushed with the hope by his recent success at Vicksburg, confronts you, threatening the people, whose homes and liberty you are here to protect, with plunder and conquest. Their guns may even now be heard as they advance. The enemy it is at once the duty and the mission of you brave men to chastise and expel from the soil of the Mississippi. The commanding general confidently relies on you to sustain his pledge, which he makes in advance, and he will be with you in the good work even unto the end. The vice of "straggling" he begs you to shun and to frown on. If needs be, it will be checked by even the most summary remedies. The telegraph has already announced a glorious victory over the foe, won by your noble comrades of the Virginia army on Federal soil; may he not, with redoubled hopes, count on you, while defending your firesides and household gods, to emulate the proud example of your brothers in the east? The country expects in this the great crisis of its destiny that every man will do his duty.

LIST OF OFFICERS AT GETTYSBURG.

The Richmond Enquirer gives the following partial list of the casualties among officers at the battles of Gettysburg:—

General Kemper, whose gallantry distinguished him on many a hard-fought field, was struck whilst leading his brigade in a charge, after our troops had successfully assaulted the enemy's first line of entrenchments. He was shot in the side groin by a Minie ball, and fell forward from his horse. He was picked up and taken to a house on the battle-field, which was afterwards taken possession of by a squad of Yankees. A party of men belonging to different regiments of his brigade, rallied by a Sergeant of Company D First Virginia regiment, charged these Yankees, drove them from the house and rescued their gallant commander, whom they bore to the rear on a blanket. He was taken to the division hospital, two miles in the rear of the battle-field. At three o'clock on Saturday, the 4th inst., he was still alive, but his physicians regarded his situation as exceedingly critical.

General Armistead was shot while standing on the enemy's intrenchments with his hat hoisted on his sword, cheering his men on in the charge. He fell into the hands of the enemy, and subsequently died of his wounds.

Colonel Williams, who commanded the First Virginia regiment, received the fatal shot very soon after the infantry fighting became general. He fell from his horse and expired almost instantly. The enemy obtained possession of his body.

Major Lattimer, of the artillery, formerly Captain of Courtney's battery, is reported to have lost an arm; Colonel Tazewell Patton, of the Seventh Virginia infantry, was severely wounded and is missing; Colonel Mayo, of the Third Virginia infantry, slightly wounded; Major Orey, of the Eleventh Virginia, wounded in the shoulder by shell.

The First regiment went into the action with six companies, and eighteen commissioned officers, of whom seventeen were killed, wounded or missing.

The following is a partial list of officers killed:—

Col. V. D. Groner, 61st Virginia, (reported), Adjutant Campbell, 48th Mississippi, Col. H. R. Miller, 42nd Mississippi, Col. Smith, 35th North Carolina, Col. Edmunds, 38th Virginia, Capt. W. T. Magruder, General Joe Davis, Adjutant-General, Col. De Sanaire, South Carolina, (reported), Lieut-Col. Moulter, 9th Georgia, Col. Jack Jones, 20th Georgia, (reported), Col. Carrington, 18th Virginia, (reported), Col. Carter, 13th Mississippi, Col. Ellis, Virginia, (reported), Col. J. B. Williams, Virginia, Col. Allen, 28th Virginia, Major Wilson, 28th Virginia.

The following is a partial list of the wounded:—

Col. Thomas, 8th Georgia, Col. Jack Brown, 59th Georgia Major Gee, Georgia, Col. Kennedy, South Carolina, Lieut-Col. Whittle, 38th Virginia, Col. Griffin, 18th Mississippi Col. W. S. Luce, 18th Mississippi, missing, Col. W. T. Holder, 17th Mississippi, Lieut-Col. Fleiser, 17th Mississippi, Lieut-Col. McElroy, 13th Mississippi, Major Bradley, 13th Mississippi, Col. H. Gantt, Virginia, Col. Hanton, Virginia, (reported), Col. Stuart, 56th Virginia, Col. W. T. Patton, Virginia, in enemy's hands, Lieut-Col. Feagan, 15th Alabama, leg amputated, Major Berkeley, Virginia, Major Wilson, 28th Virginia, Adjutant Goodloe, 18th Mississippi, supposed mortally, Col. Lightfoot, 6th Alabama, Major Calver, 6th Alabama, Col. Humphries and Major Blair, 2nd Mississippi, missing, Lieut-Col. Moseley, 42nd Mississippi, Col. Stone, 2nd Mississippi, Col. Conlin, 55th North Carolina.

THE NEGRO KNOWS HIS FRIENDS.

The New York correspondent of the Times, writing on the 21st July, says:—

A little incident in the history of the late cruel onslaught upon the coloured people which has fallen within my personal notice deserves to be recorded. A negro in one of the pleasant suburban suburbs of this city, of which it is not necessary to mention the name, became on the second day of the riots obnoxious to a crowd of Irish and other "rowdies" bent not only on resistance to the draft, but on any mischief that might offer itself to their idle hands. The negro kept an "ice cream saloon" and restaurant, was an excellent cook and waiter, and employed several coloured people in his business, was very useful to the richer inhabitants whenever they had dinner or evening parties which required extra assistance, was a prosperous tradesman, as he deserved to be, and was, moreover, very much respected by all who knew or had occasion to employ him. Envious of his prosperity, and indignant that a "nigger" should be better provided with worldly goods than themselves, a crowd of men and boys of the labouring class, reinforced by a mob of thieves and plunderers, gathered round his house towards midnight, threatening to burn it down and hang the whole of the occupants. The shutters and doors were hastily closed and secured, and it seemed for a few moments as if it would fare ill with the unhappy family, consisting of husband, wife, and two children, besides the black servants and waiters. Fortunately a mechanic of a superior grade, and himself an employer of labour, was on the spot, and had courage enough to attempt to stem the tide of popular passion and influence enough to be successful. He addressed the crowd in a few energetic sentences, imploring them to go peaceably home and reserve their displeasure for the officers of the draft. He finally prevailed on them to desist from their purpose of arson, and to content themselves with breaking the black man's windows. But during the greater part of the night a few of the rioters lingered around the place, determined to hang the negro if he ventured abroad. Ultimately, however, either from the exhaustion of their patience, or the rumoured arrival of the military and police, they withdrew, but not before they had threatened him with instant death if he dared to open his shop on the morrow. As soon as all was quiet, the negro and his family took the opportunity to escape. Clambering over the wall at the rear of their premises, their first intention was to make their way to the open country and encamp in the woods. Remembering, however, that there was one gentleman who had been kinder to them than others, they determined to go to his house and solicit his protection. They went, and were hospitably admitted, the gentleman and his family, the females as well as the males, declaring that they would protect the lives of the hapless fugitives at the hazard of their own. Here they have been hiding for seven days, and still remain in close concealment. And who, it will be asked, was this good Samaritan? Was he a friend of Emancipation? No. Was he a professed humanitarian? No. Was he a Minister of the Gospel? No. Had he ever, like Messrs. Cheever, Beecher, Phillips, and Greeley, proclaimed himself to be the especial friend of the negro race? No. Had he ever advocated their social and political equality with white men, or made himself conspicuous in any way as their advocate? No. Was he known to be more benevolent and charitable than his neighbours? No. What, then, was the secret impulse that drew the negroes towards him in their hour of peril? Nothing but the fact that he was a Virginian. He was a man from the South, who had been a slave-owner, and who, like his countrymen, thoroughly understood the negro character. Knowing all about him, and that he was not an Abolitionist, a preacher, or a philosopher, they singled him out from all the men of the little world in which they moved to be their protector from the fury of a white multitude that was raging for their blood. It was a dangerous service to demand, but it was generously and freely rendered. Let those who will point the moral of the tale. In America it will excite no surprise. In England it may, perhaps, help to prove that the tender mercies of those who would under no circumstances consent to make a slave of the negro may, nevertheless, be very cruel, and that, whatever the deficiencies of the negro intellect may be, the black man knows his friends from his foes—by instinct, if not by reason—and would rather trust his life to the honour of a Southern gentleman than to the kindly charity of a Northern Abolitionist.

THE MISSION OF VICE-PRESIDENT STEPHENS.

The following correspondence has been published:—

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA, July 2.

Hon. A. H. Stephens, Richmond, Virginia:

SIR:—Having accepted your patriotic offer to proceed as a Military Commissioner, under a flag of truce to Washington, you will receive herewith your letter of authority to the Commander-in-Chief of the army and navy of the United States.

The letter is signed by me as Commander-in-Chief of the Confederate land and navy forces.

You will perceive, from the terms of the letter, that it is so worded as to avoid any political difficulties in its reception. Intended exclusively as one of those communications between belligerents which public law recognizes as necessary and proper between hostile forces, care has been taken to give no pretext for refusing to receive it on the ground that it would involve a tacit recognition of the independence of the Confederacy.

Your mission is simply one of humanity, and has no political aspect.

If objection is made to receiving your letter, on the ground that it is not addressed to Abraham Lincoln, as President, instead of Commander-in-Chief, &c., then you will present the duplicate letter, which is addressed to him as President and signed by me as President. To this letter objection may be made on the ground that I am not recognized to be President of the Confederacy. In this event you will decline any further attempt to confer on the subject of your mission, as such conference is admissible only on the footing of perfect equality.

My recent interviews with you have put you so fully in possession of my views, that it is scarcely necessary to give you any detailed instructions even were I, at this moment, well enough to attempt it.

My whole process is, in one word, to place this war on the footing of such as are waged by civilized people in modern times, and to divest it of the savage character which has been impressed on it by our enemies, in spite of all our efforts and protests. War is full enough of unavoidable horrors, under all its aspects, to justify, and even to demand, of any Christian ruler who may be unhappily engaged in carrying it on, to seek to restrict its calamities, and to divest it of all unnecessary sacrifices. You will endeavour to establish the cartel for the exchange of prisoners on such a basis as to avoid the constant difficulties and complaints which arise, and to prevent, for the future, what we deem the unfair conduct of our enemies in evading the delivery of the prisoners who fall into their hands; in retarding it by sending them on circuitous routes; and by detaining them, sometimes for months, in camps and prisons, and in persisting in taking captive non-combatants.

Your attention is also called to the unheard-of conduct of Federal officers in driving from their homes entire communities of women and children, as well as of men, whom they find in districts occupied by their troops, for no other reason than because these unfortunates are faithful to the allegiance due to their States, and refuse to take an oath of fidelity to their enemies.

The putting to death of unarmed prisoners has been a ground of just complaint in more than one instance, and the recent execution of officers of our army in Kentucky, for the sole cause that they were engaged in recruiting service in a State which is claimed as still one of the United States, but is also claimed by us as one of the Confederate States, must be repressed by retaliation if not unconditionally abandoned, because it would justify the like execution in every other State of the Confederacy, and the practice is barbarous, uselessly cruel, and can only lead to the slaughter of prisoners on both sides, a result too horrible to contemplate, without making every effort to avoid it.

On these and all kindred subjects you will consider your authority full and ample to make such arrangements as will temper the present cruel character of the contest, and full confidence is placed in your judgment, patriotism, and discretion that, while carrying out the objects of your mission, you will take care that the equal rights of the Confederacy be always preserved.

(Signed)

Very respectfully,

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

RICHMOND, July 8.

His Excellency Jefferson Davis:

SIR,—Under the authority and instructions of your letter to me on the 2nd instant, I proceeded on the mission therein assigned without delay. The steamer Torpedo, commanded by Lieut. Hunter Davidson, of the navy, was put in readiness as soon as possible, by order of the Secretary of the Navy, and tendered for the service. At noon, on the 3rd, she started down James River, hoisting and bearing a flag of truce after passing City Point. The next day, the 4th, at about one o'clock p.m., when within a few miles of Newport's News, we were met by a small boat of the enemy, carrying two guns, which also raised a white flag before approaching us.

The officer in command informed Lieut. Davidson that he had orders from Admiral Lee, on board the United States flag-ship Minnesota, lying below, and then in view, not to allow any boat or vessel to pass the point near which he was stationed without his permission. By this officer I sent to Admiral Lee a note, stating my objects and wishes, a copy of which is herewith annexed, marked A. I also sent to the Admiral, to be forwarded, another in the same language, adressed to the officer in command of the United States' forces at Fortress Monroe. The gunboat proceeded immediately to the Minnesota with these despatches, while the Torpedo remained at anchor. Between three and four o'clock p.m., another boat came up to us, bearing the Admiral's answer, which is herewith annexed, marked B.

We remained at or about this point in the river until the 6th instant, when having heard nothing further from the Admiral, at 12 o'clock N. on that day I directed Lieut. Davidson again to speak the gunboat on guard, and to hand to the officer in command another note to the Admiral. This was done. A copy of the note is appended, marked C. At half-past two o'clock p.m. two boats approached us from below, one bearing an answer from the Admiral to my note to him of the 4th. This answer is annexed, marked D.

The other boat bore the answer of Lieut-Colonel W. H. Ludlow to my note of the 4th, addressed to the officer in command at Fort Monroe. A copy of this is annexed, marked E. Lieut-Colonel Ludlow also came up in person in the boat that brought his answer to me and conferred with Colonel Ould, on board the Torpedo, upon some matters he desired to see him about, in connection with the exchange of prisoners. From the papers appended, embracing the correspondence referred to, it will be seen that the mission failed from the refusal of the enemy to receive or entertain it, holding the proposition for such a conference "inadmissible."

The influences and views that led to this determination after so long a consideration of the subject, must be left to conjecture. The reason assigned for the refusal by the United States' Secretary of War, to wit: that "the customary agents and channels" are considered adequate for all useful military "communications and conferences," to one acquainted with the facts, seems not only unsatisfactory, but very singular and unaccountable; for it is certainly known to him that these very agents to whom he evidently alludes heretofore agreed upon a former conference in reference to the exchange of prisoners (one of the subjects embraced in your letter to me), are now, and have been for some time, distinctly at issue on several important points. The existing cartel, owing to those disagreements, is virtually suspended, so far as the exchange of officers on either side is concerned. Notices of retaliation have been given on both sides.

The effort, therefore, for the very many and cogent reasons set forth in your letter of instructions to me, to see if these differences could not be removed, and if a clearer understanding between the parties as to the general conduct of the war could not be arrived at before this extreme measure should be resorted to by either party, was no less in accordance with the dictates of humanity than in strict conformity with the usages of belligerents in modern times. Deeply impressed as I was with these views and feelings, in undertaking the mission, and asking the conference, I can but express my profound regret at the result of the effort made to obtain it, and I can but entertain the belief that if the conference sought had been granted; mutual good could have been effected by it; and if this war, so unnatural, so unjust, so unchristian, and inconsistent with every fundamental principle of American constitutional liberty, "must needs" continue to be waged against us, that at least some of its severer horrors, which now so imminently threaten, might have been avoided.

Very respectfully,

ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

THE JACKSON MONUMENT FUND.—The proposal to erect a monument to General Jackson of Virginia, whose fame as a soldier is the only thing bright and permanent which has arisen out of the American civil war, comes to us guarded by the express stipulation and condition, that the act of subscribing does not implicate the subscriber as an advocate of Secession, a friend of the Southern States, or an enemy to the Government at Washington. In fact, the subscription is but a testimony to the merits of a most accomplished officer—to the worth of a man of singular probity and purity, and to the brilliancy of acts rarely equalled in war. A statue of Stonewall Jackson, presented to the State which gave him birth, and in defence of whose rights he unsheathed his sword with a courage and high purpose which Bayard might have envied, by the admiring soldiers of England, would be worthy of the man, and could not be but grateful to those who mourn his loss. No matter whether he was right or wrong in his views of State Rights and Secession; never mind whether he regarded slavery a divine institution or not, Stonewall Jackson believed—with all the earnest force of his nature, and with all the fervour of his enthusiastic mind—that he was fighting for God and his country against a vile and unprincipled invasion. There was something in his character and career which renders the proposal to erect a statue to him acceptable to our sympathies, though it may not be quite so demonstrative and clear to our reason. And the day must come when a resting-place will be found for the pedestal in the land he loved so well, and when Americans from the North and from the South will gaze on the statue of the hero whose fame will have outlived the factious hate of the hour, and will acknowledge that it was a gracious deed of Englishmen to erect such a mark of their approbation of the virtues and of their grief for the loss of the great soldier, "Stonewall Jackson."—The Army and Navy Gazette.

THE House, like the country, wishes well to the Confederates; rejoices in their victories, regrets their sufferings, glows with indignation against the crimes and cruelties of which they are the victims. And this sympathy, national and parliamentary, is in itself a strong and powerful argument in favour of the Confederate claims. For it is sympathy which has grown out of the development of American character and the increase of English knowledge. At first the national feeling was adverse to the South, and those who knew the truth and laboured to make it clear had an uphill work to do. It is the growth of knowledge as to the source of the struggle—in the determination of the South not to be ruled by a sectional faction, and not in a love for slavery—it is the virtue of the Confederates, the savage brutality, cowardice, and insolence of the Northerners; it is the conviction that there is nothing respectable in the attempt of the Federal Government to conquer the South, and everything that is generous and chivalric in the determination of the South never to be conquered; it is the certainty that the Confederates are in the right and the invaders in the wrong, that has taught the English people, as well as their representatives, from their hearts to desire that the tide of invasion should be rolled back, and that the Confederate States of America should take that high place among the nations to which they are entitled by deeds of heroism that have few parallels in the history of mankind.—Morning Herald.

TO OUR FRIENDS AND SUBSCRIBERS.

OUR friends in the United Kingdom and on the Continent are earnestly requested to forward to us, at their earliest convenience, such information relative to the military movements and condition of affairs in America as they may receive through private letters, either from the United States, or from the Confederate States. They may rely upon the most scrupulous precautions being observed; that no names or facts leading to identification will, under any circumstances, be revealed. No communications, however, will be noticed unless authenticated by a responsible name. Southern newspapers, of any date, will be useful and acceptable presents.

For the convenience of our distant subscribers, all the receipts for subscriptions signed by any of the official representatives, or commissioned officers of the Confederate States, will be recognized at this office.

Our subscribers in the South will have their paper supplied through HENRY HOTZE, Esq., the Confederate States' Commercial Agent at London, who has kindly tendered us his services in this respect during the continuance of the blockade.

Subscription, 26s. per annum—post paid, 30s., payable in advance. All communications on business to be addressed, and Post-Office Orders made payable to, J. B. HOPKINS, 13, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, London E.C.

The INDEX may be obtained, and payments for subscriptions or other dues to the paper made—

At Liverpool, to WM. KNOX, Secretary Southern Club, 55, Brown's-buildings.

At Paris, to Messrs. PERIFFER and MULLER, 52, Rue du Château d'Eau, Paris.

At Turin, to Sr. FILIPPO MANETTA, 4, Borgo Nuovo.

THE INDEX.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 6, 1863.

BRITISH JACKSON MONUMENTAL FUND.

The Honorary Treasurer of the Jackson Statue Fund acknowledges the receipt of the following additional subscriptions—

		£	s.	d.
J. W. Schroder, Esq.	.. ..	50	0	0
W. J. Fernie, Esq.	... ..	20	0	0
H. Fernie, Esq.	.. ..	20	0	0
D. Fernie, Esq.	.. ..	10	0	0
F. Adams, Esq.	.. ..	1	0	0

War without End.

FROM the very beginning of the war, the Northern Government, press and people, as well as a majority of the Federal partisans in this country, have systematically endeavoured to blind themselves and others to the truths which have been forced upon their vision by the lightning-flashes of war. They have exaggerated a successful skirmish into a pitched battle, and made light of a pitched battle lost as if it had been an indecisive skirmish. They have claimed drawn battles like Antietam as glorious triumphs for their arms, and have pretended to victory even when, as at Shiloh, their forces have had a narrow escape from total destruction. They have concealed disasters and invented successes; they have multiplied the enemy's slain by hundreds, and his prisoners by thousands; they have drawn on their imagination for triumphs numerous and great enough to compensate even for the multitude of defeats which make up the reality of their military history. A dozen times during two years they have announced the approaching dissolution of the Confederacy, and the final extinction of rebellion. Found out, exposed, ridiculed, they lie as boldly and unscrupulously as ever; knowing that if even a tithe of their statements obtain credence, they will get more credit than they deserve, and believing apparently that a disaster denied is half retrieved. This has never been the policy of the Confederates. Their Government has always dealt frankly with the people; their press has never attempted to deceive the world; their friends abroad have not concealed defeat nor exaggerated victory. We shall not now depart from the wise policy of truth; we shall not pretend to doubt that the present situation is discouraging in the extreme; the more discouraging because a fortnight ago very different tidings had been looked for. Vicksburg and Port Hudson gone; Charleston in danger; Bragg in retreat; Lee's blow, which might have been a decisive one, foiled, and his assault on the enemy's frontier converted into a successful but resultless foraging expedition—these are misfortunes which the calmest cannot regard without emotion, and which the bravest cannot witness without admitting a sense of secret uneasiness. At the same time, we see no reason for doubt, much less for despair, as to the final issue of the war. The Federal yell of triumph, which proclaims that the rebellion is crushed and the Union in progress of restoration, is as false now as it was after the fall of Fort Donnellson, after the surrender of New Orleans, or before the battles of the Chickahominy. No Southerner despairs of the Commonwealth because a fortress falls or an army retreats. Such misfortunes or mishaps may open a river to navigation, or expose a State to devastation; but to open rivers and to lay waste plantations, to burn towns and carry off negroes, is not to reduce a nation to servitude. The Confederacy is as strong as it seemed after the surrender of Island No. 10; stronger than it seemed when McClellan marched on Richmond. An army which General Meade did not dare to attack on the left bank of the Potomac still defends Virginia, and is provided with ample store of provisions and medicine, with abundant troops of horses and mules, with arms and clothing, the fruit of its recent foray in Pennsylvania. The enemy is as far as ever from Richmond; he has acquired not the State of Mississippi, but only the power to burn and murder therein; the great river is only opened to convoys, not made safe for trading vessels; if the Western States are physically separated from their sisters, they are not thereby detached from the Confederacy, much less conquered for the Union. And the power of the North for aggression is shaken to its centre by a danger long foreseen, but hitherto averted; by the refusal of the greatest and wealthiest city in America to send any more men to be slaughtered in a foolish and wicked war under the auspices of an imbecile, ridiculous, and unpopular Administration. The position is, no doubt, unsatisfactory—especially in an English point of view. Had Lee been victorious in Pennsylvania, he would have brought the war, in all probability, to an immediate close. Baffled there, he has abandoned that hope; and it is to be feared that no further attempt to end the struggle by striking a decisive blow on Northern soil can be ventured upon. The fall of Vicksburg gives encouragement to the aggressors, and sets free a powerful army to carry on hostilities in the south-west. The success of Banks at Port Hudson leaves no hope that the Confederates may succeed in the recovery of New Orleans. The news indicates that the war may be protracted for years; devastating the South, exhausting the North, ruining England. Most probably it is destined to last as long as the patience of Europe; for mere repulses will hardly turn the North from its frantic purpose, and it is no longer to be hoped that the South will be able to do more than repulse her assailants. But there is not the slightest reason to suppose that the reverses she has just sustained will induce her to end the war on any other terms than those which she has offered from the outset—unconditional independence. Let the worst come to the worst; let Charleston fall; let Lee retire on Richmond; let Grant ravage Mississippi; let Banks complete his work of destruction in Louisiana; in what way will the North be nearer to her object than on the day when her troops first turned their backs on the enemy, and hurried into Washington to announce their disgraceful rout at Manassas?

The task which the North has undertaken is the most gigantic that any conqueror ever yet seriously proposed. It is to overrun a country as large as Europe; to gain possession of myriads of square miles of virgin forest, interspersed here and there with towns and villages, cultivated lands and homesteads; to reduce to servitude eight millions of people of English blood, whose levy en masse would turn out a million of fighting men, of whom every one would be accustomed to handle a rifle, and of whom about a third would be veteran soldiers, who have already passed through several campaigns; to crush large armies led by first-rate generals; to take strong cities fortified by excellent engineers; to overturn eleven organized and regular Governments; to eradicate, exterminate, and utterly reverse the whole social fabric of this great country, to confiscate all its property, to abolish all its laws, to wrest from its citizens their personal and political liberties. Imperial Rome never made so desperate an attempt; content to reduce other nations to dependence on her will, and leaving them to deal in their own way with their internal affairs. Alexander undertook no such task; he had but to overthrow the forces of kings and satraps, not to war with a resisting nation. Napoleon's invasion of Russia alone, among great schemes of conquest, approached the insanity of this Northern enterprise; and the Russian expedition overturned the throne of a conqueror who disposed of the force of empires numbering some hundred million inhabitants. The conquest of Poland alone, of actual conquests, was perhaps as complete as that which the North desires; and the conquest of Poland was achieved by the united forces of three great Sovereigns, assailing by stealthy treachery an unprepared, divided, anarchized nation. The North, to achieve its mighty purpose, has indeed vast wealth and enormous material resources; but it has but twenty millions of people, nor can it dispose of their lives as freely and absolutely as a French Emperor disposes of conscripts, or a Russian Czar of military serfs. Against mere force of numbers and material, the South has to set the advantages of a defensive position, of an extent of territory practically unlimited, of a country in many regions utterly impassable; of a people united heart and soul in the resolution to maintain their independence, and superior by far in military qualities to their boastful enemy. There is no reason to suppose that the Southern armies can be conquered in the field. They have never yet lost a pitched battle; when they have fought simply on the defensive they have always been victorious; when they have attacked, they have either won the day or retired unpursued and in good order, with guns, colours, and baggage. They may lose battles hereafter; for Generals Meade, Grant, and Rosecranz are men of a very different calibre from Pope, and Burnside, and Hooker; but there is no cause to believe that a Southern army will ever be routed. The worst that need be feared is that now and then a Southern general will be forced to give way, losing some guns and many men, before a superior enemy. The Confederates may experience such defeats as Napoleon endured at Leipzig, or Francis Joseph at Solferino; but they need hardly expect a Vittoria or a Waterloo. And even a Waterloo would not subdue them. A new army might be collected hundreds of miles beyond the enemy's reach; and if every army were routed and dispersed, a guerilla warfare might then commence, which could be maintained for years, and against which the North could achieve nothing. So gigantic is the task before the invaders, that if its nature had been foreseen at first, the war never would have been undertaken, and if it were now fairly understood, only a few of the most mad and wicked fanatics in New England would be willing to go on with it. But at the outset it seems to have been thought that one or two battles, ending in the capture of Richmond, would terminate the contest; that the quarrel might be settled, like a schoolboy-question of honour, by a struggle long enough simply to decide the question of comparative strength; that, once beaten, the South would give in, and the Union be restored. Even the experience of these two years of carnage has not taught the North that she has to deal with an enemy irreconcilable as well as unconquerable. Still she believes that, after a sufficient amount of beating, the Confederates will submit: that they prefer the Union, so dear not long ago to all Americans, rather than separation to be achieved by the sacrifice of half their youth and all their wealth; she does not dream of the bitter and burning hatred that her crimes have awakened, and imagines that Virginia would be as willing, when fairly worsted, to rejoin the Union, as New York, if the South were victorious, would be to seek admission into the Confederacy. Nine-tenths of the war party in the North expect to conquer the South and restore the Union, not by absolute subjugation, slaughter, and extermination, but by such successes as may compel submission. But for this expectation, they could hardly have remained blind so long to the utter impossibility of the object they have set before themselves.

The South neither can nor will submit. The passions of her people have been wrought to that degree of sternness and severity, that submission has become a moral impossibility. To submit to the devastators of their country, the plunderers of their homes, the insulters of their women, the cowards whose backs are scarred with wounds received on ignominious fields, and whose hands are red with the blood of defenceless citizens murdered on their own hearthstone—this would be a degradation which no Southern Statesman dare propose to the Senate, no General to the army,—nay, no Southern man to the women of his family. It would be a dishonour worse than death, a shame which would bring a blush for his race to the brow of every honest man who speaks the English tongue, should a people of our own blood yield to the comrades of a Turchin, a Bleeker, and a McNeil, or submit to count a Butler among their countrymen, while they had either arms left wherewith to defend their country or a road whereby to leave it. And disgrace like this—disgrace that would make their kindred ashamed of them is to Southerners as impossible as to Englishmen. Deserted, coldly looked upon, sacrificed as they have been, they are the last race on earth likely to give their mother-country cause to blush for them. The character of the war, the infamy of the aggressors, has made compromise an idea too dishonourable to be named even in a whisper; also, the circumstances of the struggle make it politically impossible. A time can hardly come at which the demands of the two parties will admit of reconciliation. So long as the North gains upon the South, she will ask submission on terms alike intolerable to the pride and fatal to the prosperity of the weaker Power; only when she is beaten and desponding will she offer reunion on equal terms, and to that offer, except it were in the darkest hour of gloom and despondency, no Southerner could listen. The war, therefore, is likely to last as long as the patience of Europe will endure it. The North can never conquer the South; that is a physical and geographical impossibility. The South cannot submit to the North; that is a moral and political impossibility. It seems hopeless to expect that the South can, for many years, so completely beat the North as to extort an acknowledgment of her independence; and, on the other hand, it seems certain that the pretensions of the North so grow with success that, even in the last extremity, peace on the basis of reunion must always remain out of the question. It must rest, therefore, with foreign Powers to determine when they will declare that a conflict so disastrous to the civilized world has lasted long enough; that the Union cannot be restored; and that those who choose to appeal to the arbitrament of battle must abide by the sentence which the sword has recorded against them. Until France and England shall grow weary of suffering in silence, and prefer an intervention worthy of great Powers to a neutrality which hardly falls short of national lâcheté, the South must trust to her own arms to maintain her independence, knowing that she can hardly hope to conquer peace, but resolved to prefer a disastrous war to a dishonourable submission.

A Parallel and a Contrast.

It is a noteworthy coincidence that the same historical period marks the dissolution of the American Union and the disintegration of the Russian Empire. The resemblance which the Colossus of the Old World bore to its counterpart in the New, and which was only heightened by the strong contrasts in other respects, bids fair to continue to the end, and even to become more conspicuously prominent as the end approaches. During the vigour of apparent health this resemblance between the two held good not only in physical and geographical features, but to an almost equal degree in their moral aspects and political tendencies. Both were gigantic democracies, and though the one acknowledged a single master and the other a multitudinous one, we have seen in the rapid transformation of the Northern States,—if indeed we needed another lesson added to those with which history abounds—that these two forms of democracy are easily convertible, and do not greatly differ in essentials. Both were comparatively new-comers and intruders upon the political system, the balance of which they threatened to overthrow; both were arrogantly confident in their enormous numerical strength; both were mad with visions of manifest destiny, ambitious, overbearing, and aggressive. The mutual congeniality was felt and acknowledged by both in a reciprocal sympathy which the world found it difficult to explain. The only European Power that cordially befriended the United States was Russia; at this day the only friend of Russia is the dictatorship of Mr. Lincoln. In the agony of the great crisis which has overtaken both at the same time, they resemble each other even more. Both are attempting to crush by brutal force an heroic people, superior to them in all the attributes that constitute a title to national independence; both are equally regardless of the means by which they accomplish their ends; both butcher in cold blood, pillage and burn defenceless habitations; both instigate servants to rise against their masters; both decree confiscation, proscription, and extermination against the vanquished. The only difference in their mode of warfare is a scarcely perceptible one of degree; while Butler insults gently-nurtured women and feeds them on soldiers' rations in a roofless prison on a fever-stricken island, Mouravieff adopts the simpler plan of flogging. Of the two, the barbarity of the American is the more revolting, because, while the Russian makes no pretensions to the humanity of modern manners, the Yankee claims to be the foremost nation in the race of progress and civilization.

A somewhat similar parallel might be drawn, though not so far, between the Confederates and the Poles. Widely remote as are these two people, they yet have many characteristics in common,—courage, skill in arms, genius for command, a high development of individual character, coupled with exalted patriotism, and an unquenchable thirst for national independence. Like the Confederates the Poles are a nation of slave-holders; until within a few years the great mass of the population were the purchasable and saleable property of the land-owners, and even now continue their bondsmen, in fact though no longer in name; only that the yoke of involuntary servitude bore upon a far larger proportion of the aggregate population, and with more galling severity, in those Northern plains than in the more genial climate of the cotton region, nor had it, as in the latter, the alleviation of being founded on a broad natural distinction of race. Like the Confederates, the Poles are strictly an agricultural people, having little taste for manufacturing or commercial pursuits. As with the Confederates, class-subordination is the vital principle of their social fabric; universal equality is the law of the Russians as of the Northern Americans. Here, however, the parallel must end. In the capacity for organization, in fertility of resource, in the power of self-control, and above all, in fixedness of purpose and unity of action, the Confederates have excelled the Poles in as great a degree as the events of the American war have exceeded in magnitude those of the Polish insurrection. The difference between a people of English blood and one of Eastern descent is further manifest in the fact that the Confederates, unlike the Poles, have never retaliated crime by crime, nor have they, even under the severest provocation, resorted to that hideous weapon of despair, political assassination. Indeed, the resemblance diminishes on close comparison between the two people, but is most striking when each is contrasted with its respective antagonist.

It is curious to observe how Europe has judged these parallel struggles in the Old and the New World. The relative positions of the parties to each, as we have said, are similar; the issues involved in each are similar; the interests which Europe has at stake in each, are similar, only that they are immeasurably more momentous in the one case than in the other. The United States presented a far more formidable danger to the balance of power than Russia; their prestige had not been shorn and their career of aggression checked, as that of Russia had been by the Crimean war; to go to war with them implied, moreover, something beyond an outlay of men and money, for as they commanded the chief source of supply of the principal industry of the Western Powers, war with the United States implied domestic sacrifices and dangers which could not well be computed by numerical estimates; lastly, the United States were, what Russia never could have been, a standing menace to the Old World institutions, for their hollow prosperity had commenced to seduce the imaginations of the lower orders of European society, and to make them discontented with the more securely established order and the slower but steadier progress at home. If, then, the interest of Europe was different in the struggle across the Atlantic and that on the shores of the Baltic, it was only a difference of intensity, and one might have supposed that if either could wholly absorb public attention to the exclusion of the other, Poland would have been forgotten amid the solution of the portentous problems in America. It has not been so, and apart from the tragic interest which a war unsurpassed in its magnitude could not fail to awake, more serious, more thoughtful, and more statesmanlike consideration has been bestowed on the less important issue. Again, there was one, only one, but this a radical difference between the two cases. In the one case, a number of independent, self-governing States dissolved political connection with colleagues who neither in theory or in practice, nor by any perversion of terms, could be said to have any sovereignty over them; in the other, a part of a consolidated monarchy revolted—justifiably, we are ready to admit—against the ruler whom solemn treaties and the acquiescence of all Europe for several generations recognised as its lawful sovereign. In the one case, organized political communities, without the slightest alteration or convulsion of their internal structure, proceeded as such to vindicate their acts by arms, to form a close alliance among themselves, to levy troops, to raise money, to carry on war by land and by sea in their own defence. In the other case, an exasperated people turned frantically upon its oppressors, without plan, without scarcely an object save that of despair, without a chance of success save that doubtful one which depended on the sense of justice and the instinct of humanity of foreign nations. In the one case Europe has beheld the spectacle of war on the grandest scale, great armies, terrific battles, memorable naval engagements, long campaigns, eventful sieges; in the other, there has been desultory fighting, small bands of insurgents forming in the shelter of a forest, surprising a detachment or a post, dispersed by regular troops to form again, forming again only to be again dispersed. In the one case there has been a regularly constituted Government, holding undisputed sway in its own dominions, secure of the loyalty of its citizens, respected by all the world, and successfully maintaining its capital within less than two hundred miles of that of the enemy; in the other case, there is no recognised central head, no form of authority except a secret committee whose members are unknown, whose locality is a mystery, whose mandates are issued in whispers and executed in darkness. In the one case, there are great statesmen, generals whose names have become historical; in the other, there is no man who has yet risen above the merit of a successful guerilla chief. We say not this in derogation of the Poles, or of their heroism and valour, or of the justice of their cause; we say it only to point the contrast. This contrast Europe has seen fit to officially ignore; it has formally declared that for States to withdraw from a federation of States is rebellion, and that the citizens of Virginia or of South Carolina—States which England formally recognised by treaty—are, while obeying the command of their lawful authorities, insurgents. So Europe has decided to treat both cases as insurrections. But even from this point of view, and placing the Confederate States on a level with Poland, there is a strong contrast. Even judged as insurgents, the six millions of the Confederate people have accomplished incomparably more than the eleven millions of Poles. They have dared more, suffered more, and done more. Now, mark the difference of official action in the two cases. Diplomacy is exhausting her efforts, and the threat of a European war is not spared, to rescue Poland. Not a finger has been lifted, not a voice has been raised, not a remonstrance made, on behalf of the Confederate States. No hazard is too great, no combination must be left untried, to coerce Russia; but toward the United States we are bidden to be exceedingly careful lest in thought or speech we commit an unfriendly act.

We have drawn this parallel and pointed out this contrast, not in the spirit of idle complaint, and still less in that of envy at the generous sympathy that has been extended to the Poles. We have done so because the attitude of Europe this day towards Poland refutes beyond rejoinder the heartless theory by which of late it has been attempted to supersede the promptings of international justice and the duty of Christian civilization. We have been told by writers of the "Historicus" school that a neutral had no right to interfere by word or act in a struggle between an insurgent and his former sovereign until the struggle was substantially over; in other words, until interference had become supererogatory. No matter how righteous may be the struggling cause, no matter how grievous may be the wrong that is sought to be inflicted, no matter how warmly our sympathies may be enlisted, no matter how great may be the injuries which the contest entails on neutrals, unless and until the weaker—for the party resisting oppression is infallibly and necessarily the weaker—shall have forced the oppressor to desist, we must remain not only inactive, but silent. Upon this plea the British people have allowed their rulers, against their better judgment, to let one opportunity after another slip by for ending the war in America. The necessities of a country far more in need of aid at all times than the Confederate States have ever been or are likely to be, have overborne this plea which was never more than a fallacious pretext, and by what is now being done for Poland men may measure the injustice done to the South. It may be that the moral pressure brought to bear upon Russia may not save Poland, so extremely critical is her situation, but certain it is that one tithe of that same pressure exerted upon the Washington Government at the proper time would ere this have given peace to America and cotton to Lancashire.

The New Aspect of the War.

THE Confederates are facing their new perils in the spirit in which brave men should meet adversity. They do not underrate the gravity of the crisis, but they resolutely count the odds against them, and prepare themselves for a fresh trial of strength. There is no "caving in," no cry for help, no talk about submission; but from the President to the poorest citizen there is but one feeling manifested, that of unconquerable resolve to achieve the independence of Southern homes. President Davis calls another 200,000 men into the field; but in Georgia and Alabama the whole population capable of bearing arms rise to defend their soil from the invading army, and defeat gives as many willing recruits to the Confederate ranks as victory. The latest mail brings out in remarkable relief this undespering attitude and temper of the Southern people. The populations of Georgia and Alabama have hitherto escaped the ravages of war. The fire and sword of the plundering Northern hordes have passed them by. Now they are threatened with the devastation which has made the lower portion of the State of Mississippi a wilderness; they too have to take their share in the miseries which the presence of an armed invader never fails to bring with it. But there is no panic. At Rome and Atlanta the white and black populations are working at the fortifications. In Alabama there is a rising en masse. Generals Bragg and Johnstone retire but to reinforce their weakened armies with eager recruits, and within three months there is every probability that the Southern army will present as formidable a front to the invader as at any previous period of the war. And the relative strength of the two armies now in the field is by no means so unequal as it has been represented by Northern partisans. Let us count the Northern forces as they are now distributed.

Of these we may estimate:—

Meade's army of the Potomac at	100,000
Grant's " Mississippi	70,000
Banks' " Louisiana	40,000
Rosecranz' " Tennessee	70,000
Burnside's " Kentucky	20,000
Gillmore's " Charleston	20,000

The Federal forces in North Carolina in garrisons along the Atlantic coast, in Arkansas, and along the Mississippi may be computed at 30,000

Total 352,000

And this force has to defeat and destroy armies of more than two-thirds its strength in the field, and then occupy a country of nearly a million of square miles, held by a hostile population.

The Confederate armies now in the field are:—

The army of Virginia under General Lee, comprising the army in the field, and in the garrison of Richmond	100,000
The army of General Johnstone	30,000
The army of General Bragg	40,000
The armies in the States west of the Mississippi, under Magruder, Kirby Smith, Taylor, and Price	30,000
The army under Beauregard defending Charleston and Savannah	25,000

Total 225,000

Exclusive of the guerillas in Tennessee and Kentucky, the garrisons of Wilmington and Mobile, and other fortified towns.

It will be seen that the disparity of force is by no means so great as it has been described, and the South has even at this moment an army which is by no means incapable of retrieving the fortunes of the Confederacy. And this is the more apparent when we consider the nature of the warfare in which the two armies are engaged. An army of defence on a friendly soil is necessarily more economical of human life than one of aggression. The kindly sentiments of the people, the superior knowledge of the country, the choice of strong positions are immense advantages to the defensive force. The invading army must to a great extent provide its own supplies, must count every man capable of bearing arms a foe, must attack when the enemy chooses to fight, under every possible disadvantage. True, the North has its unrivalled facilities of water transport; but these are beginning to fail, while the South acting on interior lines acquires the greater strength the more its defences are contracted. If we add, finally, that for the next three months the climate must fight for the South, that active operations can only be carried on in the regions of the Lower Mississippi at a loss of life that would make even success a disaster, and that typhoid fever is already at work in the Federal armies, we have said enough to show that, although there is cause for regret in the present aspect of affairs, there is none for despondency, and that if the South is resolute in its fight for freedom, its aim, although deferred, must be ultimately accomplished.

The military situation has not greatly changed since the fall of Vicksburg and Port Hudson. But the exultant feeling of the North has sustained two or three remarkable checks. Lee's army, which was reported to be retreating in hot haste for Richmond, has faced about and assumed a threatening attitude. By the last accounts Confederate forces held the passes of the Potomac, and Gregg's cavalry had been surrounded and badly cut up by Stuart. It was feared that another raid into Pennsylvania was intended; in the meantime, it was certain that Lee had sent South most of his Pennsylvania booty; that he was in great force; that his men are in excellent spirits and physique; and that Meade had very considerable doubts about the expediency of closing with his wary enemy. Another disappointment to the North was the defeat of their army at Jackson, Mississippi. Almost simultaneously with the fate of Vicksburg it was reported that General Osterhaus had crossed the Big Black River, and attacked and defeated General Johnstone with a loss of 2,000 killed and wounded. It turns out that the Federals did attack Johnstone in the capital of Mississippi, and were handsomely repulsed with the loss of 400 killed—General Osterhaus amongst the number. For upwards of a week the attack continued, until General Johnstone, finding the Federals by their superior numbers were able to outflank him, drew off his troops without loss. The Federals occupied the town, but contented themselves with this success, and Johnstone's retreat was unmolested. In a day or two the Federals fell back upon Vicksburg, so that for the present the upper portion of the State of Mississippi is tolerably secure. General Sherman indeed reports that Johnstone's army cannot remain together for want of provisions. But this is a mere assumption. The upper portion of Mississippi and the State of Alabama have been largely sown with grain, and there is ample subsistence for a much stronger army than Johnstone is likely to get together. But if Johnstone is allowed quietly to collect the paroled prisoners of Vicksburg—some 20,000 men—he will have in another three weeks a very powerful army in the field, and one which in the easily defensible country of Alabama and Mississippi will prove a serious obstacle to Grant's further progress in those States. One more disappointment the North had to bear—the contradiction of the reported fall of Charleston. We now know that the success of the Federal forces at Charleston was limited to the capture of some batteries on Morris Island, and that at the latest dates they could boast of nothing further. A joint attack had been made upon the batteries at the extremity of Morris by a considerable land force from Folly Island, assisted by the fire of gun-boats and monitors. The attack seems to have been somewhat of a surprise; after a sharp but brief engagement the Confederates were compelled to withdraw. Emboldened by their first success the Federals made an attack upon Fort Wagner, but were repulsed with heavy loss. A Federal force landed on James' Island had also been driven to the gun-boats. It was evident, however, that the attack would be repeated, and that a systematic siege by the united naval and military forces was commenced. According to latest advices, Fort Wagner still held out, and there were rumours of greater Federal disasters. But even if Fort Wagner should fall, there remain the batteries of Cumming's Point to be taken before any effectual attack upon Fort Sumter can be made, and as these are commanded by the Fort Sumter guns the assault will not be a light enterprise. By the next mail we shall hear something definite of the prospects of the siege. The defences of Charleston are immensely strong, but there is no such thing, in these days of long range, as an impregnable position, and Charleston may yield as did Sebastopol to the superior strength of the attack, but it will only be when the town is in ruins. There will be no second New Orleans. The Federals, if they do succeed, will take possession of a ruined and deserted city—a protest against their unholy war of conquest, and a fresh testimony to the unalterable resolve of the Southern people.

Of the movements of the Federal armies in the West little is known. Grant's army is at Vicksburg, resting; Banks has moved into Western Louisiana, to drive out guerillas and retake Brashear City; Rosecranz is still in Tennessee, and it seems to be doubtful whether he is strong enough to follow up Bragg into Georgia. If he leaves the Tennessee river he must trust to his own transport, and he will be moving into the enemy's country at a very considerable risk. We hardly think it likely he will make so bold a move at this season. Of Bragg's whereabouts we hear nothing. He is probably arranging the defence of Georgia, and preparing to throw all possible obstacles in the way of Rosecranz's advance. The report of a march across Alabama to effect a junction with General Johnstone is obviously incorrect. Strangeto say, General Morgan is still at work in Ohio, and his force, notwithstanding the loss it has suffered in the New York papers, is stronger than ever—reaching, according to Northern reports, 10,000 men. This raid, however, will exercise little influence on the war, and from a political point of view is almost to be regretted, considering the impending issue of Mr. Vallandigham's appeal to the men of Ohio. It is as well, however, that the North-West should be made to feel some of the miseries it has helped to inflict on the South. On the whole, we are inclined to think that the tide of Federal success has nearly reached its height. The season in the South and South-West is too far advanced for operations of any great magnitude. Within three months the Confederate conscripts will be respectable soldiers; and as the North will not have the draft, it is likely that the struggle will recommence with forces more nearly equal than they have been at any former period of the war. It is a question of hard pounding. We shall see who will pound the longest.

The Rightfulness of Southern Secession.

By the almanac it is not yet three years from the disruption of the American Union, but in our impressions of the social status of the South and in our knowledge of the political condition of the New World such a revolution has taken place that it seems as though a decade at least had passed away since the first bombardment of Fort Sumter. Yesterday Europe, sitting at the feet of New England, regarded Secession as the idle threat of a disappointed political clique. To-day we know that the Federal Government did not represent a homogeneous people or even a league of homogeneous States, but that nationalities as distinct and irreconcilable as those inhabiting the countries divided by the Straits of Dover composed the Union, and that Secession was the formal expression of a severance of interests and sympathies long accomplished. Before the battle of Manassas Northern swagger about the enervation of the Southerners, and the impossibility of their carrying on a war, found so much credence that when Mr. Lincoln called for seventy-five thousand men to put down a "rebellion" that has resisted the efforts of a million and a half of men, the proposition did not excite a cry of derision. The war has dissipated these and many other glaring errors. The Southerners have shown themselves heroic and enduring, and, moreover, ingenious enough to provide all things necessary for the defence of their country. The negroes declared to be ripe for revolt have, with few exceptions, been unmoved by Northern incentives to murder and rapine, thus manifesting a fidelity to their masters that is a meet reward for that undeviating kindness which has changed them from savages into docile, Christian labourers. At the outset it was thought that the North loved the Union for its own sake, and was intent on its restoration. Who thinks so now? We mean who now supposes that the war is carried on for the reconstitution of a Federal league of free States? What, desire to win back the South as a coequal partner, and enact a tariff that would make her the tributary of the East? What, expect to restore the Union by bloodshed, by spoliation, and by the commission of such atrocities as have never before disgraced the annals of civilized warfare? The most insatiate credulity could not swallow such contradictions, and no wonder Earl Russell, Mr. Gladstone, and Sir G. C. Lewis—members of the non-recognition cabinet—have emphatically proclaimed their conviction that the North is fighting for empire, and the South for independence. The attempt to enlist the sympathies of this country by asserting that the North is warring for the emancipation of the negro has signally failed. Mr. Lincoln may not be more honest than his English agents, but he had to cajole the Democrats whilst his party was forging the fetters for Northern liberty, and so he expressly declared that he did not contend for emancipation, and that he would uphold slavery if by so doing he could restore the Union. He acted on this principle when he issued his proclamation. He avowed that it was simply a military measure, and proffered the right to hold slaves as a recompense for loyalty, and decreed the loss of slaves as a punishment for the worst crime known to him—disloyalty to black republicanism. The treatment of the coloured race in the North is conclusive evidence of the rank hypocrisy of abolitionism. We do not risk our lives for those whom we hate with a bitter relentless hatred. In Illinois and other States the negro, bond or free, is denied a home. He is hunted like a wild beast, and tortured and murdered. He is dragged into the army, taught that the first duty of a soldier is to plunder and burn, and when the opportunity occurs is kept by Federal bayonets within range of the enemy's cannon. No, the war is not for the Union, nor for emancipation, but for the subjugation of the South, for the overthrow of liberty in the North, and for the despotic domination of the Republican party. This being so everybody, the little Anglo-Federal faction excepted, admits that the Confederates are bound by honour, by patriotism, by interest, and for the sake of their wives and children, to resist the invading hosts with all their resources and might, and at any sacrifice. And in justice to the South, let us remember that not only is the maintenance of her separate existence a bounden duty, but that her secession was expedient, imperative, and rightful, as well as lawful.

Very few words will suffice to make this abundantly clear. For a moment setting aside the sovereignty of the States, which legally justifies secession, let us see whether the reason for it was irresistible or frivolous. The question we have to decide is, whether the South had a moral obligation as well as a legal right to go out of the Union. Now, accepting the republican doctrine that the federation was a nation, and not a congeries of nations, the election of Mr. Lincoln proved that one section had become altogether dominant. He was chosen President in spite of the unanimous disapproval of the South—that is, the South was in no way represented at Washington. This was a violation of the vital principle of free Government, which involves the representation of minorities. Take the constitution of the United States as an example. Mr. Lincoln, though legally elected, is President in opposition to a large majority of the popular vote. The South had no more part in the Federal Government of 1860 than the Poles have in the Government of Russia. She could not protect her property from taxation for the benefit of New England. She had no power to stay the passage of the Morrill tariff, or the imposition of an export duty on cotton. She was altogether at the mercy of the Northern section, as much so as she would be if she were conquered by the Northern armies.

The republican party knew the extent of its victory, and was determined to gather its fruits. It would listen to no compromise. It was zealous in making a reconstruction of the old union impossible. In the farewell speeches of the Southern representatives in Congress secession was not spoken of as a threat, but as a remedy for a crying evil. Before the commencement of hostilities the South sent commissioners to Washington, but they were not received. Why not? The several States had a perfect right, and it was a common practice for them to send commissioners to the Federal Government, to arrange disputes. The Lincolnites, disregarding right and custom, refused to enter on negotiations, which might have prevented war. They trifled with the Southern agents until they were ready to strike the blow at Fort Sumter, which, by inaugurating war, would give them a chance of subjugating the South and crushing their political opponents in the North.

What did the South leave undone that she ought to have done? Was she to submit to political serfdom? Was she to allow her prolific country to be cultivated, not for her own benefit and for the benefit of the world, but for the sole profit of New England? Did she not make every effort to preserve peace? Perhaps we may be told that she should have sought a remedy within the constitution. She could find no remedy under the forms of the constitution, and hence the moral justification of her Secession. The ballot box had been tried and found wanting. She might have gone up to Congress and voted, but only with the certainty that her votes were powerless to save her from the despotism of the North. The one way to maintain her independence and to prevent her fair land being the prey of the spoiler was to go out of the Union; to exercise her legal right of secession. She might have remained in the Union, and been a tool of the North in its aggression on the commerce and territory of England. She chose the better part. She righteously, but not without a pang of deep regret, separated herself from the Union that she had so long fostered and upheld.

The partisans of the North may ask us scornfully of what advantage to the South is the righteousness of her cause? Did it save Vicksburg? Did it shield the people from the horrible atrocities of Butler, Turchin, McNeil, and Milroy? The Anglo-Federals can point to terrible sufferings of which the wondrous fortitude of the Southerners cannot conceal the poignancy; to the violation of school-girls by Northern soldiery; to the murder of tender women, little children, and helpless negroes; to the thousand sorrows that have come upon the devoted country; and ask us mockingly of what avail is righteousness against superior numbers? Emulating the blasphemy of those they serve, they will tell us that the favour of Heaven is always with the biggest army. The Daily News, the organ of the Anglo-Federals, will not trouble itself about the ethics of the question, but refer us to the calculation it has published of how many years and how many men will be needed to make every child in the Confederacy an orphan. The Star, venomous but fangless, will assure its patrons that the republican faction will not be stayed in its course, but will cement its power with the blood of a nation. Yet in spite of hissing profanity and savage mockery, our faith is unshaken. The right of the South, even more than her heroism, assures her friends that though she may have to pass through an ordeal such as no other nation has endured, though it may please God that the furnace of her affliction may be seven times heated, yet she will finally triumph.

The Peace Party at the North.

As an accomplished gentleman, an effective orator, and a staunch patriot, Mr. Vallandigham would, under any circumstances, have occupied a distinguished position in his own country, but owing to the indiscretion of his enemies he is called upon to take the leading part in a contest which engages the attention of the world. In Ohio is to be fought the Waterloo of Northern liberty, and whatever may be the result of the battle, his name will live in history. If he triumphs, the days of Republican despotism will be numbered; if he is defeated the United States will pass under the yoke of a military despotism. The issue cannot be put off, or its consequences avoided. Mr. Lincoln has provoked the conflict; he has thrown down the gage of battle, his challenge has been accepted, and to retreat would be equivalent to being utterly vanquished. Mr. Vallandigham will not give him a loophole of escape. He hurls defiance at him. If the man whom Mr. Lincoln treated as a felon and banished as a traitor is inaugurated as Governor of Ohio, the Lincolnites will sink under a load of contempt which would crush the most powerful Government on earth. If by military force the will of the people of Ohio is made null and void, if the last relic of constitutionalism is openly abrogated, then the United States become subject to the irresponsible rule of a faction that has carved its way to power by the sword, and that can only maintain itself by doing violence to every principle of freedom. To which side victory will incline it is impossible to predict. If the Democrats are firm, resolute, and united, if they are ready to repel force by force, then they will conquer. But we must remember that oftentimes a brave people has quailed before military despotism, and have submitted to the fetters imposed by the creatures to whom it had given power. The Lincoln despotism may find it an easy task to crush liberty in the North, although foiled in their efforts to deprive the Confederates of their independence.

The South, it is true, has a deep interest in the events that are transpiring in the North. The success of the Democrats will put an end to a war which cannot bring about her subjugation, but which entails upon her great and increasing suffering. The worst that can happen to the South—'tis indeed bad enough—is the prolongation of hostilities, and the impoverishment of her people. But she is an agricultural country; her is in the land that may be desolated but cannot be taken from her; her recuperative power* is so great that whenever peace is restored, she will forthwith enjoy the return of plenty and prosperity. She cannot lose, however protracted, may be the struggle, her liberty and that constitutional form of government which ensures the happiness and develops the resources of her people. With the North the case is altogether different; she too will be pauperised by her continuation of the war; and because she is not altogether an agricultural country her revival will be slow. But poverty is the last of the ills that will come upon the North. Only peace, and peace now, can save her from the loss of freedom, and freedom is not a mere abstract principle, but with it will depart the prosperity of the country. The peace party is fully aware of the greatness of the stake. Upon its success depends the future welfare of the North.

In his address to the people of Ohio, Mr. Vallandigham points out the absurdity of inviting the South to return to the Union, whilst it is polluted by the domination of the Lincolnites. Next to the ruthless war that has been waged upon them, the character of the present Federal Government is certainly one of the strongest reasons that can be conceived for the Confederates preferring to make any sacrifice rather than renew their political connection with the United States. Mr. Vallandigham testifies to the unalterable resolve of the Southern people not to give up the struggle for independence, and no doubt Mr. Lincoln and his advisers are equally convinced of the impossibility of subjugating the South, and that if there were no other cause, their despotism, corruption, and infamous acts, are sufficient to perpetuate the disruption which they brought about for their own aggrandisement. The war against the Confederates is with them a pretext, a cloak, under which they are enabled to raise armies for the conquest of the liberties of their fellow-countrymen. Thus, though peace would be a benefit to the South, it is a vital necessity to the North. The continuation of the war will add immensely to the afflictions of the Confederacy, but it cannot utterly destroy her, whilst it will bring upon the United States irretrievable ruin. The friends of peace, of humanity, and constitutional liberty are bound to pray heartily for the triumph of the party of which Mr. Vallandigham is the acknowledged and worthy leader.

FEDERALISM.*

Though published by a firm which, so far as a publishing house can be supposed to have political opinions, must be esteemed pre-eminently hostile to the Southern cause, this book is in no sense a partisan pamphlet on the American quarrel. It is not, indeed, the fruit of the second War of Independence, except in so far as that war has fixed the time of its publication, and apparently led the author to write in a hurry, with a view to bring out the book at a time when circumstances have given a peculiar interest to its subject. To hurry we are willing to ascribe some of its blemishes, which are, for the most part, rather likely to irritate than to mislead the reader, to injure the reputation of the author than to diminish the value of his work. It is most unworthy in the historian of a Greek State to point every argument and give pungency to every biographical fragment, by a reference—often entirely uncalled for—to the proceedings of "Louis Napoleon Buonaparte." The Emperor of the French may be a great patriot and a consummate statesman, or he may be, as Mr. Freeman thinks him, an unscrupulous adventurer and a political highwayman; but what in the world has he to do with the achievements of Philip or the tyranny of Lysichadas; and what is gained by calling him by his family name, and talking of "the pseudo-Imperial" crown of France? At least his title is as good as that of the Republic, mob-born and mob-ruled, which he suppressed with the applause of France and to the infinite relief of Europe. At worst he is no more an usurper, and not half so much a traitor, as one Louis Philippe, some time Duke of Orleans, whom we suppose Mr. Freeman would not hesitate to describe by his strange title of "King of the French." These allusions are unworthy of the dignity of history, and utterly out of place in a work of political philosophy; and it is only on the understanding that he has written in a great hurry, and without the opportunity of enjoying the advice and criticism of his friends, that we can forgive Mr. Freeman for intruding upon his readers those irrelevant and impertinent taunts against a man who has nothing in the world to do with any form of Federal government, ancient or modern. His personal antipathies and political prejudices are in no wise interesting to us. As an historical scholar we are grateful for his knowledge and how respectfully to his authority; as a political philosopher, he deserves that we should hear him with attention; but as a commentator on passing political events, he is as valueless as Mr. Edward Dicey or Mr. J. M. Ludlow, or any other of the many gentlemen who display their prejudice, passion, and ignorance at the expense of the able and estimable publisher of the present work.

Flaws apart, we consider this volume one of the most valuable that has yet been published on forms and theories of government. The views which it promulgates are thoughtful, sober, and deserving of very deliberate consideration, although they are tinged with prejudices of a kind that mark the scholar of the closet as distinguished from the man of the world. The facts of history by which the author endeavours to elucidate his political theories are well arranged and well related; and if his conjectures are somewhat too bold and confident, they seem to us probable as well as plausible, and we are thankful for them, as throwing light on portions of history respecting which our actual and certain knowledge is but small. Finally, his style is good, and his matter is readable; and this, in days like the present, when of making many books there is no end, is a virtue of paramount importance. A man now-a-days who presumes to write badly or unreadably deserves no mercy; for no one has time to spend or strength to spare in mastering anything that is not made as easy of mastery as may be. Dull books deserve to find no readers but those who have nothing else to do.

Mr. Freeman's comparison between small and large States is, to begin with, instructive and suggestive. We think it, however, too favourable to the former. It may be true, no doubt, that in the old city commonwealths of Greece the passion of patriotism was stronger than in many modern countries, inasmuch as with every citizen the freedom of his city was a matter of direct and appreciable personal interest. To be conquered was to run the risk of personal slavery, and at best to be subjected to harsh usage, insult, and oppression at the hands of a foreign ruler. To be reduced to a dependant condition involved for the citizens at large a position of mortifying humiliation, and for each individually the liability to be forced into military service against his own will, and to be wronged or affronted with impunity by the citizens of the dominant Power. At the same time, we are forced to remember that almost every Greek city, in the palmy days of town autonomy, seems to have contained an anti-patriotic faction. In Athens the aristocracy was always disposed to Laconise; in the cities allied with Sparta the democracy was always phil-Athenian. There were Theban partisans in Thespie and Platea; there was, in later times, a Macedonian party everywhere; and a foreign conqueror almost always found it possible to govern by means of a native faction in his own interest. We doubt, therefore, the extreme loyalty of Greek city patriotism; and in modern times we certainly do not believe that the Belgians are more patriotic than the French, or that the citizens of Hamburg or Frankfort would be more ready to die for their city than Englishmen to fight and fall beneath the standard of a Queen on whose dominions the sun never sets. The comparison between citizen-soldiers and professional soldiers is less easy to draw. In ancient times the citizen was less savage, and almost equally efficient with the mercenary; in modern times the spirit of Christian chivalry, and the fact that soldiers by profession are mostly led by gentlemen, has made the warrior by trade less ferocious, on the whole, than the warrior by chance, choice, and passion. It is perhaps true that war between small commonwealths is more frequent and more ferocious than war between great States; but this again is not a matter easily ascertained. The ages of great Powers have not generally been ages prolific in wars; but this is perhaps less because the Powers have been great than because they have been civilized, because they had few chances of collision, or because, as in these times, war had become too terrible and too costly to be lightly undertaken.

The chief advantage attributed by Mr. Freeman to the system of city commonwealths is that it affords an excellent political education to the citizens. We grant that there is truth in this view; we appreciate all that our author, following Mr. Grote, has to say concerning the beneficial effect on Athenian character of the popular assemblies, in which every citizen might hear the views of Pericles or Thucydides on the highest questions of foreign or domestic policy. But we are not inclined to rate this advantage so highly. Political power may be an excellent school in its way; but it is a school in which the learners are masters, and in which those who should teach are at the mercy of their scholars. And we may ask leave to doubt whether the learning of the Assembly made the Athenians better men, better husbands and fathers, more industrious mechanics or more daring seamen, than they would have been had their functions been confined to the election of five hundred gentlemen to represent them in Senate, and undertake on their behalf the government of the affairs of the Commonwealth. The murder of the Ten Generals, the massacre of Mitylenæ, the expedition to Syracuse, would hardly have been voted by a representative council. They were precisely the kind of sins of which no sovereign, single or multitudinous, would ever have been guilty except he had acted on his own account, and not through responsible Ministers. Demos, as our author reminds us, was a tyrant, i.e., a sovereign lege solutus. And as the exercise of tyranny was always found to demoralise the individual usurper, so it doubtless acted to deprave the Tyrant People; and though, under the sway of a Pericles, they might act as generously and wisely as Philip when advised by Aratus, as Joash under the guidance of Jehoiada, or Alexander of Russia while influenced by the statesmen who strove in vain to create for him a constitutional and loyal kingdom in Poland, the Athenian democracy were probably more injured by that visible possession and direct exercise of sovereign authority for which no populace—perhaps no large body of men—can ever be fit, than improved by the sharpening of their intellect and the quickening of their sense of dignity and self-respect which that possession and exercise of sovereignty naturally involved.

On the other hand, we conceive that the disadvantages of small as compared with large Commonwealths are understated by Mr. Freeman. He frankly admits that the first and most obvious superiority of the modern system of great empires—the preservation of internal peace over vast territories inhabited by many millions of men, is so great as to outweigh in itself all the benefits which he attributes to the city commonwealths of old. It is no trifle that, instead of having London at war with Southampton, Newcastle with Sunderland, and Liverpool with Manchester, we have a unity of empire which compels even Scotland and England to settle their disputes, if they have any, at the bar of the Queen's Bench or in the House of Commons; which, indeed, scarcely leaves it possible for them to have any more serious disputes than such as may be readily decided or accommodated by the Heralds' College. It is a great thing, too, that foreign wars generally affect only a small portion of any country. Still greater, perhaps, are the advantages of civil peace, and the consequent restraint imposed on the passions of contending parties. The government of a city commonwealth may be overthrown by a band of conspirators; this happened during the Peloponnesian war in many places, but notably at Coreyra and in Athens herself. To overthrow the Government of an Empire requires a civil war of such magnitude as, with the conditions of life under great kingdoms, is fast becoming impossible. Hence a city must deal severely with suspected persons, and a constitutional opposition is a thing almost intolerable. Every Greek city—excepting perhaps Athens in her prime—had its exiles; and these were the only avowed Opposition. In our own days, we tolerate even a Bright, even an Ernest Jones; because we know that we are safe from them; that their followers can never overturn the government unless the nation should be on their side. Hence political warfare is, as Mr. Freeman truly says, far less bitter in great States than in small. Again, great States are too strong to be lightly provoked; and hence their subjects are safe under circumstances where those of small Powers are exposed to considerable hazard; also, they are strong enough to maintain internal order in troublous times far more vigorously than small Powers can do.

(To be continued.)

MAGAZINES FOR AUGUST.

The author of a review of the clever pamphlet "Richard Cobden, King of the Belgians" which appears in the current number of the New Review, is a very dangerous advocate and a very harmless adversary. He has fallen into the error of attacking the invulnerable points of his enemy, and by so doing only blunts his own weapon. Mr. Cobden deserves censure for the egotism of his own pamphlet, to which the one in question is a reply, and for the principles he therein enunciates, that there is none other God than Mammon, that the defence of national independence is not worth the cost, and that Belgium should do nothing—that is, should not spend a sixpence in protecting herself against the possible aggression of her neighbours. But nothing can justify the writer in the New Review referring to Mr. Cobden's private affairs, and asserting that because that gentleman's fortune had become impaired, he was intrusted by the English Government with a foreign mission. Mr. Cobden is our political foe, but it would be worse than absurd for us to deny his eminent ability and his respectable standing. In this country a man does not rise from the ranks, and is not pressed to take high office under the Crown, unless he has undoubted talent and an unblemished reputation. The writer in the New Review is also pleased to sneer at Messrs. Roebuck and Lindsay on account of their late interview with the Emperor of the French. Our impression is that the Conservative party, and even the supporters of the Ministry, are by this time convinced, if they ever doubted it, that Messrs. Roebuck and Lindsay were faithfully serving the interests of their country by the course they adopted.—An essay on "Modern Eloquence," though not very profound, will repay perusal. It is rather amusing to see President Davis and Mr. Charles Francis Adams linked together, as speakers possessing "considerable ability and fair eloquentary attainments, but neither of whom comes up to the standard of the men who were common not only in the War of Independence, but even in the last generation." We suppose the writer has never read any of Mr. Davis's speeches, or he would have arrived at a very different conclusion as to his oratorical ability. Certainly he has never heard the Confederate President speak. Mr. Davis is famous, not only for his eloquence, but for his elocution. His action is graceful, and his voice, though not very powerful, is so admirably modulated that crowds have waited to hear an occasional sentence drop from his lips. The articles in the present number of the New Review besides those we have noticed, that deserve special commendation, are "Le Père Lacordaire," and "Critics and Reviewers."

* History of Federal Governments, from the Foundation of the Achaean League to the Disruption of the United States. By Edward A. Freeman, M.A., late Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford. Vol. I.—General Introduction—History of the Greek Federations. Macmillan and Co., London and Cambridge, 1863.

The Church and State Review treats upon a subject which has for some time been much neglected, that is, "Federal Finance." Some months ago the indebtedness of the United States was a marvel to Europe, and a crash and a break up of credit was reasonably anticipated. The indebtedness has been enormously increased, is still increasing, but credit is unimpaired. Has Mr. Chase, indeed, discovered the secret of converting paper into money, into a currency, we mean, that has an intrinsic value? No; but he has skillfully devised means by which bankruptcy may be postponed until the financial ruin is perfectly accomplished. The process is simple. Mr. Chase issues greenbacks in profusion, and all these promises to pay that are not required for currency are invested in Government bonds. "The Federal Government has a means of making money by the issue of the national notes; and at the same time a means of forcing the public to lend money, in the purchase of the interest-bearing national bonds, as the only means of saving themselves from loss through a depreciation of the 'greenbacks.'" There are two other articles on America in the Church and State Review, one, a candid notice of Mr. Pollard's "First Year of the War," and the other is entitled, "Does the Bible sanction Slavery?" and it betrays very profound ignorance as to the constitution of slavery in the South. The writer of the article has, no doubt, been misled by accepting the statements of Professor Goldwin Smith as truths. We are surprised that any writer for the English press can repeat such ridiculous calumnies as that in the South "the human cattle are bred like sheep or swine for the market." It is unhappily too true that in the North the negroes are slaughtered as though they were cattle, and roasted as though they were swine.

Blackwood opens with an account of a visit to an insurgent camp in Poland. The narrative is instructive. It reveals to us the great difficulties that the Poles have to contend with, but it also shows us how strong a people are when they strike for freedom. The National Government has no lack of means for carrying on the war; for though its coffers are not overflowing, the patriotism of the country provides it with military equipments, and with a sufficient commissariat. Nothing can exceed the devotion of the Polish ladies, and their spirit gallantly defies the infamous brutalities of the Russians.—An essay on the works of Mr. George Cruikshank is highly commendatory and appreciative. Few artists are more original, but we hope that the pamphlet he has lately published on ghosts, which is very good in its way, is not an indication that he is about to give up the pencil for the pen.—A second and concluding article on the "State and Prospects of the Church of England," is worthy of the attention of all those who are interested in the welfare of the Establishment. We cordially endorse the opinion of the writer that if the Liturgy and the Confession of Faith need revision, it is lawful though it may not be expedient to have them revised; but when it is proposed that the Church shall have no Confession of Faith, or that her ministers shall be allowed to read a service they disapprove of, and to belong to a Church from the articles of which they dissent, we protest against the scheme, because "it would cut the ground from beneath the feet of the Church of England, both as a Church and as a religious establishment."—A paper on "Indian Prosperity" gives a hopeful view of what we may do to promote the well-being of our Indian Empire. If the news by the last mail is true that Nana Sahib has been captured whilst conspiring against our authority, it proves the great need of watchfulness and of, at the same time, strengthening our position by developing the resources and the riches of the country, and attaching the natives to us by the bonds of interest.

At this season of the year, when only the lightest of light literature is popular, the majority of readers will skip the first article in Fraser, "McCulloch on Taxation," but in so doing they will pass by an able contribution. One paragraph has a particular application to the present moment. Some persons think the proper remedy for the distress in Lancashire is to promote the wholesale emigration of the operatives, but Fraser observes that it is worse to sacrifice our labouring population than to drive capital abroad. In the one case we lose our productive power, in the other we lose that which by thrift and industry we can replace. Hence Fraser contends that the war in America may do good by deterring our labourers from crossing the Atlantic to settle in a country no longer untaxed. With this view we cannot coincide. Repudiation may relieve the United States of the burden of taxation. If the war in America should cease, then so great would be the demand in the South for our manufactures, so certain would be our supply of cotton no longer jeopardised by the prospect of a war with the North, that the prosperity of our artisans would put an end to undue emigration.—"Mr. Buckle in the East," is a letter written by a gentleman who travelled with that lamented writer on the journey that immediately preceded his death. It is a melancholy narrative. The writer does not hide the imperfections of Mr. Buckle's character. "Truth, indeed, compels me to say that, during these months of intimate acquaintance as fellow-travellers, there were instances in which indignation was roused, not only against what appeared to me distorted moral views, but against acts wanting in generosity, if not in justice. Out of regard not only to the feelings of his friends, but to the reticence which I conceive imposed on myself by the intimacy even of an accidental acquaintanceship, and still more by his death, I have in these pages suppressed all allusion to those particular views and acts to which I thus generally refer." Probably, if Mr. Buckle had lived a few years longer, he would have found that beneath the errors of fanaticism, of superstition, and of ignorant credulity, there was something grand in the social life of man, and that the world, bad as it seems, is actuated by nobler impulses than he dreamed of.—An essay on "Party" can never fail to attract the attention of Englishmen. Our system of government is essentially a government of party, and without it that our constitution would fail us, as it has failed other nations who have adopted it. Parties are of very slow growth, and cannot be created by universal suffrage, but unhappily they may be rapidly impaired, and even uprooted. It was not the inauguration of free trade that was a danger to England. If all the evils had resulted that Protectionists anticipated, we could have ensured a return of prosperity by a change of policy. The real risk we ran in 1846 was the disruption of party ties, and to this day we suffer many inconveniences from the party anarchy incident to the repeal of the Corn Laws.—"A Chapter on Châlons and Aldershot" contains some useful hints for the improvement of our camp system. They do these things better in France, but we know of no reason why our neighbours should continue to excel us.

"Romola" is concluded in the present number of the Cornhill, and though it is an admirable novel, worthy of the reputation of the author of "Adam Bede," and deserving the success it has already met with in its three volume dress, we think it is not very well suited for publication in a serial.—"On a Medal of George the Fourth" is a playful essay upon the prevalence of crime, and the excitement incident to its commission. We quote the conclusion:—

Now think what scores of men and women walk the world in a like predicament; and what false coin passes current! Pinchbeck strives to pass off his history as sound coin. He knows it is only base metal, washed over with a thin varnish of learning. Poluphoebos puts his sermons in circulation: sounding brass, lackered over with white metal, and marked with the stamp and image of piety. What say you to Drawcansir's reputation as a military commander? to Tibbs's pretensions to be a fine gentleman? to Supphira's claims as a poetess, or Rodocessa's as a beauty? His bravery, his piety, high birth, genius, beauty—each of these deceivers would palm his falsehood on us, and have us accept his forgeries as sterling coin. And we talk here, please to observe, of weaknesses rather than crimes. Some of us have more serious things to hide than a yellow cheek behind a raddle of rouge, or a white poll under a wig of jetty curls. You know, neighbour, there are not only false teeth in this world, but false tongues: and some make up a bust and an appearance of strength with padding, cotton, and what not; while another kind of artist tries to take you in by wearing under his waistcoat, and perpetually thumping, an immense sham heart. Dear sir, may yours and mine be found, at the right time, of the proper size and in the right place.

And what has this to do with half-crowns, good or bad? Ah, friend! may our coin, battered, and clipped, and defaced though it be, be proved to be Sterling Silver on the day of the Great Assay!

A contribution on "Foreign Actors and the English Drama" contains a great deal of sound criticism, though we cannot agree with the unfavourable verdict passed on Mlle. Stella Collas. She cannot be devoid of dramatic power and passion, or she would be unable to sway the audience. It is true she gives too much heed to stage business; but she is popular, not on account of that, but in spite of it. The critic says her personation is "mob acting," by which, we presume, he means that it brings down the gallery and rouses the pit; but this was just the effect that was produced by Kean, Kemble, and Charles Young; and to this those great artists looked as the criterion of their success. When Edmund Kean was asked by his wife what Lord Essex thought of his performance, he replied, "Never mind Lord Essex, the pit rose at me."—We must not forget to mention an excellent essay on "Heinrich Heine;" His genius is unquestionable, but, unhappily, like Byron, he wasted his power, and has only left behind him works which prove how much he might have done for his day and generation, had his moral character been different.

It is notified on the title-page of Macmillan that the right of reproduction of articles published therein is reserved, but following the example of our contemporaries we quote in extenso "The American Iliad in a Nutshell," by Thomas Carlyle.

ILIAS (AMERICAN) IN NUCE.

PETER of the North (to PAUL of the South). "Paul, you unaccountable scoundrel, I find you hire your servants for life, not by the month or year as I do! You are going straight to Hell, you —!"

PAUL. "Good words, Peter! The risk is my own; I am willing to take the risk. Hire you your servants by the month or the day, and get straight to Heaven; leave me to my own method."

PETER. "No, I won't. I'll beat your brains out first!" (And is trying dreadfully ever since, but cannot yet manage it. May, 1863. T. C.)

Mr. Carlyle happily exposes the sham of the sham pretext put forth to gull Europe.—Baron Liebig continues his criticism on Lord Bacon, and although he utterly fails to damage the reputation of the English philosopher, he is eminently successful in doing what Dogberry pathetically asked one of his friends to do for him.—The Rev. Hugh Macmillan contributes a pleasant and instructive paper on "The Plants on the Summits of the Highland Mountains."

Mr. Ainsworth proceeds with his romance, entitled "Cardinal Pole" in Bentley, and although it is very good of its kind, the author has harped too long on one string to produce a novel that has any pretensions to novelty.—Dr. Michelsen gives a sketch from life of Rosini meeting with a lazzarone who had a fine voice, and after a little instruction became first tenor at the San Carlo.—The "French Language," by Frederick Marshal, is, we presume, intended for a lesson; but it seems to us rather out of place in a magazine of light literature.

London Society is, as usual, profusely illustrated, and the articles are short and amusing. "Recollections of Almack's" is a graphic picture of some of the doings of a bygone generation. The Guards' Ball, which was no doubt the ball of the season, is the subject of three illustrations, in one of which the ladies look dreadfully crowded and uncomfortable. The story entitled "The first Time I saw Her" is continued, and promises to be a very attractive novelette.

TROPHIES OF THE BATTLE FIELD.—Mr. Nat. C. Harrison, in his last trip from Fredericksburg, brought down 188 pounds of leaden balls, which had been picked up by some of our troops, in front of the famous stonewall, beneath Marye's Heights. It is stated that hundreds of pounds of balls still remain in front of this wall, flattened and twisted out of shape by being shot against it. It is stated that most of these balls were fired at our men behind the stonewall, by Meagher's Irish brigade, which was so terribly handled during the first battle there. These balls have been gathered up as lead, and will probably be instrumental in killing a few Yankees in some subsequent battle.—Petersburg Express.

PARIS TOPICS.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

PARIS, August 4.

If Poland be not already reconstituted, if Austria and Prussia, as well as Russia, be not ready to disgorge the prey of 1772, if the map of Europe be not remodelled in a quite different fashion to that of 1815, it is not the fault of the Paris press, or of those who inspire it. It is the one subject of the day, and if I have some interesting extracts on another question to send you, one of them at least is in close and not unexpected connection with the Polish question. I begin with it. The France of last night, which, with more moderation than its fellows, has of late joined the war cry, comments thus on the connection between the Russian Autocracy and the American Republic:—

In the despatches and correspondence from America, we see traces of a movement of opinion which deserves to be noticed, although it certainly does not express the feelings of the Cabinet of Washington.

From these letters we learn that the idea of an alliance between the United States and Russia, in case of a war between the Court of St. Petersburg and the Western Powers, gains ground with the advanced party. It was only yesterday that the Herald advocated immediate war with France and England.

The heads of the people of the North are already turned by General Meade's successes and Lee's retreat. They fancy the South already vanquished, and at their mercy, and they are thinking what they shall do with their armies and fleets. The old Monroe doctrine is again their preoccupation, and their cry is "Go ahead."

Our correspondents even add that in the North they already point to Mexico as the object of this encroaching policy, Mexico, which the foresight of France seeks, by the constitution of a strong and regular Government, to oppose as a barrier to Northern ambition.

We must not ascribe more weight to these tendencies than they deserve. Of course, Mr. Lincoln and his counsellors will disavow them, but they show the disposition of the popular mind, and as doing so they deserve attention.

Such are the Republicans of the North. They offer the hand to the oppressors of Poland; they are as indifferent to the enfranchisement of this noble nation, as they were to Turkey in 1855, and of Italy in 1859. It is only the other day that they received the thanks of Russia for refusing to join in the representations made by the whole of Europe.

Their conduct is logical. The Cabinet of Washington denies the right of any nation to self-government. At home they violate the rights of national liberty, by seeking to force the States of the South into a union which is henceforth impossible. What they are doing in America against the Confederates is destined, if they were to succeed, to renew in America the misfortunes and disorders of Poland; it is, therefore, only natural that they should approve of Russia's conduct in the Polish movement.

What will their partisans here say to these aspirations after a Russo-American alliance? It is true that they do not pique themselves on consistency; and that, unlike the Unionists of Washington, while they recognise the right of the Poles to break the chains which unite them to Russia, they deny that of the South to throw off the fetters which bind them to the North, and to proclaim their independence.

In these tendencies there is something which should not be entirely lost sight of. Ill defined and insensate though such projects be, there is a certain party in America which obstinately advocates them. It is the inveterate hatred nourished against England and France which, though the Government may not dare to indulge it, may find vent among the adventurers whose numbers and daring the past may vouch for.

We have here a fresh proof of the wisdom of the French policy which proposed a recognition of the Confederacy, and has gone to war for the pacification of Mexico, for the purpose of putting a stop to the exaggerated development of this American Republic, whose audacity recoils from nothing, and whose extension might destroy the equilibrium of the whole world.

The Patrie has a letter to prove the revolutionary character of the late riots in New York. "These black Republicans," says the writer, "are also Red Republicans; their heroes are the heroes of the Red Republic in Europe, whose portraits decorate the walls of the lager beer-cellars where they congregate. There were striking points of resemblance between a Paris or Lyons' emueve and that of New York. The movement was a sudden one, for which no preparation had been made, but already on the second and third days more discipline might be remarked among the rioters, and even a few barricades at last appeared. Had the Germans, French, and Italians been able to come to an understanding with the Irish, the emueve might have been longer-lived. But their Archbishop had quieted them by the administration of large doses of blarney, and there is at all times a strong antagonism between the Irish and the other immigration. The noble race cannot live in friendly contact with any other, although a community of oppression may for a time smother the feeling of jealous ill-will." "The American papers," he continues, "warn their readers that this was no riot for the sake of pillage; the rioters were working men or mechanics. The friends of Mr. Lincoln may say that the fall of 4 per cent. in the price of gold is the proof how trifling the insurrection seemed to American capitalists. But there are papers which do not see it at all in this light. They attribute the fall in its price to the panic of its holders, who brought down the market by the sudden demand for bills upon England and France, where they may have before long to take refuge."

Mexico has been referred to in one of these letters, and the wise foresight which has undertaken its pacification praised. The choice of a Government, not by the simple ordeal of universal suffrage, but by the votes of a body chosen by double election—General Forey being the first degree, the commission of Government chosen by him the second, and 254 notables chosen by these, the result—has excited no enthusiastic admiration in France. But the general's—now marshal's—last act, the sequestration of all property, movable and immovable, belonging to persons in arms against France is an act of barbarism which has elicited some marks of disapprobation even here, and which it is not probable that the Emperor will countenance. The silence of the Moniteur on the subject is considered a pledge that this decree will be withdrawn. The occupation of Mexico, determined on for five years, the occupying army to be paid by the Mexican Government, will be a sufficiently thorny task, without adding individual hatreds to patriotic resentment.

To return from the Equator to the Poles, I should have a difficulty in selection if I attempted to convey to you by extracts the eagerness of the Paris press to rush into war. In the general public, however, this martial ardour is very much cooled down, and the constantly increasing violence of the press is a proof of this. The French people are ready enough to go to war with Russia, but they will do this willingly only on condition of having England by their side in the adventure. The declarations in parliament and the tone of the press in England have done much to allay the war-fever, but the unanimity with which the French press continues to advocate war leads to the suspicion that the Government has determined upon it. The Presse had two days ago a correspondence from London, in which it is said that England has determined to go with France and Austria to all extremes, and it states that Lord Russell gave this assurance the very day of the prorogation of parliament, in exchange for the assurance that France would seek no increase of territory as the price of her sacrifices. Commenting on this news, the Siecle says that, "notwithstanding all her hesitations, tergiversations, and unwillingness, the French fleet would not have sailed a hundred knots from Cherbourg in the direction of the Baltic, before the English fleet from Portsmouth would join it. The Crimean war is not so distant that we have forgotten the conduct of England then. She hesitated then; she showed then the same unwillingness to go to war till the moment when we lifted our anchors. Then all objections ceased. Whatever her motives, the concurrence of England will not be wanting to us now any more than then. The hope of Liberals, that they may see the flags of the two nations united in so just a war as that for Poland, will not be deceived."

This is evidently written as an answer to the objectors, who begin to shrink from the prospect of another Russian campaign. In ten days we shall be able to judge better of the Imperial decision. The Emperor returns to-morrow, and if, as at present said, he remains here for his fête, the 15th, it must be with the intention of then saying something either to calm public apprehension, as M. Fould is said to have urged, or to show that war is inevitable. Rumour attaches great importance to a meeting of the Privy Council, called for the middle of the month, as it is seldom assembled; but it may have nothing in view but the interior policy of the Empire, and the modifications which the recent elections have made in it. The absence of movement on the Bourse shows how uncertain people still are here with regard to the ultimate decision of the Government. If war were known to be imminent there would be a great fall, unless staved off by those measures which the Government has so often taken to sustain quotations; but the general impression is that the funds formerly used for this purpose are now at a low ebb. The small rise in the funds to-day—they are now at 67.10—is attributed to a report current in Paris yesterday, that England had refused to agree to the project of identical notes put forward by France.

AFFAIRS, FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

MONEY AND DISCOUNT MARKET.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, August 5.

THE panic of last week has been surmounted in a manner much better than was anticipated. The arrangements for adjusting the accounts have, however, only just terminated, and failures among firms of the Stock Exchange fraternity to the extent of five have taken place. If several others had not obtained assistance they would have been brought to the "hammer," and the result would have been worse confusion than that already experienced. Now the agitation created by these lapses in credit has passed, a more favourable feeling is entertained, since it is believed the difficulty with Poland will be settled in an amicable way—Russia being allowed to make terms without inflicting any serious wound upon her pride. The sudden recovery in French rates to-night shows that the "situation" in Paris is considered less discouraging, and consequently greater confidence was expressed both in the money-market and in the neighbourhood of Capel-court. If the war question shall be finished with explanations, the appearance of the weather and the influx of bullion will lead to cheaper rates of discount, and already the tendency is in that direction. The Bank next week, looking to the prospects of the future, may reduce to  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent.; if so the rates, instead of being as they are now out of doors,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  to 7, would be about  $3\frac{1}{2}$  to 34.

BULLION AND SPECIE MOVEMENTS.

The specie movements at the Bank of England continue on a rather limited scale, though certainly the transactions this week have been more extensive than for some weeks previously. The total amount of bullion sent in has been £351,000, but on the other hand there have not been any withdrawals. The arrivals of bullion have likewise been small, amounting only to £130,000, of which £15,788 is from the Brazils, and the remainder from America. The silver market remains in a very quiet state—for bars there is very little demand. Mexican dollars have only been slightly inquired after, but the price remains firm at 5s. 2½d. per oz. The gold ships known at present to be on their way to this country are the Kent, from Australia, with £117,500, and the John Durham, from Otago, with £160,000.

BILLS ON INDIA.

The billings for 40,000,000 rupees in bills on India took place to-day at the Bank of England. The proportions allotted were to Calcutta 22,000,000 rupees, to Bombay 16,000,000 rupees, and to Madras 2,000,000 rupees. The declared minimum price was as before, 1s. 11½d. per rupee on Calcutta, and 1s. 11½d. on Bombay and Madras. The applications within the limits amounted to 198,00,000. Tenders on Calcutta at 1s. 11½d. will receive about 11 per cent. on Bombay at 1s. 11½d. about 32 per cent., and all above these prices in full; on Madras in full.

CONFEDERATE COTTON LOAN.

Since our last there has been an absence of political news which would influence the value of this loan. On the Stock Exchange, however, there has been an unabated panic, caused, principally, by the forced sales of numerous weak holders—sums, which, in the aggregate are insignificant—but being forced off at a time when there is a general disinclination to operate, has caused a heavy decline. The price touched 30 this morning, for a moment only; there were speedily buyers at 26; and we close steady at 25 to 24 discount. Very little doing.

The marked depression in the Loan, however, must be attributed to something more than the ordinary fall created by adverse operations. It would seem, and indeed it is alleged that there is a deep-rooted conspiracy among men with Northern proclivities to offer stock in any quantity with the view of frightening holders, so that they are driven to sell out at any price. This will explain the unparalleled drop of the last three days, and the comparative state of panic which has prevailed in the market. The price of 35, 33 and 25 discount is not the representative value of this loan, and though the quotation may rule temporarily between these figures, this state of things cannot last long. It is quite clear that at any such depression buyers will come forward and take whatever can be obtained, and therefore in the course of the next week we expect to see a strong reaction towards, at least, the point of par. If this change should ensue, we should subsequently not be surprised to find a run up to a premium—the cotton basis of the transaction entitling it to favourable consideration apart from its dividend and sinking fund capacity, which may be viewed as extremely satisfactory.

The following correspondence with regard to the Confederate Loan has passed between one of the holders and Hon. C. J. M'Rae, agent of the Confederate States for its negotiation:—

"35, St. James's-place, London, Aug. 5, 1863.

"Sir,—The present position of the Seven per Cent. Cotton Loan on our Stock Exchange is such as to give anxiety to the holders, of whom I am one. At the same time I, for one, have not lost for a moment the confidence I always had in the ultimate success of the Confederate cause, nor putting aside this view for the present, do I doubt that the engagements the Confederate Government have entered into with the holders of the bonds of this loan can be and will be faithfully fulfilled.

"However, in order to have a clear idea of the position of affairs, I should like to know from you, the accredited agent in this country for the Cotton Loan, some few particulars on the subject:—

"1. Whether there exists within the Confederate States, in possession of the Government, cotton sufficient to discharge its liabilities on this Loan; if so, what amount they possess.

"2. Where the cotton is stored and how; and if the taking of Charleston, Mobile, and Savannah by the Northern army will cause the destruction or capture of any portion of the Government stock of cotton, and how much.

"3. Whether I or any holder of paid up bonds, on demanding cotton in exchange for bonds, can get immediate possession of the same within the limits of the Confederacy, and whether having possession of the cotton forthwith, I shall, on return of peace, or having previous opportunity of exportation, be exempt from all duty, except the stipulated duty of an eighth of a cent per pound.

"4. Your candid reply to these queries will much oblige me.

"H. W. SCHWARTZ.

"To Mr. C. J. M'Rae.

"Burlington Hotel, Cork-street, Aug. 5.

"Sir,—In reply to the inquiries contained in your note of this morning, I have to say that on the 1st of March last the Government of the Confederate States had purchased about 320,000 bales of cotton. The purchasing was still going on, and it is fair to presume that by this time the quantity has been increased to at least 500,000 bales.

"This cotton is principally in the States of Georgia and Alabama, and some also in the eastern part of Mississippi, North-western Louisiana, and Texas, and is stored on the plantations of the planters from whom it was purchased, in sheds or warehouses 300 feet from any other buildings, and in all cases the planters have agreed with the Government to take the same care of the cotton as if it still belonged to them, and to deliver it to the order of the Government when wanted. The capture of all our seaports would not endanger the loss of a single pound of cotton, as there are no stocks of cotton at any of them, nor are there any considerable stocks of cotton at any one place in the interior, care having been taken by the Confederate, as well as the State Governments, that no cotton should be stored at any point within five miles of a railroad, station, or navigable stream. That portion of the crop of 1861 which had been brought to the various interior depots has long since been taken back to the plantations by special order of the State Governments.

"The cotton will be delivered to any holder of the bonds on demand, as provided for in the fourth article of the contract. In the States of Alabama and Mississippi, where I have personal knowledge of the manner in which the business has been transacted, the cotton has been sampled, weighed, marked, and invoiced, and the agents of the bondholders can examine the samples at the offices of the chief agents of the loan in the different States, and take their orders on the planters for the delivery of the cotton without trouble or expense. The cotton obtained under this loan will not be subject to any tax or duty, except the export duty of one-eighth of a cent per lb., existing at the date of the contract.

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"C. J. M'Rae, Agent for the Loan.

"Mr. H. W. Schwartz."

LOAN FOR GUATEMALA.

A loan for £150,000 has just been notified for the Republic of Guatemala, for the purpose of local improvements. The interest is to be at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly in London, with a sinking fund at the rate of 2 per cent. per annum.

BANKING AMALGAMATION.

An official announcement has just been made that the old established private banking firm of Messrs. Hankey and Co., of Fenchurch-street, have made arrangements for an immediate amalgamation with the Consolidated Bank (Limited) of London and Manchester, to which another old private banking firm, that of Messrs. Heywood, Kennard, and Co. has recently been added, and on whose premises the business in London is now carried on. The great progress recently made by the Joint Stock Banks, and the great favour in which they are held by the public have induced these amalgamations, and the general impression is, that others of a similar character will follow at probably no distant date.

MERCANTILE SUSPENSION.

The suspension has just been announced of Messrs. J. E. Figgis and Co., merchants and warehousemen of Gutter-lane. The total liabilities are estimated at between £35,000 and £40,000, but it is thought the assets will be nearly if not quite equal. It is stated that the stoppage has been occasioned through the non-arrival of expected remittances from abroad.

HOME AND FOREIGN SECURITIES.

Business in the English Securities has been very quiet throughout the week, but this is to be expected, to a greater or less extent at this period of the year, when a large portion of the dealers are, as usual, taking their holidays. Consols have varied during the week from 92½ to 93½, and close this evening at nearly the highest point, being 93 to 94 for both money and account. Exchequer Bills have not been so largely dealt in, and again show a slight decline, the latest quotations being 1 dis. to 2 prem. There has been less speculation in foreign securities, and prices have been rather better supported. At one period there was a little excitement with regard to Greek stock, but affairs at Athens being looked upon rather more satisfactorily, prices have again improved. A fair business has been done in Spanish, Turkish, and Mexican, but without any material alteration in values. Greek Five per Cents. closed at 31½ to 32½, Spanish Certificates, 12½ to 13, Do. Passives, 31½ to 32, and Mexican, 36½ to 37.

AMERICAN SECURITIES.

A large business has again been transacted in American securities, but chiefly in those descriptions more particularly identified with the Northern States. Prices have fluctuated rather more than usual, but, in most instances were rather firmer at the close. United States' redeemable in 1874, have been dealt in at 70 and 72; Virginia State Six per Cents., 42½, 42, and 42; Atlantic and Great Western Railway, Pennsylvania Section, 72, 72½, 72 and 72½; Erie Share, $100 all paid, 69, 70, 70½, 68, 68½, 69, and 70 ex. div.; Illinois Central Seven per Cents. 78½; Do. $100 Shares, 890 paid, 19½, 21½, 22, 21, 21½, 22, 20½, 21½, 20½, 20½, 19½, 19 and 16 dis.; do. all paid, 71, 70, 69½, 69½, 70½, 70, 71, and 73; Michigan Central, Convertible 1869, 78; Do. Sinking Fund, 1st Mortgage Convertible 1882, 80 and 84; New York Central, $100 shares, 80½, 80, and 77½, x. c.

RAILWAY SECURITIES.

The Railway Share Market has shown but little animation as regards business, and prices throughout the week have been gradually declining, there having been scarcely a momentary improvement. Great Northern have experienced a decline of nearly 3 per cent., chiefly in consequence of the unsatisfactory nature of the dividend. Caledonian, Midland, Great Western, North Eastern (Berwick), Lancashire, and Yorkshire, are also considerably lower. In Foreign Railways there has been more business doing, and prices have been comparatively well sustained, and in those of British possessions, although the transactions have been more limited, prices have ruled steady.

JOINT STOCK BANK MEETINGS.

At the first half-yearly meeting of the proprietors in the Union Bank of Ireland, a report by the directors was read and adopted, which stated that notwithstanding the depression in every branch of industry in Ireland, consequent on successive deficient harvests, the statement of accounts showed, after paying all current expenses, a balance of profit of £823, which would be carried to the next account. The arrangements for the establishment of branches in Ireland, it appears, were not completed till the middle of last March. At a meeting of the proprietors of the Bank of Hindostan, China, and Japan, resolutions were passed confirming the previous minutes for excluding from the Articles of Association the 19th clause thereby empowering the directors to buy and sell the shares of the Company. At the second half-yearly meeting of the Imperial Bank, the report of the directors was unanimously adopted. It states that the gross profits for the past six months had been £10,056; and after making all deductions, there would be left a net balance of £4,012, being equal to a dividend of 5 per cent. The directors, however, deemed it prudent not to announce any distribution at present, but carry the balance to the current half-year's account, the report to be presented. At the half-yearly meeting of the Bank of Egypt on Tuesday next states that the net profit of the half-year, including a balance of £4663, brought forward from the previous half-year, amounts to £13,895, out of which the usual dividend at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum for the half-year, free of income-tax, will be declared, leaving a balance of £5,145 to be carried to the next account. In consequence of the death of Philip Anstruther, Esq., Deputy-chairman, Patrick F. Robertson, Esq., has been elected to fill the vacancy created.

PROGRESS OF ENTERPRISE.

There appears at present not to be any falling off in the introduction of new joint-stock companies, although the mania for those gigantic undertakings which prevailed a short time ago has been repressed. Of the six brought forward this week, the Charcoal Iron Works Company requires £230,000; the Kythanser Mining and Smelting Company, and the British and Foreign India Rubber Company, each ask for £200,000; the North-Western Railway Rolling Stock Company, £100,000; the Metropolitan Lavatory Company, £60,000; and the Brighton Club and Norfolk Hotel Company, £40,000; making together a total of £830,000. A supplementary return of the new companies registered since the 15th June up to the 9th ult., has been published, which shows that in the short period of three weeks, the number of English companies was 58, with a nominal capital of £14,328,200; two Irish, with a nominal capital of £14,000; and three Scotch, with a nominal capital of £3,600. The average nominal capital of the English companies is £247,000; the highest being that of the Credit Metropolitan for £3,000,000; and the lowest that of the United Bank of England, France, and America, being for only £1,000.

THE COURSE OF THE PRODUCE MARKETS.

In every department our American trade presents the same dull monotonous aspect, as noticed for some time past. Passing events throw no light upon the question as to when the war is likely to end; and traders therefore relax none of their wonted caution in conducting their operations. Speculation is a dead letter, and even actual requirements are only sparingly provided for. In this way transactions from day to day appear trifling in the extreme, and yet from their continuity they sum up a better aggregate in the quarterly returns than might, under existing circumstances, be expected. In the price of American wheat and flour there has been no change; but the movements of the week point rather to easier than firmer rates in the future. Already new English wheat is coming to market, and the samples are taken as indicating a crop quite equal in quality to former years; whilst as to quantity, estimates are in all cases placed above those of last harvest. American provisions have generally met an improved demand. Bacon sides of fresh and good quality have made 40s.; but purchases are confined almost exclusively to the best descriptions. Bacon middles, with continued transactions for export, are again 1s. per cwt. dearer. American butters are neglected in the absence of fine qualities. The principal feature in the tobacco market is the diminishing stocks of American, and it is expected that should the imports prove small and of the same inferior quality and condition as the samples as yet received, some extension of demand from precautionary, buying may be experienced. Cotton rules firm, with sales of about the recent average. Petroleum was purchased freely till within the last few days; the price of crude advancing to £19 15s. per tun, and refined to 2s. 5d. per gallon. At the close, however, the market is quiet, with quotations barely so good. American spirits of Turpentine being wholly in one hand, are retained at 100s. in the face of a further fall to 71s. per cwt. in the price of French. Owing partly to the position of the Exchange at New York, sperm oil has been sold at 20s. per tun advance. In articles suitable for the American demand there is very little change, and the sales since our last have been upon a very limited scale, as also have been the entries for shipment. Scotch pig iron, after touching 53s. 3d. has receded to 52s. 9d. and 52s. 10½d. Camphor sells in retail quantity at £6 5s. Shellacs are making a little more money. Gums remain stationary in value. At our colonial wool sales scarcely anything is doing for America.

COTTON AND DRY GOODS MARKET.

LIVERPOOL, Wednesday Evening, August 5.

The past week has been a very quiet one for our cotton market, with daily sales, ranging from 4,000 to 5,000 bales, but the inclination of prices has been rather against the seller. This has been in part owing to the large arrivals of Indian cotton, some 50,000 bales have come up in the last ten days. Trade also in Manchester has again settled into dulness, and here and there spinners are shortening their hours of work. The last news received from India was rather disappointing, as it showed that the demand for goods had fallen off, and a slight reaction occurred. The American advances since our last report have had no sensible influence on the market; their tenor sums to point as conclusively as ever to a long-protracting and desolating war. We quote to-day Middling American cotton 22d.; Fair Dhollerah 18½d.; do. arrived 17½d. to 3d. for May sailing and 17½d. to 3d. for June sailing.

MANCHESTER, Tuesday, 4th August.

The American intelligence during the past few days has had a depressing effect on our yarn and cloth market, and very little business has taken place in consequence. The Federal successes appear to have engendered a belief in the minds of buyers here, that the war will not continue much longer, and that it is extremely risky buying anything beyond what is wanted for immediate requirements. Holders, on the other hand, do not see anything but a prolongation of the war, yet are afraid to enter into further purchases of cotton or yarn, but talk of resorting to short time again.

Advices by telegram received here on Friday from India, report markets there as quiet and for some fabrics lower prices are being taken. This also has had a tendency to weaken prices and assist in the depression of tone. Yarns suitable for home manufacture are the weakest, but very little has been done in them. Some few transactions have been entered into by continental shippers at steady prices, but the present state of demand for their markets is not such as to materially improve. Goods of all kinds are little inquired for, but as stocks are light, very slight concessions, if any, would be made in case of offers.

Among the Contents of THE INDEX of July 30, are—

NOTES ON EVENTS OF THE WEEK AT HOME AND ABROAD.
PARIS TOPICS.
THE ENGLISH PRESS ON THE LATE FEDERAL SUCCESSES.
THE LOSSES ON THE MISSISSIPPI.
THE FRUITS OF MASTERLY INACTIVITY.
THE NEW YORK RIOTS.
THE SESSION.
MR. CORDEN ON THE ALABAMA.
NEW ORLEANS CORRESPONDENCE.

SHIRTS.—International Exhibition. Class 27 C, No. 4572. Prize Medal and honourable mentions 1851 and 1862. Shirts, Collars, Flannels, and every description of underclothing manufactured on the premises.

J. BRIE AND CO.,
43, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.
The only Shirtmakers admitted as Exhibitors at the International Exhibition of 1862.

VALUES OF GOLD.—WATHERSTON and BROGDEN, for the information of the public and their numerous patrons beg to make the following announcement regarding the VALUE OF GOLD, feeling persuaded that the interests of the fair trader and public will be alike protected by the wide circulation of knowledge on this subject. Gold being divided into 24 parts or carats, it follows that gold of

Per oz.	Per oz.
24 carats fine is worth.....£4 4 11	13 carats.....£2 6 0
23 ditto.....4 1 5	12 ditto.....2 2 ½
22 ditto (British Standard).....3 17 10½	11 ditto.....1 18 11
21 carats.....3 14 4	10 ditto.....1 11 10
20 ditto.....3 10 9½	9 ditto.....1 8 3½
19 ditto.....3 7 3	8 ditto.....1 4 9
18 ditto.....3 3 8½	7 ditto.....1 1 24
17 ditto.....3 0 2	6 ditto.....0 17 8
16 ditto.....2 16 7½	5 ditto.....0 10 7½
15 ditto.....2 13 1	4 ditto.....0 7 1
14 ditto.....2 9 6½	3 ditto.....0 3 6½

Manufactory, 16, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London, W.C.
N.B.—Assays made of Chains and Jewellery for 1s. each.
NOTICE.—This Establishment is closed at six o'clock in the evening, and on Saturdays at one o'clock.

FRANCIS FORD, MANCHESTER,
Manufacturer of Three and Six Cord Spool Thread, Cotton Balls, Knitting and Embroidering Cottons, &c. Imported by F. KIMLIGH and NEYREY, New Orleans, and GEORGE CHAMBERS and CO., Nassau, N.P.

A. G. MILWAINE, AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, Tobacco, Cotton, Grain, and other produce, PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA.

TWO PRIZE MEDALS awarded "For General Excellence" in DRESSING CASES, BAGS, DESPATCH BOXES, &c. Gentlemen's Travelling Bags, Useful Bags, 14s. 6d.; Full Size, 18s. 6d.; Large Size, 21s. Courier Bags, with Shoulder Strap, from 10s. 6d. Morocco Ladies' Bags, 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 14s. 6d., 18s. 6d., and 21s. Tourists' Writing Cases, 8s. 6d., 10s. 6d. to 21s. Finest Cutlery in Razors, Scissors, Needles, &c. JENNER and KNEWSTUB, Manufacturers to the Royal Family, 33, St. James's-street, and 66, Jermyn-street.

GEORGE CHAMBERS, & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants,
NASSAU, N.P.
BAHAMAS.

J. PFEIFFER & MULLER,
Commission Merchants,
52, Rue du Chateau d'Eau,
PARIS.

SAMUEL SMITH,
COTTON BROKER,
11, Manchester Buildings,
LIVERPOOL.

HENRY ADDELEY & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants,
NASSAU, N.P.
BAHAMAS.

FRANCIS PRESTON,
ENGINEER AND CONTRACTOR TO HER
MAJESTY'S WAR DEPARTMENT,
35, Loveday Street,
BIRMINGHAM.
And Ancients' Bridge Works,
MANCHESTER.
Established 1816.

J. H. ASHBRIDGE & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants,
NEW ORLEANS.
Office—56, Brown's-buildings, Liverpool.
Agents—Liverpool and New Orleans Mail Steam Navigation Company.

BEACH & ROOT,
Commission Merchants,
CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA
and
ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

BEACH, ROOT, & CO.,
APSELY BUILDINGS, OLD HALL STREET,
LIVERPOOL.

S. ISAAC, CAMPBELL & Co.
CONTRACTORS & MERCHANTS.
71, Jermyn-street,
LONDON.
Sherbro: West Coast of Africa.
Represented by
W. B. HART,
Nassau, New Providence,

WIGGINS, TEAPE, & Co.,
WHOLESALE AND EXPORT STATIONERS,
10, ALDGATE, LONDON.

Special Papers suited to Foreign Markets.

ROWLAND & BROTHERS,
Commission Merchants,
NORFOLK,
VIRGINIA.

JOHN FRASER & CO.,
CHARLESTON,
South Carolina.
FRASER, TRENHOLM, & CO.,
Liverpool,
Commission Merchants.

SEARING AND CO.,
Commission Merchants,
MOBILE AND NEW ORLEANS, C.S.A.
Represented by
R. G. BEESLEY, Cotton Broker,
No. 2, Byron's-court, Royal-exchange,
Manchester.

J. E. HERTZ,
(Of the late Firm of MORDECAI and CO.),
Commission Merchant,
CHARLESTON,
SOUTH CAROLINA.

References to
M. C. MORDECAI, Esq.,
Charleston, South Carolina.
Messrs. COHEN and HERTZ,
Savannah, Georgia.

LAMB, BALL, & CO.,
Ship and General Commission Agents,
ST. THOMAS,
WEST INDIES.
J. D. BALL,
J. D. LAMB.

WEBER BROTHERS,
Commission Merchants,
SAVANNAH,
GEORGIA, C.S.A.

HOTEL DE LA GRANDE BRETAGNE,
Rue de Po,
TURIN.

McDOWELL, WITHERS, AND CO.,
MOBILE, ALABAMA, C.S.A., Commission Merchants.

R. D. RUSDEN, MANCHESTER,
ENGLAND, American Drills of all kinds,
Denims, Stripes, Shirtings, and all sorts of Manchester Goods.

ANDREW LOW AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH
GEORGIA.

HAMILTON AND GRAHAM,
Importers, Wholesale Dealers in Dry
Goods, &c., PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA.

H. LEVY AND SON,
Commission Merchants, MOBILE.

GARLAND GOODE, MOBILE,
Cotton Factor and Commission Merchant.

BOYKIN AND McRAE, Cotton
Factors and Commission Merchants,
MOBILE, ALABAMA, C.S.A.

J. W. ANDERSON AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH,
GEORGIA.

JAMES CHAPMAN,
Commission Merchant, CHARLESTON.

N. A. HARDEE AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH,
GEORGIA.

R. N. GOUDINE AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, Charleston.

DUNLOP, MONCURE, & CO.,
General Commission Merchants,
RICHMOND.

WARWICK AND BARKSDALE,
GALLEGO FLOUR MILLS.
This immense establishment of a capacity to manufacture 1000 barrels of Flour per day, purely for South American Market. RICHMOND.

MILLER AND BATRE, Exchange
Brokers, MOBILE, ALABAMA, C.S.A.

R. AND D. G. MILLS, Cotton
Factors and Commission Merchants,
GALVESTON, TEXAS, C.S.A.

GENERAL THOMAS J. (STONEWALL) JACKSON.

Two Continents, both friend and foe, combine to mourn the premature death of General JACKSON, hero and Christian. Two years have been sufficient to create a fame which has won the kindly respect of enemies and the admiration of the Old World, which twenty-four months since was ignorant of his existence

It has been suggested that some general recognition from Great Britain of the worth of such a man, by name, by race, and by character related to us, although the citizen of another land, would be a graceful token of friendly feeling from the old country to our kinsmen across the Atlantic.

The eminent sculptor, J. H. FOLEY, Esq., R.A., has undertaken to execute a marble Statue, heroic size, of the General for £1,000, while £500 may be required for pedestal, inscription, and other extras. Accordingly, for £1,500 a complete Statue of "Stonewall" JACKSON, by one of our most distinguished sculptors, may be prepared for transmission to his native country when the unhappy war shall have ceased. Towards raising this sum, the Subscriptions of our countrymen and countrywomen are earnestly solicited. Central and Local Committees, with auxiliary Ladies' Committees, are being formed to collect the necessary funds.

The undersigned will gladly receive Subscriptions until the final arrangements are made, and an account has been opened for "General JACKSON'S Statue," at Messrs. COUTTS and Co.'s, Strand, London, W.C.

N.B.—It is not at all intended that Subscriptions to the Statue should imply any opinion on the merits of the American struggle. They will be taken solely and simply as a recognition of the rare personal merit of General Jackson.

COMMITTEE.

EDWARD AKROYD, Esq.
HON. EVELYN ASHLEY.
LORD CAMPBELL.
LORD EUSTACE CECIL.
EARL OF DONOUGHMORE.
HON. ERNEST DUNCOMBE, M.P.
SIR EARDLEY EARDLEY, BART.
SIR ARTHUR H. ELTON, BART.

SIR JAMES FERGUSSON, BART., M.P.
HON. C. FITZWILLIAM, M.P.
J. S. GILLIAT, Esq.
W. H. GREGORY, Esq., M.P.
COL. GREVILLE, M.P.
SIR HENRY DE HOUGHTON, BART.
A. J. B. BERESFORD HOPE, Esq.
SIR E. KERRISON, BART., M.P.

J. LAIRD, Esq., M.P.
SIR COUTTS LINDSAY, BART.
W. S. LINDSAY, Esq., M.P.
G. PEACOCKE, Esq., M.P.
G. E. SEYMOUR, Esq.
J. SPENCE, Esq.
LIEUT.-COL. C. N. STURT, M.P.

A. J. B. BERESFORD HOPE, Esq., 1, CONNAUGHT PLACE,
Hon. Treasurer,
W. H. GREGORY, Esq., M.P., 19, GROSVENOR STREET WEST.
Hon. Secretary.

CENTRAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE RECOGNITION OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES.

Members enrolled, personally or by letter. Subscriptions and donations received at the offices, 26, Market-street, Manchester. Enrolment fee (optional), from one shilling. THOS. STALEY, Sec.

MANCHESTER SOUTHERN CLUB, advocating the stoppage of the war, the independence of the South, and the gradual emancipation of the slave, open daily for the enrolment of members and receipt of subscriptions. Local committees can have information as usual.—Address,
MATTHEW CHADWICK, } Hon. Sec.
T. MALAN WALKER, }

NEW LINE OF
STEAM PACKETS
BETWEEN
LIVERPOOL, ST. THOMAS, LA GUAYRA,
P.T.O. CABELLO, CURACAO,
SANTA MARTHA, CARTHAGENA TO COLON,
RETURNING FROM THAT PORT BY
KINGSTON (JAMAICA), PORT-AU-PRINCE,
CAPE HAITIEN TO LIVERPOOL.

The Liverpool, Western and Spanish-American Steam Packet Company
WILL commence running powerful
A 1 Screw Steamboats from this port on the 20th June next, to be at Colon in time to take the Goods and Passengers brought to Panama by the Steamers from the North and South Pacific, and to Colon, about the 21st July, continuing the same dates monthly. The Steamboats are:—
The CHRISTOPHER COLUMB, 1,572 tons, W. Baker, Commander, to sail from Liverpool, 20th June
The SAINT THOMAS, 1,210 tons, W. Gilberry, Commander, 20th July
The BOLIVAR, 1,230 tons, W. W. Kiddle, 20th Aug.
The HUMPHREY (building), 1,400 tons
Goods and Passengers will be taken, if required, at through rates from the Continent, via Liverpool, over the Panama Railway to Ports in the Pacific, and also back from those Ports by same route.
The CHRISTOPHER COLUMB has very spacious and well-ventilated berths and saloon, which will afford every comfort to Passengers. The Rates for First and Second-class Passage will be moderate.
IMBIE & TOMLINSON,
ALEXANDER DURANT & Co.
Liverpool, May 1, 1863.

WEST INDIES.—LIVERPOOL,
WEST INDIAN, AND CENTRAL AMERICAN STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.
FOR SAINT THOMAS, PORT-AU-PRINCE, HAYTI, KINGSTON (JAMAICA), SANTA MARTHA, CARTHAGENA, AND COLON OR ASHWALL.
Taking Goods at through rates for Panama and Ports in the North and South Pacific (in connection with the Panama Railroad, the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company).
The following line new A 1 full powered Steamers will sail from LIVERPOOL on the 21st of each month, receiving goods up to the 19th of each month.
PARLEN .. .. 1,172 tons.
VENETIAN .. .. 1,000 "
GRANADIAN .. .. 1,100 "
MEXICAN (now building), 1,100 "
In consequence of the VENETIAN not being able to complete the first-class Steamer, SHATTESBURY, Captain McKERRAN, will sail on the 21st of the above Ports on the 21st of each month, until the 19th May.
Goods taken at through freight from the Continent.
For rates of freight or passage, having superior accommodation, has on board J. M. CURRIE, J. C. HAY, G. G. GIBSON, and HENNING, Hambro, 1, Lombard-street, and also at the offices, W. D. ROBERTS and Co., Glasgow, or to LEWIS, HARRISON, & FOWLER,
Agents, Liverpool.

AMERICAN WINES AND SPIRITS, &c. W. R. S. MARKWELL, WINE MERCHANT TO HER MAJESTY AND THE IMPERIAL COURTS, 35, 40, & 45, ALBEMARLE STREET, AND 4, STAFFORD STREET, PICCADILLY, LONDON, W.

Monaghela, Bourbon, and Old Dominion Whiskies; Peach Brandy; Staughton, Sickles, and other Bitters; Fruit Spirits; Sparkling and dry Catawba; Californian Champagne; all kinds of Continental Wines, including the original importations from Hungary.
The Stock of Wines, Spirits, and Liqueurs are of the oldest, most extensive, and best selected in England.
TERMS, CASH!

ACCOUNT BOOKS, &c.,
Of all Rulings, ready in Stock, or made to any Pattern on the Premises.
LITHOGRAPHIC AND COPPER-PLATE.—Circulars printed on the Shortest Notice; all kinds of Copper-Plate Printing with economy and despatch.
CARD PLATES.—Engraved in various styles with despatch. 2s. each.
LETTER-PRESS.—Letter-Press work of every description: Circulars, Catalogues, Share-Plates, &c.
NOTE-PAPER.—Embossed die, Plain, and Colours, with Crest and Initials, and Printed Address, without charging for Dies or Plates.
All Articles being prepared on the Premises can be ensured with despatch and economy at Wholesale and Shipping Prices.
F. ARNOLD, MANUFACTURING STATIONER, ETC., 86, FLEET STREET, E.C.
(CORNER OF ST. BRIDE'S AVENUE.)

VINS SUPERIEURS DE CHAMPAGNE.
DINET-PEUVREL ET FILS,
PROPRIETAIRES ET NEGOCIANTS,
A AVIZE, MARNE,
EXECUTE ORDERS FOR ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.
Please send References with Order.

THE CHURCH AND STATE REVIEW.
EDITED BY ARCHDEACON DENISON.
No. 15, FOR AUGUST. PRICE ONE SHILLING, IS NOW READY.
CONTENTS:—The Session of 1863—The Archbishop of York and the Order for the Burial of the Dead—Servia—Our Indian Empire—The Insurgent Diocese—Federal Finance—Mr. Bouverie and the Universities—The Representation of Oxford University—Too Bad—The Church of England and the Committee of Privy Council on "Education"—The Church in India—Houses of Charity—Our Synodal Constitution—The Church in Ireland—The Judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in re the Rev. W. Long and the Privy Council.
The Month:—Diary, Foreign, Colonial, Home—Dr. Cumming and John Partridge—Thomas De Quincy—Acclimatization—Letter of the Northern Bishops in 1661.
Reviews:—Stanley's Jewish History—The Book of Praise—Does the Bible Sanction American Slavery?—Austin Elliott—Pollard's America—The Quarterlies, Magazines, &c.—Correspondence.
THE CHURCH AND STATE REVIEW
May be obtained at all the Railway Bookstalls, and of all Booksellers in Town and Country.
OFFICE, 13, BURLINGHEAD-STREET, STRAND, W.C.
REID AND STEWART,
Commission Merchants,
SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.
Represented by
ANDREW STEWART, 1, RUMFORD-PLACE, Liverpool.
C. W. WHITE,
Ship and General Commission Agent,
ST. THOMAS, WEST INDIES.
HARPER AND CAUGHY,
Commission Merchants,
SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.
Represented by
J. and A. CAUGHY, Tempest Chambers, Tempest Hay, Liverpool.
H. O. BREWER & CO.,
MOBILE, ALABAMA,
General Commission and Shipping Merchants.

JAMES J. BENNETT & WAKE,
Steam-Ship Insurance and General Commission Agents,
77, Cornhill, London,
and JAMES J. BENNETT,
Matamoros.

ADDRESS TO CHRISTIANS
THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.
By the
CLERGY of the CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA
London: James Nisbet and Co., 21, BERNERS-STREET, OXFORD-STREET.

18mo., cloth, extra gilt edges, price 1s.
BEN RHYDDING, THE ASCLE-
PION OF ENGLAND: its Beauties, its Ways, and its Water Cure. By the Rev. R. W. THOMSON. With Map of the Railway Routes to Ben Rhydding. Third Edition.
T. NELSON and Sons, London and Edinburgh.
To be had, free by post for 13 stamps, of SHUTTLE-WORTH, Bookseller, Ilkley.

THE PATENT FILE MACHINE, AND FILE MANUFACTURING COM-
PANY, (LIMITED.) Makers of every description of Steel and Files suitable for Engineers, Machinists, Agricultural Implement Makers, and for the general and export trade. Works,—Ashton Old-road, Manchester.

The Index,
A WEEKLY JOURNAL OF POLITICS,
LITERATURE, AND NEWS.
Devoted to the Exposition of the Mutual Interests, Political and Commercial, of Great Britain and the Confederate States of America.
Published every Thursday Afternoon.
PRICE SIXPENCE.
Subscription, Twenty-six Shillings per annum.
Stamped, Thirty Shillings per annum.

Nos. I. to LXVII. NOW READY.
THE INDEX has already obtained an extensive and still rapidly increasing circulation in Great Britain, the Continent, the West Indies, and the Northern and Southern States of America. It goes into the hands of all who, through business interests, political pursuits, or personal sympathy, are concerned in the great Transatlantic questions now in process of solution.

The Second Half-Yearly Volume
OF
THE INDEX,
Is Now Ready, Price £1 1s.
Subscriptions and Advertisements to be sent, and Post-office Orders made payable to
J. B. HOPKINS, 13, BOUVERIE STREET,
FLEET STREET, E.C.
Printed for the Proprietors by HENRY FLORENCE MACKINTOSH, of 11, Crane-court, Fleet-street in the Parish of St. Dunstan, in the City of London; and published by him at THE INDEX Office, 13, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London.—Thursday, August 6th, 1863.

THE INDEX

A WEEKLY JOURNAL OF POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND NEWS.

VOL. III—No. 68.]

LONDON—THURSDAY EVENING, AUGUST 13, 1863.

[PRICE 6D.

CONTENTS.

NOTES ON EVENTS OF THE WEEK AT HOME AND ABROAD.
LETTER FROM NEW YORK: THE IMPENDING CONFLICT BETWEEN FEDERAL AND STATE AUTHORITIES.
TWO YEARS' INVASION AND ITS RESULTS.
THE EMPIRE OF MEXICO.
MR. NEWMAN HALL'S EXCOMMUNICATION.
LETTERS FROM RICHMOND, JULY 4TH AND 11TH.
CAN INDIA SAVE OUR COTTON TRADE?
CORRESPONDENCE FROM NEW ORLEANS: THE SITUATION IN LOUISIANA.
EXTRACTS FROM SOUTHERN PAPERS.

NOTES ON EVENTS OF THE WEEK.

AMERICA.

THE Federal Government has avowed its intention to enforce the conscription in New York, as elsewhere. A large number of Federal troops, estimated at not less than 5,000, is encamped in the public squares in various parts of the city to overawe resistance. It is not therefore probable that the riots will be renewed. A more formidable conflict, however, is impending between the Federal and State authorities, as our New York correspondent points out with great force and clearness. "There is no longer a mob," he says, "but in place of a riotous multitude there is a great State in all its organized forms as a separate political community, which the counsellors of the Administration would leave to be treated as a mob and ruled by the bayonet." He foretells with remarkable precision the nature and the occasion of the collision. The Federal Government has evaded, by a paltry subterfuge, the judicial decision of the constitutionality of the act during the progress of enrollment. At the next stage of proceedings, when the enrolled men are actually drafted into service, the issue must be broadly met, and as the Federal Government appears to be fully determined to shield itself behind the Act of Indemnity, and if need be, to resist the decision of the State courts by military force, the last struggle for constitutional liberty must be regarded as having already commenced within the North itself. If it terminates in favour of the central authority, which is suspected of having deliberately provoked it, the revolution through which Federal America has been so rapidly passing will be complete.

We have Richmond correspondence, dated both before and after the recent Confederate reverses, of the 4th and 11th of July respectively. As our correspondent's letter of the former date betrays no undue exultation, so neither does his later one exhibit any evidence of depression or discouragement. The Southern people measure fully the whole extent of the disaster, and resolutely betake themselves to the supreme effort of retrieving it. The Southern papers before us, some of which are of as late a date as the 20th ultimo, confirm this impression of the unflinching determination of a unanimous population. It is remarkable, however, and singularly characteristic, that while Europe rings with praise at the heroic though unsuccessful resistance of Vicksburg, a portion of the Southern press subject the surrender to an excessively severe criticism. According to the Richmond Examiner, for instance, the sufferings of the garrison bore no comparison to what had been endured in other memorable sieges. The time of the surrender and the foolish words ascribed to General Pemberton are also very sharply commented upon, and we think not unjustly. We consider such criticisms, unless carried too far, as the symptoms of a sound public opinion and wholesome in their effect. It is better that a nation should err by excess of self-examination, than that it should allow itself to be flattered, like the North, into an overweening and fatal self-conceit. Besides, it must be remembered that the standard of military excellence is necessarily very high in the South, and that what would ensure praise in most other countries does not, with a people placed as the Southerners are, always ensure against censure. What, doubtless, also embitters the comments on recent events is the reflection that the two greatest losses which the Confederacy has sustained—New Orleans and Vicksburg—happened where Northern men were in command, Pemberton being a Pennsylvanian, and Lovell, though a native of Maryland, having continued a citizen of New York until after the battle of Manassas. Coincidences of this sort are seldom construed with perfect justice. Another singular feature in the tone of the Southern press is that the Richmond Enquirer, which has of late distinguished itself by several vehement attacks on different departments of the Administration, clamours for an extension of the President's powers, and would, had it its own way, make Mr. Davis almost as absolute as Mr. Lincoln.

Our New Orleans correspondent gives us minute details of the surrender of Port Hudson, some subsequent engagements which terminated unfavourably to the Federals, and are therefore not reported by the telegraph, and the expedition sent out to recover Brashear City. The most important item of intelligence is, however, the brief and almost incidental statement that since the fall of the two Confederate strongholds, and the day after the "opening of the Mississippi" had been publicly celebrated in New Orleans, a steamer arrived in that city riddled with Confederate balls.

It is not probable, as the North tremblingly fears, that the South is even thinking of resorting to the extreme measure of arming its slaves. But it is quite true, that if driven to the necessity of using it, the South has this weapon fully at its command. The negroes, led by their own masters, would fight as much better than when led against them, as the Sepoys fought better under than against their European officers. An organization similar to that of the native troops in India would answer all practical purposes. A levy of all the able-bodied slaves would give nearly 800,000 within a few weeks. A partial levy of only 200,000 or 300,000 men would not materially interrupt the agricultural work of the country. There would be no danger to society in such a measure. The same natural authority on the one side, and instinctive obedience on the other, which enables a single white man, far removed from neighbours, to control hundreds of negroes, would ensure discipline and subordination. A more solid security is in the tried loyalty and devoted attachment of the Southern slave to his master. The idea of negro troops in the Confederate service exists, however, only in the fears of the Northern people.

The telegraph announces the death of the Hon J. J. Crittenden, of Kentucky. At the outbreak of the war, few men enjoyed to so great an extent the respect and reverence of both sections of the late American Union. He was known as the Nestor of the United States' Senate, having entered that body in 1816, and with few intervals represented his State there from that date to the year 1861. During the same period he filled the offices of Governor of Kentucky and of Attorney-General of the United States. The colleague and contemporary of the greatest American statesmen of the post-revolutionary era, the Calhouns, Jacksons, Websters, and Clays—the representative of a State which both geographically and socially occupied a central position in the Union—and belonging during the whole of his public life to a party which favoured a strong Federal Administration, Mr. Crittenden in his advanced age found it impossible to break with all the traditions of his youth and manhood, and to take that prompt and irrevocable decision which the emergency demanded. It was he who devised the celebrated Compromise Resolutions, best known by his name, in the vain hope of conciliating the exasperated sections. It was he who seduced his State into the untenable attitude of neutrality, which has been the cause of so many misfortunes to Kentucky and the South at large. Thus having lost the confidence of both parties to this war, accused of treachery by both, and treated with indignity and contempt by both, he has died, a melancholy instance of a great statesman surviving his own reputation. It will, perhaps, best illustrate the difficult position into which Kentucky and Kentuckians have been forced through this unhappy indecision, to remark that Mr. Crittenden has a son in each of the contending armies, both general officers in their respective services. Cases of this kind are peculiar to Kentucky; and in that State alone are the parties to the contest so locally intermingled, as to give to the struggle the features and character of a civil war. The awful responsibility of this fact Mr. J. J. Crittenden takes with him to the grave.

The Northern press is much exercised at what they consider the imminent prospect of European intervention in the American war. They argue that so long as the South continued not only to hold its own, but even seemed the stronger, it was the interest of France and England to let it fight its battles unaided; but as the prospect of the success of the Union arms grows brighter, the certainty of foreign interference becomes more apparent. The establishment of a monarchy under French protection is considered as the first avowed step in this direction and as a deliberate challenge to the North. "Mexico," says the New York World, "instead of being, as heretofore, a weak Power, formidable to no other, will, under this regime, be one of the strongest on this continent; French enterprise and a steady Government will develop her magnificent natural resources, while, politically, Mexico will be France." France will, therefore, practically become one of the strongest American powers, rivalling England in prestige and influence. The Southern Confederacy will be the natural ally of this French-Mexican empire; and hence the World concludes, not unreasonably, "The danger was never so great as now, that we must encounter other arms than those of the South, before this contest is closed."

The New York Herald, which from its circulation and influence is emphatically the representative journal of the United States, continues to clamour for war with England and France. Those who think this mere braggadocio will nevertheless find it difficult to answer an argument advanced by that journal in its issue of the 29th July. After calling upon the President to immediately declare war against England and France, it observes, "Of all measures calculated to heal the wounds of the country, to harmonize its divided feeling, and to ensure the revival of the old sentiment of devotion to the Union, we believe this to be the most effectual. All history teaches us that after internal convulsions a foreign war is a sovereign specific for the restoration of health to the body politic. Thus it was with the ancient Greek and Roman republics, and thus it will ever be with communities similarly organized." This is true. It agrees with the doctrine laid down in the current number of the Edinburgh Review, that Federations are formed to resist foreign aggression; that they are only held together by the fear of foreign aggression; and that the national remedy for a decadence of federative feeling is a foreign war. The Herald concludes by an appeal to North and South. It tells the North that we have been anxious to act against it—that is, to recognise the South—only we were withheld by a mightier Power.

and it reminds the South that we have played her false by refusing her recognition, and says:—"The opportunity has been suffered to pass by, and the Southern people will resent it energetically when the occasion arises." The reconstruction of the Union is impossible, but it must be confessed that our Government has done its best to promote it on the basis of a war with England.

The republican leaders in the North are highly incensed and alarmed at the report that they are fighting for the restoration of a constitutional Union. Through their organ, the Tribune, they affirm they are totally opposed to such a scheme. A re-union on the old basis would be fatal to their influence. The Democrats desired to force the South back to secure their political preponderance, but now, perceiving that the conquest of the Confederacy is impossible and that the war threatens them with political ruin, they seek peace. The Republicans are in a minority, and see that their only chance of dominating in the North and crushing the Democrats is by continuing hostilities. At first, both parties, though from different motives, were earnest supporters of the war; at present, the Democrats are willing to let the South go, in order to save themselves from a military despotism; but the Republicans eschew peace because their political opponents are not yet entirely subdued. In an article on Mr. Roebuck's motion, published in the Tribune on the 27th of July, the member for Sheffield is treated with unwonted leniency; but the O'Donoghue, who expressed a hope that the Union would be restored by the North if possible, but if not by the South, is severely censured. Of course the Republicans did not break up the Union for the purpose of reconstructing it.

The Confederates are not fighting to obtain, but to maintain their liberty and independence. This position is forcibly illustrated by some decisions on habeas corpus cases delivered by Judge Halyburton at the Court at Richmond on the 23rd of July. In the South the law, and not military necessity, is supreme. Mr. J. R. Lone was drafted, and refusing to serve was imprisoned. He claimed freedom from the military service of the Confederate States on the ground that he was a mail contractor, and therefore exempted by the express terms of an act of Congress. The Court admitted the validity of his plea, and directed his discharge. In another case, Messrs. Solomon and James Adows petitioned to be released from confinement in "Castle Thunder," where they had been imprisoned for refusing to serve in the army. They submitted that having taken the oath of allegiance to the United States under compulsion, they did not owe any military duty to the Confederacy. Judge Halyburton ruled that they were illegally imprisoned, and directed their discharge from custody. At the same time the Court held that as citizens of North Carolina, they were liable to military duty, and that they were not exempted therefrom by the imposition of an oath of allegiance to a foreign government. Upon this, they were forthwith conscripted by the district attorney of North Carolina as part of the quota to be furnished by that State. This important decision, which makes the oath of allegiance forced upon Southerners on pain of confiscation and imprisonment null and void, is in perfect accord with the doctrine hitherto acted on by the Supreme Court of the United States. There is no such thing as a citizen of the United States or of the Confederate States, but each person owes allegiance to a sovereign State, and from that allegiance no proceeding of a foreign Government, nor even of the Federal Government with which the State is in union, can absolve him.

The Federals, who prate so glibly about exterminating the people of the South, find it difficult, and even impossible, to perform that operation on the small tribe of Sioux Indians. As the offer of $25 per scalp has not led to so much sport as expected, though a considerable booty of scalps has been secured north of the Minnesota River, the Governor has offered an additional reward of $75, and it is hoped that the incentive of $100 "will send into the woods a goodly number of unerring rifles, directed by consummate coolness and skill." It is reported that some of the Indians have taken refuge in British territory, and that General Sibley has applied for permission to follow them. The correspondent of a New York paper suggests that if the permission is refused "General Sibley should act without authority." Whether or not it is our duty to give up the Indians to their pursuers may be an open question, but we trust that the Federals will not be allowed to scalp their enemies on British territory.

In the celebrated engagement in the Hampton Roads the Virginia warned us to get rid of our wooden walls and to put our trust in iron; the defence of Battery Wagner has taught us how armour-plated ships are to be resisted. Solid masonry has not a chance against modern artillery; but earthworks can take, without material injury, just as much pounding as a fleet of iron-clads can administer.

On the 18th July the Federals assayed, for the second time, to possess themselves of Battery Wagner. About 10 A.M. two land batteries of five guns each and four gun and mortar boats opened the bombardment, and at noon they were joined by the Ironsides and five Monitors. The parapet of Wagner was pulverised in a few minutes, but for all the damage subsequently done the bombardment might as well have then ended. The loss of the Confederates, who were protected by bomb-proof works, was, after eight hours' cannonading four killed and fourteen wounded. They were merely spectators, only answering the fire now and then, just to show the place had not surrendered. Towards dusk General Gilmore signalled to the fleet to give the enemy a final dose. For an hour the firing was wonderfully rapid, and tons upon tons of iron were buried in the earthworks. Then the land batteries were silent, and the Monitors drew off, for the Federals were ready for the assault, and the advance was in the line of the fire. Suddenly the ground across which the Federals were moving was swept by a deadly storm of grape, shot, and shell. With their ranks terribly thinned the assailants neared the out-works, when the garrison poured into them a deadly volley from their rifles. At the same time they were exposed to a flanking fire from howitzers, and in a few minutes the ditch was filled with their dead and wounded. Nothing remained but to retreat across the fatal plain. The Federal loss was 2,000. Colonels Shaw and Putnam were killed; General Strong was mortally, and General Seymour severely wounded. The casualties among the officers were out of all proportion. Two sentences from the report of the Tribune will show this:—"When the brigade made the assault, General Strong gallantly rode at its head. When it fell back, broken, torn, and bleeding, Major Plimpton, of the 3rd New Hampshire, was the highest commissioned officer to command it. . . . The 54th Massachusetts (negro) went boldly into battle for the second time, commanded by their brave Colonel, but came out of it led by no higher officer than the boy, Lieut. Higginson."

On the 25th and 26th the bombardment was renewed, but with what result the authorities at Washington did not think it politic to publish. Two days before the attack on Wagner the Federals were driven off James' Island. These events have produced an impression in Washington and New York that the siege of Charleston will be a long affair if it is not raised.

The Federals are speculating as to the whereabouts of General Lee, and, as usual when they are ignorant of the position of the Confederate army, notify that a great battle is imminent. A letter written by General Lee, in which he states that General Meade has magnified the capture of a few stragglers into the surrender of an entire brigade, has given the coup de grace to the reports about the utter demoralization of the Southern army. The Republican party are anxious for the removal of General Meade, not because he writes false reports or because he is not thoroughly successful, but because he may acquire sufficient influence to make him a formidable political rival.

The movements in the South-West are not very important. The Confederates are in force at Chattanooga. It is reported that Brashear City, having been evacuated by the Confederate forces, surrendered to the Federal gunboats. As General Johnston keeps his plans a secret, the Federal newsmongers are compelled to draw upon their imagination, and they lately entertained the Northern public with two contradictory stories. One was that General Johnston's army had deserted him; the other, that General Johnston had deserted the Confederate Government. These tales were, of course, equally true.

It is reported that a small body of Confederates has been repulsed in Kentucky, and that the Federals had the best of a skirmish in West Tennessee.

General Morgan has been captured, imprisoned, and a demand is made in some quarters that he should be executed. We think General Morgan is safe, but if he is murdered the crime will not go unpunished.

The Washington Cabinet seems to have abandoned the idea of forcing their troops to mix with the "hated negro." It has been ordered that all coloured men taken under the present draft are to be separated from white conscripts by Provost-Marshals, and consolidated into the nearest coloured regiments or companies being organised in the several States.

A Boston paper praises Mr. Whiting, the Solicitor to the Federal War Department, and who is now commissioned as the legal adviser of Messrs. Adams and Dayton, for not receiving any compensation from the Administration. The New York World observes—"Few men have so correct an estimate of the value of their own services."

The reported capture of President Davis's private library and correspondence at Jackson has deeply gratified the party of the Administration, because it is hoped that some of the enemies of the Republican faction may be convicted of disloyalty on the evidence of letters written ten years ago. A system of terrorism is being introduced in the North, so that no man's liberty is secure. The Tribune, the organ of the Republicans, is nicknamed "Titus Oates" by the Democrats, and the epithet is deserved.

It seems probable that Butler's efforts to get up a negro insurrection in New Orleans may not prove abortive. The French residents in that city are so alarmed at the prospect of a revolt, that it is reported they have applied to their Consul to send for a French ship of war to protect their lives.

The Federal armies are still as far as possible recruited with foreigners. On the 23rd of July fifty-three men arrived at New York from Plattsburg, en route for the camp of instruction at Washington. Of these fourteen were originally drafted, and thirty-nine were purchased substitutes, seven of them being Canadian French, and the rest Irish residents of Canada. Is the enlistment of British subjects a violation of the Queen's proclamation? The Federal Government would so consider it if the Confederates recruited in Canada, but the warm neutrality of our Foreign Secretary in favour of the United States covers a multitude of transgressions.

ENGLAND.

It is intended almost immediately to lay down at Chatham a new iron frigate, according to Mr. Reed's plan. The vessel will bear the name of the Bellerophon, and will be somewhat smaller than the Achilles. She will be a little over 200 feet in length, with a breadth of beam of 50 feet, and will mount twelve guns of the most powerful description. Her armour will be  $5\frac{1}{2}$  inches thick in the more exposed parts, and in other parts  $4\frac{1}{2}$  inches. Her engines will be of 1200 horse-power, and she is expected to steam fifteen knots an hour. She is to be completed and ready for sea in two years.

A detachment of Royal Engineers under Lieutenant-Colonel Stewart will be immediately despatched to the East from Chatham for the purpose of laying down a line of telegraph through Turkey, Persia, and Afghanistan, to India. The non-commissioned officers and men have completed their course of instruction at the telegraphy and survey schools at Brompton Barracks. All the men selected are of the most healthy and robust constitution.

A rumour is current in military circles at Chatham, that in consequence of the menacing news recently received from America it is the intention of the Government to send additional troops to augment the forces in Canada. At present, the troops in that dependency consist of two battalions of Guards, three battalions of the Line, one battalion of the Rifle Brigade, and a battery of artillery in Montreal; two battalions of the Line at New Brunswick; a battery of artillery, a company of Engineers, a battalion of the Line, and a battalion of the Military Train at Nova Scotia; one regiment at Toronto; and one regiment at Kingston.

Trials of armour-plates of considerable interest were held last week at Portsmouth. The weapon used was a 95 cwt. 68-pounder, the distance 200 yards, and the charge 16 lbs. of powder. Messrs. Petin, Goudet and Co., of France, who have lately executed a large contract for the English Admiralty, supplied two plates of  $5\frac{1}{2}$  inches and  $4\frac{1}{2}$  inches respectively. The Millwall Company, and Messrs. Beale, of the Parkgate Works, Yorkshire, sent plates each of  $5\frac{1}{2}$  inches. The  $4\frac{1}{2}$  inch plate of Messrs. Petin, Goudet and Co. was an absolute failure, from the carelessness of its manufacture, but their  $5\frac{1}{2}$  inch plate succeeded admirably, from the superior quality of the iron. The Millwall Company's plate, made for the Agincourt, was all that could be desired; but that of Messrs. Beale, intended for the Royal Sovereign's turrets, was not quite so good. The results seemed to show that the production of a good armour-plate is simply a question of cost, and that Messrs. Petin, Goudet and Co. being able to furnish finished plates at an average of £35 per ton, are preferred to the English makers, because the latter cannot turn out equally good work at that price.

The iron-clad battery Pervenitz, which has been constructed in the Thames for the Russian Government, left Gravesend at 6 A.M., on Saturday last, for Cronstadt. Rumours were afloat that her departure was hurried from political reasons; but that statement has been denied, and the fact appears to be that the vessel by contract ought to have been finished on 1st of July, and that now no time is to be lost in view of the risks of the Baltic navigation at a later period of the year. The vessel was accompanied by the Russian steam-ship General Admiral. Off the Maplin Sands the Pervenitz was tried at the measured mile, and realised a speed of 8 knots, with 80 revolutions of her engines, their maximum number of revolutions being 110. She completed a full circle in 5 minutes 15 seconds, and was found to be under the most perfect command of the helm.

The pauperism in the twenty-one unions of the cotton districts rose suddenly in the final week of last month, and displayed a net increase of 1,290 on the increase of the previous week. The total decrease, however, in the thirty-four weeks ending on the 1st of August, amounted to 123,700. The total expenditure in out-door relief, for the forty-four weeks commencing with Michaelmas last, was £601,274. The total subscription obtained by the Mansion-House Committee from the first opening of the lists up to the present time is £508,516, and the balance now in hand is £74,500. The committee last week made grants of £3,315. The Victoria Emigrants Association has sent out about 400 persons, and is preparing to send 200 more to Australia. The Manchester Emigrants Committee have sent 148 adults to Canada, and are arranging to send fifty families and seventy-five single women to Victoria. The Blackburn Committee has forwarded sixty-two adults to Canada, and sixty adults will shortly be sent by the Manchester society to Queensland. Other smaller societies are also engaged in assisting emigration to Victoria, Queensland, and Canada.

At the last weekly meeting of the Central Executive Committee, the Earl of Derby presiding, the secretary reported the balance in the bank to be £317,168 1s. 10d. and the receipt of £1,375 5s. 8d. during the preceding week. The sum of £2,500 was voted in grants for various places. A question of great interest was asked by Lord Egerton, and became the theme of animated discussion, namely, whether the persons employed on the public works by Government were to receive pay as paupers receiving relief, or as men working for wages. Mr. Farnell stated, in answer, that it was distinctly understood that these people should be treated as independent labourers, and be struck off the list of the guardians and relief committees. Sanitary works and town improvements are the principal objects of the Bill.

The income-tax, at the rate of 9d. in the £, produced in the year ending the 5th of April, 1862, in England, £9,313,782; in Scotland, £882,337; and in Ireland, £793,984. The class of incomes considered as fixed and not derived from land, and charged with the tax, displayed an aggregate amount of £89,013,493 in Great Britain, being an increase of four millions on the preceding year; and the number of persons paying in that class on incomes between £100 and £150 was 135,262 while sixty-seven persons admitted incomes exceeding £50,000. In Ireland, by way of contrast, it is found that such incomes represent an aggregate of only £4,677,568, and the returns actually show a decrease in the number of persons who pay in the class. Moreover, in that country only two persons paid on incomes of £50,000 and upwards.

The Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland held their annual show last week at Kelso. The Duke of Argyll presided at the banquet, and in the course of the speech, in which he proposed "Prosperity to the Society," made some remarks replete with interest, though confessedly of a theoretical and speculative character, on the present state of agriculture in Scotland and the United Kingdom. He instituted a comparison between the system or philosophy of Darwin, and that in point of fact pursued by the practical breeder, showing that, as according to Darwin, all animals had been in the course of ages introduced upon the world by means of the principles of natural selection and intercrossing, so by the same art or method artificially developed has the breeder instituted the various specimens of creation necessary for the purposes of his art. The same comparison was also suggested in the development of particular grasses and the annihilation of other kinds. After a short reference to the question of agricultural statistics, voluntarily established and subsequently abandoned by the Highland Society, and in regard to which a hope was expressed that the prejudices of the English farmers on the subject would be speedily eradicated, the Duke proceeded to cite passages from Mr. Trollope's book, illustrating the fertility and vast expanse of the corn-growing districts of the Western States of America, and thence the conclusion was drawn that the attention and efforts [of the British agriculturist] must in future be concentrated on the rearing and fattening of cattle as the primary source of profit, the importations from the States having fairly driven him out of the corn-growing market. Allusion was also made to the enormous sums of money sunk as capital by the farmer, and a cheering picture drawn of the future of agriculture in Scotland.

In reference to the fatal accidents from rope-walking which have occurred at Cremorne and Aston Hall, and of which an account has appeared in these columns, many letters condemnatory of the system have appeared in the daily journals. Now, however, the great authority, J. F. Blondin, has spoken out, and addressed the public in a letter from the Hôtel de Paris, Seville. The accomplished artist attributes all past and possible accidents entirely to want of knowledge and experience on the part of persons who pretend to be members of the profession. He tells us that for thirty-three years he has exercised his art, and has never met with an accident; and this immunity he attributes to the care bestowed personally on the manufacture and condition of the ropes and materials used by him; indeed, he has gone so far in this direction as to have caused all his ropes to be tested by steam; he further announces that he does not intend to remain much longer in public life, and that if public opinion abrogates the high-rope ascensions in England he will readily bow to that decision.

An appeal in the interests of civil and religious liberty has appeared in the columns of the daily journals with reference to the disposal of the body of her Highness the Maharanee Jadhore of Lahore, the mother of his Highness the Maharajah Duleep Singh, and widow of the renowned Runjeet Singh, the Lion of the Punjab. Her Highness died on August 1, at Abingdon House, Kensington, and, on the assumption that a strong objection is felt by the priests and other members of the household to the English process of sepulture, two persons, called Ucheel Singh and Kishen Singh, bearing, respectively, the titles of Jageedar and Khutry, have appended their signatures to a document in which it is stated that his Highness the Maharajah denies the right of the household to dispose of the body according to the customs of the Sikhs, the rule of their religion being that the body be burnt and the ashes given to the Ganges. It is in the same appeal urged that as no moral or physical law would be infringed thereby, it is not to be supposed that the wisdom and intelligence of the land will oppose such obedience to the dictates of their religion. The next argument advanced is that, as no funeral is hallowed without the intervention of a priest, or other person competent to officiate at the obsequies, and as a Christian minister is out of the question, and further, inasmuch as burial completely shuts out the native ministration, the last sad duty to her Highness will remain unperformed. It is observed that the deceased lady was particularly careful about everything relating to caste, kept a separate establishment of natives, and even refused to eat when his Highness the Maharajah happened to be on the same carpet with herself. However, immediately after the publication of that letter, Colonel Oliphant comes forward with a reply, and states that the persons who signed the former document are two discharged servants of the household of the late Maharanee, and that had they been present at the funeral, they would have seen with what scrupulous care the Maharajah avoided giving any offence to the prejudices of his countrymen. In fact, it seems from Colonel Oliphant's letter, that the body has been deposited temporarily at Kensall Green Cemetery, pursuant to the precedent set in the case of his Highness the late Rajah of Coorg. The funeral was attended by the Maharajah and Colonel Oliphant, by the friends of his Highness, and by all the retinue of her late Highness. No Christian rite was attempted, his Highness Duleep Singh, when the coffin was placed in the mausoleum, merely addressing his people in their own language with affectionate earnestness on the uncertainty of human life.

A deputation from the English Church Union has waited upon the Archbishop of Canterbury, in reference to the licenses granted to the Royal Theatre or Theatres within the control of the Lord Chamberlain, to remain open during the Holy Week. The memorial which was on this occasion presented to His Grace is signed by fifteen bishops, eight deans, fifteen archdeacons, and a great number of beneficed clergy, peers, and members of the House of Commons. The theatres had been allowed to continue their performances in the Holy Week of 1862, and this had been the first example of the infringement of the ancient rule. On that occasion a deputation had waited on the Lord Chamberlain, but his Lordship then considered that it was too late to insert the prohibition clauses in the licenses. In the autumn of the same year a memorial, influentially and numerous signed, was presented to the Lord Chamberlain without avail, and consequently the officers of the society took the present step of requesting the Primate to use his influence in the matter. The Archbishop said that he strongly deprecated the practice of opening the Theatres in Holy Week, and promised to use his influence in the cause, though he declined to pledge himself to any defined course of action. It may be remarked that the Archbishop of York did not sign the memorial, because it did not go further, and include other days in Lent; and the Bishop of London considered that his influence in a matter within his own diocese could be more effectually exercised in other ways.

An address, signed by between 400 and 500 clergymen of the diocese of London, has been presented to the Lord Bishop of that diocese by the Archdeacons of London and Middlesex. The address views with apprehension the suggestions made by persons of importance for the removal of the existing subscriptions made by the clergy at their ordination and on other occasions. The Archdeacons, in presenting the address, expressed by letter their full concurrence in its object, and their desire that his Lordship would aid in the preservation of the barriers of subscription, by which their forefathers had endeavoured to exclude from the schools of the University and the Ministry of the Church all persons whose cordial adherence to the doctrines of the Church might be reasonably doubted. A document of explanation accompanied the address, the purport of which was, that those who signed the address are not to be understood as being unprepared to accept any future revision of the existing clerical subscriptions if undertaken by the Church itself; that the protest is levelled against the total abolition of subscription, and that the conviction of the persons signing is that the Church must have some doctrinal standards. The Bishop has replied to these addresses in a most elaborate and able letter. He quite coincides with the memorialists in the absolute necessity of some subscription; but he is equally strong in his conviction that the present form is unsuitable, and ought to be changed. He is desirous at once to strike out the clause in the Act of Uniformity, which he believes to have been forced on this country by the dominant intolerant party in the reign of Charles II. for the express purpose of excluding from the Church all who held what may be called Evangelical opinions as to the Prayer Book. He wishes that the whole subject of subscription should at once be submitted to the judgment of the Church, in order that changes which are proved to be required may be made on adequate authority, and that what is not changed may be maintained on grounds of good argument as being right in itself, and not from mere dread of innovation. As to the question of university subscription, which, it will be observed, was imported into the discussion by the archdeacons, his Lordship agrees that the government of the Universities should be in the hands of members of the Church of England, but thinks that the present form of subscription is unsuitable.

THE CONTINENT.

The Russian Government has evidently been both surprised and alarmed at the impression created by its replies to the propositions of the three Powers. We have already summarised a despatch, addressed by Prince Gortschakoff to the Russian Chargé d'Affaires at Vienna repudiating the interpretation which Count Rechberg had placed upon his language, and we have this week to mention a despatch addressed by the Russian statesman to the Baron de Budberg, and intended to remove the irritation which his language had created at Paris. It seems that M. Drouyn de Lhuys, whilst postponing any formal rejoinder to the Russian despatch, had expressed to the Baron de Budberg his disappointment and dissatisfaction with its terms. The Russian Minister, of course, lost no time in communicating this conversation to his chief, and Prince Gortschakoff, without waiting for the instructions of the Emperor, who was at the time in Finland, addressed a very able and elaborate despatch to Paris, in which, whilst protesting very strongly against the inferences of M. Drouyn de Lhuys, he maintains and defends the views he had expressed—an explanation and defence evidently intended as much for the European public as for the French Government, inasmuch as it was published in the Journal de St. Petersburg, almost before a copy could have been placed in the hands of the French Foreign Minister. Prince Gortschakoff first protests against an assumption of M. Drouyn de Lhuys, that his answer, under the appearance of an adhesion in principle, was in fact a definitive refusal of the six points. He points out that the insurgents themselves have loudly declared that they will be content with nothing less than the reconstitution of Poland in the limits of 1772, and this even after the three Powers had presented the six points. He observes that if the Russian Government did not repudiate bad faith and crooked ways, it might have accepted the six points, and thrown upon the insurgents the responsibility and the odium of rejecting them. The Prince then protests against the suggestion of M. Drouyn de Lhuys, that he had intended any accusation against the French Government, in the assertion that a permanent conspiracy organised abroad was the principal cause of the present insurrection. But in protesting he nevertheless repeats the statement that Paris is one of the principal foci of the insurrection, furnishing it with some of its principal resources; and he proceeds to argue that the ill-will to Russia and the failure of its attempts to conciliate Poland are due to the intrigues of the emigration, whose principal seat is Paris. Prince Gortschakoff then argues that a suspension of hostilities is impossible. "We cannot," he says, "explain to ourselves with whom an armistice could be negotiated, or by what means its execution could be guaranteed." The Russian Minister, after a vindication of his suggestion of a preliminary conference between the three Powers, as justified both by precedent and the nature of the case, goes on to express his painful surprise at the impression which, according to M. Drouyn de Lhuys, his answer has created. The question, he says, is much too serious to allow any intention of irony, much less of provocation. But he adds, that the wounded dignity of Russia, "profoundly wounded by attacks probably without precedent in history," may have manifested itself in the expression of his opinions. Russia, he says, has neglected nothing to bring about an understanding conformable to the general interests, and especially to the relations which have for a long time united her to the Government of the Emperor of the French, but she counts on her part on the same disposition, and the ambassador is told not to conceal from M. Drouyn de Lhuys how difficult "our" task would be if the necessities which the national feeling imposed upon us were disregarded in France.

Prince Gortschakoff, it will be seen from this analysis, modifies in no degree the determination expressed by his previous despatch. But whilst vindicating the resolves of his Government, he labours to show that he meant no offence to France in any of his expressions, and that he will be most happy, if possible, to come to an amicable arrangement with France. To that extent the despatch has a pacific influence. It must remove by its explanations and apologies any feeling of irritation which the irony—as with all deference to Prince Gortschakoff it must be called—of his previous despatch had provoked.

The French rejoinder to the despatch of the 1st of July was, it seems, despatched upon the 8th, and must be by this time in the hands of Prince Gortschakoff. It is quite certain now that some considerable difference of opinion prevails between the three Powers; not only is there no identical note as proposed by France, but the separate despatches were not sent off at the same time.

Prince Gortschakoff has addressed to the Russian diplomatic agents a circular explanatory of the arrest—or by whatever name the removal of the Prelate from Warsaw may be called—of Archbishop Felinski. He points out that the proceedings of the Archbishop in resigning with so much ostentation his seat in the council of state, and addressing a letter to the Emperor, which received immediate publication, in which he declared that an absolute independence, with no other connection with the Empire than a dynastic tie, would alone put an end to the painful situation, rendered it necessary to recall him to Russia, where he is treated with all the regards due to his position.

The National Government has published two manifestoes; one, addressed to the Polish nation, declares that the National Government must remain deaf to all those who demand the cessation of hostilities before the attainment of the one object of the insurrection, namely, the re-establishment of Poland in the limits of 1772; and makes a vehement appeal to all the inhabitants of the old Polish kingdom to come forward and fight themselves, or contribute the sinews of war; the other, addressed to the peoples and governments of Europe, is full of the usual orthodox revolutionary verbiage, and calls upon the Western peoples to declare that Russia has no right to rule over Poland. Neither proclamation is calculated to promote the cause of Poland. Already the Prussian journals which were favourable to the Polish cause are turning against it.

The war news is not important. Another expedition from Galicia into Volhynia has signally failed. The Polish leaders seem to be quite aware of the futility of these efforts, but they persist in them because the apprehension of an invader compels the Russian Government to keep an immense force in these provinces, which, if disengaged, might soon turn the scale in Congress Poland. It is impossible—whatever our opinion as to the prudence of the measures, or our opinion as to the desirability or otherwise of the success of the Polish cause—to refuse a tribute of warm admiration for the heroes who proceed upon their forlorn hopes, sacrificing their own lives cheerfully to give their fellow-combatants a little more breathing time. According to Russian telegrams, the insurrection is at an end in Lithuania. The assertion is, of course, untrue. Mouravieff has, indeed, by his brutal measures, got the whip hand of the movement, but the reports of fights given by the official journals show that a few heroic bands are still maintaining the struggle.

It is suggested by some German papers that the National Government, of which we hear so much, has no more its seat in Warsaw than in Timbuctoo. The arguments advanced in favour of this opinion have very great validity, and confirm the opinion which we have throughout entertained that the real seat of this Government is Paris. Whichever be the fact, the skill shown is equally admirable. To exist at Warsaw, garrisoned by so many thousand Russians; to make from Paris the world believe in proclamations dated Warsaw, is a signal triumph of diplomatic skill. Prince Ladislaus Czartoryski is said to be at the head of the secret government, and to be also intriguing for his own election as King of Poland. The latter statement is not worthy of much credit.

The Emperor of Austria has taken the bull by the horns. He has in the most unexpected manner called a meeting of all the German sovereigns at Frankfurt on the 16th, to deliberate upon the measures to be taken for a seasonable reform of the Confederation. Hitherto, all projects of Federal reforms have failed, either because they were too sweeping, going beyond reform, asking for a German Empire, or because they were too infinitesimal. It may be assumed that the Emperor Francis Joseph has not summoned this congress without having prepared a plan to lay before it, and that this plan includes a central power of some kind—and a parliament controlling it. Nothing less would satisfy Germany; the Emperor of Austria is too shrewd to go to Germany with a scheme which would at once disappoint and irritate the public. However excellent this plan may be, the chances are that it will not succeed. Prussia has her own scheme of Federal reform, the subjection of the whole of Germany to Prussian hegemony; and the National Verein and all the dreamers of a German Empire have adopted that Prussian hegemony as the consummation. Any reform relieving the real evils experienced by the country would deprive this agitation of its nourishment; it is, therefore, hardly probable that Prussia will agree to any proposal, however judicious, which may be made at Frankfurt. The telegraph informs us that Prussia has already refused to take any part in the conferences, but this is hardly probable. Even Herr von Bismarck—to take no account of his master—would hardly venture upon a step which must condemn Prussia to isolation. The conference will meet—we incline to believe all the sovereigns of Germany will be there. We wish we could feel confident of the success of the deliberations—a success certain if the discussions were honourably and loyally entered upon. But we will still hope that the German sovereigns and the German people will remember the saying of Scharnhorst, that the best thing cannot always be done, whilst something might always be effected,—and endeavour to reorganise the Confederacy upon a system which may secure its power for good and its inability for mischief.

Sir James Hudson, for so many years English Ambassador at Turin, has been succeeded by the Hon. Mr. Elliott. The change is regarded by the Italians almost as a national misfortune. Sir James Hudson was a warm friend of Piedmont. He has given the whole weight of his influence to the cause of Italian unity; in fact, as some critics allege, thinking more of Italian than of English interests. He retires, it is said, from the diplomatic service, and proposes to still reside in his adopted country.

MEXICO.

GENERAL FOREY has lost no time. His council of notabilities was hardly named when it was invited to pronounce upon the question of Empire or Republic. Its decision could not be doubtful. Unanimously, less two votes, it in the name of the Mexican people selected the Empire as the future form of Government; proclaimed the Archduke Maximilian as the first Emperor, and implored the Emperor of the French, in event of the Archduke's refusal, to select some peer for the throne. The Empire was accordingly proclaimed on the 10th July, and according to the news via Havana, great manifestations of joy followed the announcement. La France insists that as fifteen out of the eighteen States of Mexico have pronounced in favour of French intervention (this is a piece of news entirely its own), they will ratify the proclamation of the Archduke as Emperor. But the two things are very different; the ostensible purpose of the French expedition was to rescue the Mexicans from anarchy, and to establish order and security. The proclamation of the Empire may be the best mode of attaining these results, but agreement as to the end does not imply an understanding as to the means. However, we may hope that the Mexicans, wearied of their intestine trials, will accept the haven of rest offered them. A deputation has been sent to Europe to offer the crown to the Archduke, who has, it is stated, received the congratulations of the Emperor and Empress of the French. If the last statement be correct, we may conclude that his Royal Highness will take the throne. The Emperor of the French would not have offered his congratulations, unless the proclamation of the Archduke had been in accordance with his wishes and instructions, and he would not have used the Archduke's name unless his assent had been secured beforehand. The Emperor pursues his purposes with unremitting energy. Obstacles do not daunt him or destroy his plans, although they may delay their execution. Great objections were offered to the election of the Archduke when it was first hinted at, and the project seemed to be dropped; the next the world hears of it is that it has been successfully carried out. If the Mexicans get him for a sovereign they will be fortunate. There is not a prince in Europe of a higher character. He contrived even to conciliate the sympathies of the Italians during his governorship of the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom. He is brother of the Emperor of Austria, is thirty-one years of age, and married to the only daughter of the King of the Belgians. He has no children.

THE SITUATION IN LOUISIANA.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA, July 19.

SINCE the surrender of Port Hudson General Banks has arrived in this city. The day following, General Frank Gardner and staff came down on another boat, and they are now quartered in a private house on Rampart-street, held as prisoners of war until advices are received from the United States' Government at Washington. The officers who were previously brought down are still in confinement in the Custom-house. Numerous efforts have been made to gain access to them, and the number of applications for passes and permits convinces the Provost-Marshal, no doubt, that even in this city, so lately cleared of "registered enemies of the United States," there are still hundreds of persons who are anxious and most willing to render such aid and comfort as the officers may need. Pending their parole, however, I believe no permits have been granted to visit the Port Hudson prisoners of war.

The new commandant at Port Hudson is not only commander of the post, but also of the negro regiments. Both facts are announced in connection in the same general order, and are sufficiently suggestive and significant. The negroes are to be the garrison, while the white regiments will take part in the attempted movement to recover the lost territory in this state.

The commencement of this new movement was indicated in my last letter. We have since, some further details, but I need not advise you that while every success, however small, is paraded in print here and at the North, it is extremely difficult to learn the details of any disaster to the Federal arms in this department. Banks's force is numerically so small that it will scarcely bear much further reduction even in print. The movement of Grover's division from Donaldsonville down the Lafourche bayou was badly begun. The advance, consisting of the 90th and 91st New York, with the 30th Massachusetts regiment, was intrusted to the command of the colonel of the 90th New York, then acting as a brigadier. When his brigade had advanced a few miles down the bayou road, and was surprised by the Confederate force, it was drawn up in line of battle, and after the first fire was comparatively at the mercy of the enemy. The engagement was short, but was quite as disastrous, considering the numbers of the opposing forces, as were the two assaults upon Port Hudson. The 90th New York was terribly cut up. It is said that out of 450 men only 150 escaped death, wounds, or capture. The other regiments were also badly used, and in the midst of the fight, Morgan, the colonel commanding, ordered the two New York regiments to the rear, and left the Massachusetts regiment to bear the brunt of the attack. This brilliant acting-brigadier was also brought to the rear in an ambulance, though he was not wounded. It is enough to say, perhaps, that he is now under arrest, and the charges specified against him are "intoxication and misbehaviour in the face of the enemy." In other words, he was drunk and cowardly. There are no present means of knowing the number of the killed and wounded in this brief engagement, but about 350 wounded Federals were brought into Donaldsonville, and were sent up by boat to the hospitals at Baton Rouge. It is mentioned, as a source of comfort in connection with this Federal disaster, that the Confederates captured only one field piece instead of three, as was first reported.

This Morgan, who has a commission as a colonel in the Federal service, is the keeper of what New York people call a "saloon,"—a cellar on the Brooklyn side, near Fulton Ferry, where whisky is retailed by the glass. By one of those unaccountable appointments, too frequent in the United States' volunteer army to be called accidents, he was, for a while last year, the commandant of the military post at Key West. There were some 1,500 slaves on that island, and Morgan, anticipating the emancipation order of his master, declared these negroes free. For this and other offensive acts towards the inhabitants of Key West, the Abolition Administration at Washington (with a not unusual inconsistency) removed him. The prayers of the people of Key West were heard. Morgan was sent away. The negroes loafing about the island in idleness and in want, begged to be taken back again, and in some cases the masters consented to receive them, and there was a general rejoicing over the departure of Morgan. From that post he went to Port Royal, and afterwards joined the Banks' expedition. He did not particularly distinguish himself at Port Hudson, and his brief career as an Acting-brigadier General near Donaldsonville was not such as to ensure his rapid promotion even in the Federal army.

Since this skirmish, which occurred July 11, we have received no news relative to Grover's advance towards Thibodeauxville. He has had abundant time, if Magruder's force will permit, to advance to Brashear City. We have, however, no means of knowing his situation, his successes, or his disasters till he reaches that point, and news can be brought from the bay by way of the Gulf, and up the Mississippi to this city. The projected movement is by no means unimportant. If is an effort on the part of the Federal forces to recover a portion, at least—not of the Teche and Attakapas country, so recently "walked over" by Banks—but of the region secured months ago by Butler, and held by Banks until he attempted the Port Hudson expedition. The Federal lines extend westward from Algiers (opposite this city) to Bute Station, eighteen miles. This "extension" is only along the line of the Opelousas railroad. A day or two ago, a battery advanced from that point a few miles as far as Raceland, but hearing there was fighting going on in that vicinity, the batteries came back to Bute with all possible speed—not liking to risk the capture of their guns. They learned from a man who lived near Lafourche Crossing, that the Confederates had abandoned Thibodeaux, and had concentrated at Brashear City. It is more than probable, for Brashear City is the important point to be held. I do not think, however, that a stand will be made even there. The Confederates have, no doubt, carried away everything that was valuable and transportable, and before now the vast stores and munitions of war accumulated by the Federals and captured and "confiscated" nearly a month ago by the Confederates, have been distributed at points where these things were needed in the Confederacy. But the position, thanks to Butler, Banks, and Weitzel, is quite well fortified. It is on the island made by Berwick's Bay and Lake Polouire on the west and north, and Bayou Boeuf on the east and south. There are earthworks all around, with guns enough to hold and cover the position; and if Dick Taylor's men intend to keep the place, they have retained there the enormous quantity of shot, shells, and powder left by the Federals. Otherwise, the guns have been spiked, thrown into the bay or bayou, and whatever could not be removed has been destroyed.

That this place was left in an unprotected and almost defenceless condition by Banks in his advance to Alexandria is only an evidence of the weakness of the Federal force. There was a guard there, "supposed" to be sufficient to hold the position, but for the movement Red Riverwards it was necessary to withdraw every gunboat from Berwick's Bay but one, the little Holyoke, which steamed down the bay as soon as the Confederates made their appearance, leaving nearly 1,800 sick, convalescent, and well Federals to be summarily "gobbled" by 600 Confederates. We cannot learn, at present, whether the forces of Magruder, Taylor, and Mouton will contest the position or not. That the Federals think they will is evident from the amount of force sent to recover the position. Grover, with not less, probably, than 6,000 men, is marching upon Bayou Boeuf, from Thibodeaux, if he is that far on the route. Three gunboats from here—the Estrella, Calhoun, and Holyoke—go down the Mississippi, to-day, intending to reach Berwick's Bay via the Gulf, and to join with Grover in "shelling out the rebels" from Brashear City, if they should happen to be there. It is said that the Confederates have planted two guns on High Shell Bluff, commanding the entrance to the Atchafalaya, but it is not likely there was transportation in the bay to move down the guns. As it is, we can only learn the success or failure of the Federal movement from the return of one of the gunboats, or until Grover re-establishes travel on the Opelousas railway from Bayou Boeuf or Brashear to Algiers. To do this, extensive repairs will be necessary—the torn-up track must be relaid, the burned bridges must be rebuilt—and possibly the whole rolling stock of the road, nearly all of which was at Brashear at the time of the capture, must be replaced. We shall know in the course of this week the result of this movement, the only one of importance now making in this department.

If it should result favourably to the Federal arms, as it will if the Confederates have abandoned Brashear, simply contenting themselves with the valuable stores collected in that place—the capture is only a recovery of the position minus what has been removed by General Taylor. It is only doing again what has been done once before. For Banks to be almost wholly employed in attempting to re-acquire territory once "conquered" and then lost, is certainly expensive business. The recent Port Hudson movement has cost him at least 5,000 men, and with his present force and the utter failure to increase his army corps by conscripting the negroes, he can ill afford further expenditure of men and means in this kind of work. A rumour comes to us from Port Hudson that Grant has sent down by transports 12,000 men to the mouth of Red River, an advance to recover Alexandria, to march down through the Attakapas, and to join Grover and the gunboats on Berwick's Bay. If this were done it would only be another recovery of the Attakapas region, whose conquest has been blazoned abroad as one of Banks's most brilliant achievements. It is now a comparatively barren waste. What was not stolen or destroyed by the Federals has since been removed to a place of safety, or has been destroyed by the Confederates. But I do not believe Grant has sent such a force from Vicksburg to Banks. One of the very first boats down from Vicksburg to Port Hudson, after the surrender of both places, carried away a portion of the Illinois cavalry (not Grierson's), showing that Grant, with his large army, had not horsemen enough to successfully initiate the series of extensive hen-roost robberies—known as "raids"—projected in the vicinity of Vicksburg.

It is claimed now that the river, the Mississippi, is open. We have had here two arrivals from Vicksburg, and one of these boats left St. Louis June 23. One or more boats have come down to Port Hudson and Baton Rouge, bringing grain and beef to the army. The cattle were brought from Natchez, Mississippi, 105 miles below Vicksburg, and 110 miles above Port Hudson. The Federals claim the "capture" of this place; but it was simply an occupation, for there was no Confederate force there. There were, however, large droves of cattle collected at that point, and the place has long been noted for the number of wealthy people residing there. The process of "confiscation" has already commenced, and Natchez will soon be stripped of the last silver spoon.

Banks has not yet publicly announced his reduction of "the stronghold of the rebels"—at least, not in this city. He may think, as we do, that, after all, Port Hudson is a very small return for the amount of expenditure in life and money its reduction cost.

We are anxiously expecting this morning the arrival of the steamer Morning Star, with New York dates of July 11. The news from the North, thus far, is disheartening; but it does not seem to have at all affected business matters, nor are we yet deriving any of the promised benefits that were to follow the opening of the Mississippi.

THE SURRENDER OF PORT HUDSON.

NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA, July 15.
WEDNESDAY NIGHT.

My last letter announced the surrender of Port Hudson. For some reason beyond the reach of ordinary comprehension, we are still without a published line, signed by General Banks, proclaiming this important "victory." Nor does his official organ announce some after-occurrences, which shall be duly detailed in this letter. Premising, then, that the Port Hudson garrison was starved out, let me give you the circumstances connected with the capitulation.

After the second unsuccessful attempt, June 14th, to carry the works by assault, General Banks employed "the coloured engineer regiment"—that is, the negroes not slaughtered in the two assaults, and capable of still using the spade and shovel—to undermine the Confederate entrenchments. These negroes worked for weeks, day and night, exposed to the fire of the sharpshooters. In the meanwhile, Banks pretended to be, and perhaps actually was, preparing for a final assault. I do not believe that he intended again to attack Port Hudson until he was largely reinforced, either from Grant's Vicksburg army, or from Port Royal. There was nothing to indicate that his Government intended to send him reinforcements. He continued from day to day a vigorous bombardment of the place, but this did nothing towards reducing the garrison, for the earthworks, though not cased, were filled with "rat-holes," where the men could retire when the shells were bursting over-head and, moreover, the Confederate force was distributed along the whole line of defences, extending five or six miles in the rear of Port Hudson. An assaulting column of 1,000 men had volunteered to lead the "last" attack, but they were white men, and it was hardly thought advisable to sacrifice them. Since the assaults of May 27th and June 14th, the Federal negro enlistment business has been as dead as the two-thirds of the blacks who were conscripted first, then slaughtered in the two attacks.

There was then no danger of an immediate assault. Some of the heaviest guns in Port Hudson were removed from the water batteries and were mounted in the rear. The river was too low for an attack by gunboats. They could only lie below the town, and shell the Confederates who went down to the levee to draw water. If an assault had been made, there is no reason for believing it would have been successful. Two circumstances induced General Gardner to surrender the position—first, the news, certified by Banks, that Vicksburg had fallen; and, second, the prospect of speedy starvation.

For, if Vicksburg had really surrendered, Grant could, and undoubtedly would, send down the river on transports 15,000 men to the relief of Banks—and when Gardner proposed to surrender, it is a fact that the last mule had been eaten, and there were but two or three bushels of corn left in Port Hudson. The reports that Gardner had received and was constantly receiving full supplies were incorrect. There was a Federal battery on the opposite shore of the Mississippi, and consequently it was impossible to swim cattle across the river. The rear was closely invested, and no supplies could get in from the country. Nothing in the way of food from the outside has reached the garrison since the closing of Red River, until Banks sent in six thousand rations after the preliminaries were arranged for the formal surrender of the place.

There was a period of about ten days when the batteries on the river near and below Donaldsonville actually cut off Banks's communication with this city, and, for a while, his army suffered for want of supplies. This was concealed as much as was possible, but it was known in this city that for a time it was a question which army would be first starved. The country round about was stripped. After the last "rebel raid" Springfield Landing was not considered a very safe place for the accumulation of large amounts of stores; and one or two of the provision-laden boats starting from here were so crippled by the river batteries that they were obliged to return to this city.

Had there been abundant supplies of food in Port Hudson, the garrison could have "held in" longer than Banks would have been able to "hold out." There were comparatively few mouths to feed; no women and children, no citizens who were not soldiers, and only 5,500 Confederate troops, with about 400 negroes employed as servants, camp police, and in repairing damages done to the earthworks. The troops, excepting those belonging to Boone's battery, the 12th Louisiana, 1st Mississippi, and 1st Tennessee batteries, were infantrymen, nearly all of them sharpshooters, and there was a plentiful supply of ammunition. Hundreds of these men were taken prisoners at Donelson and Fort Henry, and they never intended to be taken alive again. That they could fight, the terrible repulses of Banks's men in the only assaults ever attempted are sufficient evidence.

But the surrender—to general starvation, if not to General Banks—was inevitable. The preliminaries were arranged, July 8, by Federal Brigadier-Generals Stone, Dwight, and Birge, and Confederate Colonels Miles, Stedman, and C. H. Smith. The formal surrender followed next day. A part of the Federal force marched into the place—the Confederates drawn up in line on the main street. Gardner and staff on the right grounded their arms, while the General handed his sword to Brigadier-General Andrew, Banks's chief of staff and representative, who immediately returned it. Ninety-two officers were held as prisoners of war. All of the men were paroled the day after the surrender, and most of them went immediately into the country, while several were carried on one of the steamboats and landed up Red River. The surrender gives to the Federals the works, the guns, the munitions of war, and 6,000 stand of arms. After accompanying the Federal officers in their inspection tour, General Gardner and staff rode out to visit Banks at his head-quarters, three miles in the rear, and were handsomely received, and entertained as guests.

A day or two after Banks moved his head-quarters into Port Hudson, and General Gardner shares his tent with him. Scarcely a house in the place is habitable. There are not more than 100 houses, including two or three shops and warehouses, in the place, and these are generally cheaply built of wood. There is one church. The buildings, since May 26, have been subject to an almost daily bombardment, and they are completely riddled. After the surrender it was hard work to find a building suitable for a telegraph station. The hospitals are in a ravine, and were uninjured. There were a few sick men, a very few wounded, and it is stated that only twenty-five men were killed by the Federal artillery during the entire bombardment. The Federal sick and wounded have been carried into the place; a portion of the army corps is also camped inside the works, while the rest remain in the old camps behind their own earthworks. It is reported that General Banks and General Gardner will come down in a day or two to this city, and Gardner's rooms and his friends are ready to receive him.

The little steamboat Zephyr arrived from Port Hudson yesterday morning with the ninety-two officers who are held as prisoners of war, and are now confined in the Custom House. I annex their names:—

Colonel W. R. Miles, Miles's Legion; Major J. T. Coleman, Miles's Legion; Captain S. M. Thomas, Boone's Battery; 1st Lieut. B. C. Cushman, Adjutant 30th Louisiana; Captains J. W. Dealu and W. B. B. Cook, Miles's Legion; Captain W. A. Kemp, Captain J. J. Slocum, 2d Lieut. S. M. Simmons, 9th Louisiana Cavalry; 1st Lieut. L. F. Woods, Miles's Legion; 1st Lieut. J. D. Conn, 4th Louisiana Volunteers; 1st Lieut. H. W. Coleman, Miles's Legion; Captain Commanding B. K. Chinn, 9th Louisiana Infantry; Captain W. B. Seawell, 12th Louisiana Battalion Artillery; 1st Lieut. Joel Barnef, 9th Louisiana Cavalry; Captain Commanding Thos. K. Porter, 30th Louisiana Infantry; 2d Lieuts. P. Thalheimer, and A. V. Duralde, 9th Louisiana Infantry; 2d Lieut. J. J. Kendall, 4th Louisiana Infantry; Captain C. W. Cushman, 30th Louisiana Infantry; 2d Lieut. H. Carpenter, 9th Louisiana Cavalry; 3rd Lieut. G. Maurras, 30th Louisiana Infantry; 1st Lieutenant D. D. Phillips, 1st Tennessee Battalion Artillery; Captain E. S. Morgan, 9th Louisiana Cavalry; 1st Lieutenant R. H. Hughes, 12th Louisiana Battalion Artillery; 1st Lieut. S. G. W. Coleman, 7th Starr Artillery; 1st Lieut. J. C. Lemon, 4th Louisiana Infantry; 2d Lieut. C. H. Frith, Miles's Legion; 1st Lieut. J. Lahey, 1st Tennessee Artillery; 1st Lieut. S. K. Allison, 1st Louisiana Battalion Heavy Artillery; 2d Lieut. G. W. Keller, 9th Louisiana Cavalry; Captain A. Turner, 9th Louisiana Cavalry; 2d Lieut. Fred. Winters, 12th Louisiana Battalion Heavy Artillery; Captain W. L. Burnett, 9th Louisiana Infantry; Captain R. M. Hewett, Adjutant Miles's Legion; 3rd Lieut. J. B. Davidson, 1st Lieut. J. B. Dunn, 9th Louisiana Cavalry; Capt. S. A. Whiteside, 48th Tennessee Infantry; Captain A. Bradley, 2d Lieut. B. B. Staims, 9th Louisiana Cavalry; 2d Lieut. D. C. Coats, 12th Louisiana Heavy Artillery; 3rd Lieut. W. M. McQueen, 9th Louisiana Cavalry; 1st Lieut. A. Leblanc, 30th Louisiana Infantry; 2d Lieut. I. S. Spring, 9th Louisiana Cavalry; 1st Lieutenants Bailey Davis and L. H. Clark, 12th Louisiana Heavy Artillery; 2d Lieut. J. B. Keyes, 9th Louisiana Infantry; 1st Lieut. A. C. Richardson, 9th Louisiana Infantry; 2d Lieut. R. A. Orillion, 30th Louisiana Infantry; 2d Lieut. A. J. Hughes, 1st Lieut. E. S. Thompson, 1st Tennessee Battalion Artillery; 2d Lieut. W. B. Cook, 1st Tennessee Battalion Artillery; 2d Lieut. E. W. Aroun, 9th Louisiana Infantry; 2d Lieut. W. Carey, Major J. De Baur, Lieut.-Colonel Wingfield, 9th Louisiana Cavalry; Captain James O'Neil, 1st Lieut. John Kiersan, Miles's Legion; 2d Lieut. S. B. Harbour, 9th Louisiana Infantry; 1st Lieut. Geo. J. Wilson, 1st Lieut. Bolivar Edwards, Miles's Legion; Captain John M. Kean, 12th Louisiana Artillery; 2d Lieut. A. A. Roberts, 4th Louisiana Infantry; Captain S. F. Wale, 3rd Lieut. A. C. Bechaur, Captain O. P. Amacker, 2d Lieut. John O'Dalut, 3rd Lieut. E. McKane, 9th Louisiana Cavalry; 2d Lieut. Sam Ash, 1st Louisiana Artillery; 1st Lieut. L. M. Rub, 1st Lieut. O. Rodriguez, 12th Louisiana Artillery; 1st Lieut. H. T. Waddell, 1st Lieut. Joseph Evans, 3rd Lieut. M. D. Evans, 9th Louisiana Cavalry; Junior 2d Lieut. W. H. Holden, 9th Louisiana Infantry; 1st Lieut. John O'Brien, 4th Louisiana Infantry; 2d Lieut. Pat. Burns, jun., Miles's Legion; 1st Lieut. E. P. Harmanson, Boone's Battery; Captain G. W. Lewis, 9th Louisiana Cavalry;

Junior 2nd Lieut. T. Toca, Boone's Battery; Captain Charles S. Whiteman, Quartermaster 4th Louisiana Infantry; 1st Lieut. H. C. Wright, 2nd Louisiana Infantry; 2nd Lieut. B. W. Lanier, Captain W. W. Carliss, Miles's Legion; Junior 1st Lieut. E. H. Goll, Seven Stars Artillery; Senior 2nd Lieut. J. W. Kearney, Captain Wm. DeFeau, Miles's Legion; Adjutant Haul Waterman, 12th Louisiana Infantry; Lieut.-Colonel E. S. M. Lebreton, Aide to Chief Heavy Artillery; 1st Lieut. J. A. Erwin, 9th Louisiana Cavalry; Captain J. A. Fisher, 1st Tennessee Artillery; Colonel Benjamin Johnson, 15th Arkansas Infantry.

The surrender of Port Hudson is a matter of no material consequence to the Confederates. To secure this position—which was of no value to the Confederates except as a depot for the receipt of supplies when Red River was open, and was entirely valueless when that source was cut off—the Federals have lost millions in money and thousands of men. Frank Gardner was shrewd enough to keep Banks with his whole force at Port Hudson for weeks, while Magruder, Mouton, Taylor, and their men quietly "cleaned up" the rest of the State, recovered a large part of the negroes and cotton lately stolen from the planters, burned Federal boats, and did much damage with their batteries on the Mississippi, and captured Brashear City, with an enormous amount of valuable and much-needed military stores. If Banks and his government are satisfied with the exchange, the Confederates surely need not complain.

On the evening of the surrender Weitzel's and Dudley's brigades, under command of Brigadier-General Grover, went down in steamboats to Donaldsonville, where they landed with the intention of capturing or conquering the "rebels" in the rear of that place. When the boat Zephyr came down with the prisoners of war the evening before last, she stopped at Donaldsonville. From one of the Federal officers who was on board, I learn that after landing Grover's men marched up the Lafourche bayou road. The 30th Massachusetts Regiment was in advance, and when about four miles from Donaldsonville they encountered a body of Confederates lying in a cane field near the roadside. The Confederates shouted, and the Federals supposing they were coming out to attack them, immediately fired a volley into the cane. Next moment out rushed the Confederates, and attacked the Massachusetts men who had just discharged their muskets. The work was short and sharp—150 of the Federals were killed and wounded; the Confederates captured three field-pieces which accompanied the regiment, and retreated with them, while the Massachusetts regiment fell back to the now rapidly advancing main body. We have nothing further from the advance. The intention, no doubt, is to march down to the old camp at Thibodeauxville, near Lafourche Crossing, and if the Confederates will permit it, they will try to get possession once more of the Opelousas line of railway from this city to Berwick's Bay. At the same time a very small force has been sent from here to go out on the road; and, possibly, if Grover's expedition is successful, the Federal lines may extend westward beyond Bute station, their present limit. Brashear City is the point to be recovered, if Banks wishes to nominally hold as much of Louisiana as was actually under the control of Butler. The place has been "cleaned out," and, by this time, the Confederates have probably carried away all the valuable property captured in that city. I am inclined to think the little gunboat Antona went down the river on Monday evening, intending to run around by the Gulf, and go to Brashear City up Berwick's Bay. She commenced her cruise by running into the Federal gunboat Sciota, lying a few miles below New Orleans. The Sciota sank almost immediately, and Lieut. Davenport was so severely injured by the collision that it was necessary to amputate one of his arms. Having accomplished thus much, the Antona proceeded on her mission.

THURSDAY MORNING, July 16.

There is nothing of special importance to add this morning. We are not yet favoured with General Banks's official announcement of his "taking" Port Hudson. An order from General Emery, published to-day, rescinds that part of his previous order, which required coffee-houses, shops and stores to close at nine o'clock in the evening. This is certainly magnanimous. Brigadier-General Andrew has been appointed commander of the post at Port Hudson, and he also assumes the command of the Corps d'Afrique, showing that the armed negroes are to be kept at Port Hudson, for which we are duly thankful. Our latest news from the North does not specially affect business here, for there is almost no business to be effected—no sugar, no cotton, and almost no money—while, in spite of "the opening of the Mississippi," all kinds of provisions and the necessities of life rule higher than almost anywhere in the Confederacy—especially in those places which are "blockaded" by the Federal fleet.

NEW ORLEANS, Sunday, July 12.

I learn that a despatch steamer (announced to go North to-morrow) is suddenly ordered away, and goes in half-an-hour. I have only time to write you a few lines by this steamer.

You already have, no doubt, news of the fall of Vicksburg. We have it here, so that we can believe it for the first time this morning, by a copy of the Jackson Mississippian, of July 7.

Port Hudson has also surrendered. General Banks, however, has not officially announced it, and it is difficult to convince the people here that it is true—the published statements by authority are so conflicting and contradictory in their details. The place seems to have been starved out. It is reported that the garrison has been paroled! The exchange account of prisoners in this department is enormously against the Federal side, and there is nothing to prevent the Port Hudson men from speedily taking the field again.

As you know very well, Port Hudson was not considered so much a formidable defence of the Mississippi as a protection to the mouth of Red River, the source of supplies from Western Louisiana, Texas, the Rio Grande, and consequently (by the Rio Grande) from "all creation." Its usefulness in this respect was gone with the closing of the river in May. The loss of both Port Hudson and Vicksburg is nothing in comparison with the disasters of Donnellson, Henry, and Island No. 10.

Banks, with an enormous loss of men, has exchanged the whole of the Lafourche, Teche, and Attakapas country for Port Hudson.

The Hartford, Albatross, and Estrella came here last night. They have been since March 14th or 15th above Port Hudson. The New London gunboat also arrived from up river in tow of gunboat No. 3, and riddled and crippled by shot from the batteries on the river, whose "opening" was celebrated here last night. There was a procession of Federal office holders (and those who desire to be) and an enormous throng of negroes followed in the line.

The order requiring citizens to be at home at nine o'clock at night has been rescinded. It was very annoying to the Federals, who were overwhelmed with applications for passes, and no doubt it was considered an infringement of their rights by the niggers.

Nearly 2,000 negroes have answered Governor Shepley's call to the "citizens," to form a brigade for the defence of "their homes." By order (commencing yesterday) no citizen is allowed to carry arms in the street, and all officers and soldiers are ordered to carry them.

Business is entirely unaffected by the recent news. There are apprehensions of an invasion—if the rigid enforcement of the recent orders is an indication. The city gasworks and waterworks are now under guard—and yet the place is very quiet.

All the gunboats are gathering here. The fleet is larger opposite the city than it has been for many months.

These things hardly indicate that sense of security which would necessarily follow great successes. If the river is open, we shall soon have communication with St. Louis, but I hardly think boats will begin to run this week.

The city is still healthy; but the Spanish war steamer Pizarro, from Havannah, is at quarantine, having lost since she has been there three men by yellow fever, and ten more cases are reported on board.

LATEST FROM NEW ORLEANS.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA, July 23.

Your readers know already that the victory achieved by the Federal forces in the surrender of Port Hudson was at best but barren. The actual losses more than balance the supposed successes, and apart from the possession of Port Hudson, the position of the Federal army in this department is far less favourable than it was a year ago. Much has been lost, and no material advantage has been gained.

The surrender only enables Banks to devote his attention to the recovery of a portion of the territory lost in the advance upon Port Hudson. The beginning of this movement was indicated in my last letter. The advance from Donaldsonville proceeded about five miles, and returned to the starting point with an admitted loss of nearly 500 men, and a drunken Acting-brigadier to be court-martialed and probably cashiered. I am told that this officer actually made a report to his Commanding-General (Grover), giving his version of that day's disasters, and that Grover returned the report with the endorsement that it contained so much falsity that he declined to receive it. It is, indeed, an evidence of progress in this department, when the falsity of a military report renders it unacceptable to a Federal officer. But the war in detail in the different departments is only in miniature what the whole affair is at Washington—first a military movement, then a military committee of investigation or inquiry to find out why the movement was a failure, when the whole world knows that the disaster was the result of military incapacity, and sometimes even the want of ordinary common sense.

While Grover was endeavouring to ascertain at Donaldsonville why the advance to Thibodeaux was so suddenly arrested, Weitzel came down to report to and consult with Banks. Weitzel is, beyond all doubt, the ablest of the Federal Generals in this department. He is a thoroughly good soldier, and his intimate acquaintance with the State (gained when he was with Beauregard, before the war, engaged upon the forts below, and elsewhere in the State defences) made him a valuable assistant to Butler and to Banks. He is better liked by the Confederates than any other Federal officer, from the simple fact that he is a soldier, and not a sugar and cotton stealing speculator. Nor is he particularly ambitious to command the Corps d'Afrique. Weitzel went back to Donaldsonville by steamboat from this city Tuesday night, and we may now presume that the movement for the recovery of Brashear City has commenced in earnest.

The movement is as follows: Port Hudson is in the hands of the negroes, the debris of the Corps d'Afrique, and they garrison that now unimportant post. Baton Rouge is held by men enough to take care of the sick and wounded in hospital at that place, and to watch the Massachusetts soldiers who refused to take part in the assault of June 14 because they were nine months' men, and their time expired June 6. These soldiers, mind you, are Banks's own State pets, and they are now in the penitentiary, awaiting a decision respecting their disposal. It was intended first to send them to the Dry Tortugas, but a box-full of shoulder-straps were cut off and sent to Governor Andrew, the remains of his officers, and the men were imprisoned. They can scarcely be called a portion of the Federal force at Baton Rouge. Nearly all the white regiments engaged in the reduction of Port Hudson were thus moved to Donaldsonville to take part in the new advance to Brashear—to make fresh prints of shoddy shoes on old and well-worn Federal paths—to do once more for Banks what Weitzel's men did for Butler many months ago.

When the plan for this movement was perfected, it was only necessary to put it in operation to show the necessity for a revision. The repulse of the advance brigade gave the rest of the corps an opportunity to rest a day or two, and to think the matter over. Yesterday morning the steamer Crescent came down from Donaldsonville with nearly 800 men belonging to the 12th and 13th Connecticut regiments. They go round by sea (the Gulf), and up the Atchafalaya to Berwick's Bay. Following the Crescent, Farragut sends the gunboats Holyoke, Estrella, and Sachem, and probably one or two more. The remaining regiments at Donaldsonville proceed down the Lafourche to Thibodeaux, and thence westward direct to Bayou Boeuf and Brashear City. All told by sea and land, nearly 8,000 men are engaged in this advance.

And all this to recover the "other end" of the Opelousas railway running through the Lafourche from Algiers to Berwick's Bay, and to collect the beggarly account of empty boxes that previous to June 23 contained new Enfield rifles and other valuable military stores. For the Crescent brought the important but already surmised information that the Confederates have abandoned the Lafourche Country, and have crossed the Teche. A detachment of Grover's cavalry occupied Thibodeaux on Tuesday, and scouts sent out nine miles beyond returned and reported no enemy in sight. Taylor has had four weeks, and all the small boats to be picked up in the bayous, in which to remove the large amount of military and other property left by Banks at Brashear. The natives say that he has been particularly busy during the last ten days. It seems evident enough that the small force which engaged Morgan's brigade near Donaldson was sent expressly to check Grover's advance till Taylor could pick up the fragments and boat them across to Berwick City. There is no reason for holding Brashear, especially when a small force would inevitably be exposed to a vigorous shelling from the gun-boats in the bay, and an attack in the rear by Grover. It is also probable that Grover will not cross the bay; and Magruder, Taylor, and Mouton have concentrated a force on that side, which is able to repel any movement the now much weakened Federal force might attempt on the Teche. If Banks gets back Brashear without his military stores, which by this time are far beyond his reach, and, above all, without a fight, he may be considered a lucky man.

Thus much for the military situation in this department to-day. If Banks succeeds he merely establishes railway and telegraphic communication once more from New Orleans to Berwick Bay, and holds once more nearly as much territory as his lines covered last April, when he began the advance to Alexandria.

We have heard that Grant's 12,000 men were coming down to Red River, to make an adjunct movement for the recovery of the Attakapas, but we have yet to hear of their arrival: and more transportation and a higher stage of water are necessary before an advance can be made up Red River to Alexandria. When the entire movement is complete, the Federal Government will have an opportunity to compare its gains with its losses in Louisiana.

THERE is no faltering at present in the spirit of the Southern people; there is no party among them crying out for submission, no opposition to their leaders, no insurrections against the Conscription. While this is so, the loss of Charleston, even if the next mail should tell us that it was consummated, would add nothing of probability to the Northern expectation of the ultimate subjection of the country. More than this, if every town in the South were in the hands of the Federals, they still could not afford to draw away any one of the four armies that now represent the Northern power, nor could they recall one ship from the squadrons which now blockade the coasts. Until the South surrenders at discretion or goes free, the North are destined, in all perpetuity, to maintain those armies and those fleets. These would-be conquerors should judge their Southern brethren by themselves. They should ask themselves what would be the term of their resistance if their chief cities were occupied by the armies of a detested invader. They have seen what Spaniards could do, and what the Circassians have done, and what the Poles can do; do they feel that the Anglo-Saxon blood is more quiet in subjection? When we look for the reasons for the exultation which now pervades the Northern States we discern positively nothing to justify it. These jubilant conquerors are poised in air. If the Southern people mean what they say, and if they hate the Northerners with the sort of hatred which people generally entertain towards those who have destroyed their homes, confiscated their property, and slaughtered their relations, the Northerners are ten years yet from the object of their desires, even if those ten years were years of success.—Times, August 10.

FEDERAL VANDALISM.—A letter from Huntsville, Alabama, published in the Mobile Evening News, July 3, says:—Lieutenant W. F. Jannon, of Leighton, Alabama, makes a report to Colonel Roddy, which is copied in the Advocate of this place, of the vandalism of the enemy in the Tennessee Valley, from which it appears that the citizens of North Alabama have suffered more severely, perhaps, than any portion of the country permanently occupied by the enemy. These outrages were principally committed by General Dodge, from Corinth, in his late incursions into the valley. Upwards of 200 persons suffered, and personal property fairly estimated in value $1,800,070, consisting of bacon, beef, salt, cattle, horses, &c., carried off. In addition to this they burned the Lafayette Female Academy at Lagrange, valued at $5,000, Lagrange Military Academy, three large buildings containing 5,000 volumes, a large chemical and philosophical apparatus, a large cabinet of minerals and fossils, 140 bedsteads and mattresses, a hospital building and five houses attached, the loss estimated at $75,000; also the burning of the Masonic Hall and two large factories at Florence. Now that our camp fires light up the hillsides of Pennsylvania, would it not be well to hold these things in cherished recollection? The kid-glove policy in the enemy's country has been too long indulged in, while the vandals destroyed everything they could lay hands upon in our own territory. It is high time to inscribe Let talionis upon our bloody battle-flag.

THE VIEWS OF A SOUTHERN PLANTER.

The writer of the letter from which the following passages are extracted is one of the largest and wealthiest planters in Southern Georgia. His sentiments, as expressed in a private letter to a friend in Europe, may be taken to reflect those of the most influential class of Southern society. The letter is dated anterior to the fall of Vicksburg, but when the public mind of the Confederacy had already come to regard that event as in all probability inevitable. Of the feeling which animates the people he speaks thus:—

We are every day firmer in our belief that we must fight unassisted to the end of the present bloody war. But I think both our cause and people get stronger and better for the conviction. If determination, courage, and sacrifice can gain the victory, we shall succeed, and so strong are the sentiments of national hatred, so stern the intention of sacrificing all we possess, and so powerful and general the resolve to die in defence of home and family, that I may say but one heart, one soul and one mind exist throughout the Confederacy. Hitherto we have, indeed, been victorious, yet our country has suffered so much, our poor but noble and proud women have been subjected to so many hardships, and our civilization is sinking so rapidly under the influence of this dreadful war, that its further protraction is appalling to the humanitarian, and we cannot without an effort relinquish the fading hope that the civilized powers of Europe must at last raise their voices to stay the further progress of the dreadful scourge. . . . There is one reason which I think ought to induce the English Government to do something in behalf of our present commercial relations. Most of the cotton at present in stock where not the property of the Government has passed from the hands of the planters into those of the speculators, and the greater portion of these are backed by English capitalists. In other words, the greater portion of the cotton now in the Confederacy belongs to Englishmen. The price, too, is being rapidly augmented by the cost of storage and insurance, the rotting of rope and bagging and consequent necessity of repacking, and the tax now levied upon it by the State and Confederate Governments. The longer England and France delay, the longer will they leave the cotton of their subjects to be taxed and rotted, while at the same time they prevent our planters from attempting to provide for the future. They are thus inflicting sufferings on their working classes which must prove in the end irreparable.

The crops of all kinds of cereals, wheat, oats, and Indian corn, are represented as unprecedented, and as proving conclusively that the Southern cotton fields will grow excellent wheat. As regards the cotton crops the writer, speaking from personal observation, says that less than one-fifth of the usual quantity has been planted, even where the enemy's depredations did not, as in many parts of the Lower Mississippi, suspend the cultivation altogether; that the season was unfavourable, the spring having been too cool, and that under the most favourable circumstances the crop of 1863 could not exceed 500,000 bales.

Speaking of the question of Ironclads versus Fortifications, in connection with the repeated assaults upon Fort McAllister (originally built and for six months commanded by the writer) he says:—

I have never seen such random firing at so close a distance (not quite a thousand yards). There is no doubt in my mind that the gunners are not able to see what they are doing, or they never would or could fire so wildly. At Charleston I made the same observation; the fact is they did even worse. Iron gunboats and ironclads are played out, and have fallen so much in public opinion that nobody now cares for them, and the authorities and citizens of Charleston and Savannah are confident that they never will do much harm to their cities.

PROCLAMATION BY PRESIDENT DAVIS FOR A NATIONAL FAST DAY.

Again do I call upon the people of the Confederacy—a people who believe that the Lord reigneth, and that His overruling Providence ordereth all things—to unite in prayer and humble submission under His chastening hand, and to beseech His favour on our suffering country.

It is meet that when trials and reverses befall us we should seek to take home to our hearts and consciences the lessons which they teach, and profit by the self-examination for which they prepare us. Had not our successes on land and sea made us self-confident and forgetful of our reliance upon Him? Had not the love of lucre eaten like a gangrene into the very heart of the land, converting too many among us into worshippers of gain, and rendering them unmindful of their duty to their country, to their fellow-men, and to their God? Who, then, will presume to complain that we have been chastened or to despair of our just cause and the protection of our Heavenly Father?

Let us rather receive in humble thankfulness the lesson which He has taught in our recent reverses, devoutly acknowledging that to Him and not to our own feeble arms are due the honour and the glory of victory; that from Him, in His paternal providence, come the anguish and sufferings of defeat, and that, whether in victory or defeat, our humble supplications are due at His footstool.

Now, therefore, I, Jefferson Davis, President of these Confederate States, do issue this, my proclamation, setting apart Friday, the 21st day of August ensuing, as a day of fasting, humiliation, and prayer; and I do hereby invite the people of the Confederate States to repair, on that day, to their respective places of public worship, and to unite in supplication for the favour and protection of that God who has hitherto conducted us safely through all the dangers that environed us.

In faith whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal of the Confederate States, at Richmond, this twenty-fifth day of July, in the year of Our Lord One thousand eight hundred and sixty-three.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

BY THE PRESIDENT:

J. P. Benjamin, Secretary of State.

LETTER FROM GENERAL LEE DENYING GENERAL MEADE'S REPORTED CAPTURES.

Headquarters, Army, Northern Virginia, July 21.

General S. Cooper, Adjutant and Inspector-General, Confederate States of America, Richmond, Virginia.

General.—I have seen in Northern papers what purported to be an official despatch from General Meade, stating that he had captured a brigade of infantry, two pieces of artillery, two caissons, and a large number of small arms, as this army retired to the south bank of the Potomac, on the 13th and 14th inst.

This despatch has been copied into the Richmond papers and as its official character may cause it to be believed, I desire to state that it is incorrect. The enemy did not capture any organised body of men on that occasion, but only stragglers and such as were left asleep on the road, exhausted by the fatigue and exposure of one of the most inclement nights I have ever known at this season of the year. It rained without cessation, rendering the road by which our troops marched to the bridge at Falling Waters very difficult to pass, and causing so much delay that the last of the troops did not cross the river at the bridge until 1 p.m., on the 14th. While the column was thus detained on the road, a number of men, worn down by fatigue, lay down in barns, and by the roadside, and though officers were sent back to arouse them as the troops moved on, the darkness and rain prevented them from finding all, and many were in this way left behind. Two guns were left in the road. The horses that drew them became exhausted, and the officers went forward to procure others. When they returned, the rear of the column had passed the guns so far that it was deemed unsafe to send back for them, and they were thus lost. No arms, cannon, or prisoners were taken by the enemy in battle, but only such as were left behind under the circumstances I have described. The number of stragglers thus lost I am unable to state with accuracy, but it is greatly exaggerated in the despatch referred to.

I am, with great respect,

Your obedient servant,

R. E. LEE, General.

THE SIEGE OF CHARLESTON: GENERAL BEAUREGARD'S DESPATCHES.

Gen. S. COOPER,—CHARLESTON, July 18, 6 P.M.

The Ironsides, five Monitors, four gun and mortar boats, two land batteries (five guns), have fired furiously all day on Battery Wagner. Four killed, fourteen wounded, and one gun-carriage disabled.

G. T. BEAUREGARD.

Gen. S. COOPER,—CHARLESTON, July 19, 3.40 A.M.

After a furious bombardment of eleven hours from the ships and shore, throwing many thousands of shot and shell, the enemy assaulted Battery Wagner desperately and repeatedly, beginning at dark. Our people fought worthily, and repulsed the attacks with great slaughter. A number of prisoners were captured. Our loss is relatively slight. It includes, however, valuable lives. Brigadier-General Taliaferro commands on our side. Pickets now well in advance. God is again with us.

G. T. BEAUREGARD.

CHARLESTON, July 23, 1863.

The enemy recommenced shelling again yesterday, with but few casualties on our part. We had, in the battle of the 18th instant, about 150 killed and wounded. The enemy's loss, including prisoners, was about 2,000. Nearly 800 were buried under a flag of truce.

Colonel Putnam, acting Brigadier-General, and Colonel Shaw, commanding the negro regiments, were killed.

G. T. BEAUREGARD, General.

SETTLEMENT OF OUR ACCOUNTS WITH FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS.

(From the New York Herald of July 24.)

The most sanguine sympathizers with the cause of the South are compelled to own that the rebellion is played out. The despairing tone of the rebel organs themselves would belie any other conclusion. After the discoveries made in our recent cavalry raids, it was plain that it required but a few effective blows on its upper crust to ensure the caving in of the whole rotten structure. These have followed in rapid succession and with stunning force. Gettysburg, Vicksburg, and Port Hudson have exhausted the vitality of the resistance, and we have now to encounter but a few last expiring kicks. Before autumn has stripped the trees of their foliage, there will not be a rebel in arms from one end of the quondam Confederacy to the other. It is all nonsense to talk of the procrastination of hostilities by a system of guerilla operations. Wars of this magnitude never thus degenerate. Besides, the revolted States, once returned to their allegiance, will be compelled, through their local governments, to guarantee the good behaviour of all within their limits.

The restoration of the Union once ensured, what becomes the duty of the President? In the troubles by which it has been overwhelmed, the nation has with impatience beheld the administration compelled to temporize with the indignities and provocations offered it by the two leading European Powers. This state of things must not be suffered to continue. The submission of the South virtually secured, Mr. Lincoln should not hesitate a minute as to the course to be pursued. Let him at once issue a war message, declaring his intention of calling England and France to account for their hostile and treacherous conduct towards this country, and convoking Congress to pass the measures necessary to support his determination. There is not a man of any party, whether he be Republican or Democrat, copperhead or rebel, who will not hail with gladness this step.

Of all measures calculated to heal the wounds of the country, to harmonize its divided feelings, and to ensure the revival of the old sentiment of devotion to the Union, we believe this to be the most effectual. All history teaches us that after internal convulsions a foreign war is a sovereign specific for the restoration of health to the body politic. Thus it was with the ancient Greek and Roman republics, and thus it will ever be with communities similarly organized. We are no advocates of war in the abstract; but we consider that a government is faithless to its trust, and encourages aggression when it shrinks from resenting insults and injuries inflicted upon it in its hour of weakness. Never has a Cabinet observed less of form and management in its manifestations of unfriendly feeling towards a nation with whom it professed to be at peace than has that of Great Britain towards this country. It not only sustained the South, by according to it belligerent rights at the beginning of the war, but it connived at the building of privateers to prey on our commerce; and now, in violation of its own laws, it openly permits the construction of iron-plated vessels of war in its ports for the invasion and destruction of our seaboard cities. The French Emperor has exhibited towards us the same faithless and treacherous spirit, profiting by our divisions to push his schemes of aggrandisement in Mexico. The plans of both were fast approaching maturity, and if they have failed it is only because a Power mightier than theirs has so controlled the fortunes of war as to place us in a position to defy all that they may be disposed to attempt against us.

But will our people now rest satisfied with this attitude of patient expectation? We do not know the national spirit if it does. We are satisfied that Mr. Lincoln has but to appeal to the feeling which is burning in every breast against the two Powers who have so largely contributed to the aggravation of our troubles to obtain any amount of support that he may require in hostilities against both. Let him but declare that it is the determination of our people not to lay down their arms until the French are driven out of Mexico and the British out of Canada, and he will enlist the sympathies of every man in the country, Southerner as well as Northerner. The Southern men will rush into such a war with even more eagerness than those of the North; for they accuse Great Britain and France of having betrayed them into their present unfortunate position by underhand assurances of support and recognition, which they only meant to fulfil when it suited their own interests. The opportunity has been suffered to pass by, and the Southern people will resent it energetically when the occasion arises. It will depend upon Mr. Lincoln to furnish it. Let us not bring the rebellion to a close, and he will not want the means to call both Governments to a severe reckoning. The draft, which he is said to be desirous to enforce merely in reference to this latter object, will not be necessary. Let him but declare war against the two traitorous governments that have aimed to destroy our national life, and willing hearts and hands will accord him all that he requires.

MEADE'S ARMY.—The New York correspondent of the Daily News writes:—The old army of the Potomac is in excellent spirits and splendid condition, and can "go anywhere and do anything" that a force of its size of any army in the world is equal to, but it has dwindled down during the last six months with alarming rapidity. There are at this moment but 1,500 regulars left in it. In ten regiments of regulars there are altogether but 1,000 men, or an average of 100 men to a regiment. The largest of them in the service is the 8th, which is now here, and musters 600 men, but their full complement is 1,500 men each. A Massachusetts regiment, which took the field with 1,040 two years ago, went into action at Gettysburg with but forty, and stood in the hottest point on the left centre, and at the close not a man remained. There are whole divisions which number only 800 men. This extraordinary reduction in the regiments is due to the fact that all the reinforcements the army has received come in the shape of new regiments. The old ones are allowed to dwindle away, because the new recruits will not enlist except under new officers, or rather nobody will occupy himself in raising volunteers except persons who expect to command them when raised. But the effect of this spectacle of the dwindling away of the bodies actually in the field on the survivors who compose them is, of course, in the highest degree discouraging. Nothing can well be more depressing for a soldier than to find himself one of 100, when but a year ago he was one of 1,000. Every parade vividly reminds him of all the losses his regiment has suffered since the commencement of the war, whereas if it was kept up to its full strength by the accession of fresh men, he would, let him feel the loss of his old comrades ever so much, at least be sustained and cheered by the reflection that he belonged to a body as powerful, whether for offence or defence, as when he first joined it. It is to meet this defect mainly that the Government is resorting to the draft, because the draft enables it to put the recruit in the regiment or the arm which it chooses, and not that which he chooses, and the cadres now in the field must be speedily filled up, or the whole organization will go to pieces.

The defence of Vicksburg is one of the most heroic feats recorded in history. It is one of those struggles which, successful or unsuccessful, go to form the character and mature the spirit of a people. It is, perhaps, well for the South that it should meet with misfortunes and undergo heavy trials. It might have presumed too much on an unbroken tide of success, and, in its presumption, rushed upon its ruin. Its manifold struggles have earned for it the sympathy of Europe and a place in history. Centuries after it has emerged from its baptism of fire, and taken its proud place among the nations, the Southern father and the Southern mother will narrate to their children, by the fireside, in burning words, the story of their ancestors' prowess, and bid them emulate the deeds of their fathers in the olden time. They will tell their sons of those conquering veterans of Virginia, those dauntless defenders of the blood-stained Mississippi bastions. They will tell their daughters how women of Charleston tore off their jewels for the war, how women of New Orleans hurled defiance at the Northern tyrant in the midst of his troops. Those sons and daughters will then grow up into a people that will be worthy of those from whom it sprang. To us, here in England, there will be an abiding regret. We did not once stretch out a hand to aid the combatants in this noble struggle for independence. Even Northerners tell us now that we might have stopped the war long ago by the simple recognition of the South. We might have made these brave men our brothers and friends, detached them for ever from their selfish kinsmen of the North. As partners in commerce we should have become the providers of the world, when New York and Philadelphia were as desolate as Tyre and Sidon. We have left the South alone to win its spurs. Our neutrality is designated as selfish. If rightly understood, it is unselfish in the extreme—but it is also unwise, and cruel.—Morning Herald.

THE Honourable Mr. Whiting, solicitor, is the bearer of certain demands in reference to the fitting out of Confederate privateers, which are to be enforced under all sorts of penalties in the event of our non-compliance. Now, it would be as well if the Federal Government understood once for all that we have gone to the utmost limit of our legality already in our interference with the shipping interests of the country, and that no Cabinet will dare to make itself the ally of Mr. Adams in forcing the will of a domineering American power upon the people of Great Britain. We have not forgotten the exposures of the Alexandra case, and the humiliation endured by the English people at the sight of the Queen's Ministers leagued with an infamous American spy for the restriction of our legitimate trade operations. And if Mr. Whiting has come here with a new batch of spies and informers to try and heap fresh indignities upon our Government, we venture to tell him that his labour is worse than lost, and that he may end by creating serious trouble between the two Governments. This country has borne much—in suits to its flag, damage to its commerce, stagnation and paralysis in the chief branch of its manufacturing industry, destitution and starvation in 100,000 homes in the northern districts, all to be traced directly to the Washington Administration. But it will not submit to have its laws altered, or their meaning wrested, to serve the purpose of Mr. Lincoln.—The Standard, August 10.

TO OUR FRIENDS AND SUBSCRIBERS.

OUR friends in the United Kingdom and on the Continent are earnestly requested to forward to us, at their earliest convenience, such information relative to the military movements and condition of affairs in America as they may receive through private letters, either from the United States, or from the Confederate States. They may rely upon the most scrupulous precautions being observed; that no names or facts leading to identification will, under any circumstances, be revealed. No communications, however, will be noticed unless authenticated by a responsible name. Southern newspapers, of any date, will be useful and acceptable presents.

For the convenience of our distant subscribers, all the receipts for subscriptions signed by any of the official representatives, or commissioned officers of the Confederate States, will be recognized at this office.

Our subscribers in the South will have their paper supplied through HENRY HOTZE, Esq., the Confederate States' Commercial Agent at London, who has kindly tendered us his services in this respect during the continuance of the blockade.

Subscription, 26s. per annum—post paid, 30s., payable in advance. All communications on business to be addressed, and Post-Office Orders made payable to, J. B. HOPKINS, 13, Boulevard-street, Fleet-street, London E.C.

The INDEX may be obtained, and payments for subscriptions or other dues to the paper made:—

At Liverpool, to WM. KNOX, Secretary Southern Club, 55, Brown's-buildings.

At Paris, to Messrs. PFEIFFER and MULLER, 62, Rue du Château d'Eau, Paris.

At Turin, to Sr. FILIPPO MANETTA, 4, Borgo Nuovo.

THE INDEX.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 13, 1863.

Two Years' Invasion, and its Results.

THE Federal organs in this country remind us very forcibly of the clever gentry who, in spangled jackets and light pantaloons, advertise their marvellous performances in our quiet suburbs and less-frequented thoroughfares. Their modus operandi is pretty well known. A crowd is collected, and a ring made; there are some very mild acrobatic performances, and some extraordinary feats are promised, provided the coppers flow in. The decapitation of one of the simplest of the bystanders, and immediate restoration of the abstracted cranium, the ponderous ladder, and the "twopence more and up goes the donkey," are the regular capital of these bold adventurers. And they manage to trade for some time on the credulity of the public. Of course, the head of the intended victim remains safe upon his shoulders; the ladder is only shown, and the donkey does not walk up. But in the meantime the police interfere because the crowd is too great, or the player retires in virtuous disgust at the meanness of the audience. At any rate the principal performance never comes off. The New York Herald, flourishing upon congenial soil, is certainly the greatest performer in this particular line. But there are respectable journals in this country which assume a most elevated moral standing when denouncing their more adroit and less scrupulous colleague, and which are yet very little behindhand in idle bombast, rank dishonesty, and reckless assertion. The tone is a little more polished to suit English tastes. There is not the same offensiveness to the English reader. But in all that relates to the war, to the Southern people, their motives, their system, their morals, their history, our English contemporaries are nearly on a par with the rowdy Northern papers, if not in advance of them; for this reason, that they are notoriously inspired by the extreme Abolitionist faction, the men who clamour for "an anti-slavery god and anti-slavery bible," and who from pulpit and stump have proclaimed their devilish desire for one universal scene of massacre, pillage, and incendiarism in the South. No wonder that, given up to such influences, English journals should lose that moderation and fairness which characterise them as a body, and commit themselves to the most absurd and manifestly dishonest statements in their eagerness to claim even a momentary triumph for the principles they advocate. Only a week or two ago, we were assured the war was over, the backbone of the rebellion was broken, and secession at an end. Lee's army was a rabble, Bragg's army broken up, Johnston's forces starved; Virginia was all but conquered, Louisiana subjugated, North Carolina only waiting the signal to return to the Union; Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi at the mercy of General Grant, who, in a very few weeks, would join Rosecranz, and crush out the last embers of the rebellion in Mobile,

Savannah, and Charleston. The Confederacy was split in two. Arkansas and Louisiana were in the hands of the Federals. Texas would soon be disposed of, and by 1864 the Stars and Stripes would float over all the old United States' territory. One portion of this picture, we admit, our English contemporaries did not fill up. They did not threaten England with expulsion from Canada, and France with punishment in Mexico. They stopped with the burning of the last Southern city and the raid on the last Southern plantation.

Now, it is worth while to consider how probable these foreshadowed contingencies are, how much nearer practically the North is to the subjugation of the South than it was in 1861. A cursory glance at any map of the Old United States will show this. The Federals boast of the territory they have gained; and their organs in this country claim that wherever a Federal army marches there is a lasting gain to the Federal cause. Now if we take the seceded States in order, we shall find that the progress made by the United States' army, in comparison with what remains to accomplish, is almost insignificant. Take the State of Virginia. A portion of this State in the neighbourhood of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, revolutionized by Mr. Lincoln, was Federal in its sympathies from the first, and has remained so. The Federals hold Norfolk and the surrounding country, with a portion of the York-Town Peninsula, and have temporary occupation of the Shenandoah Valley; they hold actually less of Virginian territory than they held this time last year; and a victory of the Confederates—a very probable event—would sweep them once more into Maryland and Washington. The fate of General Milroy shows how precarious is their tenure upon the territory of the Old Dominion. In North Carolina they have made no progress for twelve months. They still hold Newbern, whence they send out bands to plunder and burn, but the ground is not theirs five hundred yards beyond their outlying pickets. In South Carolina the Northern army has still less to boast of. It has not yet reached the mainland. It has not even made an impression upon the outer defences of Charleston. It holds Beaufort and St. Helena Island, as it did eighteen months ago. Georgia is intact. In Florida the Federals have destroyed thriving towns, but have gained no permanent footing except on the coast. They have made no impression in Alabama, or the upper portion of Mississippi. They have lost Galveston, their only foothold in Texas. Their actual conquests are limited to portions of the State of Louisiana temporarily overrun by Northern troops, the river districts of the States of Mississippi and Arkansas, and part of the State of Tennessee. Now, this has been achieved with the loss of more than 500,000 men, at incredible expense, at the cost of civil war, actual or threatening, in Northern cities. And what does it amount to? Simply to this:—that where a Northern army is strong enough, it locates itself in or traverses a hostile territory; that it holds only the ground upon which it is encamped, and that the moment it evacuates a position, Confederate troops, guerillas or regular forces, occupy it. Why, at this moment we hear of Rosecranz pushing forward for Chattanooga and threatening Georgia, but in Western Tennessee the Confederate army is recruiting, and fighting is going on with varying success. Let us travel from the seceded States into the Border States. What is going on in Kentucky? General Burnside is proclaiming martial law, and issuing proclamations against disaffection. Large bodies of Confederate troops are ravaging the country, and destroying Northern property, and pitched battles are fought. A little further North we find even the Federal States unsafe; Indiana and Ohio traversed by a considerable Confederate force, which is only defeated and captured after doing millions' worth of damage to Federal property. In the face of these undeniable facts, to talk of the prospect of subjugation, is worse than absurd. Even if there were a large Southern minority favourable to the reconstruction of the Union, the work of reconquering and of holding subject nearly a million of square miles of immensely fertile, thinly populated, and inaccessible territory, would be beyond the powers of the North. But when every man, woman, and child loathes and curses the enemy as he passes, when, as Mr. Vallandigham testifies, every Southerner spurns the idea of reconstruction, the task is a physical impossibility.

Conquest would be an impossibility even if the Confederate armies were reduced to as low a state of morale and efficiency, and to the insignificant numbers assigned to them by Federal journals. But the South has large armies still in the field, and it has vast resources to fall back upon. There are at this moment at least 350,000 men in arms in the South. The last call of the President will strengthen them by 200,000. The South has abundance of arms and ammunition, a fine artillery, and skilful generals. Fighting on the defensive, it can economise its forces; and it ought to, and will, account for Federal armies of greatly superior numbers. It must be observed that the more contracted are the Confederate lines, the more available strength her commanders have for the defence of any assailable point. The vast area which the South has hitherto defended has doubtless told upon Northern resources and endurance. But it had the disadvantage of greatly exposing the weakness of the defence. The North by its enormous naval superiority on the rivers and the coasts, was always able to bring overwhelming numbers to bear at any given point; and the Confederates were compelled to fight the invader where his water communications almost ensured him success. Now that Johnston's army has fallen back from the Mississippi, and Bragg has retired to the Tennessee mountains, the contest will be more equal. Henceforth the unrivalled facilities of transport enjoyed by the Federals will cease. Their armies, if they march inland, must carry their own supplies. There are no great rivers to aid them, but painful marches through an easily defensible country of primeval forests and few roads await them. Bragg and Johnston must have between them, with the troops that were paroled from Vicksburg, and in due course exchanged, at least 100,000 men. These with a gallant population to back them make up a very formidable army, so formidable that we doubt very much if the Northern Generals will adventure any inland movement this season. Mobile, Savannah, and Charleston are threatened. But the safety of Mobile ought to be secured by the presence of Johnston's army at Okolona; and Savannah and Charleston, if they should fall, will, no doubt, have added their due quota to the bloody list of casualties which is, at last, wearying out even the savage aspirations of the Northern mob. But even if the remaining ports of the Atlantic coast should suffer the fate of New Orleans, their fall would not alter the result. The war might still be carried on for twenty years. At the end of that time the South would be a wilderness, but it would be still unconquered. What the North would have become it is difficult to guess.

The Empire of Mexico.

IF there is one country favoured above all others by the lavish hand of Nature, it is that land of wonders and of wealth, the cradle of the earliest civilization in the New World, Mexico. Washed by both great oceans, with a soil fertile beyond conception, permeated by inexhaustible mineral treasures, a climate which realizes the dreams of mythology, it seems to combine all the conditions which should ensure for its inhabitants the greatest measure of earthly happiness. Humboldt's description reads like a poem. Though situated within the tropics, Mexico cannot be considered a tropical country. The mean temperature of the great plains is only a few degrees greater than that of Naples or Rome. On the declivities of the Cordilleras there reigns a soft perennial spring, which at no season varies in temperature more than a few degrees. But from the configuration of the country, one may, thermometer in hand, select, within the distance of a few leagues, any temperature desired, from that of frozen Lapland to the arid heat of Algiers. The productions of every clime, from the cereals of the temperate zone to the luxuriant vegetation of the tropics, grow in profuse abundance, and whatever man can possibly want or desire, the soil affords with little cultivation. With the exception of the narrow belt of coast where the vomito prevails, the climate is healthful and even invigorating. If the European cannot live and thrive in such a country, where shall he live and thrive?

Yet for fifty years Mexico has been a scandal and a disgrace to civilization. Claiming the privileges of a civilized people, and at the same time the immunities of barbarians, the Mexicans have come to be regarded as a nation of cutthroats and robbers. Since the commencement of their independent existence they have numbered more revolutions than years in their history. The material progress, so promising even under the shortsighted and narrow-minded colonial policy of Spain, has not only been arrested, but retrograde steps have been taken with fearful rapidity. The reason of all this is plain to all who are content to see facts as they are, and not as they wished them. Seduced by the example of the United States, the Spanish-Americans took literally what the Anglo-American's better practical sense only flung out as a glittering paradox, the dogma of the universal equality of man. In English-America the white race was, if not the exclusive occupant, at least immensely preponderant in numbers; in Spanish-America the whites formed numerically the smallest element of the population. The political privileges which further North even the white man did not know how to use moderately and wisely, were here to be the birthright of mongrels, who retained the worst vices with none of the virtues of the parent races. Analyze the component parts of what is facetiously termed the Mexican nation: There are, first, the individuals of European birth, a mere fragment, scarce appreciable in the aggregate. Next the pure descendants of Europeans, or Creoles, who, with the former class, form the only basis upon which the structure of a national system can be made to rest, but who are only rather less than one-sixth of the whole. Next come the Mestizcos, or half-castes between the whites and Indians; the Mulattoes, between whites and negroes, together about one-third of the whole; the element of discord and disturbance; vicious, idle, and restless; the ready tools of lawlessness and crime, and the source of all the miseries that have afflicted Mexico. Next, the Zamboes, or mongrels of Indians and Negroes, the Negroes, and a few men of Chinese and Malayan descent, and the intermediate mixtures between these various hybrids; these form the pariahs of the social system, the lepers rather than the criminals of the population. Lastly comes the substratum of this heterogeneous mass,—the copper-coloured Indians, much the same as Cortez found them in manners, morals, and modes of thought; docile, laborious serfs; counting for, perhaps, one-half of the population. Had the political constitution been framed according to that hierarchy of races which Nature herself has appointed, an orderly and prosperous government might have been established and maintained. But imagine the radical theories of American democracy carried into practice among a population so constituted, and the result must inevitably be what it has been in all the Central and South American Republics, all of which more or less resemble Mexico. It is suggestive that the only self-governing communities on the American continent—excepting, of course, the British colonies, which, though virtually self-governing, have the advantage of being dependencies of a vast and admirably balanced Imperial system—which have for any lengthened period enjoyed internal tranquillity and a stable form of government, are monarchical Brazil, and the North American federative Republic. In the latter, the South had heretofore formed the balance-wheel, and contributed the conservative check which has controlled the elements of destruction. The South alone, basing its social fabric upon the principle of subordination of one race to the other, is capable of retaining republican forms and principles of government. Cut loose from its conservative partner, the North is already drifting rapidly into anarchy or despotism.

The establishment of monarchy in Mexico is, therefore, the beginning of a new and, we hope, a better era in the history of the New World. That monarchy, if it would lay the foundation of real liberty, must, for some time at least, rule with an absolute hand, but gradually rallying to its support the white population; establish, in fact, a white man's Government. The jealous exclusion of mixed blood from political affairs will avert the most imminent dangers; a paternal and judicious regard to the material and moral interests of the Indian, the indigenous peasantry of the country, will secure for the social superstructure a base as solid and as broad as the most exacting theorist could require. Even the Northern papers admit that under such a regime Mexico, from being an insignificant and contemptible Power, will become one of the strongest on that continent. Her regeneration will, it is to be hoped, inaugurate that of her unhappy sister States, and the fairest region of the globe may in time be reclaimed from the barbarism into which, since the expulsion of the Spanish dominion, it has been gradually lapsing.

Except that an Englishman might reasonably feel some apprehension at seeing the prestige and influence of France extending over the New World, where his own country is daily losing both, there is nothing in the creation of the French-American empire which does not afford subject of congratulation. If France has ambitions in the Western hemisphere, she will be all the less dangerous in the Eastern, and at present her mission appears to be to realize the dream of Canning, of redressing the balance of the Old World by the New. The long-neglected claims of English bond-holders are now certain of being paid; a new and most lucrative field for the operation of British capital will be opened, and a new direction given to British commerce; for be Mexico her own mistress, or whoever be her master, so she be but prosperous and tranquil, British enterprise will be sure to secure a fair share of the wealth which she is capable of offering to the competition of the world. Upon the pending struggle on the North American continent this great event must necessarily exercise no inconsiderable influence. We do not believe in the rumour, inspired by Northern fears, that an alliance is already on the point of being concluded between France and the Confederate Government; the less so, as the same rumour alleges one of the terms of that alliance to be the promise of modifications of the institution of slavery, modifications which the Confederate Government has not the power either to make or to promise, and which, however ready the South might be to make them, it could not, in self-respect or with a due regard to its independence, make at the suggestion of a foreign Power, or promise as a condition of recognition. But this rumour is both the confession of a fear and the admission of a fact. The North knows that the Southern Confederacy is the natural ally of regenerated Mexico, and it feels that through regenerated Mexico France is inevitably the ally of the Southern Confederacy. The contemptuous disregard of the Monroe doctrine is moreover almost as cruel a blow to Northern pride and visions of "manifest destiny" as the secession of the Southern States. It is the realization, even before the hope of recovering from the first blow is resigned, of some of the most dreaded consequences anticipated from secession. It is, in truth, a declaration of war; for the Northern Republic cannot, however much exhausted it may come out of its present crisis, permit the establishment of a foreign rival on its own continent without at least one desperate effort at dislodging him. Already the idea has vaguely presented itself to the Northern mind as the least of two evils, to give the South all it asks and all that must at last be granted, as the price of a perpetual alliance against the European intruder. "Better divide with the South this continent," so it is already darkly hinted, "than give it all to Europe." There has thus entered a new element into the American war, indicating results of the gravest importance, but which it would be premature as yet to attempt to define.

Mr. Newman Hall's Excommunication.

THE Daily News and the Star of Saturday last contain a letter dated from Surrey Chapel, and signed "Newman Hall," addressed to "the Editors of Good Words, The Evangelical Magazine, and other religious periodicals which have admitted the Appeal from the Clergy of the Confederate States," in which the said editors are roundly taken to task and the proprietors indirectly threatened with the withdrawal of public patronage, for having permitted the "Appeal of the Southern Clergy to Christians throughout the World" to be stitched up within the covers of their respective publications. This letter, dated from a place dedicated to the worship of the Most High, and signed by one who professes to be a minister of the Gospel, contains the following remarkable passage: "Knowing that the existing slavery of the Southern States involves, not only as an accident, but as an inherent element, 'fornication, covetousness, and extortion,' with almost all other vices and crimes, I for one could not admit to the Lord's table, nor receive into my house, far less aid with my prayers, or by giving currency to their arguments, such men as these, who, maintaining such a system, still invoke the name of Jesus, and plead the authority of the Bible." What awful words to fall from the lips of one who assumes to teach his fellow creatures the law of Him who spake from Mount Sinai, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour;" from one who claims to speak in the name of Him who died on the cross to save sinners. This man, forgetting how much he himself owes to that religious toleration and freedom of conscience which permit him to defy and war against the Established Church of his own country, hurls against others an excommunication as fierce and as blasphemous as ever freighted the formulas of a Popish bull. He will not listen, nor allow others to listen, to the defence of the victims of his wrath; he will not recognise them as fellow-beings by receiving them into his house; he will not recognise them as fellow Christians by admitting them to the Lord's table; far less will he pray for them, that they may learn to know the errors of their way. From all human kindness, and even from Divine mercy, this teacher of a religion of love and charity would exclude them. It has been often observed how alarmingly close is the resemblance between English sympathisers with the Federal cause and their prototypes. The presses of that school imitate the tone and style of their American models; their speakers fall into the same phrases, the same line of argument, the same rhetorical habits; it only remained, to make the resemblance complete, that fanaticism should from the pulpit emulate the example of Beecher, Cheever, and others of that ilk. If Mr. Newman Hall has not quite succeeded in this, it is probably because British ideas of decency and decorum are still too inveterately old-fashioned and unlightened to make the too sudden adoption of trans-Atlantic manners an altogether safe experiment.

It might be supposed that no slight cause could have betrayed a minister of the Gospel so far beyond the propriety—to use no other word—of his profession. Yet this merciless excommunication is launched at the heads of men who approach their brethren, "not in the spirit of controversy, not by political inspiration, but as the servants of the Most High God to speak the 'truth in love' concerning things that make for peace." The prayer which is so vehemently refused in Surrey Chapel, and which these men ask for themselves, for their churches, their country, is "the devout prayer of God's people—'the will of the Lord be done.'" And as the beginning and conclusion of this Address are thus characterized with genuine Christian meekness and devout resignation, so is the body of it free from all intemperance of thought or expression. There is no reference to political issues, no recriminatory accusations, no attempt to make proselytes to any dogma or opinion whatever. There was one subject on which, as men of honour, of truth, and of courage, the signers to the Address could not be silent. For thirty years the people whom they represent have been the object of calumnies, so gross, so systematically propagated, so persistently reiterated, that history presents no parallel of misrepresentation on so gigantic a scale. Providence had placed among that people, to dwell with them, another people of a different race, one-third as numerous as themselves, but only a few generations removed from the most ferocious form of barbarism. Of these dwellers amongst them, the Southern people were held up to the world as the ruthless oppressors, excluding them for the most wicked of motives from all human rights, and suffering in turn by a righteous and inevitable retribution the consequences of the crime in a moral degradation such as few nations ever sank into. The representatives of this people, knowing that these calumnies have chilled the sympathies of many hearts towards them, modestly, but firmly, give their testimony against them. They do not ask their fellow Christians in other countries to imitate the institutions of the South; they do not extol those institutions at the expense of others; they do not disguise their shortcomings and imperfections. This is what they say, and what has drawn upon them the excommunication of Surrey Chapel:—

With all the facts of the system of slavery in its practical operations before us, "as eye-witnesses and ministers of the Word, having had perfect understanding in all things" on this subject of which we speak, we may surely claim respect for our opinions and statements. Most of us have grown up from childhood among the slaves; all of us have preached to and taught them the word of life; have administered to them the ordinances of the Christian Church; sincerely love them as souls for whom Christ died; we go among them freely, and know them in health and sickness, in labour and rest, from infancy to old age. We are familiar with their physical and moral condition, and alive to all their interests; and we testify in the sight of God, that the relation of master and slave among us, however we may deplore abuses in this, as in other relations of mankind, is not incompatible with our holy Christianity, and that the presence of the Africans in our land is an occasion of gratitude on their behalf, before God; seeing that thereby Divine Providence has brought them where missionaries of the Cross may freely proclaim to them the word of salvation, and the work is not interrupted by agitating fanaticism.

And they add, with a pride which is surely justifiable in men so cruelly put on the defensive:—

The South has done more than any people on earth for the Christianization of the African race. The condition of the slaves here is not wretched, as Northern fictions would have men believe, but prosperous and happy, and would have been yet more so but for the mistaken zeal of the Abolitionists. Can emancipation obtain for them a better portion? The practicable plan for benefiting the African race must be the Providential plan—the Scriptural plan. We adopt that plan in the South, and while the State should seek by wholesome legislation to regard the interests of master and slave, we, as ministers would preach the word to both as we are commanded of God. This war has not benefited the slaves. Those who have been encouraged or compelled to leave their masters have gone, and we can aver can go, to no state of society that offers them any better things than they have at home, either in respect to their temporal or eternal welfare. We regard Abolitionism as an interference with the plans of Divine Providence. It has not the signs of the Lord's blessing. It is a fanaticism which puts forth no good fruit; instead of blessing it has brought forth cursing; instead of love, hatred; instead of life, death—bitterness and sorrow and pain, and infidelity and moral degeneracy follow its labours. We remember how the apostle has taught the minister of Jesus upon this subject: "Let as many servants as are under the yoke, count their own masters worthy of all honour, that the name of God and His doctrine be not blasphemed. And they that have believing masters, let them not despise them because they are brethren; but rather do them service because they are faithful and beloved, partakers of the benefit. These things teach and exhort. If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness, he is proud, knowing nothing, but dotting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, perverse disputings of men of corrupt mind, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness; from such withdraw thyself."

This is all they say on this subject. It is not an argument in favour of slavery; it is a vindication from unfounded accusations, a statement of circumstances for which the South is not originally responsible, but the duties of which it recognises and is sincerely anxious to discharge. Is it conceivable that a hundred ministers of the Gospel should deliberately unite in a solemn lie in the face of God and man? And what is the character of the evidence that is arrayed against them? Men, it is true, have gone on for years writing books against the South, but for the most part they have borrowed from each other, the most bitter being those who had the least opportunity for personal observation. It is a fact regretfully admitted by the most uncompromising enemies of the South, that the hatred to its institutions abates by contact. The social system of no other country has been scrutinized by so hostile and malevolent a criticism, yet the argument to this day needs the aid of the most palpable falsehoods and the most glaring contradictions. It is but yesterday that an English professor of political economy wrote an elaborate work to prove that seven-tenths of a population, the aggregate product of whose industry exceeds annually that of any other equal number of people, led a life "alternating between listless idleness and the excitement of marauding expeditions." We have been told that the Southerners are indolent, slothful, unenterprising; we have during the last two years seen them improvise armies and navies, and the means of equipping these, while shut out from intercourse with the world. We have been told that they were lawless, cruel, and barbarous; we have seen them brave, resolute, and moderate; while in an enemy's country, disciplined; and, even under unheard-of provocations, always generous and humane. And it is fair to add, that such denunciations as Surrey Chapel has hurled against men who only pray that God's will be done, were never uttered by a Southern minister against the enemy who ravage his country with fire and sword, outrage defenceless women, and butcher unarmed citizens.

The vehemence of such language as this proceeding from a professed teacher of Christ's word, may well cause reflecting Christians to pause and examine into what grievous injustice false zeal may carry them. The most heinous criminal should not be condemned unheard, much less upon testimony which has been discredited in so many essential particulars. And surely no human being, much less a whole nation, is so irretrievably wicked that the Christian may refuse the aid of his prayer. Let men entertain what convictions they may about the institution of slavery, let them be ever so earnest in their desire to see it disappear; but let them remember also, that but a few generations past it was the almost universal institution of the civilized world, and that the curse of Surrey Chapel would fall with equal force upon our ancestors as upon the Southerners of the present day. Let the statesman remember that no people have ever yet had so difficult a social problem to solve as the presence of an inferior race in their midst, of one-third of their own number. If this problem is as yet imperfectly solved, let us at least be just, if not charitable, to the effort, if sincere, to solve it. Let us weigh the practical good against the theoretical evil. If, as Mr. Newman Hall indignantly says, the law fails to recognise the binding force of the marriage tie among the slaves, let us be thankful that the sanctity of that tie is more generally observed among them than among probably any other labouring population in the world. If the law permits separation of families, let us take courage from the fact that such separation happens in practice less often than among the poor of the most prosperous countries. If such evils exist, and undoubtedly they do exist, let us hope that a people so brave, so generous, and so God-fearing as the South has proved itself to be, a people which speaks the same language as ourselves, believes in the same Sacred Scriptures, and relies on the same Saviour, will not lack the will to apply the remedies. The absence of any particular law does not imply the existence of the particular offence which that law would punish, but it is rather the law which argues the pre-existence of the offence. The Romans prided themselves on not punishing for centuries the crime of parricide, because it was unknown. Similarly, and with good show of reason, the Southerners excuse the deficiencies in their legislation of which Europe specially complains, on the ground that society has not yet felt the grievance against which that legislation is meant to guard. It is impossible that any human society should be based upon a deliberate violation of human rights; and were the relations of master and slave such as to "involve, not only as an accident, but as an inherent element," all the vices and crimes with which it is charged, society in its own defence would be compelled to protect those who are not able to protect themselves. But if, in the performance of this great and responsible duty the Southern people require our aid and counsels, it is surely not the best mode of tendering these, to refuse them all hearing, all intercourse with them as men or communion as Christians, and to return their prayers with curses.

Can India save our Cotton Trade?

THE Federal agents in England have done what they could for their employers. As there was not much to be said in favour of their own case, and as the arguments of their opponents were unanswerable, they have persistently and unscrupulously assailed the motives of those who have avowed themselves the well-wishers of the South. They allege that the universal admiration for the conduct and heroism of the Confederates has its origin in extreme selfishness, and that we should not have sympathized with them but from the conviction that the disruption of the Union is a great gain to this country. It is true that our interest in the establishment of Southern independence is only second to that of the Southerners themselves; but so far from this influencing public opinion, it has never been adequately appreciated. Had we known how large was our stake in secession and how much we had to lose by a continuation of hostilities, so far from refusing recognition, the British Government impelled by an irresistible pressure, would have long ago taken steps to put an end to one of the most bloody and certainly most useless wars that has ever been waged. We are beginning to understand that union means aggression on our commerce and territory, and that separation is a guarantee for the peace of Canada, and promises an extension of our trade. A few months hence we shall have thoroughly learnt another important lesson. Two years ago, when it was manifest that Mr. Seward's promise of putting down the "rebellion" in ninety days was mere braggadocio, and that it was just as likely that the South would conquer the North as that the North would subdue the South, great anxiety was felt for the future of Lancashire. Then to quiet our fears and to confirm us in our policy of inactivity, it was whispered by the Federal agents that England should rejoice at the prospect of the American cotton supply being cut off for ever. What was to prevent our becoming growers as well as manufacturers? Why should not our Eastern Empire send us all the raw material we need? No doubt India had been tried and found wanting, but high prices were to overcome all difficulties. Mr. Bright, who made his reputation by declaiming against the folly and iniquity of any Government interference between the producer and consumer, has boldly advocated a protective policy with respect to the growth of cotton in India. If ever the end would justify the means, here is an instance. The prosperity of Lancashire to be assured, and simultaneously our vast dependency to be flooded with wealth, by which we, the dominant race, would be more enriched than the natives. Thus were many persons reconciled to the prospect of a long war in America. It was a dazzling vision, but as utterly baseless as it was brilliant and fascinating.

We have before us a pamphlet—"The Cotton Trade of India," which deserves a wide circulation. The author, Mr. Samuel Smith, of Liverpool, therein records what information he gleaned during a tour in India in the spring of 1863, undertaken for the purpose of ascertaining whether that country could supply the place of America. Mr. Smith cannot be accused of partisanship. He seems to us to fight as hard as he can against the inevitable conclusion to be derived from his well-authenticated and careful statements. When he tells us that "India is not able as a cotton-growing country to supply the place of America," he adds, "but though India cannot be a substitute for America, she may be a valuable supplement." A glance at the reasons for the first assertion will show that there is little foundation for the second.

Mr. Smith estimates the present production of India at 1,750,000 bales, and the question, for the moment disregarding cost and quality, is to what extent this quantity can be increased. Until now very high prices have not been nearly so efficacious as expected. We have been told that this is owing to the want of railroads, and to the peculiar tenure by which land is held. If the profit on cotton were fractional, and depended on the cheapness of transport, the construction of railroads might exercise a vast influence on production; but the profit has been so large and so easily realized by the grower, that although the development of railroad enterprise would bring the crops sooner to market, it would do little or nothing in increasing the production. The doctrine of free trade which Mr. Bright has abjured, that production is entirely dependent on demand, is thoroughly sound. Commerce will always find a convenient outlet, but providing a convenient outlet will not create a commerce. As to the second point, the Indian farmer is in an enviable position. He is virtually a freeholder. The tax he pays on his land is not more than a fifth, and in many instances not more than a tenth of the value of the crops thereof. Surely Mr. Bright is wrong in saying that this state of things gives the ryot a claim on the Government for protection. Further the ryot is now out of debt, and being no longer under the dominion of the money-lender, can and does sell his produce at the fair market rate. Where the tenancy is not direct from the Government, and where the zemindar intervenes, the ryot pays a higher rent; but even then his profits are proportioned to his total returns. We cannot expect, therefore, to materially increase the production of cotton in India by changing the tenure of land or by making railroads.

Without dwelling on details and the many difficulties that under any circumstances would make it the work of a generation at least to develop the culture of cotton in India, it is sufficient for our purpose to prove that as compared to America it never can become a cotton-producing country. The climate is against it, and no Act of Parliament that Mr. Bright can devise will change that. The Indian cotton is inferior, and this after many costly experiments to effect an improvement. American planters have been at work and failed. The most ingenious contrivances have been perseveringly tried, for the prize was magnificent, and they have been tried in vain. American seed has been imported, but in the few districts where it has become acclimatized it has still yielded a crop altogether inferior in quality and quantity. In a word, Indian cotton is not so good and costs more than American cotton.

We may be told that these objections are trite, and that it was a waste of time and energy for Mr. Smith to go to India to prove that that country could not compete with America, since that had been long since demonstrated by the supremacy of American cotton in our market. We may be reminded that the issue is not whether India can compete with America, but whether America, being out of the field, India can or cannot supply her place. It will, we imagine, be very hard to persuade the ryot that his old competitor is permanently disposed of. Even the sanguine Yankee does not dream of being able to exterminate the peculiar climate of the South as well as her people, and whenever the war ends, the cultivation of cotton will be resumed, though perhaps to a limited extent. New Orleans will again take the highest position, and Surats will only find purchasers by a concession of price. But undoubtedly the war has severely interfered with the American supply; every day peace is postponed adds to the difficulty of resuming the culture on an adequate scale, and at best many years must elapse before we can get cotton at the same price and in the same quantity as before the commencement of the war. In the meantime can India keep our mills at work?

Mr. Smith adduces very cogent arguments to prove that it cannot do so, and except the Anglo-Federal faction, no one will pretend to dispute his conclusion. But if India is to do even a little more than formerly, the unscrupulous Anglo-Federals themselves must admit that the stimulus of high price is indispensable. Let cotton fall to the normal price, and the ryot will turn his attention to other crops, for cotton will cease to be profitable. Now we all know that our staple industry became so gigantic on account of the cheapness of our fabrics. Dearthness invariably brings about a diminution of consumption. It is so with bread and potatoes, and it will even in a greater degree be so with cotton cloths. It is infinitely easier to stint our backs than our stomachs. In England the consumption of cotton is about ten pounds per head of the population, whilst in some European countries it is not more than five pounds per head. We mention this as an indication of the extent of possible reduction of the consumption of cotton under the pressure of dearthness. The present abnormal price cannot be maintained, and unless India can grow cotton as cheaply it cannot replace the American supply. It is an indisputable fact that India cannot do so, and therefore cannot save our staple industry from decay.

We have gradually drifted into this state of affairs, and we as yet fail to realise the situation. On Friday last the Times congratulated its readers upon 5,000 Lancashire operatives having in one month emigrated or found other employment; and the next day our contemporary wound up an article on British Columbia by saying—"We have on former occasions expressed our belief that Lancashire is now overpeopled. We do not see any reasonable prospect of the re-employment of all the half-million hands at acceptable wages." What a profound sensation this assertion would have caused at the beginning of the war! It means that our operatives will have to labour where their valuable skill will be of no avail—that our splendid human machines must be employed in less remunerative work, or emigrate to other lands. It means that our cotton trade is permanently crippled, and that India cannot replace the American cotton crop. Verily the masterly inactivity of our Government has borne much fruit. And let us give the Yankees their due. They have failed in subjugating the South, but they have crippled the English cotton trade without the risk of a war with England. Never did a nation pay a heavier price for neutrality. The dearest war we ever waged was cheap in comparison.

LETTER FROM RICHMOND.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

RICHMOND, July 11.

Vicksburg has fallen. The long siege was brought to a close by the capitulation of the garrison on the 4th of July, a result doubly gratifying to the enemy because of the capture without further loss of life to their army, and because of the coincidence of the event with the national anniversary, a day memorable as associated with liberties, dearly bought, which have been lost to the Yankees and their heirs for ever. The terms of the capitulation were highly favourable to the garrison, as the heroic and obstinate defence of the place reflects the greatest credit upon General Pemberton. The officers marched out with side-arms, and were allowed to retain their horses and private property. The shattered regiments bore the colours which they had defended so gloriously, colours blackened with powder smoke and riddled with balls. Officers and men were both paroled on the spot and allowed to come over to our lines.

As you may well suppose, this untoward result of the protracted league of Vicksburg has created here a feeling of the bitterest regret. While many had expected the announcement at any time these four weeks, the public mind was unprepared for it, so confidently had we been assured that the defences were unweakened and the supplies abundant. It turned out that immense breaches had been made in the fortifications, and that the brave defenders of the town were almost in the last stage of weakness and exhaustion.

Of course there are various speculations here as to the parties upon whom the blame should rest. By some General Johnston is held wholly responsible. He had a large army, they say, and did nothing whatever to relieve the suffering garrison. He urged General Pemberton to fight the battle of Edward's Ferry against the latter's counsel, and held himself aloof from the field, when his presence had been worth half-a-dozen regiments. He has since manifested a criminal indifference, arising out of an overweening sensitiveness with regard to his rank, to the critical situation of Vicksburg, while yet the siege might have been raised. Others visit General Pemberton with their displeasure. He was a Northern man, they say. He never would have been placed in so important a command had he not been a favourite of the President's. His inefficiency had reduced Vicksburg to an indefensible condition before General Johnston had arrived on the spot. Others, again, declare that the Administration was at fault in not having properly victualled Vicksburg, knowing well that it would be subjected to a close investment. Non nostrum tantus. Such criminations are profitless in view of the stronghold of the Mississippi in the enemy's possession. I am happy to believe that they are not in the mouths of the people at large. They remember with pride and gratitude the shining services of Joseph E. Johnston in the first year of the war; they recognise the heroism and devotion displayed by Pemberton during these past seven weeks of weary vigils within the beleaguered limits of Vicksburg, and they have not yet withdrawn their confidence from the Government which they are willing to believe has done all that it could do for the public defence. It is said of the Pasha of Egypt, that when the first accident occurred on the railway between Alexandria and Cairo, he was exceeding wroth, and ordered the heads of all the officers of the company to be stuck up the morning after on the front of the Cairo station. The Yankees have acted on the principle since the beginning of the war, officially decapitating their commanders-in-chief after every disaster to their arms; and however effectual such sharp practice may have proved in preventing accidents on the Egyptian railway, it has certainly failed altogether to put a stop to Yankee defeats. Our people are just, even in their most poignant sorrow over this latest reverse. It will be time enough to punish the culpable when a proper investigation has shown upon whom lies the fault; or if you please, the criminal, when they know who has committed the crime.

As to the effect which the loss of Vicksburg will have on the Confederate cause, no one regards it as fatal or even remediless. It is not certain that it will secure henceforth the uninterrupted navigation of the Mississippi. It turns out as I had feared, that the "juggling fiend" in the office of the telegraph at Jackson paltered with us in his statement that our troops were in possession of Milliken's Bend; but there are other points on the river at which we may give the enemy trouble, and for the present the navigation is safe only for iron-clad gunboats, which could pass the batteries before Vicksburg had been taken by General Grant. The only certain result of the capitulation will be the indefinite prolongation of the war—more strife, more ravage, more waste of treasure, more empty sleeves, more artificial legs and wooden stumps, more early graves of the young and gifted, more bitter tears of the widow and orphan. Sad, sad thought, inscrutable decree of the All-wise Ruler of kings and presidents!

Our intelligence is not full or satisfactory from Jackson since the capitulation of Vicksburg, but we know that Grant is moving upon that town with his whole force, and that skirmishings have occurred between his advanced guard and the outermost regiments of Johnston's army. The inhabitants of Jackson are flying precipitately from their homes, feeling well assured that the triumph of the enemy will be the utter destruction of the town and all that it contains. General Johnston has 40,000 men in his command, and it is computed that Grant's force cannot exceed 70,000 men; and in a general engagement these odds, judging from past experience, are not absolutely conclusive of Yankee victory. It is hoped that, should Grant give Johnston battle in the open field, he may yet measurably retrieve the great disaster which he was powerless to prevent.

Events of the utmost importance have taken place in Pennsylvania, the accounts of which, as given in the New York and Philadelphia papers, might induce you to believe that the Confederate Government was non-extant, did you not know with how large a pinch of salt you are to receive the statements of the Lincoln press. On Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, July 1st, 2nd, and 3rd, there was heavy fighting at Gettysburg, in which the Yankees claim that their new Commander-in-Chief, General George G. Meade, gained a glorious victory over General Lee, completely annihilating his army and putting the veterans of Jackson and Longstreet to what "Fighting Joe Hooker" calls "ignominious flight." Strange as it may seem, we have not as yet received full details of these three days' operations, but we know enough to be assured that Meade's victory consisted in losing his fortifications at Gettysburg, after a long and bloody struggle, in which both sides suffered severely, and that the ignominious flight was a voluntary abandonment of the works as untenable by General Lee the day after they were carried, and the subsequent withdrawal of his army to Hagerstown, where, at last accounts, it was massed in very strong position, the men in fine temper and excellent spirits. We are ignorant of General Lee's reasons for falling back upon Hagerstown. Whether he found his base line seriously menaced, or whether the question of supplies was paramount, we cannot say, but it is significant that Hagerstown is nearer to Washington City by fifteen miles than Gettysburg. Many wounded officers who participated in the three days' battle at Gettysburg have reached the hospitals in this city, and they represent that the conflict on Friday, the 3rd of July, was very sanguinary; that the enemy fought with desperation and repulsed our troops in the attack on their entrenched heights several times, but that these were finally triumphantly occupied by us, and with this result the battle terminated. Several thousand prisoners were taken on both sides. It is claimed, however, that General Lee did not lose a gun. His movement to Hagerstown was conducted with the most perfect order. Of the casualties we know little with absolute certainty. The brave General Barksdale was killed. It is said that we have also to mourn the loss of Generals Kemper, Armistead, and Garnett. Among the wounded we are pained by the report of so long a list of Generals as Jones, Beth, Pettigrew, Hampton, and Hood. On the Federal side, Generals Reynolds, Zook, and Paul were killed. General Sickles had his leg amputated on the field, and is reported as having died of his wounds.

Telegrams were received yesterday and to-day, announcing that there had been skirmishes in force at Williamsburg and Boonsboro', in which the enemy had been driven off. These are but the preludes to another great burst of the awful music of battle between the two armies, the echoes of which may reach you in Bouverie-street before this writing arrives at that distant point. We have no fears for General Lee. He may not be able to carry out his plans to the full extent, but he will baffle the attempts of the enemy to cut off his army, and may possibly offset the reverse at Vicksburg by a success of which the enemy little dreams.

The attack on Charleston was renewed by the iron-clad fleet yesterday, and has been continued to-day, in co-operation with a land force disembarked on Morris' Island. The main fire of the fleet is understood to have been directed upon Fort Sumter, so far with little damage; on the island there was a spirited combat in which our loss is reported at 125 killed and wounded. Up to the moment of writing, the enemy has been foiled both on land and water. The attack was made in consequence of an impression on the part of the Yankees that Beauregard had left Charleston to join Lee, and all the Confederate troops there had been withdrawn to strengthen the army beyond the Potomac.

A correspondence of great interest is published in the daily papers of this morning between the President and Vice-President of the Confederate States, and between the latter and the Federal officers in command at Fortress Monroe. It cannot have escaped your notice that as long ago as the 13th May, two Confederate officers, Messrs. Corbin and McGraw, who had been sent by General Humphrey Marshall to open recruiting stations in Kentucky, were executed by order of General Burnside at Sandusky city, Ohio. Information of this fact having been received by the Confederate Government, notice was given to the Government of the United States that retaliation would be made upon two Federal officers to be chosen by lot from among the prisoners held in this city. Thereupon the cartel of exchange was wholly set at naught in the retention by the United States authorities of all the Confederate officers in their hands, and the threat that should the President retaliate for the murder committed by Burnside they would hang two for one. On Monday last, the 6th instant, a painful solemnity was witnessed in the Libby prison in this city, the casting of lots for the two Federal officers who were to suffer for Burnside's barbarity, and the doom fell on Captain Henry W. Sawyer, of the 1st New Jersey Infantry, and Captain John Flynn, of the 51st Indiana Regiment. Three days before this selection had been made, the President, with the view of obtaining something like a definite understanding with the United States' Government with regard to the future conduct of the war, as to the protection of private property and non-combatants, and of preventing us if possible from drifting into a strife unrestrained by the usages of civilized warfare and the sentiments of a Christian morality, had empowered Vice-President Stephens to proceed as Commissioner to Washington City for the purpose of holding an interview there with such person as President Lincoln should delegate to meet him. Mr. Stephens proceeded as far as Newport's News, and after having been detained there forty-eight hours, in order that the United States' officers might communicate with President Lincoln, was informed that he would not be allowed to visit Washington, but that he must resort to the ordinary channels of communication between the United States' Government and what the Yankee Naval Commander in Hampton Roads was pleased to call "the insurgents." Mr. Stephens has, therefore, returned to Richmond, and the correspondence is published for the enlightenment of Europe. The letter of instructions from President Davis to Mr. Stephens is beautifully characteristic of the man. It is expressed with that striking simplicity that belongs to all his writings, and it overflows with a Christian humanity that must win for him the respect of every honest foe, the love of every disinterested foreign reader. Not upon us shall rest the blame, if this war, waged on our part in defence of the dearest principle for which men have ever contended—the right of self-government, shall blaze out into a fury of hell, a whirlwind of fiendish passions, wherein all restraint, all mercy, all forbearance, shall be withered and lost in the fierce heat and fearful vortex of human wrath and satanic rage.

The recent rains have caused a flood in all the rivers of Eastern Virginia and North Carolina. Much injury has been done to the wheat crops, cut and standing, on the Dan River, in the counties of Halifax and Charlotte, in this State. The James River, which was above the wharves yesterday, has subsided to-day to its usual bed. The weather is warm and sultry.

RICHMOND, July 4.

Five weeks have elapsed since the date of my last letter—weeks which have wholly changed the position of affairs in the American war. The arrears of my correspondence are so heavy that I cannot undertake to bring up fully the record of events in this excited interval of time. A rapid glance at what has been done is all that I can attempt.

The two matters of greatest moment just now are the invasion of Pennsylvania and the leaguer of Vicksburg. Let us speak of these from the Richmond standpoint, though this is not the best, so restricted are our means of obtaining trustworthy and definite information.

The movement of General Lee's army from the position it so long held near Fredericksburg, through the Valley of Virginia, across the Potomac and the narrow strip of Maryland into the enemy's territory was accomplished with the most admirable order and celerity. The cavalry of General Stuart kept the enemy employed, while the columns of Ewell, Longstreet, and Hill made the passage of the river without opposition. Stuart fought the enemy at various points with various success, at Brandy Station, where the combat was long, obstinate, and bloody, where the gallant Frank Hampton and Williams were killed, and General W. H. F. Lee was wounded, but where the Yankees lost heavily and were driven back; at Aldie, where his victory was decided and indisputable, and at Upperville, where the advantage was as clearly with the other side. The infantry columns in their advance met with slight resistance. General Jubal A. Early's Division stormed and carried the fortifications at Winchester on the 14th of June, and General Edward Johnson's Division entered Martinsburg the following day, capturing a large quantity of stores and ammunition. At Winchester the spoils were immense. The prisoners taken in the two towns numbered nearly 7,000, among whom were about 300 officers. All of them were brought to this city. Simultaneously with these operations Generals Jenkins and Imboden wrought great destruction on the line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad as far west as Cumberland. Our advices from General Lee's army, since it crossed the boundary, have been altogether from Northern sources via Fortress Monroe. We learn that Chambersburg, York, and Carlisle have been occupied, and the latest account represents that Harrisburg is invested. Strict orders have been given that private property shall be respected and non-combatant citizens unmolested by our troops; but this does not mean that Pennsylvania shall not support the army while it remains within her borders. General Early has issued his proclamation to the people living in the neighbourhood of York, calling upon them for $150,000 in money, and adequate supplies of provisions, and warning them that if his requisition is not obeyed, he will enforce it. Retributive justice would seem to demand that upon entering Yankee territory our troops should have marked their way with fire, laying every vestige of civilization in ruins, and sparing neither age nor sex in the universal sweep of the sword; but inhumanities such as these are abhorrent to the Southern character, and whatever may be the result of this campaign, we shall have no reason to blush for the conduct of our army. It rejoices us to know that they are now, for the first time since the beginning of the war, enjoying an abundant commissariat in a land of rich pastures and overflowing granaries, and that they are likely soon to exchange that tattered state of wardrobe which has hitherto been so unseemly in Northern eyes, for habiliments better suited to the conquerors of the "greatest people on the face of the earth."

The consternation produced among the Yankees by the advance of General Lee's army has been almost ludicrous. To the confines of New England, nervous people have been visited by forebodings of the wrath to come, and a consciousness of what they have deserved at our hands fills their souls with the direst apprehensions. Meanwhile, a great stir among the militia, rapid organization of new regiments of raw recruits, wildly inconsistent theories of the proper plan of defence, bitter reproaches exchanged between Jersey men and Pennsylvanians, paralysis of the Cabinet at Washington, positively last appearance of "Fighting Joe Hooker" as Commander-in-Chief, third grand demonstration of those precious popinjays in patent-leather boots, the immortal "Seventh Regiment of the National Guard, New York State Militia," in coming forward "to repel invasion," and most touching submission to the decrees of fate on the part of Greeley, who serenely declares that if General Lee can whip the Yankees, "so be it!" The comments of the Northern press on the invasion of their territory remind us of nothing so much as the dialogue which Goldsmith tells us, in his Citizen of the World, was overheard between a debtor through the grate of his prison and a soldier outside, on the all-absorbing topic of the invasion of England by the French. "If the French should conquer," said the prisoner, "what would become of English liberty?" "May the Devil sink my soul in flames," replied the soldier, "if the French should come over, but our religion would be utterly undone." Victims themselves of the most degrading tyranny on earth, the secular, Satanic, and religious press of the North look upon the success of the Southern army as striking a death-blow to American freedom, and the blessed expansion of New England ideas of virtue and morality.

What General Lee's plans are, in his present military enterprise, will be fully made known in a very short time, and it would be idle to speculate upon them. It may be safely assumed that so sagacious a commander has not set in motion an army of 100,000 men, which has been made as nearly perfect a machine for warlike purposes as any similar organization of modern times, without having carefully considered and matured his purpose, and we entertain the strongest confidence that results will establish its wisdom and practicability.

From Vicksburg we have highly encouraging accounts, though our means of regular information is altogether unsatisfactory. For days in succession we hear nothing at all, and then we are annoyed by a column of confused, and often contradictory telegrams. The agent of the Associated Press at Jackson is a sphinx. Whether his oracles are uttered under the inspiration of whisky, or whether he deliberately trifles with the understanding of a long suffering public is of no consequence, it is enough that he never deviates into sense in his electric communications. It is certain that General Kirby Smith has possession of Milliken's Bend on the Mississippi, and the statement has been made that his connection is uninterrupted with Vicksburg by water, thus enabling him to throw both men and supplies into the city, but this rests upon no official authority. The operations of the enemy in that quarter have been further perplexed in the capture of their strong position at Berwick's Bay by a force under General Dick Taylor, which stormed the works and carried them at the point of the bayonet. More than a thousand prisoners, ten heavy guns, and a large amount thus fell into our hands. It has now been forty-eight days since the army of Grant commenced what they termed the "hermetical siege" of Vicksburg, assisted by the gunboats on the river. The bombardment from the land side and from the fleet has been unparalleled in modern warfare, save alone in the long-continued and desolating fire thrown into Sebastopol by the Allies. It is computed that half-a-million of shells had been rained upon the devoted city from the gunboats up to the 13th of June. Accounts have doubtless reached you of the change in Grant's plan of operations from a direct assault upon the works to a series of regular approaches with the aid of the sappers and miners. In the sanguinary engagements which took place before he gave up the hope of carrying Vicksburg by storm, it is admitted that he lost 40,000 men, and an equal number is thought to have fallen since by the hand of disease, though the latter estimate is somewhat conjectural and may be extravagant. A large fleet of steamers, however, had been employed in carrying off the sick, and 960 victims of the fever were conveyed to Illinois on a single one of these moving hospitals. At the latest accounts from Vicksburg, our men engaged in countermining were so near the Yankee workmen underground that they could distinctly hear the sound of their picks. We are wholly uninformed with regard to the prospective movements or designs of General Johnston, but he is now in command of 40,000 men with his head-quarters at Jackson, and it is believed that he will yet raise the siege of Vicksburg by striking a blow at Grant exactly at the proper moment.

Advices from Tennessee give us reason to believe that the long period of inaction on the part of the armies of Bragg and Rosecrans is about to terminate. Rosecrans, it is said, attempted a flank movement on Bragg's right wing, but fell back on learning that the force at Chattanooga was ready to meet him. Bragg will probably not offer battle, but occupies a strong position on the railroad between Tullahoma and Decherd, where he is confident of repelling any attack that may be made upon him.

General Dix, who commands at Fortress Monroe, has sought during the past week to steal the laurels which M'Dowell, McClellan, Pope, Burnside, and Hooker failed to gather at the head of their immense armies, in the capture of Richmond. Believing that the departure of General Lee had stripped Virginia entirely of Confederate troops, he collected hastily all the Yankee soldiers he could gather from Norfolk and Suffolk, and sent a force under General Keyes, variously estimated at from ten to twenty-two thousand men, to West Point and the White House for the immediate reduction of the capital. From the White House, the cavalry of this command made a raid on Thursday, the 25th of June, upon the Central Railroad, overpowering the guard at the bridge over the South Anna River, which structure they burned. Continuing their ride through the county of Hanover, they visited the family mansion of W. F. Wickham, Esq., where they took prisoner General W. H. F. Lee (son of General R. E. Lee), still suffering acutely from the wound received in the fight at Brandy Station, and brutally carried him off from the ministrations of his wife in the stolen carriage of Mr. Wickham. A chivalrous enemy would have paroled a gallant officer, prostrated by an honest wound, on the spot. Not so did the Yankee cavalry. They took General Lee back with them to the White House, where he might see the ruins of his own dwelling, which they destroyed by fire, and it is believed have sent him to Washington.

His life may be lost through their barbarity. On Saturday the 27th, information was received by the Government to the effect that the enemy was advancing upon Richmond, and a joint proclamation of the President and the Governor of Virginia, issued simultaneously with an address of the Mayor of the City, called the whole male population to arms. It was a levy en masse. The manner in which the citizens responded to the summons reflects upon them the highest honour. Early the next morning, while the noble women of Richmond, calm and undaunted, were gathering together in the houses of God to pray for the protection of their homes, their sons, husbands, brothers were collecting at the appointed place of rendezvous, with their muskets on their shoulders, to fight for the same. Ever since, the entire male population has been under arms. The houses of business are closed. The marts of trade are hushed, the haunts of vice are hushed into decorum. Everything sordid seems to have faded out in the intense light of patriotism, everything vile has slunk away into the darkness it loves. A solemn stillness broods over all. There are no non-combatants in Richmond. Merchants, attorneys, judges, ministers of the Gospel, young and old, eminent and obscure, are to be seen in the ranks. Up to this moment, no battle has been fought between considerable numbers, but on Thursday, the 2nd July, the brigade of General Jenkins, of North Carolina, moved upon the enemy, who were strongly posted at Crump's Farm, four miles South-west of Tunstall's Station, in New Kent County, about eighteen miles below the city, and drove them rapidly before them to Tunstall's, the Yankees running like deer. So swift was the flight that but small damage was done the retreating body. They lost ten killed, their wounded they managed to carry off, and eleven prisoners fell into our hands. To-day it is reported that the main body is in motion towards Hanover Junction, with the view of destroying both the Central and Fredericksburg railroads, and it is possible that a fight may come off in that neighbourhood before this letter leaves the country.

I have spoken well of the citizens of Richmond for the alacrity with which they sprang to arms at the call of the Government. The same spirit of patriotic devotion to the cause animates the people of the country districts. A writer in the Sentinel mentions that among the farmers who had come up to Gordonsville, a few days ago, to repel a threatened raid of the enemy, was the Hon. W. C. Rives, venerable for years, wisdom, and learning, who was trudging through the mud with his neighbours, in the humble position of a private in the ranks.

The loss of the Confederate steamer Atlanta, in the Savannah River was a serious misfortune, but it is not true that the enemy took her in excellent condition, or that they will ever be able to make of her a serviceable vessel of war. The Brooke guns, which constituted her armament, will prove the most valuable part of their prize. The destruction of the Tacony finds some compensation in the gallantry with which it was done by the heroic Captain Reed, and his subsequent achievement in seizing and destroying the Revenue cutter, Caleb Cushing, in the harbour of Portland. That terrible fellow Semmes, with the Alabama, is still lighting up the waves of the wide Atlantic by the conflagration of Yankee commerce. When last heard from, he had seventy-four chronometers hanging up in his cabin. He keeps the chronometers of his prizes as the veteran fox-hunter keeps the brushes of his game, or an Indian brave of the Far West the scalps of those he has slain in combat. The Confederate navy has been augmented within the past fortnight by the successful launch at our Richmond wharves of two gunboats of the Merrimac pattern, which, when clad with their iron armour, will prove formidable engines of river and harbour defence. They bear the names of Virginia and Chickahominy.

Another solemn farce has been recently enacted at Wheeling in the inauguration of a new Governor to succeed the immortal Pierpont. His name is Boreman, or Boorman, but I have seen no one who can tell anything of his antecedents, or whether, indeed, he has any.

We have had copious rains of late, which have injured the wheat harvest in Virginia, but to the same extent benefited the growing crops of corn and oats.

THE IMPENDING CONFLICT BETWEEN FEDERAL AND STATE AUTHORITIES.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

NEW YORK, July 27.

It was true, as I wrote you, that the United States' Provost-Marshal helped the State authorities in the quieting of the late riots, by the publication of a notice that the draft was suspended. The impression was conveyed that there would be some understanding between the War Department and the State Authorities, for the determination of the legality of the Conscription Act before it should be again enforced against the sense of the community and the repugnance of the labouring classes, which had been so unmistakably manifested. That illusion was very speedily dissipated. Orders were received on Saturday from Washington, directing the draft to be proceeded with without delay. The interval of quiet has been improved by the Government in strengthening itself by concentrating a considerable body of troops here. There has been, too, a change of commanders. Major-General Dix has been sent to take command in the department. Dix is a New Yorker, a man of energy and capacity, and was last year ranked with the Conservative party in this State, having been a competitor of Governor Seymour for the democratic nomination for Governor of the State. What he is now it may be difficult to tell. His politics have been vacillating, and his selection for an appointment likely to bring him into conflict with the Executive authorities of his own State is not a favourable omen. The Administration is not in a temper to have selected any man for the post who is not of its policy, and its policy is proclaimed to be that of force. The places of drafting will be strictly guarded by such ample forces that no impression could be made by any multitude of the unorganized labourers, if there should be an attempt of the kind made, which is no longer probable. The Governor has also been busy in collecting a considerable body of State troops, which will be at his own disposal. The drafting will be effected without any serious disturbance. But the drafting presents no point of collision. It designates the persons on whom the conscription falls—summoning them to service comes after. By the act, as the Government construes it, the fact of being drafted makes a man a soldier of the United States. He is there notified to appear for duty after a certain number of days, and on failure to appear without having proved his exemption, furnished a substitute, or paid $300, he may be arrested, tried by court-martial as a deserter, and shot. The attempt to seize drafted men who fail to report and refuse to pay the exemption, will be the point of contact between the opposing parties. Individual resistance will be easily overcome, for State and city functionaries will co-operate with the Federal authorities to maintain order. But the opposition to the Act may at that point take a much more imposing shape, in the interposition of the courts of the State to protect the liberties of the inhabitants of the State, and the resolution of the Governor of the State to protect the courts in their jurisdiction. The unconstitutionality of the law is affirmed by the best lawyers of the State. Governor Seymour is of that opinion, and has pledged himself to have the question tested by the courts, and to sustain the courts in their judgment. An effort was made to have a decision on the Act—in the question of enrolment—and a writ of habeas corpus was tried out to test the validity of the imprisonment of a man for refusing to be enrolled. The Government officers evaded that issue by discharging the man, and making return to the writ that he was not in custody. The enrolments are over; the drafting is going on, and there is no legal ground for interposition until a case is made by the arrest of some person for refusing to appear. Governor Seymour in his proclamation against the rioters last week, assured the peaceful opponents of the draft that an "appeal to the courts" is the only opposition which can be "allowed;" and added this significant promise:—"The right of every citizen to make such an appeal will be maintained, and the decision of the courts must be respected and obeyed by rulers and people." If the courts of New York pronounce the Act to be null as unconstitutional, the Governor must forbid its execution within the State, until that decision is reversed by some authority which the State acknowledges to be competent.

But there is another act of Congress which the President may interpose at this point; but the collision will not thereby be avoided. It is the Indemnity Act of the last Congress to which the objection of being unconstitutional is made with as much confidence, as against the Conscription Act. This Act empowers the United States' courts to take jurisdiction immediately out of the hands of the State courts, and to suspend the habeas corpus Act in enumerated cases; of which opposition to the Conscription Act may, in the latitude of assumptions at Washington, be construed to be one, even when it takes the shape of opposition through the courts. The whole of this Act has been denounced as a gross usurpation of power, subversive of the rightful jurisdiction of the States, and the attempt to put it in force for the purpose of suppressing the appeal of the citizen sustained by the judiciary of the State, or his right to appeal to the judiciary of his State in a matter of personal liberty, will constitute a separate ground of conflict which the State authorities will meet as promptly as the Conscription Act. There are instructions out, and published, as to the other States, which imply very distinctly that the Federal authorities mean to 'destroy' State writs; and there is a case in this State of the refusal of the commanding officer at Fort Lafayette to recognise a writ issued in Keys county, and this course of proceeding is under advisement with the officials at Albany.

The course of probable proceeding is this:—If the Government officers refuse to appear before the State courts, or refuse to respect State process, the instruction of the Government will not be allowed as a plea in bar. Attachments may issue against the parties, and where that is neglected or resisted, the authority of the State will be invoked to support the Judiciary; and hence a direct conflict of jurisdiction and a collision of forces. If the Indemnity Act be set up to subvert the State jurisdiction, the constitutionality of that Act will be tested in the same way. The suspension of the habeas corpus, under the same enactment, will only vary the form and change the point of resistance. The State authorities, to be consistent with their declarations, will support the State courts and defend the State jurisdiction. If they are assailed they must defend themselves—force against force. The Conscription Act being involved in their conflicts, a call for militia to sustain the State against military aggression from Washington would be hailed with immense enthusiasm, and bring out a large majority of the able-bodied men of the State, glad to have their intense hatred of the law and the measures of the Administration organized into legal opposition.

These are the prospects if the draft be persevered in, unless one or the other of the parties now fronting each other with such apparently irreconcilable antagonism shall recede from its position very soon; the time for retreat or compromise is reduced to days. To my understanding there is no possibility of escape from the issue; and on the part of the Administration, no desire to show it. I might say the same of the State authorities, but in the history of the past two years so much of public liberty and private rights has been surrendered to the Administration under the plea of military necessity, that it is not safe to expect anything to be withheld which the military Government is sufficiently arrogant to ask and bold enough to insist upon. Besides, it is charged by those who have watched its course most closely, with designs, in pressing Federal authority to its utmost limit, which have no reference to military results, in the carrying on or closing of the war, but are purely political and partisan. They find proofs of this purpose in the utter uselessness of perseverance in the draft for any advantage or admitted necessity of the war. The exhibitions of popular hostility to the Conscription have been so many and so violent, that the property of the country is alarmed into a tendency to make any contributions by voluntary aid for the engaging of volunteers. The New York city councils appropriated $2,500,000 by a unanimous vote, to soothe the exasperation in the city by buying off unwilling conscripts, and paying bounty to volunteers. Wall-street is so terrified as to be equally ready to pay liberally to have the execution of the act avoided; and so in all places where men of property have felt the presence of the unseen strength of a deep popular passion. If the Government would suspend the execution of the act, which is entirely within its discretion, its enactments not being compulsory or even directory, but merely enabling, the rich men and the municipalities would charge themselves with paying bounties to recruits, provided always that the courts shall not in the meantime decide that men cannot be constitutionally constrained to fight against their will, nor to fee others to fight unless they please; in which case the zeal for contributions would fall off suddenly. The argument of terror has gone far enough to be useful—if pushed further it may end in the failure to get either money or men. There is another sense in which the persistence in pushing the draft to collision is useless. On the showing of the Administration, they have been boasting that the recent successes of the Federal arms are indicative of a speedy closing of the war; that the Western armies are triumphant; and the Confederacy nearly overwhelmed everywhere. If this be half true, there is surely no need for exceptional measures to obtain large additional forces. Too much stress, however, need not be laid upon this view, for it is not certain that the Administration believes the bulletins of its own War Department, or is so much satisfied with the decisive character of the recent results as its organs affect to be.

The Administration has partisans in the public Press, who are thought not merely to be in its confidence, but to be almost dictators of its policy, who cry aloud for the sternest enforcement of the draft through all consequences, to vindicate its own power, and crush and punish all opposition. They say that if, in order to do this, it be necessary to drunch the streets of New York with the blood of thousands—as in a city taken by assault,—it must be done. Better that New York should be "wiped out" than that the law should be successfully resisted. It is very true that riots must be sternly repressed and authority vindicated; there is no safety else for any man's life or property. But let us discriminate. The riots have been put down by the same authorities which are still in power, and still competent and willing to repress all attempts at disorderly opposition to any officer of the law. But these authorities also plant themselves on legal grounds for opposing the execution of an Act of Congress where it shall be pronounced to be null as not law, and to maintain their jurisdiction over the whole subject until overruled in legal form. It is to this species of resistance that the organs of the party at Washington apply the designation of rioting, and it is to this point of conflict that they are urging the Government, with the strong outside conviction that they are preparing the public mind for what the Government has decided upon already. There is no longer a mob, but in the place of a riotous multitude there is a great State in all its organized forms as a separate political community, which the Counsellors of the Administration would have to be treated as a mob and ruled by the bayonet, and the Administration has apparently rejected the dictation which it is suspected of having prompted.

The idea which is at the basis of these violent proceedings is, that there is really a revolution already effected, by the Southern separation and the events of the war, in the principles by which Government is hereafter to be administered, and that it is the function of the party in power to fix, as far as it can, upon the present forms its own ideas of what a new Government should be, and to provide by every means within its reach, civil, political, and military, in order to retain authority in its own hands. The success of the plans of the Administrative party will establish a revolution in the old Government more complete and radical than that which would have been effected if the demands of the Southern States for a revision of the terms of Union had been listened to or even with prudence conceded. In either case the original elements of self-government and all personal and public liberties would have survived intact under the protection of organized local Governments, and a thousand affinities and interests would have drawn all the States together into another Union, more powerful and more permanent; or two Confederacies, similar, but not the same, could have run parallel paths in peace. But the South was outraged to madness, spurned, and driven into separation. In the fury to destroy self-government everything has been given into the hands of the Administration, and it has so used these lavish concessions, North and South, that in no possible event of the war can the Union and the Constitution be restored as they were. If the Southern States secure independence the balance wheel is lost by which the movements of the old system were mainly regulated. There has been always in the North a large body of men to whom a splendid national Government with a strong supremacy over the States, with a heavy national debt, and costly national establishments to bind the interests of capital everywhere with those of a powerful centralization, has been the object of constant desire. The opposite theory of limited powers in a general Government, and the support of the State Governments in the possession of all powers for internal protection, has, however, prevailed in the government of the Union since the Federal administration, and mainly by the support of the South. In the whirlwind of faction and fanaticism which brought the Republican party into power, the consummation of the first complete overthrow of these principles was effected. The South found itself doomed to destruction by the new action impressed upon the Government, and took up the reserved rights of self-government for its own protection. The North, in its lust for conquest, rushed to arms, and inaugurated this horrible war, and after two years of a desolating strife against the Southern people, and a surrender into the hands of men in power of unlimited means and unchecked will,—here is the position in which they find this once great country. The general Government has absorbed nearly all powers, and is using them to perpetuate this state of things for ever. Without the Southern States, it is reasoned that remaining States have not the power to prevent the accomplishment of these views, and the consolidating of a mighty centralised power, of which the ruling principle shall be military. If the Southern States be subjugated, and held by force of arms, they will not form parts of the Federal Union as before. The majority of the people will continue to be instinctively at enmity with their conquerors, as the Poles are with the Russians, and must be held by military means. If the forms of self-government are conceded, these will be only a juggle for the benefit of the ruling faction at Washington. The governments so organised will be military colonies in fact, and the political power they exercise will be not the expression of the will of the inhabitants of the States, but the reflection of the prevailing will of those who appoint and maintain a minority in power. The prospect for the Democrats and Conservatives,—who are at this late day assuming a front of hostility to these designs of the Administration,—are very gloomy for any restoration of the principles of the old Union. They have given their adversaries an advantage of position from which no success can dislodge them, so as to repair the damage they have inflicted on both sections. In consenting to join hands for the enslaving of the South they have enslaved themselves, and find themselves at last confronted in their last entrenchments—behind their damaged entrenchment of State Sovereignty, waiting for the threatened assault which is to decide whether they shall have any rights at all, except as concessions, from the Centaur power at Washington.

This is the meaning of the impending conflict in the State, if the State authorities shall have the nerve to meet what is threatened.

NORTH CAROLINA LEGISLATURE—GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

RALEIGH, June 30.

The Legislature met in extra session at twelve o'clock to-day, and a quorum being present, Governor Vance's message was read. Both houses adjourned till eleven o'clock to-morrow.

Governor Vance recommends that provision be made for the continued reception of all non-interest bearing Confederate States treasury notes, irrespective of the date of their issue. He regards the action of the Virginia Legislature and the Richmond banks, however patriotic the motive, as most unfortunate, and tending to still further depreciate the currency, and says no more deadly blow could be stricken against our cause than the repudiation of our currency. That North Carolina should be among the first to dishonour the money paid her citizens for their subsistence, and her soldiers for their blood, is something he should regret having lived to see. If one issue of Confederate notes be good then all are, since the same honour is pledged for their redemption.

He then refers the Legislature to an accompanying communication, for the public, and recommends a modification of the militia law, so as to facilitate the raising and equipping of the seven thousand militia called out by the President. He also recommends an enlargement of the list of exemption, for the protection of the State treasury. The communication reviews the financial condition of the States, and suggests, in view of the action of the Virginia Legislature and the Richmond banks, that the collection of State and Confederate taxes be suspended temporarily.

FROM MEMPHIS.—A friend has kindly permitted us to make the following extract from a private letter, dated Memphis, June 18, 1863:—"The authorities rule with an iron hand here. To-day is the last day given to citizens to remain disloyal. A great many have taken the oath, but few of those that you know, as a good many have gone out, but few of the married men with families. Those going out are mostly young men, so you see the Federal authorities are recruiting for Jeff Davis."

The following telegram is dated at Jackson, Mississippi, July 2, and appears in the Mobile papers, July 4. Magnolia Place is three miles below Bayou Sara on the same side of the river, and only seven miles above Port Hudson:—"On Sunday night, Logan captured about 500 negroes and Yankees, and a large lot of beeves, horses and mules, at the Magnolia plantation, below Bayou Sara; and Powers captured over 100 negroes and thirty odd Yankees at Oakland Place, opposite Red River Landing. Paroled the Yankees and brought the negroes off. Powers passed in the neighbourhood of Woodville this morning, with the negroes."

MOBILE, July 4th.—To-day being the anniversary of American Independence from English domination, we shall, with the Banks, conform to established custom, and omit one issue of the News and of the Advertiser and Register.

DIED.—On the 27th of April, 1863, in camp, near Fredericksburg, in the 22nd year of his age, Octavius Cuthbert, a son of Hon. John A. Cuthbert, of Mobile.

DIED.—On the 30th of June, 1863, at Short's, on the Eastern Shore of Mobile Bay, in Baldwin county, Mrs. Emma D. Meek, wife of Judge A. B. Meek, of Mobile.

AFFAIRS, FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

MONEY AND DISCOUNT MARKETS.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, August 12.

The tendency in the value of money has been towards advance the last three days. Although a large influx of gold has taken place at the Bank, the early and almost simultaneous character of harvest operations in the various districts has created a more than ordinary drain for notes and coin, which have been used for circulation to a large extent. For the moment no probability exists of a reduction in the official minimum without; the directors are so satisfied of future prospects that they may think it unnecessary to wait for the return of the money to their coffers. In addition to the supplies coming forward from America, the Australian imports will shortly increase, and should no great revival in trade follow, moderate rates of discount will rule throughout the succeeding months of the year. The Bank quotation is 4 per cent., and out of doors the value is closely up, say from  $\frac{3}{4}$  to 4 per cent., the majority of the brokers being able to get rid of their supplies on those terms. The public appear to have been satiated with the current of speculation the last four or five months, and have not since the late reaction in prices attempted to stimulate business in any especial direction. As showing the progress in the contraction of engagements, the half-monthly settlements now in course of adjustment represent but a very moderate amount of differences, and such is the low rate of continuation that not the slightest inconvenience is experienced in making terms for "carrying over." The trading demand for accommodation, either in Mincing-lane or elsewhere, will be comparatively sluggish for the next few weeks until the holiday season shall have terminated.

BULLION AND SPECIE MOVEMENTS.

The amount of gold sent into the Bank during the past week, including £53,000 this afternoon, has been £457,000, while on the other hand, there has been withdrawn for transmission to Brazil £100,000. The arrivals of bullion have been only to a moderate extent, say £261,370, all from New York. There has been a rather more active demand for silver for the East, but there has been no alteration in prices, bar being still quoted at 5s. 1d. per ounce. The dollars by the last West Indian packet have been sold at 5s. 3d. per ounce, being an advance of  $\frac{1}{4}$ d., over the price obtained for those brought by the previous packet. A telegraphic despatch from Melbourne announces that since the departure of the last mail there have been shipments of gold amounting to £145,000.

CONFEDERATE COTTON LOAN.

The state of business in the Confederate Cotton Loan has been rather uncertain. Adverse influences are evidently at work, unduly to depress the price; and it is said the agents of the Northern Government are at the bottom of the manoeuvre. Further intelligence from Charleston is awaited with interest, since late telegrams published on the subject prove to have been fabricated. The last price of the Loan this afternoon was 26 to 24 discount.

LOAN FOR THE MATANZAS AND SABANILLA (CUBA) RAILWAY COMPANY.

Proposals have just been issued for subscriptions for £300,000 in bonds, to bear interest at 7 per cent. from the 15th June, on behalf of the Matanzas and Sabanilla Railroad Company, in the island of Cuba. The loan, which is required for the construction of new works, and which will cause a large increase in the traffic, is to be secured by a first mortgage (after £74,000 of existing bonus shall have been paid off) on the works of the entire line, representing a cost of £760,000, and yielding a net revenue of £84,200, and which it is estimated will be increased next year to at least £106,000.

It appears that the Company a few years since raised £200,000 in similar bonds, of which £126,000 has already been paid off by the annual operation of a sinking fund, and which will entirely extinguish them in 1868. The interest on the proposed loan is to be paid half-yearly in London, and will be discharged by means of a sinking fund of £10,000 per annum, commencing in June next. The subscription price is £95, and the first coupon will be paid by Messrs. J. H. Schroder and Co., the London agents, on the 15th December.

THE VENEZUELA LOAN OF 1863.

Messrs. Matheson and Co. have issued a notification that in pursuance of the request of subscribers to the above loan, on the ground of the short time allowed for the ratification by the Government to be received and duly notified to them, they have obtained the authority of Senor Servadio, the financial agent of the Government of Venezuela, to postpone payment of the instalment of 20 per cent., due on the 20th inst., until the 21st September, and the subsequent instalments payable on the 15th September and the 1st October, to the 12th October and the 30th October respectively.

HOME AND FOREIGN SECURITIES.

The dealings in the English funded securities have exhibited but little animation. Under the influence of the exceedingly favourable weather for harvest operations, and the absence of any particularly adverse news with regard to foreign politics, prices continue well sustained, Consols closing this evening at 93 to  $\frac{1}{4}$  for money, and 93 $\frac{1}{4}$  to  $\frac{1}{4}$  for the September account. Exchequer Bills have been but moderately dealt in, and are without alteration at 1s. dis. to 2s. prem. There has been but little buoyancy in the Foreign Stock market, and all the speculative descriptions have been unusually quiet; still a fair average business has been transacted in Greek, Mexican, Turkish, and Spanish, at advanced quotations. Mexican has specially improved on organization of the Empire with the proposal for the Archduke Maximilian to accept the Throne. Greek 5 per cent., closing at 32 $\frac{1}{2}$  to 33 $\frac{1}{2}$ ; Mexican at 33 $\frac{1}{2}$  to  $\frac{1}{4}$ ; Spanish Certificates, 12 $\frac{1}{2}$  to 12 $\frac{3}{4}$ ; and the Passives at 32 $\frac{1}{2}$  to 33 $\frac{1}{2}$ ; Turkish 6 per cents., 1854, 92 $\frac{1}{2}$ , and do. 1862, 67 $\frac{1}{2}$  to 68.

AMERICAN SECURITIES.

A large business has again been transacted this week in American securities, but although prices continue to be fairly sustained, the fluctuations have been to a much less extent than has been the case for some time past. United States 5 per cent. redeemable in 1874, have been dealt in at 68 and 69 $\frac{1}{2}$ ; Virginia State Six per Cents., 42, and 41 $\frac{1}{2}$ ; Atlantic and Great Western Railway, New York Section, 72 $\frac{1}{2}$ ; do. Pennsylvania Section, 72 $\frac{1}{2}$ , 73, 73 $\frac{1}{2}$ , 74 and 76; Erie Shares, \$100 all paid, 74 $\frac{1}{2}$ , 73 $\frac{1}{2}$ , and 74 ex. div.; do. Seven per Cent. preference, 70 $\frac{1}{2}$ , 70, 72 $\frac{1}{2}$  ex. div.; do. Third Mortgage, 1883, 75; do. Fifth Mortgage, 72, 71 and 72; Illinois Central Seven per Cents., 79; do. \$100 Shares, 890 paid, 16, 16 $\frac{1}{2}$ , 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ , 16 $\frac{1}{2}$ , 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ , 15, 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ , 16, 15 $\frac{1}{2}$  and 16 dis.; do. all paid, 74 $\frac{1}{2}$ , 74 $\frac{1}{2}$ , 75, 75 $\frac{1}{2}$ , 76, 75 $\frac{1}{2}$ , and 76 $\frac{1}{2}$ ; New York Central Sinking Fund 1883, 70 and 79; do. \$100 Shares, 85; Pennsylvania Railway, First Mortgage Convertible, 73 and 72 $\frac{1}{2}$ ; do. Second Mortgage, 86 $\frac{1}{2}$ , 86 $\frac{1}{2}$ , and 86 $\frac{1}{2}$ ; do. \$50 Shares 43, 43 $\frac{1}{2}$  and 43.

RAILWAY SECURITIES.

A satisfactory business, so far as the actual dealings are concerned, has been transacted in British Railway Shares, but prices, particularly for most of the leading descriptions, exhibit an unfavourable aspect, though to-day there has been more firmness, at rather improved values. As compared with last week, however, a decline is apparent in Great Eastern of 2 $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent.; of 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  in Caledonian; and from  $\frac{1}{4}$  to  $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. each in Great Northern, Brighton, Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire and North-Eastern (Berwick). On the other hand there has been an improvement of 1 per cent. in Bristol and Exeter, and from  $\frac{1}{2}$  to  $\frac{1}{4}$  in Great Western, Chatham and Dover, and Midland. Foreign Railway Shares have not been so much in demand, but there has not been any material variation in prices. For Colonial descriptions the inquiry has been moderately active, at comparatively steady rates.

BANK MEETINGS.

At the half-yearly meeting of the proprietors of the London and County Bank, the report of the directors was unanimously adopted. It stated that the accounts of the Bank for the half-year ending the 30th June, showed a net profit, after deducting all charges, of £63,838, which, added to £1,482 brought forward from previous accounts, made a total of £65,322, out of which it was proposed to declare a dividend for the half-year of 6 per cent. free of income tax, which would absorb £35,978. The directors also recommended that £15,000 should be added to the reserve fund, which would then stand at £95,000; and that the balance of £14,343 be carried forward to profit and loss account. The chairman in moving the adoption of the report, said that the result of the past six months' working showed a larger increase of profit and business than had ever taken place since the establishment of the bank; and he had no doubt that at the next meeting the directors would be enabled to appropriate a larger sum for distribution among the proprietors. At the meeting of the shareholders in the Bank of Egypt yesterday, the report, of which an abstract appeared in our last week's impression, was adopted nem. con. It was stated that the net profits for the past half-year, including a balance brought forward of £4,663, amounted to £13,895; out of which a dividend at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum for the half-year was declared, and leaving £5,145 to be carried forward. The directors of the Agra and United Service Bank have declared the usual interim dividend of £2 10s. per share for the half-year ended the 30th June.

MEETINGS OF PUBLIC COMPANIES.

At the half-yearly meeting of the City of London Brewing Company, the report, which was unanimously agreed to, stated that out of the profits of the half-year, £19,867 was to be applied to the payment of a dividend at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum for the half-year. The usual sum, amounting to 10 per cent., should be placed to the credit of the reserve fund: £2,000 set aside for depreciation of leasehold property, and the balance carried to the current half-year's account.

At the half-yearly meeting of the Shareholders of the Electric and International Telegraph Company, the report of the directors stated that the net profits for the half-year was £39,061 out of which a dividend was recommended of £3 10s. per cent. for the half-year, which would absorb £33,058, leaving a balance of £6,003 to be carried to the present half-year's account. The report was adopted.

At the meeting of the Shareholders of the Mediterranean Extension Telegraph Company, the usual dividends of 8 per cent., less income-tax, on the preference shares, and of 3 per cent. on the original shares, free of income-tax, were adopted. It appeared from the report that the receipts for messages during the past half-year amounted to £5,449, whilst for the previous half-year the receipts were only £5,100.

At the annual general meeting of the Royal Insurance Company a dividend of 3s. per share with the addition of a 4s. bonus was declared. A very favourable report was presented, which showed that during the year 1862 the premiums in the fire department exceeded £300,000, and that the net profits on this branch reached £56,205. In the life department, the amount insured during the year was £701,247, under 1,493 policies.

PROGRESS OF ENTERPRISE.

There has been only one new Joint Stock Company brought forward this week, viz., the Weston-super-Mare Hotel Company, for which the capital proposed to be raised is £75,000.

DEATH OF THE PIONEER OF JOINT STOCK BANKING IN LONDON.

The death of Mr. J. W. Gilbert, late the General Manager of the London and Westminster Joint Stock Bank, has just been announced. He was the great developer of the Joint Stock banking system in the metropolis, and passed a long life in affording by his writings information for the benefit of the public at large.

THE COURSE OF THE PRODUCE MARKETS.

In most descriptions of American produce a fair amount of business has been concluded since our last, whilst our American export trade has shown uninterrupted dullness in every department. From New York the imports have been only moderate, and most of the supplies are taken off freely as they become available. This is more particularly the case as regards bacon, which has advanced fully 2s. per cwt., the present quotation being 30s. to 48s., according to quality. Fine hams at 54s. to 56s. are wanted. Barrel middles continue in request, and are scarce. American cheese meets a steady sale at 46s. to 56s. per cwt., and there is every indication of prices being maintained, as most other foreign cheese is relatively dear, whilst hardly so well adapted for the general demand. Lard is more saleable, and the tendency of prices is in the sellers' favour. Our abundant and early harvest is already affecting the value of foreign grain in the London market. With large receipts of English wheat quotations have receded 1s. per qr. for nearly every description imported. A somewhat large arrival of American flour has induced renewed caution on the part of buyers of this article, and only small sales have been practicable at fully 6d. to 1s. per barrel reduction. The demand for petroleum has remained dull, and occasionally easier rates have been taken. To-day refined is quoted 2s. 3d. per gallon buyers, and 2s. 3½d. sellers. Crude Pennsylvania would not bring more than £19 per tun. American turpentine has at length in some degree followed the course of French, and is now quoted 95s. per cwt. The price of the latter remains at 65s. Rosin is firmly held, and for the finer kinds stiffer rates are demanded. American cotton brings a small advance, and meets a steady demand from the trade. In the tobacco market no new feature has occurred. Purchases are confined to the mere provision for immediate orders, but even in this way a moderate business is passing, and as a rule, prices are firm. American oil peppermint (Hotchkiss) is still held for 16s., at which only retail sales are effected. New York tallow sells slowly at 42s. to 42s. 6d. per cwt. Tallow oil remains at 39s. to 40s. Sperm oil maintains the recent advance, £81 per tun being required for foreign, and £82 for colonial fishing. Linsed oil is the turn cheaper, owing rather to a falling off in the demand, than to any material increase of supply. Gum arabic is rather more in request, and Turkey in sorts ranges up to 70s. per cwt., although fair stocks are held. In Anini there is no quotable change. Of Kowrie some small shipments are making to New York, and rates are steady at 34s. to 40s. according to quality. Fine descriptions of plumbago are not over plentiful, and with a good demand, bring long prices, say 7s. to 9s. for fair lump. In drugs very little change has taken place. Camphor is, however, rather dearer, £6 10s. being now demanded. All kinds of bark are firm, with a moderate inquiry. Our spice market continues dull, and for export sorts of both nutmegs and pepper easier rates have in some instances been taken. In metals there is not a great deal doing at the moment. Scotch pig iron has fluctuated from 53s. 6d. to 54s. 1½d., and is to-day 53s. 9d. per ton. With a fall of £3 per ton in common English tin (the price of which is now £115), foreign has declined to £120 cash for straits. Tin plates are unaltered.

COTTON AND DRY GOODS MARKET.

LIVERPOOL, Wednesday Evening, August 12.

Our last report left the market in a quiet state, which continued for a day or two longer, but an improvement in Manchester reacted on us here. It appeared that large orders for goods suitable for the East had been in hand for some time—most of these were quietly put through last week, and when the business transpired, a decided improvement in tone occurred.

Our market felt the influence of this movement on Saturday, and in addition to that it was favourably affected by the American news by the Persia. She brought intelligence of the severe repulse of the Federals at Charleston, which, like every Southern success in the present state of affairs is supposed by the public to protract the war. The sales on Saturday accordingly reached 7,000 bales at full prices. On Monday the movement became stronger, and the sales reached 10,000 bales, American and Egyptian showing a slight advance, and Surats being firmer all round. There was a large demand for Seinde, Bengal, China, and the inferior growths of Eastern cotton, which had been much depressed, and prices of those kinds showed some improvement. Yesterday the sales were 8,000 bales, at full prices. The market in Manchester was healthy, though not very buoyant, and to-day the demand has been very active here, with sales of 10,000 at hardening prices.

Middling American may be quoted 22½d.; and Fair Dholerah and Omrawuttee, 18½d. to 19d.

In arrival cotton an active business has been done, and the current price of May Dholerahs is now 18d.—one sale has been made at 18½d. June sailing may be quoted 17½d. to 18d. May Omrawuttee is worth 17½d.; Guaranteed Fair, June, 17½d. to 18d.

MANCHESTER, Tuesday, August 11.

The American intelligence received during the past week, although to a great extent similar in character to that of the week before, is now imparting a firmer feeling to holders, and a desire on the part of merchants to place orders where their limits are practicable. Although we are advised of the opening of the Mississippi, and of a line of steamers plying regularly between St. Louis and New Orleans, we do not hear of any cotton coming to market in consequence, but do hear of cotton advancing at New York, which very much tends to strengthen our market.

India gums are in good demand, especially No. 40's Mule, for which an advance of fully ½d. per lb. has been obtained. Mulls and Jaconets are also well looked after for the same market, and for which extreme prices are readily paid.

In home-trades there is better inquiry, but it is difficult to get more than ½d. per lb. advance on last week's prices.

India shirtings, although light in stock, are not much inquired for at present, which is to be accounted for by the telegrams for Calcutta, dated July 16, and received to-day, reporting these goods as lower in price.

Among the Contents of THE INDEX of Aug. 6, are—

NOTES ON EVENTS OF THE WEEK AT HOME AND ABROAD.

NEW ORLEANS LETTER.

PARIS TOPICS.

WAR WITHOUT END.

A PARALLEL AND A CONTRAST.

THE NEW ASPECT OF THE WAR.

THE RIGHTFULNESS OF SOUTHERN SECESSION.

THE PEACE PARTY AT THE NORTH.

FEDERALISM.

MAGAZINES FOR AUGUST.

A VOICE FROM A FEDERAL PRISON.

MR. VALLANDIGHAM'S ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF OHIO.

GENERAL LEE'S ORDER FOR THE PROTECTION OF PRIVATE PROPERTY IN PENNSYLVANIA.

THE SOUTHERN CONSCRIPTION.

BEACH & ROOT,
Commission Merchants,
CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA
and
ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

BEACH, ROOT, & CO.,
APSEY BUILDINGS, OLD HALL STREET,
LIVERPOOL.

S. ISAAC, CAMPBELL, & Co.
CONTRACTORS & MERCHANTS.
71, Jermyn-street,
LONDON.
Sherbro: West Coast of Africa.

Represented by
W. B. HAET,
Nassau, New Providence.

LAMB, BALL, & CO.,
Ship and General Commission Agents,
ST. THOMAS,
WEST INDIES.
J. J. BALL,
J. D. LAMB.

WEBER BROTHERS,
Commission Merchants,
SAVANNAH,
GEORGIA, C.S.A.

HOTEL DE LA GRANDE BRETAGNE,
Rue de Po,
TURIN.

MCDOWELL, WITHERS, AND CO.,
MOBILE, ALABAMA, C.S.A., Commission Merchants.

R. D. RUSDEN, MANCHESTER,
ENGLAND, American Drills of all kinds, Demies, Stripes, Shirtings, and all sorts of Manchester Goods.

ANDREW LOW AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH
GEORGIA.

HAMILTON AND GRAHAM,
Importers, Wholesale Dealers in Dry Goods, &c., PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA.

H. LEVY AND SON,
Commission Merchants, MOBILE.

GARLAND GOODE, MOBILE,
Cotton Factor and Commission Merchant.

BOYKIN AND McRAE, Cotton Factors and Commission Merchants, MOBILE, ALABAMA, C.S.A.

J. W. ANDERSON AND CO., Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

N. A. HARDEE AND CO., Commission Merchants, SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

MILLER AND BATRE, Exchange Brokers, MOBILE, ALABAMA, C.S.A.

R. AND D. G. MILLS, Cotton Factors and Commission Merchants, GALVESTON, TEXAS, C.S.A.

NOW READY, THE FIRST TWO NUMBERS OF A NEW QUARTERLY SCIENTIFIC JOURNAL, ENTITLED THE ANTHROPOLOGICAL REVIEW, AND Journal of the Anthropological Society of London.

THE ANTHROPOLOGICAL REVIEW is an effort to supply a want which has long been felt by all who have directed any serious attention to the philosophy or natural history of Man. It will be a repository of facts, an arena for discussion, and a medium of communication between Anthropologists and travellers all over the world. All relevant subjects will receive, in its pages, a free and fair consideration, irrespective of party or personal feelings, and it will be the aim of the Editors to see that every question is discussed purely on its merits, and that every shade of opinion shall be able to command a fair and adequate representation.

Neither will the work be a merely passive recipient of the communications of the learned or of the facts brought to light by travellers and explorers. It will actively seek, by every available means, to promote the study of Man "in all his leading aspects, physical, mental, and historical; to investigate the laws of his origin and progress; to ascertain his place in nature and his relations to the inferior forms of life; and to attain these objects by patient investigation, careful induction, and the encouragement of all researches tending to establish a de facto science of man." As a means of attaining these objects it will contain:—

- I. Original Articles, or Translations of Original Communications in Foreign Languages.
- II. Reviews of the principal British and Foreign Works on Anthropology.
- III. Short Notices of the Minor Works bearing on the Science of Man.
- IV. Miscellaneous Anthropological Intelligence.

V. The Official Reports of the Meetings of the Anthropological Society of London.

Contents of No. I.

1. On the Study of Anthropology. By Dr. James Hunt, F.R.S., President A.S.L.
2. Wild Men and Beast Children. By E. Burnet Tylor, F.A.S.L.
3. On the Tribes of Loreto in Northern Peru. By Professor Raimondi. Translated from the Spanish by William Bollaert, F.A.S.L.
4. A Day with the Fans. By Captain R. F. Burton, H.M. Consul at Zanzibar, and V.P.A.S.L.
5. On the Difference between Man and the Lower Animals. By Theodor Bischoff. Translated from the German.
6. Summary of the Evidence of the Antiquity of Man.
7. Huxley on Man's Place in Nature.
8. Jackson on Ethnology and Phrenology.
9. Lyell on the Geological Evidence of the Antiquity of Man.
10. Wilson's Pre-historic Man.
11. Pauly's Ethnographical Account of the Peoples of Russia.
12. Commixture of the Races of Man. By John Crawford, Esq., F.R.S.
13. Burton's Prairie Traveller.
14. Owen on the Limbs of the Gorilla.
15. Man and Beast. By Anthropos.
16. Dunn's Medical Psychology.
17. Human Remains from Moulin-Quignon. By A. Tylor, Esq., F.G.S. (With an Illustration.)
18. Notes of a Case of Microcephaly. By R. T. Gore, Esq., F.A.S.L.
19. Notes on Sir C. Lyell's Antiquity of Man. By John Crawford, Esq., F.R.S.
20. Falconer on the reputed Fossil Man of Abbeville.
21. Miscellaneous Anthropological.
22. Journal of the Anthropological Society of London.

Contents of No. II.

1. On the Science of Language. By R. J. Charnock, F.S.A., F.A.S.L.
2. Ferguson on the Influence of Race on Art.
3. On the Creation of Man and Substance of the Mind. By Professor Rudolph Wagner.
4. Pietet on the Origin of Indo-Europeans.
5. Ethnological Inquiries and Observations. By the late Robert Knox, M.D.
6. On the Application of the Anatomical Method to the Discrimination of Species. By the Same.
7. On the Deformations of the Human Cranium, supposed to be produced by Mechanical Means. By the Same.
8. History of the Proceedings of the Anthropological Society of Paris. By M. Paul Broca, Secretary-General.
9. On the supposed increasing Prevalence of Dark Hair in England. By John Beddoe, M.D., F.A.S.L.
10. The Abbeville Fossil Jaw. By M. A. de Quatrefages.
11. Miscellaneous Anthropological.
12. Journal of the Anthropological Society of London, containing Papers by Professor Marshall, Professor Bask, Mr. Bollaert, Mr. Winwood Reade, Mr. C. Blake, Reports of Discussions before the Society, &c.

The "ANTHROPOLOGICAL REVIEW" will be published on the 1st of February, May, August, and November. Single numbers, Four Shillings, The Price to Annual Subscribers will be Twelve Shillings; if by Post, Thirteen Shillings and Fourpence.

Books intended for review, and all Communications relating to the Journal, to be addressed to "The Editor," care of MESSRS. TRUBNER AND CO., 60, Paternoster Row, E.C., or to Mr. RICHARDS, 37, Great Queen Street, W.C., to either of whom Advertisements and Business Communications may be addressed.

ADVERTISEMENTS must be sent in a fortnight before the day of publication.

JAMES CHAPMAN,
Commission Merchant, CHARLESTON.

R. N. GOUDINE AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, CHARLESTON.

DUNLOP, MONCURE, & CO.,
General Commission Merchants,
RICHMOND.

WARWICK AND BARKSDALE,
GALLIGO FLOUR MILLS.
This immense establishment of capacity to manufacture 1000 barrels of Flour per day, purely for South American Market. RICHMOND.

A. G. MILWAINE, AND CO.,
Commission Merchants, Tobacco, Cotton, Grain, and other produce, PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA.

FRANCIS FORD, MANCHESTER,
Manufacturer of Three and Six Cord Spool Thread, Cotton Balls, Knitting and Embroidering Cottons, &c. Imported by F. RIMAILHO and NEYREY, New Orleans, and GEORGE CHAMBERS and CO., Nassau, N.P.

SHIRTS.—International Exhibition.
Class 27 C. No. 4872. Prize Medal and honourable mentions 1851 and 1862. Shirts, Collars, Flannels, and every description of underclothing manufactured on the premises.

J. BRIE AND Co.,
43, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.
The only Shirtmakers admitted as Exhibitors at the International Exhibition of 1862.

VALUES OF GOLD.—WATER-STON and BROGDEN, for the information of the public and their numerous patrons beg to make the following announcement regarding the VALUE OF GOLD, feeling persuaded that the interests of the fair trader and public will be alike promoted by the wide circulation of knowledge on the subject. Gold being divided into 24 parts or carats, it follows that gold of

	Per oz.		Per oz.
24 carats fine is worth.....	£4 4 11	13 carats.....	£2 6 0
23 ditto.....	4 1 5	12 ditto.....	2 2 5½
22 ditto (British standard).....	3 17 10½	11 ditto.....	1 15 ½
21 carats.....	3 14 4	10 ditto.....	1 11 10
20 ditto.....	3 10 9½	9 ditto.....	1 8 3½
19 ditto.....	3 7 3	8 ditto.....	1 4 9
18 ditto.....	3 3 8½	7 ditto.....	1 1 2½
17 ditto.....	3 0 9	6 ditto.....	1 0 17 ½
16 ditto.....	2 16 7½	5 ditto.....	0 15 2
15 ditto.....	2 13 1	4 ditto.....	0 10 7½
14 ditto.....	2 9 6½	3 ditto.....	0 7 1
		2 ditto.....	0 4 3½
		1 ditto.....	0 3 6½

Manufacture, 16, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London, W.C.

N.B.—Assays made of Chains and Jewellery for 1s. each.

NOTE.—This Establishment is closed at six o'clock in the evening, and on Saturdays at one o'clock.

TWO PRIZE MEDALS awarded
"For General Excellence" in DRESSING CASES, BAGS, DESPATCH BOXES, &c. Gentlemen's Travelling Bags, Useful Suits, &c. Full Size, 18s. 6d.; Large Size, 21s. Coutier Bags, with Shoulder Strap, from 10s. 6d. Morocco Ladies' Bags, 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 14s. 6d., 18s. 6d., and 21s. Tourists' Writing Cases, 8s. 6d., 10s. 6d. to 21s. Finest Cutlery in Razors, Scissors, Needles, &c. JENNER and KNEVSTUB, Manufacturers to the Royal Family, 58, St. James's-street, and 60, Jermyn-street.

GENERAL THOMAS J. (STONEWALL) JACKSON.

Two Continents, both friend and foe, combine to mourn the premature death of General JACKSON, hero and Christian. Two years have been sufficient to create a fame which has won the kindly respect of enemies and the admiration of the Old World, which twenty-four months since was ignorant of his existence

It has been suggested that some general recognition from Great Britain of the worth of such a man, by name, by race, and by character related to us, although the citizen of another land, would be a graceful token of friendly feeling from the old country to our kinsmen across the Atlantic.

The eminent sculptor, J. H. FOLEY, Esq., R.A., has undertaken to execute a marble Statue, heroic size, of the General for £1,000, while £500 may be required for pedestal, inscription, and other extras. Accordingly, for £1,500 a complete Statue of "Stonewall" JACKSON, by one of our most distinguished sculptors, may be prepared for transmission to his native country when the unhappy war shall have ceased. Towards raising this sum, the Subscriptions of our countrymen and countrywomen are earnestly solicited. Central and Local Committees, with auxiliary Ladies' Committees, are being formed to collect the necessary funds.

The undersigned will gladly receive Subscriptions until the final arrangements are made, and an account has been opened for "General JACKSON'S Statue," at Messrs. COUTTS and Co.'s, Strand, London, W.C.

N.B.—It is not at all intended that Subscriptions to the Statue should imply any opinion on the merits of the American struggle. They will be taken solely and simply as a recognition of the rare personal merit of General Jackson.

COMMITTEE.

EDWARD AKROYD, Esq.
HON. EVELYN ASHLEY.
LORD CAMPBELL.
LORD EUSTACE CECIL.
EARL OF DONOUGHMORE.
HON. ERNEST DUNCOMBE, M.P.
SIR EARDLEY EARDLEY, BART.
SIR ARTHUR H. ELTON, BART.

SIR JAMES FERGUSON, BART., M.P.
HON. C. FITZWILLIAM, M.P.
J. S. GILLIAT, Esq.
W. H. GREGORY, Esq., M.P.
COL. GREVILLE, M.P.
SIR HENRY DE HOGHTON, BART.
A. J. B. BERESFORD HOPE, Esq.
SIR E. KERRISON, BART., M.P.

J. LAIRD, Esq., M.P.
SIR COUTTS LINDSAY, BART.
W. S. LINDSAY, Esq., M.P.
G. PEACOCKE, Esq., M.P.
G. E. SEYMOUR, Esq.
J. SPENCE, Esq.
LIEUT.-COL. C. N. STURT, M.P.

A. J. B. BERESFORD HOPE, Esq., 1, CONNAUGHT PLACE,
Hon. Treasurer,
W. H. GREGORY, Esq., M.P., 19, GROSVENOR STREET WEST.
Hon. Secretary.

MANCHESTER SOUTHERN CLUB, advocating the stoppage of the war, the independence of the South, and the gradual emancipation of the slave, open daily for the enrolment of members and receipt of subscriptions. Local committees can have information as usual.—Address, MATTHEW CHADWICK, } Hon. Sec.
T. MALAN WALKER, }

CENTRAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE RECOGNITION OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES.
Members enrolled, personally or by letter. Subscriptions and donations received at the offices, 26, Market-street, Manchester. Enrolment fee (national), from one shilling. THOS. STALEY, Sec.

NEW LINE OF STEAM PACKETS BETWEEN LIVERPOOL, ST. THOMAS, LA GUAYRA, PTO. CABELLO, CURACAO, SANTA MARTHA, CARTHAGENA TO COLON, RETURNING FROM THAT PORT BY KINGSTON (JAMAICA), PORT-AU-PRINCE, CAPE HAITIEN TO LIVERPOOL.

The Liverpool, Western and Spanish-American Steam Packet Company WILL commence running powerful A 1 Screw Steamboats from this port on the 20th June next, to be at Colon in time to take the Goods and Passengers brought to Panama by the Steamers, from the North and South Pacific, and to Colon, about the 21st July, continuing the same dates monthly. The Steamboats are:—
The CHRISTOPAL COLON, 1,572 tons, W. Baker, Commander, to sail from Liverpool... 20th June
The SAINT THOMAS, 1,210 tons, W. Gillberry, Commander... 20th July
The BOLIVAR, 1,239 tons, W. W. Kiddler... 20th Aug.
The HUMBOLDT (building), 1,400 tons
Goods and Passengers will be taken, if required, at through rates from the Continent, via Liverpool, over the Panama Railway to Ports in the Pacific, and also back from those Ports by same route.
The CHRISTOPAL COLON has very spacious and well-ventilated berths and saloon, which will afford every comfort to Passengers. The Rates for First and Second-class Passage will be moderate.
LEIRE & TOMLINSON.
ALEXANDER DURANTY & Co.
Liverpool, May 1, 1863.

WEST INDIES.—LIVERPOOL, WEST INDIAN, AND CENTRAL AMERICAN STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.
For SAINT THOMAS, PORT-AU-PRINCE (HAYTI), KINGSTON (JAMAICA), SANTA MARTHA, CARTHAGENA, AND COLON OR ASPINWALL.
Taking Goods at through rates for Panama and Ports in the North and South Pacific (in connection with the Panama Railroad, the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company).
The following fine new A 1 full powered Steamers will sail from LIVERPOOL on the 21st of each month, receiving goods up to the 19th of each month.
DARIEN... 1,172 tons.
VENEZUELA... 1,000
GRANADIAN... 1,100
MEXICAN (now building)... 1,100
In consequence of the VENEZUELA not being quite completed, the first-class Screw-steamer SHATESBURY, Captain VICKERMAN, will be despatched for the above Ports on the 21st May, taking goods until the 19th May.
Goods taken at through freights from the Continent.
For rates of freights or passage, having superior accommodation for passengers, apply to J. M. CURRIE, Factors and Agents, GLASGOW and HENNING, HAMBURG; LATITE and VANDERCRUYF, Bordeaux; W. D. ROBERTS and Co., Glasgow; or to LEECH, HARRISON, & FORWOOD, Agents, Liverpool.

AMERICAN WINES AND SPIRITS, &c.
W. R. S. MARKWELL,
WINE MERCHANT TO HER MAJESTY AND THE IMPERIAL COURTS,
35, 40, & 45, ALBEMARLE STREET,
AND
4, STAFFORD STREET, PICCADILLY, LONDON, W.
Monagahela, Bourbon, and Old Dominion Whiskies; Peach Brandy; Staughton, Sickles, and other Bitters; Fruit Spirits; Sparkling and dry Catawba; Californian Champagne; all kinds of Continental Wines, including the original importations from Hungary.
The Stock of Wines, Spirits, and Liqueurs are of the oldest, most extensive, and best selected in England.
TERMS, CASH!

ACCOUNT BOOKS, &c.,
Of all Rulings, ready in Stock, or made to any Pattern on the Premises.
LITHOGRAPHIC AND COPPER-PLATE.—Circulars printed on the Shortest Notice; all kinds of Copper-Plate Printing with economy and despatch.
CARD PLATES.—Engraved in various styles with despatch. 2s. each.
LETTER-PRESS.—Letter-Press work of every description: Circulars, Catalogues, Share-Plates, &c.
NOTE-PAPER.—Embossed die, Plain, and Colours, with Crest and Initials, and Printed Address, without charging for Dies or Plates.
All Articles being prepared on the Premises can be ensured with despatch and economy at Wholesale and Shipping Prices.
F. ARNOLD, MANUFACTURING STATIONER, ETC., 86, FLEET STREET, E.C.
(CORNER OF ST. BRIDE'S AVENUE.)

VINS SUPERIEURS DE CHAMPAGNE.
DINET-PEUVREL ET FILS,
PROPRIETAIRES ET NEGOCIANTS,
A AVIZE, MARNE,
EXECUTE ORDERS FOR ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.
Please send References with Order.

THOMAS DE LA RUE & CO.,
WHOLESALE STATIONERS,
MANUFACTURERS OF PATENT PLAYING CARDS, MESSAGE CARDS, DRAWING AND CARD BOARDS, MACHINE-FOLDED ENVELOPES, PORTRAIT AND OTHER ALBUMS, TOURIST CASES, DESPATCH BOXES, INDELIBLE RED LETTER DIARIES, &c., &c.
110, BUNHILL ROW, LONDON, E.C.
THOMAS DE LA RUE & CO.'S ILLUSTRATED TRADE CATALOGUE, PART I., 56 pp. imperial 8vo., is now ready.

REID AND STEWART,
Commission Merchants,
SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.
Represented by
ANDREW STEWART, 1, Rumford-place, Liverpool.
C. W. WHITE,
Ship and General Commission Agent,
ST. THOMAS, WEST INDIES.
GEORGE CHAMBERS, & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants,
NASSAU, N.P.
BAHAMAS.
J. PFEIFFER & MULLER,
Commission Merchants,
32, Rue du Chateau d'Es,
PARIS.

HARPER AND CAUGHEY,
Commission Merchants,
SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.
Represented by
J. and A. CAUGHEY, Tempest Chambers, Tempest Hoy, Liverpool.
H. O. BREWER & CO.,
MOBILE, ALABAMA,
General Commission and Shipping Merchants.
SAMUEL SMITH,
COTTON BROKER,
11, Manchester Buildings, LIVERPOOL.
HENRY ADDERLEY & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants,
NASSAU, N.P.,
BAHAMAS.

ROWLAND & BROTHERS,
Commission Merchants,
NOBOLK, VIRGINIA.

JOHN FRASER & CO.,
CHARLESTON, South Carolina.
FRASER, TRENHOLM, & CO.,
Liverpool, Commission Merchants.

SEARING AND CO.,
Commission Merchants,
MOBILE AND NEW ORLEANS, C.S.A.
Represented by
R. G. BEESLEY, Cotton Broker,
No. 2, Byron's-court, Royal-exchange, Manchester.

J. E. HERTZ,
(Of the late Firm of MORDECAI and CO.),
Commission Merchant,
CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA.
References to
M. C. MORDECAI, Esq.,
Charleston, South Carolina.
Messrs. COHEN and HERTZ,
Savannah, Georgia.

J. H. ASHBRIDGE & CO.,
Shipping and Commission Merchants,
NEW ORLEANS.
Office—56, Brown's-buildings, Liverpool.
Agents—Liverpool and New Orleans Mail Steam Navigation Company.

JAMES J. BENNETT & WAKE,
Steam-Ship Insurance and General Commission Agents,
77, Cornhill, London,
and JAMES J. BENNETT, Matamoros.

ADDRESS TO CHRISTIANS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.
By the
CLERGY of the CONFEDERATE STATES of AMERICA
London: James Nisbet and Co., 21, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

THE PATENT FILE MACHINE, AND FILE MANUFACTURING COMPANY, (LIMITED). Makers of every description of Steel and Files suitable for Engineers, Machinists, Agricultural Implement Makers, and for the general and export trade. Works,—Ashton Old-road, Manchester.

The Index,
A WEEKLY JOURNAL OF POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND NEWS.
Devoted to the Exposition of the Mutual Interests, Political and Commercial, of Great Britain and the Confederate States of America.

The Second Half-Yearly Volume OF THE INDEX, Is Now Ready, Price £1 1s.
Subscriptions and Advertisements to be sent, and Post-office Order made payable to
J. B. HOPKINS, 13, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Printed for the Proprietors by HENRY FLORENCE MACKINTOSH, of 11, Crane-court, Fleet-street in the Parish of St. Dunstan, in the City of London; and published by him at THE INDEX Office, 13, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London: Thursday, August 13th, 1863.

THE INDEX

A WEEKLY JOURNAL OF POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND NEWS.

VOL. III—No. 69.]

LONDON—THURSDAY EVENING, AUGUST 20, 1863.

[PRICE 6D.]

CONTENTS.

NOTES ON EVENTS OF THE WEEK AT HOME AND ABROAD.
ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT DAVIS TO THE CONFEDERATE ARMY.
NEGRO SOLDIERS IN NEW ORLEANS.
LETTER FROM NEW YORK.
NORTHERN VERSUS SOUTHERN SLAVERY.
PROGRESS OF THE WAR.
NEGRO SOLDIERS.
THE LIFE OF A CHRISTIAN SOLDIER.
LETTER FROM RICHMOND, JULY 18.
EXTRACTS FROM SOUTHERN PAPERS.

NOTES ON EVENTS OF THE WEEK.

AMERICA.

THERE is a lull in the war, and the telegrams of the week are exceptionally bloodless. A Confederate victory is reported in Louisiana over Banks. The Federal cavalry, under General Buford, crossed the Rappahannock, was met by the Confederates, and driven back with heavy loss. The siege of Charleston is said to be progressing, but which way is not stated by the Federals. General Gilmore is being reinforced, but not sufficiently to compensate for the havoc made in his army by the operations of the enemy and the prevailing sickness. Several guesses per day are hazarded as to the position of General Lee. It is supposed that General Meade has been reinforced from Grant's army. The boasted success in North Carolina is now asserted to be a total failure. The Federals, according to their custom, have plundered Yazoo City, carrying away the furniture of the houses, as well as the negroes. Both the belligerents are preparing for another campaign. It must seem strange to those who have placed faith in the story of Northern strength and Southern weakness, that the Federals are inactive. This inactivity and the anxiety of the Washington Government to get recruits at any cost and in any way, are unmistakable evidences of exhaustion. The North as well as the South is calling upon her reserves.

The fall of Vicksburg and Port Hudson has not resulted in a revival of trade. For this, not only our New Orleans correspondent, but New York vouches. Only peace can make the Mississippi a high road for commerce. The loss of these two strongholds has, however, jeopardised some stores of cotton, and the Confederate Government has given notice that all cotton in danger of being captured by the enemy will be destroyed by the military authorities.

The death of Hon. William Lowndes Yancey, one of the Senators of the State of Alabama in the Confederate Congress, is announced. Mr. Yancey was born about the year 1812, and had therefore not yet passed the prime of life. Though a native of South Carolina, his public life is inseparably connected with the State which he represented at the time of his death, and in which he had resided from his early manhood. In 1846, at the period of the celebrated Oregon Boundary dispute, he served his first and, we believe, only term in the lower branch of the United States' Congress and like Mr. Calhoun and almost all the other Southern members, zealously and successfully strove to avert war with Great Britain. We have recently had occasion to quote (vide No. 64 of INDEX) from his speeches in those memorable debates. On the expiration of the term for which he was elected, he retired from public affairs, and devoted himself to his profession, in which he acquired the distinction of being one of the ablest criminal lawyers in the South-west. Party ties sat loosely on him, and therefore, although each of the great parties then contending for mastery would gladly have secured the aid of his wonderful powers of oratory, his services could never be altogether unconditionally and unreservedly given, even to the Democratic party to which he nominally belonged. The feverish fermentation of the public mind, which preluded the dissolution of the Union, brought, however, all his powers into full play, and made him one of the foremost men of the period. His celebrated letter, in which he urged the necessity of "firing the Southern heart and precipitating the people into a revolution," has caused a more premeditated and more important agency in the impending events to be ascribed to him than is perhaps historically true. Certain, however, it is that he threw himself with all the vehemence of his nature into the movement, riding, so to speak, the top wave of that irresistible tide which wrecked the Federal fabric. He led the delegations of the Gulf States which withdrew from the convention of the Democratic party at Charleston, and that he fully understood the consequences of this act is shown by the prophetic words with which he accompanied it, "that the pen was already nibbed that should write the history of Southern independence." His speeches during the ensuing Presidential canvass, delivered to enormous multitudes both in the South and North, have caused him to be styled the Demosthenes of the revolution. In January 1861 he was a member of the Sovereign Convention of Alabama which passed the Act of Secession, and in that body advocated in the most masterly manner the insertion of a clause into the State Constitution perpetually prohibiting the African slave trade, and a clause which was subsequently also inserted into the Confederate Constitution. In this argument he used the words which have been frequently repeated,—"To the legislator the slave is property, but to the man a fellow-being, and to the Christian a soul to be saved." Owing to the fact that his conspicuous position in the revolution had exposed him to fierce personal and political enmity, which in the interests of general conciliation had to be appeased, he voluntarily resigned all pretensions to a seat in the Provisional Congress, and for the same reason, when the choice was offered him, preferred a diplomatic exile to a place in Mr. Davis's Cabinet. As head of the joint commission sent by the Confederate Government to obtain the recognition of European Powers, he remained in this country until February, 1862, when his unanimous election by the Legislature of Alabama as Senator recalled him home. Mr. Yancey was one of those men who are produced, or at least brought forward, in great political convulsions, and his temperament was suited to stormy rather than peaceful times. He was always considered as the representative of extreme views, and he was often accused of too rigid an inflexibility to the necessities of practical statesmanship. As an orator he had few equals and no superiors even in the South; as a patriot no hostile tongue has ever doubted his spotless purity; but though few public men have had in their lifetime more devoted adherents and ardent admirers, few have had the misfortune in an equal degree to raise against themselves so many inveterate and irreconcilable enemies.

The telegraphic operator announces from Queenstown, on the 18th instant, through all the public prints, that "the Confederate privateer Florida was off Kinsale yesterday, and boarded a pilot-boat, to which she transferred three passengers who were landed here. It is supposed that the Florida is still off the coast." Was it not possible to convey this information without falling into the puerile slang of the Federal presses? The Confederate Government is recognised as a belligerent Power by all the principal European countries, and virtually, in the formal exchange of prisoners, by its adversary. The Florida, as well as the Alabama and the Georgia, belong to the Confederate Government; the officers of these vessels are duly commissioned with their respective ranks in the Confederate navy; the crews also are enlisted under the authority of the Confederate Navy Department. They are, therefore, in theory and in fact, the regular men-of-war of a belligerent Power, and it is difficult to perceive in what single respect either of them partakes of the character of a privateer.

The Federal Treasury Department has received claims from the States for reimbursements on account of raising troops previous to muster into the United States' Service. The amount claimed for raising volunteers under the Act of Congress of July, 1861, is $25,701,991. The expenses incurred by the State authorities under the Act of July, 1862, are estimated at $40,000,000. These sums, though large, do not nearly represent the entire claim of the several States against the Federal Government for recruiting.

Judge Magrath, of the Confederate Court, South Carolina District, has lately delivered an elaborate and lucid judgment on the liability of alien residents to military service. A person named Henry Spincken petitioned for release from military duty, on the ground that he was exempted because he was an alien resident. Besides the main issue, the petitioner pleaded that, by the General Orders of the Confederate War Department, the words of the Act of Congress, "residents in the Confederate States," meant persons domiciled in the States; and further, that any other construction of the words would be totally opposed to international law. Judge Magrath ruled that neither of these special pleas were admissible. He said that, no doubt, the Court would treat with respectful consideration the construction placed upon an Act of Congress by a Department to which such Act had special reference, but the Court was in no way bound by such a construction. The business of the Executive was not to make or expound, but to execute the law, and the Constitution of the Confederate States devolved upon the judiciary the right and duty of interpreting the law. If the meaning of an Act of Congress is clear, it was not for the Court to question its expediency, but that was a matter for the consideration of Congress. Nor could the Court set aside the plain intention of an Act of Congress because it was shown to be in opposition to a generally received doctrine of international law. It was within the province of the Government to determine if any modification of the law of nations was necessary for the well-being of the community. But in the case of Henry Spincken there was no conflict between the law of the Confederate States and international law.

The Act of Congress under which the petitioner was conscribed calls upon all white men residing in the Confederate States, who are between the ages of 18 and 35, to enroll themselves for military service, with certain specified exceptions. Henry Spincken was not exempted by any provision of the Act, and therefore was not exempted by the municipal law; and the only question to be decided was, whether the petitioner was exempted by any rule of international law.

Alien residents are of three classes:—First, those who are itinerant, merely casual visitors, and these of course are not included in the operation of the Act; secondly, there are domiciles properly so called, that is, persons who have become enfranchised, and there can be no question about their liability; thirdly, there are residents, persons who for a length of time have resided within the limits of Governmental jurisdiction, but who have not been enfranchised. Now, whoever takes up his residence in a foreign country has a claim upon the Government of that country for the protection of his life and property. But the obligation is clearly reciprocal. A foreign resident must obey the laws of the country, and from the time he sets foot in it he so far owes allegiance to the Government that any act committed by him against the sovereignty of the Government is as much treason as though it had been done by a citizen. This being so, it follows that an alien resident is as subject to the operation of a law of conscription as he is to any other law of the Government under which he is living. What, is he to enjoy the same protection as the citizen, and yet not be liable to defend the State from invasion? At any time, at any moment during peace, the foreign resident can leave the country, and at the outset of a war he has this option. If hostilities are being commenced against the country of his original domicile, then he must leave the country of his adopted domicile, or otherwise he will be regarded as an enemy. If the war is not with the country to which he owes permanent allegiance, then he can go or remain; but if he remains, then in war as in peace he is subject to the laws of the country in which he chooses to reside. From May, 1861, to April, 1862, alien residents in the Confederate States were not called upon to aid the Government, and could have departed if they had been so inclined; but as they for their own interests and inclination continued their residence, they must take the consequences of such proceeding.

It was urged on behalf of the petitioner that he was forbidden by the laws of his own country to aid either of the belligerents, and that by so doing he would forfeit the protection of his lawful sovereign. But what protection does a Government afford its subjects residing in a foreign country? Its control over them is at an end, except underspecial treaty obligations; so that a political offender may find a secure refuge in the territories of a friendly Government. All that International law can ask either in justice or comity is that alien residents at the outbreak of hostilities should have the choice of discontinuing their residence. If they elect to stay in a belligerent country, they must aid the Government thereof whenever they are called upon to do so. The only question, then, is, whether the alien has resided a sufficient length of time to impose upon him obedience and allegiance. A satisfactory test of this was surely a year's residence in time of war in the Confederate States. Upon these grounds, which Judge Magrath showed to be in accordance with decisions of British and United States' courts, the petition was dismissed, and the alien resident was declared to be liable under the Act of Congress to serve in the armies of the Confederate States.

The case of Henry Spincken might have been decided without such a careful exposition of the law, for at the time of secession he incorporated himself in a company of Volunteer Militia, and took part in the contest against Fort Sumter. By so doing he entitled himself to the franchise of South Carolina, and clearly estopped himself from pleading his foreign nationality as a title to exemption from military service. It was not, however, upon this evidence that his petition was dismissed, but on the broad ground that alien residents who have for a long time and even during war enjoyed the protection of the Government owe obedience and allegiance to that Government, and to all its laws, and are legally and equitably called upon to repay its protection by sharing with the citizens the labour and danger of defending the country from foreign aggression.

President Lincoln objects to the way in which the Confederates treat their coloured prisoners, and has ordered that for every captured negro returned into slavery a Confederate prisoner is to be placed at hard labour on, public works. Now the coloured regiments in the Federal army are recruited from the South, and by all the rules of civilized warfare, if they are not to be considered as slaves seduced by the Federals, they must be regarded as traitors. Assuming for an instant that Mr. Lincoln's proclamation had the force of law binding on the enemy, and that the status of the negro was changed by it, so that he has become, if not a citizen, at all events an alien resident, in that case, according to the Constitution of the United States, he owes allegiance to the State in which he resides. In 1776 there was a large minority in the colonies who refused to join in the revolution. On the 24th of June of that year Congress resolved that all persons abiding within any of the United States, and desiring protection from the laws of the same, owe allegiance to such laws, and are members of such colony; and that such persons levying war against any of the colonies within the same, or adhering to the King of Great Britain or other enemies of the said colonies within the same, giving to them aid and comfort, are guilty of treason against such colony. Simultaneously the Legislatures of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, and we believe nearly all the colonies, passed resolutions confirming the resolution of Congress, and declared that all persons residing in the colony owed allegiance to the colony, and if they aided and abetted the enemies of the colony they were guilty of treason. All this is, of course, very trite, but it happens to be every way pertinent to the case of the negroes. Even to adhere to a former Government is treason. If the South does not hold the negroes to be irresponsible slaves she must treat them as traitors and shoot them. The Confederates are, however, too merciful to do this, and so help Mr. Lincoln in getting rid of the "hated race." Therefore, if Mr. Lincoln persists in his order—falsely called an order of retaliation—the black flag must be unfurled. No other alternative can be suggested.

